PARABLE.—A story about familiar things which illustrates some spiritual truth.

Christ spoke in parables.

1. To make his meaning clear. The people could not grasp a new truth until it was linked on to something they already knew.

2.—Sometimes to mystify the scorners. The docile disciple would understand but the scoffer could not. To speak plainly about these great truths would be like casting pearls before swine.

3. To help his hearers to remember. We never forget a principle when we see it embodied in an apt illustration.

The Field (24-38).

The world—i.e., of human beings—same as "God so loved the world." We must not be content to sow good seed in the church, but everywhere we go—school, street, home. All the world is planted with the good seed. More than half the world is still without Christ.

The Sower of Good Seed (37).

The Son of Man—He soweth the seed of his Spirit in the disciples—then sends them as seed to cover the whole earth (Matt. xxviii. 19, 20).

Note—1. "The Seed is the Word," which is sown in the hearts of those that hear. Scholars may be good soil or bad, according as they receive or reject it.

2. The children of God are living seed: They are intended to multiply their own kind in the world by spiritual work.

3. The Son of Man plants us in certain places. Disciples are placed in definite positions on the globe. When we are in unpleasant situations we want a change. God may have put us there to sow seed.

"Whence Hath it Tares?" (27).

Tares—ordinary wheat, but with a disease which grows up in the plant, and when the ears are ripening the disease shows itself in a mass of black, dust-like spores, which are the seeds of the disease, and which are blown by the wind.

Note.—1. Evil is spread like an epidemic.

2. It grows anywhere because it does not need special soil as good seed does. It is difficult to do right, but anybody can do wrong. Illustrate this.

3. People sometimes blame God for the wickedness that is in the world, but Christ said, "An enemy hath done this."

The Enemy at Work (25, 39).

The enemy is the spirit of evil working silently whilst others sleep. Christ's listeners would be familiar with this, for it was often done by way of revenge or spite.

Note.—We must be watchful, so that he shall not sow in our hearts while conscience sleeps. "Keep thy heart with all diligence" (Prov. iv. 23).

Illustration.—A Scotchman took a thistle with him when he emigrated to Australia. Now the continent is overrun with the weed, and the farmers cannot get rid of it.

What to do with Tares (28, 29).

Let both grow together until the harvest. Why?

1. We should pull up wheat with the tares.

2. We should trample down the wheat in getting at the tares.

1. We must not be surprised to find bad men in the world—but we cannot get away from it on that account.

2. There are tares in every child's character, and some of them it is very difficult to pull up. The finest wheat may become diseased by sin. Hence we should watch.

The Harvest (30-41).

The end of the age. The angel reapers shall descend. The evil shall be burnt up. The good shall be preserved.

We shall be tried as by fire. When all the wickedness has been burnt up, the righteous shall shine forth in all the beauty of holiness.

Application.—There is a judgment. We shall all be judged. Are we ready for it? How can we be made ready?

Thoughts for Parents.

Gal. v. 22.

5.—MEEKNESS.

"BLESSED are the meek." "Learn of Me, for I am meek and lowly of heart."

The parents' voices are the barometers of the family peace. Children catch imperious tones very quickly. Why use arbitrary and threatening manners, when a calm, quiet request will gain obedience?

"Meekness is maintaining peace and patience in the midst of pelting provocations."

Meekness must be both active and passive. It must lead us to subdue our own resentments and bear patiently with the passions and resentments of our children.

You may irritate a child by boasting of your superior conduct when of his age. The self-applause of many parents is a stumbling-block to their children.

Do not retain your anger or "bear a grudge" against your growing girls and boys. Beware of nagging them.

Sarcasm also is a dangerous weapon to use, and scoffs and jeers from parents are destructive of influence.

The Distress in Ireland.

We are devoutly thankful at the Christian sympathy that the "slow march of hunger" in the West of Ireland is evoking from all classes. Miss Amy Maunder, of Kiltimagh, co. Mayo, is devoting herself to the relief of the sorely tried and burdened peasantry. Although Government will help in offering relief work, such help may come very tardily; and however much it may be, it will not be able to overtake the whole of the distress. Much will, necessarily, be left to private benevolence and Christian love. A morning paper describes how some of the money already subscribed is being laid out:

"Miss Maunder tells us that the money sent from England is being spent as far as possible in reproductive ways. The people are kept busy on their own holdings, removing boulders, draining, and carrying out improvements of permanent value."

This is the most valuable assistance that could be given in such a crisis—improving the land for future seasons, so as to minimise distress, should it afflict them again. Let it be shown that the British islands are irrevocably united in seeking to promote the fruit of Christian charity.

Three hundred families in the mountain districts of the Ballinrobe Union, Ireland, are, owing to failure of last year's crops, in a most pitiable condition; clothing, as well as food, is urgently needed.

Irish Notes.

The foreign missionary collection in Sandys-street Presbyterian Church, Newry, a few Sundays ago, amounted to the generous sum of £400.

A Sunday-school Association has been formed in Londonderry, the objects being the promotion of union amongst teachers, and the development of Sunday-school work by services, meetings, and social gatherings.

Rev. Jonathan Simpson, Presbyterian minister, Portrush, and a man who is most highly esteemed by all who know him, has attained the "diamond jubilee" of his ministry, he having been licensed to preach February 20, 1838.

The Dublin Methodist Council is at present engaged in trying to solve the problem how to give a fresh start in life and permanent employment to some eighty or 100 men who nightly use the shelter in Poolbeg-street, which is under the auspices of the council.

The Belfast Prison-gate Mission for men is doing an excellent work. During the year seventy-five have been inmates of the industrial home of the mission, and of these thirty-two have been assisted to return to their friends, while for fifteen employment has been obtained in the city.

Christ is All!

He is a path, if any be misled;
  He is a robe, if any naked be;
If any chance to hunger, He is bread;
  If any be a bondman, He is free;
  If any be but weak, how strong is He!
To dead men life is He, to sick men health,
To blind men sight, and to the needy wealth;
A pleasure without loss, a treasure without stealth.

—Giles Fletcher.

Scottish Notes.

The Braid U.P. church, Edinburgh, Rev. Walter Brown, has a membership of 650.

Rev. W. Ogg, Free Church, Cockenzie, near Edinburgh, has been elected minister of the Presbyterian Church, Aldershot.

The P.S.A. in connection with St. Thomas's Wesleyan Chapel, Glasgow, has a membership of 700 men, with an attendance of 550-600 every Sunday. Much blessing is being received, and good work accomplished.

A number of Glasgow Christian workers are interesting themselves in the spiritual well-being of the trace boys in connection with the tramway cars in that city. A number of interesting meetings have been held.

The Glasgow Corporation have decided that the Salvation Army shelter in that city is not to be assessed, because it is a part of the Army's machinery for the moral improvement of the poorer and criminal classes.

Twenty-nine missionaries are employed in connection with the Mission Society of the West Coast of Scotland. A large amount of good is being done, particularly in the Western Islands, by visitation meetings and by the distribution of books and tracts.

The various affiliated societies of the Glasgow Free Church Temperance Society number about 27,000 members, having an average attendance of 20,000, the workers numbering 2,200. Good work has been done during the past in inducing churches which have no temperance organisations to take an active part.

It is proposed to have "A day of humiliation and prayer" in the Christian Institute, Glasgow, on the 16th March. The meetings will last from 11 a.m. till 4 p.m., and the subjects to be dealt with are "Sabbath Desecration," "Intemperance, Gambling, and Impurity," "Worldliness and the Decline of Spirituality."

Miss Meredith Brown has been giving interesting addresses in Edinburgh on the work of the Shaftesbury Institute, London. On the 24th ult., before a large and sympathetic audience in Free St. George's church, Dr. Whyte in the chair, she gave a lecture, illustrated by lime-light views, etc., on "Life and work in slums and thieves' kitchens."

Rev. H. M. Davidson has been saying some plain things from the pulpit as to the effects of pernicious modern literature. The minds of youth at the most impressionable and critical stage were being poisoned at the fountain-head by degrading and sensational fiction to an extent little dreamed of. To read such books was a vice; to manufacture them a crime.

The National Bible Society of Scotland has circulated 96,545 more copies of the Scriptures during the past year than in 1896. The total number of Scriptures issued during 1897 was 802,155, or a grand total since 1861 of 17,162,072 Scriptures. At the annual meeting of this society Dr. Marshall Lang maintained that there never was a time when the work of such a society was more needed to reach the deepest springs of thought and action. Mr. Archibald spoke of the open doors in China.

Southwark Baths.—Sunday evening services are being held, under the auspices of the Special Services Committee of the London City Mission, in St. Saviour's Baths, Lavington-street, Southwark. The Lord has already blessed these services to the salvation of souls. The people in the district are a most hardened class, and very large numbers never enter the House of God. These services are laying hold of the right people. At least 300, who have not entered the door of a place of worship for a very long time, gather at the Baths on Sunday evening. Prayers are earnestly asked on behalf of this movement to reach the non-churchgoers.

Working Men's Services.—The Church of Holy Trinity, Cambridge, has for the past century been a centre of evangelical life and zeal, it being the church where Rev. Charles Simeon was for many years incumbent, and ever since it has been blessed with pastors who have faithfully adhered to the principles of the Reformed and Protestant Church of England. "We have now for the past two years," writes a correspondent, "had a monthly service for men only, and the vicar, Rev. C. J. Proctor, when commencing it, felt that it was important from the outset to get a band of men drawn together from various grades of society to work together, to make it a success, so he called a few to a preliminary meeting, and told them his intention. They formed themselves into a committee to work and pray that the services might be owned of God, and that they might be the means of reaching the men of the town. The first few services were fairly well attended, each succeeding one being more so, till this year the church has been filled to overflowing with an attentive congregation of about 800 men, who have listened with rapt attention to the address that has been given."

HOME.

Christian workers in North London who visit missions on the south side will appreciate the new bridge to be built across the Thames at Vauxhall. It will cost £380,000.

A British memorial service for Miss Frances Willard was held at St. John's Church, Westminster.

At the works of the L. and N.W. Railway at Crewe, where 7000 men are employed, all have been put on full time. We hope this will not mean an increased waste of wage in intoxicating drink.

In Parliament the Bill for amending the law of local government in Ireland has been read a first time. Irish members seem inclined to support the measure cordially, as well as the Opposition.

Twenty-eight professional appointments are now held by women students of the Women's Branch of the Horticultural College, Swanley. We are glad to hear of the success of women in this new sphere.

The gambling fraternity will find a well-merited warning in the sentences passed last week on the proprietor and one of the attendants of the City Social Club and a book-maker, fines amounting to over £265 being imposed.

Danger may lurk in our educational methods if pupils are overtaxed. Investigations conducted by Mr. Brudenell Carter into the eyesight of children attending Board Schools show that only about 39 per cent. had normal vision with both eyes.

The Moslems in Great Britain assembled at Chingford to celebrate the festival of Ramadan, and to consider the political condition of the Islamic world. It is a curious preference for "darkness rather than light" on the part of some of our countrymen to follow the False Prophet.

Not only will the eighteenth annual show of pictures at St. Jude's School, adjoining Toynbee Hall, help the denizens of Whitechapel in the study of art, it will assist in brightening many a dull, monotonous life. These exhibitions are a great means of education.

One of the last acts of the out-going County Council was to vote £5000 towards the acquisition of Churchyard Bottom Wood, Highgate. This will help to preserve another open space for Londoners. The inhabitants of Highgate are raising a fund for the purpose.

At a meeting of the National Association of Voluntary Teachers the returns showed that more than 1,000,000 children on the registers of the elementary schools were absent on every occasion the schools were opened. Such irregularity of attendance is a serious drawback to efficiency.

The Dean and Chapter of Westminster oppose the proposed improvement in Westminster mainly on philanthropic grounds, urging that the dwellings of the labouring classes should not be destroyed without provision being made for the erection of other suitable buildings in the locality.

A large audience attended Queen's Hall to see Dr. Nansen and hear his lecture on "Across the Polar Region." The intrepid explorer has had to postpone several engagements owing to the illness of his children. He hopes to revisit England after Easter. —The Royal Society has recently discussed the interesting question of Antarctic exploration.

Wide interest has been evoked in the memorial to the Duchess of Teck, the Home of Rest for poor women near Richmond. The Corporation of London have contributed £100 to the fund, and several City companies have also assisted.—The Chelsea Hospital for Women has a bequest of £200 from the late Mr. Richard Gibbs.—Reedham Orphanage has been assisted by several City Companies.

What immense mitigation of suffering the following record suggests:—The total number of patients in all departments of Middlesex Hospital has risen from 48,002 in 1896 to 50,893 in 1897.—Members of the Stock Exchange have contributed £6527 to the London Hospital. Where so much money is made it is fitting that some be devoted to the alleviation of human pain.

The Metropolitan Asylums Board continues its work of mercy on all sides, the number of patients under treatment being 3,822. Last year total expenses reached £665,393. The State Children's Aid Society looks with favour upon the boarding-out plan, by which the little ones are placed with families in country villages, as it provided the children with new associations and opportunities.

The Society for the Protection of Birds has now 16,000 members, compared with 1200 in 1861. In the United Kingdom alone there are 147 branches. It exists to discourage the unnecessary slaughter of singing birds, whether for food or dress.—The cruel practice of mutilating the comb, wattles, and earlobes of living birds, against which the Anti-Dubbing Association protests, also calls for action.

FOREIGN.

The foreign trade of Sweden is growing rapidly. The imports amount to nearly 20,000,000, the exports to nearly 19,000,000, three times as much as thirty years ago.

A treaty between Siam and Japan has been signed at Bang-Kok. Extra-territorial rights will only be granted to Japanese subjects in Siam until the new Siamese codes come into force.

Political unrest prevails in Greece, since a bold attempt was made on Saturday to assassinate the King. Two men with rifles fired at His Majesty several shots. The coachman was wounded in the leg.

The situation is grave in Austria. From Prague come the tidings that in all probability the German members of the Bohemian Diet will leave the Czechs and the feudal aristocracy to finish the business of the Provincial Parliament without them.

The Victoria Ward of the Foreign Hospital at Nice, which commemorates last year's Jubilee, is completed. With the exception of £60, the entire cost is covered. It is hoped that the whole sum will be raised before Her Majesty's visit next month.

So crowded have the technical schools become in Germany, that at the Charlottenberg Polytechnic a notice has been published that no students from foreign countries can be received. This should have a stimulating effect upon our own students in technical institutions.

Great excitement has prevailed throughout the Zola trial. Military prestige has been allowed to override civil rights, so that M. Zola has been sentenced to one year's imprisonment and a fine of 3000fr. for defaming the Esterhazy Court-martial. A Brussels paper states that Germany has about ten "bordereaux" in the same handwriting as that which secured the conviction of Dreyfus.

Australia.—Where commercial interests clash friction is very likely to arise unless the sentiment of brotherhood is allowed full scope. There is some contention at the Federal Convention, Melbourne, on the proposal to abolish preferential railway rates.

Egypt.—The report that messengers from the tribes in the province of Kordofan have arrived at the Egyptian headquarters with assurances of loyalty to the Government is highly satisfactory. To the British and Foreign Sailors' Society the Khedive of Egypt has sent £25, with expressions of sympathy with the objects of the Society.

France and West Africa.—It would be a grievous pity if any misunderstanding were to arise between Great Britain and France; and since the French Foreign Minister has given an unqualified denial of the Soko raid, peaceful measures are likely to prevail.—West Indian troops are being sent from Saki to Akuta, in the Lagos hinterland.

Bulgaria.—The Porte has done both a wise and humane thing in releasing some of the suspected Bulgarians imprisoned at Uskub. Some 140 have been set free, all of whom took the oath of fidelity to the Sultan. But on the Bulgarian frontier the search for arms by the Turkish authorities has been accompanied by barbarous tortures and imprisonments.

Transvaal.—A great future is before the Transvaal if equal rights are established.—It is reported that the Transvaal Government is ostentatiously sending artillery and arms to a new fort commanding Johannesburg.—A representative meeting of lawyers in Johannesburg has passed resolutions expressing confidence in Mr. Kotze and condemning the action of the Executive in his dismissal as unconstitutional.

Crete.—Almost daily fresh reports are circulated on the subject of the governorship of this afflicted island. The Rome correspondent of The Daily Chronicle says that the Sultan desires the German Emperor to arbitrate on the governorship of Crete. At Berlin it is reported that the German Government has proposed the appointment of a Commissioner for Crete who will be a subject of one of the Great Powers.

America and Spain.—Arising out of the explosion on board the Maine (which may have been due to a submarine mine), there are grave fears of war. Great excitement prevails at Madrid.—A gloomy tone prevails in Madrid owing to the report of a "split" in the new Cuban ministry.—Spain is passing through a serious crisis. In addition to complications with America, news from the provinces speaks of an appalling scarcity of food in many districts. The hands of Christian missionaries in Spain should be strengthened just now.

Uganda.—Very promising at one time were missionary prospects in Central Africa. Soon may the reign of peace be established and confidence prevail. A vast field for missionary enterprise is presented in these regions, but all advance is checked by active hostilities.—On his way to Uganda, Rev. E. H. Hubbard, of the Church Missionary Society, has been accidentally shot; the bullet has been extracted.—The mutineers from Uganda have crossed the Nile.—Five special officers have been ordered to leave for Uganda, the situation being critical.—Major Macdonald has obtained a victory over Mwanga at Uganda.

India.—It seems that the adoption of patient and generous measures are pacifying the border tribes in India.—The Malikdin Khels, one of the strongest tribes of Afridis, have practically submitted in full. The end of hostilities on the Indian frontier is now in sight. A renewal of the campaign will, it is hoped, be unnecessary.—A fire broke out in one of the plague hospitals in Bombay; three patients died from shock. Several European nurses have been attacked by the plague.—To mitigate in some degree the effects of the plague in Bombay it is cheering to learn that the crops in Burma, Bengal, Punjaub, the North-West provinces, and Oudh are excellent. There is every promise of one of the best harvests ever gathered in India.

China.—Rumours as to the extension of foreign influence in this much coveted country continue to be published.—A Pekin telegram says Germany has obtained the monopoly of mines and railways in Shantung.—Russian influence is increasing.—A high Russian official affirms that Russia remains permanently at Port Arthur.—It has been intimated to the British Government that there can be no question of the cession of territory in the region of Yang-tse to any foreign Power.—A Chinese loan of £16,000,000 has been arranged between the Chinese Government and the Hong Kong and Shanghai Bank together with the German Asiatic Bank.—The internal waterways of China will be opened to British and other steamers next June. A regular line of mail steamers is to run between Shanghai and Kiao Chau.—The post of Inspector-General of Maritime Customs is to be held by a British subject. —All these developments point to the gradual opening of the land to missionary effort.—Reports from Hong-Kong assert that the French have completed their preparations for the occupation of Hainan.

The Y.M.C.A.

Canon Fleming, B.D., visited Peckham on Thursday evening, and gave a selection of recitations in aid of the funds of the local Association. Rev. Dr. O'Brien presided over a very large audience.

The Bedford Association Buildings Company, Ltd., with a share capital of £7,000, has been successfully launched. More than the required amount was subscribed in less than eighteen days. This company has been formed to provide larger and more central premises for the local Y.M.C.A.

The annual meeting of the Tonbridge Association was held on Wednesday evening, Mr. J. W. Deacon presiding. Addresses were given by Rev. W. R. Mowll and Mr. W. Hind Smith. The association is doing an excellent work, and is in better condition than at any previous period of its history.

Mr. J. Hughes, late general secretary of the Lyons Y.M.C.A., has accepted a call to Brussels, to undertake the organisation of a large central association in that city. The prospects are very hopeful; already over a hundred earnest young men are enrolled.

The annual meeting of the New Cross and Brockley Association was held on Friday evening in the New Cross Public Hall, under the presidency of Mr. W. H. Seagram. The speakers were Revs. G. E. Weeks, M.A., W. Justin Evans, and Isaiah Parker. A report of good work was presented.

The annual tea and meeting of the members of the Sunderland Association was held on Tuesday. In the afternoon Rev. A. T. Guttery, of Newcastle, preached in the Bethesda Free Church to a large congregation. Part was taken in the proceedings by Rev. R. T. Talbot and Mr. Henry Armstrong.

The City of Dublin Association state that during that past year over £3000 has been subscribed, but the £1,500 is urgently required to meet the balance of the sum expended in purchasing, re-modelling, and furnishing the entire premises. The committee appeal for aid to prevent the burden of ever-increasing interest on debt, and thus enable them to devote more of their time and energy to the work of promoting the spiritual work of the Association, and the welfare of the youth of the Irish capital.

The 19th annual report of the Winnipeg Y.M.C.A. gives some interesting particulars. The association has carried on splendid evangelistic work; it has also worked zealously among railway employés, and contemplates erecting a special building for this department as well as one for its own general operations. The mission work of the association includes all the permanent evangelistic work in Winnipeg outside the Y.M.C.A. rooms, and comprises successful services at the police-station, the gaol, the hospital, the emigration hall and various boarding-houses. The governor of the gaol warmly commends the work done for the prisoners.

The Book World.

The thirty-fourth annual edition of Herbert Fry's Guide to London Charities (Chatto & Windus. 1s. 6d.) has made its appearance. Its well-arranged and carefully-verified information as to charitable institutions and societies of all kinds must render it, to many, an indispensable desk companion.

The National Temperance League's Annual (Temperance Depôt, 33, Paternoster-row) fulfils for temperance organisations something of what Mr. Fry's guide does for charitable societies. Its summary of temperance facts and progress is admirable. No doubt it will be highly appreciated by temperance writers and speakers.

Among the bright volumes published by Messrs. G. Bell & Sons for the Humanitarian League is Red Jem; or, The Young Poacher, a choice little book, by Mrs. Arthur Bell (N. D'Anvers). Families for which such reading is provided are likely to be blessed with mutual good feeling and consideration for the weak and helpless. (1s.)

Rev. Dr. Waller's little book, Notes on the Prophet Jeremiah, is described on the title-page as "for the use of Bible students who believe the Bible," and to all such it may be heartily commended. The work is of the character of "Introduction," and is rich in suggestiveness as to Jeremiah's place among the prophets. (1s. Eyre & Spottiswoode.)

The marvellous fact expressed in the mocking words, "He saved others," is used in a booklet, entitled Others, by Miss M. E. Hodges (Partridge, 2d.), as a strong incentive to self sacrifice and earnest personal service on behalf of our fellows in sorrow, blindness, and need. "The Master," says the author, "is waiting for each of us to live our lives for others."

Dr. Bullinger has published in booklet form a capital summary of Dr. Ginsburg's elaborate chapter on the rise and development of the Massorah in his Introduction to the Massoretic-Critical Text of the Hebrew Bible. The simple title, The Massorah, affords but a small idea of the curious and instructive matter given in this brief account of the preservation of the text of the Old Testament and its interesting phenomena. (1s. Eyre & Spottiswoode.)

A well-conceived "Help to Private Prayer" is Daily, by Dr. C. F. Harford Battersby (1s. Marshall Bros.). After words on prayer, worship, confession, thanksgiving, and intercession, there are pages for weekly and monthly cycles, and others on which to inscribe special subjects for prayer, with corresponding pages for the answers. Taken as a whole, the little volume will help to stimulate a devotional spirit and a prayerful solicitude for Christian workers and enterprises.

Well-digested and reliable information as to societies, institutions, homes, hospitals, and the like, is of considerable moment to many. Hence the value of such a manual as The Annual Charities Register and Digest, issued under the auspices of the Charity Organisation Society. (4s. Longmans & Co.). Its practical introductions, bearing on important points in charitable working, its intelligible indices, and its informative character render it a really helpful adviser in its own department.

A capital little piece of biography is Bernard Gilpin, the Apostle of the North. By Rev. Henry Bunting. (1s. C. H. Kelly.) As a scholar and philanthropist who, while a Romanist became convinced of the doctrines of Protestantism, Gilpin had a well-deserved fame; and this sixteenth century story is worth telling for the benefit of the present generation. How the noble witness stood by his conviction to the point of being condemned to death—an end which was providentially averted—is well related by Mr. Bunting.

David Lyall's Love Story. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton.) These sketches from a true heart and a gifted pen have scarcely the same homely touch as the author's previous work, "The Land of the Leal." The characters mainly move in London newspaper circles, and the artificial element is not wanting. Leaving improbabilities out of sight, however, the reader cannot fail to be charmed with the rarity of the atmosphere that pervades the book, and the beautiful thread of applied Christianity that runs through every chapter. We heartily welcome such a wholesome work.

Recent years have witnessed the publication of many works on Islam, and one well worthy of attention is Mohammedanism: Has it a Future? By Rev. C. H. Robinson, M.A., Lecturer in Hausa in the University of Cambridge. (1s. 6d. Gardner, Darton, & Co.) After a sketch of the story of Islam, Mr. Robinson writes of its relations to the Oriental Churches and to missionary effort in India and Africa. Though some positions maintained are controverted by scholars of weight, the book as a whole is very instructive, and constitutes a loud call for renewed energy in mission work in Mohammedan lands.

We have lively recollections of the interesting character of Rev. David Davies's "Echoes from the Welsh Hills," and heartily welcome "More Echoes" under the title of John Vaughan and His Friends. (4s. 6d. James Clarke & Co.) The pages present a striking picture of peasant life in the Principality, with special reference to social customs and religious activities. Several notabilities appear upon the scene, and many curious and quaint stories are told regarding them, their personal peculiarities, pulpit style, and pastoral habit. This admirably illustrated book will entertain on all hands, but its pages will be specially attractive to those who are conversant with religious life and sentiment in Wales.

In a book printed in Madras, Rev. A. Westcott, M.A., principal of the S.P.G. Theological College there, tells the story of Our Oldest Indian Mission: a Brief History of the Vepery (Madras) Mission. (2s. 6d. Madras Diocesan Committee of the S.P.C.K.) The pages take us back to 1680, when the first English church in India was erected at Fort. St. George; give a glimpse of things when Danish Lutherans laboured under the S.P.C.K., and made converts from Romanism as well as heathenism; and outline the period subsequent to 1826, when the control passed into the hands of the S.P.G. Students of mission history will find the pages deeply interesting.

Scrolls, dealing with Scripture promise and godly duty, exercise a useful ministry. We welcome a new one of peculiar value, with sheets for every day in the month, having for their burden Prophecies in Relation to Israel. It has been compiled by Miss Marie-Louise Papineau, and at each opening shows one or more Scripture assurances, a brief statement or exposition by some writer on Israel, and a choice poetical excerpt. Admirably printed in large type, this compilation is calculated to stir up interest on an important subject, and to stimulate prayer and effort on the part of those who are God's remembrancers regarding his ancient people (post free 1s. 4d., from Miss Papineau, Villa Hebron, Merton Hall-road, Wimbledon).

Semitic students are fortunate in the rapid growth of their special class of literature; and whether interested in early or later Hebrew, or desirous of understanding Israelitish ritual in the worship of Jehovah, or Phœnician practices in the worship of Baal, they will welcome Rev. J. Middleton Macdonald's book, Massilia-Cathargo, in which there is a facsimile of the Carthaginian Sacrifice Tablet found at Marseilles in 1844, explained with philological notes, and compared in word and substance with the Levitical code. Mr. Macdonald's qualifications for the work are ample, and we acknowledge the interest and utility of his book on more grounds than one; but we are not prepared, on the sole and uncorroborated testimony of the tablet here interpreted, to re-cast our views as to Baal worship in Syria, or the relation of that abomination to the worship of the God of Israel. (3s. 6d. David Nutt, 270, Strand.)

Anything from the pen of Rev. Andrew Murray is sure of a welcome on the part of earnest Christian people; and no spiritual expectation will be disappointed by The Ministry of Intercession; a Plea for More Prayer (1s. 6d. and 2s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.). Like its predecessor on the same subject, "With Christ in the School of Prayer," this book insists upon importunity in asking, and abiding in Christ as a condition of obtaining what God has to give. It goes further, however, and enforces two truths which have of late impressed the revered author—(1) That Christ meant prayer to be the great power by which his Church should do its work, and (2) that intercession, as distinguished from prayer for ourselves, ought to have a larger place in the Church and the Christian life.

> In intercession our King upon the throne finds his highest glory; in it we shall find our highest glory too. Through it He continues his saving work, and can do nothing without it; through it alone we can do our work, and nothing avails without it.

These pages go to the depth of Christian duty and privilege, and elaborate thoughts that should be prayerfully weighed by all who in any measure have a hand in work for God. An Appendix sets forth some "Helps to Intercession," with Scripture watchwords, for every day of the month, on what to pray for and how to pray. We bespeak for this book a large circulation and a blessed ministry.

A Minister's Experience.

A MINISTER in Manitoba writes:—Strange that Christian workers, earnest men and women and godly ministers, should be surprised that their sermons and "homilettes" do not stir up men, and bring forth more fruit? Would not many of these same men and women be more surprised still if God did answer their prayers? The surprise ought to be the other way about. And then, all the hard work and sore hearts it gives us to pump, instead of letting the "well spring up" and the "rivers flow"!

I found this out near two years ago, when, tired and discouraged with repeated defeats, labouring and striving to do myself what the Spirit of the living God alone could, I threw myself on my knees and told the Lord I was beaten and that I could not do it. He must do it for me (or with me), using me if He saw fit, and in any way that He saw fit, and I brought to Him the very subjects that had beaten me. Instead of trying to heal them myself I became willing to be one of those that "sought means...to lay them before Him" (Luke v. 18). I got more than I asked for, and the Lord has been greatly blessing us ever since. What a difference it would make in our sermons if we spent the time more in prayer! With what tireless energy we could work, what miracles He would work "when He beheld our faith"!

I receive The Christian regularly. It is a great source of blessing to me. I often wonder who sends it, and pray God may reward him or her. There is an evident awakening among the people here. Both Romanist and heathen are joining us, and our old members are being greatly quickened. I am very sure no one, even my best friend, could attribute it to my preaching, but I am willing to help "roll away the stone." Accept my thanks for the many blessings and "pointers" I get out of your valued publication.

Personalia.

Rawei, the Maori evangelist, who was recently reported dead, is, it seems, alive and well, and arranging for enlarged work among his people in New Zealand.

Mr. Robinson Souttar, M.P., injured himself considerably on Wednesday week by falling on the front steps at the Holborn Restaurant. He is, however, now recovering steadily.

Captain Luke Washington Bickel, who for some years has acted as manager of the Baptist Tract and Book Society, Gray's Inn-road, is taking charge of a mission vessel in connection with the Japanese work of the American Baptist Missionary Union.

Mr. W. Barbrooke Grubb, of the South American Missionary Society, was recently shot with an iron-pointed arrow by one of the natives in the Gran Chaco. Prayer is asked that he may speedily be restored to health, and that God will bless the Mission.

Rev. F. G. Marchant, senior tutor of the Pastors' College, has resigned, owing to serious and continued indisposition. This announcement, made unexpectedly at morning class on Thursday week, was received with much regret, and the ordinary lecture was converted into a sorrowful farewell service.

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan is, we regret to hear, suffering from the effects of a chill, and was, therefore, unable to deliver his lecture on Wednesday, on "God's Methods with Man." Dr. Harry Guinness is speaking in his place. The series will be resumed as soon as Mr. Campbell Morgan's health will permit.

Mr. H. Eliot Walton having resigned his post in connection with the Railway Mission, intends to take up general evangelistic work, either special services or Bible readings. He will be glad to hear from friends as soon as possible who are desirous of securing his services. All communications to be sent to 33, Thorncett-road, Anerley, S.E.

Prince Oscar Bernadotte, the second son of the King of Sweden, who renounced his succession to the throne on his marriage, commenced a mission in Copenhagen on Sunday week in connection with the Y.M.C.A. of Stockholm. He is accompanied by his wife (formerly Miss Ebba Munck), who is also delivering a series of addresses.

Free Church Councils.

A CORRESPONDENT writes:—"The National Council of the Evangelical Free Churches of England and Wales, which is the outcome of the Free Church Congresses in Manchester and elsewhere, holds its third annual meeting in Bristol on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, the 8th, 9th, and 10th prox. The National Council has now federated with it 500 local councils spread over England, the Principality of Wales, and the Channel Islands, and these councils represent some 12,000 churches — Congregationalist, Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian, and Free Episcopalian (including Moravians). The Society of Friends are also in alliance with the organisation.

A conference of representatives from the Free Church Councils of North Wales was held at Chester last week. An inaugural demonstration in connection with the local Free Church Council was also held. Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, who was the principal speaker, explained that they had now south of the Tweed 500 Councils, representing no fewer than seven millions of Evangelical Christians. The formation of these Councils was, he contended, the most important ecclesiastical movement since the days of Martin Luther. Though the Evangelical Free Church movement was non-political, it involved attacks upon great moral evils, such as drunkenness, gambling, and unscriptural Sabbath desecration.

In connection with the Rhyl English Free Church Council, a fifteen days' mission was conducted by Mr. James Shields, of the Evangelisation Society, from Jan. 30 over Feb. 13. The meetings were well attended, and did great good to the churches, and several professed conversion. The Gospel was plainly and powerfully preached.—D. G. Lewis.

Gipsy Smith, the evangelist of the National Free Church Council, concluded on February 14 an eight days' mission in the Reading Town Hall. The work has been attended by the most remarkable success, and on some evenings there were more than a hundred cases dealt with in the inquiry-room by the workers. The spacious town hall, which accommodates about 2000, was crowded night after night, and a large number were unable to gain admission.

Special services, under the auspices of the Free Church Council, have been just brought to a conclusion at Saltburn. Eight days proposed for the duration of the mission became eighteen on account of the work going on. The missioners were Rev. R. Mackay and Mr. A. Crossley. Many professed conversion, and the churches have been greatly quickened.

In connection with the Dudley Free Churches (Netherton branch), a twelve days' Mission has been completed by Mr. E. P. Telford. Night after night the public hall has been crowded by all classes of people whom the preacher has often strangely moved. All the free churches have shown the true spirit of unity, and will as a result reap a great gathering. Some 150 names have been taken of those anxious to join the church of Christ.—S. O. Rider, M. N. C. Pastor.

Rev. Joseph Fletcher has been nominated as the successor of Rev. John Matthews as secretary of the Metropolitan Council. He is a widely-known Baptist minister.

Requests for Prayer.

For a mission by Mr. William Forbes at Holbeach, to commence on Sunday, 6th.

For a fortnight's mission among the deep-sea fishermen at Yarmouth, by Mr. A. E. Sidford.

Rev. F. Vivian Dodgson, Vicar of Tysoe, asks prayer for a ten days' mission in his parish commencing March 6. The missioner will be Rev. J. F. Andrews, Vicar of Roxeth, Harrow.

Praise.

For blessing on special services conducted by Mr. Roberts, at the Mission Room, Hazelbury Plucknett.

For blessing received in answer to prayer during eight days' mission at Coleham Mission Room, Shrewsbury.

For the Lord's blessing on services held at Montague-road Mission, Leytonstone, by R. Spragg, when a good number professed to have found Christ.

Higham Hill Gospel Hall.—This offshoot from Folkestone-road Hall, Walthamstow, was lately opened. Mr. C. Gomm gave details concerning the work in this needy neighbourhood. Helpful addresses were delivered by Messrs. R. Wallis, R. Farie, T. Bailey, and Garrioch. The Sunday services were large and interesting, Mr. Ned Wright being the preacher.

Among the Churches

 The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of SPIRITUAL PROGRESS AND EFFORT in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and NOT TRIVIALITIES; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

Rev. T. B. Walker has entered on the important charge of Jesmond.

The Bishop of Chichester has left for New York in the White Star liner Teutonic.

Rev. David Renwick Hall, of Eastwood, Keighley, Yorkshire, has accepted the vicarage of Kirkby Malham.

The vicarage of Walkden, Bolton-le-Moors, has been accepted by Rev. William Mower Smith, of St. John's, Longsight.

A course of midday addresses are being given on Wednesdays by the Bishop of Stepney at St. Andrew Undershaft, Leadenhall-street.

The benchers of the Inner and Middle Temple have arranged for a service in the Temple Church every Friday afternoon during Lent.

Rev. C. H. Robinson, who has for some time past acted as special missioner in the Diocese of Ripon, has been appointed an honorary canon of Ripon.

The Duke of Portland has given a site for a church for Cresswell, where the Church population is growing rapidly, and further accommodation is urgently needed.

The Thames Church Mission has received grants from the Goldsmiths' Company, the Grocers', the Merchant Taylors', and the Trinity House Corporation, varying from £10 to £25.

The honorary canonry in Rochester Cathedral, vacated by Canon Streatfeild, has been accepted by Rev. John Toone, vicar of St. John's, Wandsworth Common, and warden of the Diocesan Deaconess Institution.

At the annual service for the Association of Lay Helpers for the Diocese of London, held on Monday evening at St. Paul's Cathedral, there was a large attendance of members and others interested in the work of the society.

At Westminster Abbey, on Fridays, to April 1 inclusive, at about 3.45 p.m., Canon Gore will lecture in the choir on St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans. A certain number of seats will be reserved for men. Canon Eyton will preach at the Abbey on the Sunday evenings in Lent on the Parable of the Prodigal Son.

Congregational.

The church at George-street, Croydon, reports 456 members.

Rev. Hugh C. Wallace, of Burnley, has conducted a ten days' mission at Woolton, Liverpool.

Mr. H. E. Ellison has been welcomed to the pastorate of Napier-street Mission Church, Deptford.

Haverstock Church, Maitland-park, N.W., has taken charge of Grafton-terrace Mission, Kentish Town.

The churches of Queen-square and Union-street, Brighton, have amalgamated, and Rev. R. J. Campbell has been elected pastor.

Rev. J. S. Woof has been recognised as pastor at Hazelgrove, Stockport. Revs. T. W. Bond, R. Allan, and G. Nicholson took part.

The Broadway Tabernacle in New York has secured a pastor in Dr. Charles E. Jefferson, of Jersey, Mass., who has been very successful in his present pastorate, where he has 700 members.

The treasurer of the London Missionary Society has addressed a letter to the 2500 country churches, asking for increased subscriptions in order to avoid a threatened deficiency of £9000 on the financial year.

The work at Carrs-lane, Birmingham, is reported as flourishing. The total income was larger than ever before, and the attendance was everything that could be desired. During the year new property in Moseley-street had been purchased for aggressive mission work. The total membership is now 952.

Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson has now gone north to Rhodesia, where he is to meet and confer with the agents of the L.M.S., who are labouring among the Matabele. On his way south he will call at Khama's Town, and later confer with the Bechuanaland missionaries. If all be well he will sail for home on the last Wednesday of March.

Mr. George Spicer, of Enfield, presided at the forty-fourth annual meeting of the Chapel Building Society, held on Wednesday in George-street Church, Croydon. The report which Mr. C. E. Conder submitted showed that since the formation of the Society help had been rendered in the erection of 786 churches and 86 manses. The total monetary aid advanced had been £171,865, the sterling value of the property thus secured to the denomination being estimated at £1,500,000.

Baptist.

Mr. R. Martin has accepted the pastorate at Conisborough.

Rev. T. B. Lewis has been recognised as pastor at Elland Upper-edge.

Rev. E. Curtis is about to resign the pastorate at Hatch Beauchamp.

Rev. G. Banks has resigned the pastorate at Gomer-street, Willenhall.

Fifty-two members were received into fellowship at Penge Tabernacle last year.

Rev. W. L. Tweedie has been recognised as pastor at Northcote-street, Stockton-on-Tees.

Salters' Hall, Baxter-road, Islington, reports 310 members, including fifty-six received into fellowship during the past year.

Rev. J. W. Ewing, of Rye-lane, Peckham, who has been ill since the beginning of the year, has resumed work partially.

After a quarter of a century's service Rev. Dr. Samuel Harris Booth tendered his resignation on Thursday last as secretary of the Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland, owing to failing health and advanced years.

On thankoffering day at the East London Tabernacle the amount brought in was £272 19s. 6d, and it is hoped it will reach £300 during the week. This, in the absence of a pastor, is considered eloquent testimony of the living spirit of the work.

Services in connection with the tenth anniversary of the opening of the Northcote-road Baptist Chapel, Wandsworth Common, have been recently held. Special sermons were preached by the pastor, Rev. J. Felmingham, and a service was conducted by Rev. David Davies. The membership of the church now exceeds 500.

Special services to celebrate the fourth anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. J. Spence at Lower Sloane-street were held last week. At the public meeting Mr. Peter Lawson presided, supported by Revs. J. Douglas, J. H. Edwards, and C. J. Jackman. The report said that during the four years 277 members have been added to the church. When Mr. Spence took over his charge the total membership was 218; he has therefore practically doubled the number of church members. There have been no less than 222 baptisms. This increased activity is still going on, as since the new year opened twenty members have been received into the church, and every branch is in a flourishing condition.

Methodist.

The simultaneous mission at Newcastle closed last week with many indications of widespread blessing.

The Leeds Sisterhood reports much activity, many calls for their services, and the need for additional sisters.

Dr. H. J. Pope has been addressing great audiences at Langton-street, Bristol, a "forward" mission which reports much encouragement.

The Methodists of Compton Dando, a village about six or seven miles from Bristol, have been much encouraged by a visit from the editor of Joyful News, who preached last Monday afternoon and evening, crowds coming long distances to hear him.

Revs. J. Scott Lidgett and David Roe, ministers of the Bermondsey Settlement Circuit, are making strong efforts to reduce the debt on the Southwark Park premises by at least £500. No part of London needs aggressive agencies more than Bermondsey and Rotherhithe.

The Primitive Missionary Committee has sanctioned the employment of Miss M. J. Perrett as an evangelist to the young people in the Sunday-schools. Miss Perrett has given up a lucrative position as principal of a ladies' school in order to undertake this evangelistic work.

At the eighth anniversary of the Soldiers' Home in Buckingham Palace-road, Grosvenor Hall was filled with soldiers and their friends. Sir Clarence Smith took the chair. It was stated that last year has been the best the Home has known. Three thousand men have occupied the beds, the finance has improved, and necessary enlargements will shortly be effected.

Presbyterian.

Rev. A. N. Mackay, Croydon, reports a membership of 297.

Rev. W. A. Galt, of Walsall, is likely to accept the call to Ilford.

At Willesden there are now 566 members—including the Oak-road Mission branch.

It is announced that Rev. John Sloan, of Edinburgh, has accepted a call to Kingston-on-Thames.

The work in Bermondsey gives token of steady growth, both as regards membership and missionary influence.

Dr. D. MacEwan is about to have a colleague and successor—probably Rev. T. Curry, of Warrender Park, Edinburgh.

Speaking on Sunday week in St. Andrew's, Shepherd's Bush, Rev. J. Conway dealt with Christian work and giving, and stated that on the previous Thursday evening the large amount of £300 had been promised towards a debt of £550 resting on the church.

Fallen Asleep.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

WE are glad to see that the articles which have appeared in these columns on the subject of "Child-Drunkards" have elicited considerable interest, and are evoking correspondence in the secular press. The more publicity the better. The subject and the issues arising out of it are, unhappily, so extensive that we have been able as yet to touch only the fringe. But those whose hearts are stirred to sympathy and endeavour, should master the very useful compendium of facts and figures drawn up by Miss Harriet M. Johnson, of Liverpool (CHILDREN AND PUBLIC-HOUSES, C.E.T.S., Westminster, 1s. 2d. per dozen), from which source some of our information was drawn. Miss Johnson has devoted much time and diligence to this important work. There is an undoubted awakening through the country; and again we appeal for help to spread literature on the subject.

We sincerely trust that our readers are studying with care the articles that are appearing in our pages from the pen of Rev. Dr. Culross. This week we complete the chapter that was begun last week, on "Christ the Saviour," and cannot but express our sincere thanks to the venerable author for his weighty words on this fundamental subject. Dr. Culross is one who, when dealing with aspects of truth, never loses sight of the greatness of the full and complete Gospel; and Christian workers will find his papers at once strong in statement and rich in suggestiveness on the essential doctrines of our most holy faith.

London suburbs are at the present time the scene of quite an unusual measure of evangelistic effort. Besides the meetings of Mr. McNeill, Mr. George Clarke, the Weaver Brothers, and others are busily engaged, day after day, earnestly preaching the Gospel to large audiences in other neighbourhoods. In many directions a spirit of deep concern has been manifested. Let prayer be made that these special efforts in the outlying districts may redound in blessing on the City as a whole.

The opinion held by many as to the decay of religion demands careful and thoughtful consideration. In view of the energetic efforts on the part of the "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God" to provide places of amusements—theatres and music halls—in suburban districts, it is quite clear that the religious denominations of London are not keeping abreast, in their provision of places of worship, with the mighty daily increase of its immense population. In these fiercely competing commercial times men exhaust themselves in what is denominated the "business life." There is so little time for the "pause" necessary for the sustenance and growth of the life of the soul in the beauty and power of God. It is a most serious thing for the nation, as well as for the kingdom of righteousness, if love of Christ and his pure Gospel is on the decline. It is time that the Lord's disciples should "awake out of sleep" and do the "first works."

The London County Council election has resulted in a very decisive vote for the party which calls itself Progressive, and which now has the power to carry out its programme for the next three years. The bulk of the new Council has been returned by populous divisions, and no doubt the uppermost thought in the minds of the electors was that their daily life would be made more endurable, that sweetness and light would get into it, and that some of its burdens would be eased.

Apart from the party results in the London County Council election, one thing seems to stand out clear and prominent, and that is the determination of Londoners not to confuse Imperial politics with local affairs. Considering what, on the authority of Mr. Bryce, has been the result of this policy in America, where, he tells us, it is at the root of all civic corruption, this is a matter on which all lovers of purity and honour in public life may congratulate themselves. If only purity and honour be maintained in public life, the question of which party may be in at any given time is a matter of minor importance.

We love our Sabbaths, with their fixed times for prayer and praise, with their opportunities for quiet thought and secret fellowship with God. Man needs for the healthy preservation of his mental and physical powers the divinely appointed seventh day. Spiritual qualities and states have to be seriously cared for. The rest-day is indispensable for the well-being of a nation. We hope the projected action of the Sunday Society, with reference to a bill in Parliament to repeal the Lord's Day Act, will be defeated. If the ancient statute be deemed out of date, let it be amended, but no infringement of the observance of the Lord's day should be sanctioned in any form. The Act may be antiquated. But God's law on the subject, to say nothing of the boon the rest-day is to man, can never be obsolete.

One by one the grand societies formed by our great grandfathers are celebrating their centenaries. This year completes the hundred during which the Religious Tract Society has been engaged in work, religious and educational, in furtherance of the Gospel and in advocacy of Scripture truth. In connection with the celebration two meetings are announced for Tuesday, March 22, one in the afternoon at the Mansion House, and a second in the evening in Queen's Hall. We trust that the year will mark a great advance on the part of the Society in the discharge of its very important ministry for the good of men and the glory of God.

In a recent address delivered in Manchester Cathedral, the Bishop of the diocese has spoken most welcome words on the serious hindrance disunion amongst the churches is to the spread of the kingdom of Jesus Christ. It does seem incredible that so much shyness, if not actual reluctance, to co-operate in Christian work should keep apart good men and true (both clergy and lay) who are equally anxious to do Christ's work in Christ's spirit.

With a view to abating the waste of energy which the divisions entailed, the Bishop suggested to the clergy that they should speak charitably of those who were separated from their communion, spend their strength rather in work than in controversy, and let the paramount purpose of their ministry dictate the method of their teaching.

Words so wise as these, with so much of the Divine Master's Spirit in them, cannot be too widely spread. A practical illustration of the union that exists in some measure amongst the Free Churches has been given at the dedication of Wesley's house. But something much wider and better than that is desiderated. The spiritual Church of Jesus Christ is one.

Rev. J. G. Adderley has been using great plainness of speech in his Lenten addresses. He has said that in South Africa men speak and act in the name of England as if the laws of Christ had never been proclaimed; that in our Indian Army practices are permitted that disgrace our country, and that the question for every citizen to ask himself when he feels proud of the Empire is this :—

Was this great Empire given to the British that they might have gold, or that they might win the world to Christ?

The Bishop of Stepney spoke in a similar strain at St. Paul's. He said that the cynic of the West End club, who thinks that all attempts to raise the world are useless, has murdered hope, and ought to be following her to her grave with tears of repentance. That these calls to a new life are not without effect, is proved by a cynic of this class having promised to give £50 a year to rescue work.

"A king's son a preacher of righteousness!" No doubt it is remarkable, for "not many noble are called." And Prince Oscar Bernadotte, second son of the King of Sweden, is the only royal personage we remember who is to-day acting as an evangelist. He is said to be preaching with great earnestness and power the Gospel of the grace of God. We are glad to think that the Cross is the only hope of some of the greatest by birth, but this is an open testimony that cannot fail to be useful. Of course the Prince will be "very peculiar" in the eyes of many, but he will find a warm reception among the common people. May he be kept through a long life in the way of God.

We regret to observe that at the recent service in memory of Frances Willard, in London, Canon Wilberforce invited the audience to join him in prayer that God would grant to the departed "peace and rest in the paradise of Christ." The fact that this act is contrary to Protestant faith and practice should have saved those gathered at the meeting from such an unwarrantable invitation. Moreover, the practice is quite unscriptural. We believe that those who are gathered to the presence of Christ have perfect peace and rest; their blessing is assured by Him, upon his face they look, and their rest and peace can neither be hindered by the execration of their enemies nor helped by the prayers of their friends.

The extraordinary power and influence so suddenly attained by the Free Church Council is well exhibited in the handbook of the movement which has just been published. It is nothing short of the organisation of the spiritual forces of Nonconformity. It represents nearly two million church members and over three million Sunday scholars, the majority of whom will, in the next generation, be leaders of evangelical religion in this country. The possibilities of good, which the Council has within its reach, are boundless. The future is altogether with it, if only it remains firm in its witness to spiritual religion as its central pillar of foundation.

We often hear it said of certain questions before Parliament that the country has given no mandate concerning them. Has the country given a mandate in favour of making men soldiers by ballot? We never heard of it, but it is now said by the Secretary for War, that

> The Government hold that the ballot law would be a very powerful reserve force in case of emergency, such as would arise if the Government found that it was unable to obtain by voluntary enlistment a sufficient number of men to fill the army.

The army is to be largely increased, and if the men will not come voluntarily, this is a threat to bring them by other means. Lord Lansdowne has also remarked in his place in the House of Lords, that

> Every other European military power resorted to compulsory service in some form, and it was impossible to say how long we should be able to remain an exception to that rule.

Lord Wemyss, who wishes to compel all young men to serve in the militia, unless they are in the army, the navy, or the volunteers, has brought in a bill on the subject. With such object lessons as the militarism of France and Germany before us, it is to be hoped it will never become law.

Mr. Stephen Massey, of Manchester, who is at present visiting, in an unofficial way, the stations of the L.M.S. in India, sends to the editor of the Evangelical Magazine a letter in which he says that the resolution passed by the L.M.S. Board in November against the cantonment regulations was urgently needed; "the practices referred to are great hindrances to the progress of the Gospel; educated Parsee ladies ridicule the claims of Christianity because of the shameful way in which a Government supposed to be Christian treats women." One of the cheering things in the present strife for righteousness and purity is the way in which Christian sentiment is everywhere condemning the action of the Government, and before the influence of that sentiment the Government will sooner or later have to bow.

The journal of the Royal Asiatic Society contains a hearty tribute to the work done by missionaries in India, especially through their excellent services to literature. Dr. Cust, who writes the article, is a linguistic expert, and he pays a high compliment to the character of the Scripture translations that are being rapidly disseminated in that great country. The total number of such translations in India up to eighteen months ago was thirty-five in distinct languages, with fifteen in well-recognised dialects; and many of these are said to be circulated by thousands every year. They have been rendered into phraseology well understood by people of the lowest culture, and are gradually permeating their mental life, and preparing for the full reception of the Gospel as it is being preached to them. The dissemination of the Bible among the common people everywhere means the death-blow to heathenism. Amid many disheartening signs of the times, this is a source of real encouragement.

It is generally acknowledged that mission work amongst Mohammedans makes the largest demands upon faith and apparently yields the smallest results. This, however, is not always the case. The North African Mission is doing splendid service for the Divine Christ amongst this class of people in Morocco, Algeria, and Tunis. Mr. Summers, an indefatigable agent of this Mission, is now in England. At a recent meeting of the South London branch of the Evangelical Alliance Mr. Summers said that: "He had worked among Mohammedans for eleven years, and showed, by the fact that there are now not less than 20,000 to 30,000 converts from this religion as the result of the labours of the different missionary societies, that the idea is absurd that this is an impossible work. A further stumbling-block to some is the supposed high moral tone created by Mohammedanism among its professors. Nothing further in order to dispel this conception is required than a residence, say, in a purely Mohammedan state such as Morocco."

Not without reason did our Lord and Master teach his disciples that they must love and give, not hoping for anything again. No; spiritual fathers may not even hope for anything from their spiritual children. The work done for Christ is to be done for Him alone, out of pure love. He who looks for love and gratitude will often be grieved not to obtain it. Paul was familiar with ingratitude. It is said that at this present time the native converts in Egypt are more anxious to manage mission affairs than contribute to mission work. A contemporary says that "apparently one of the tests of the faith of the Christian missionary in these latter days is his ability to forgive ingratitude."

A writer who calls himself "One of the Pressgang" in Vectis, writes an earnest word on the unrest which is so marked a feature of the civilised world to-day. England, hypnotised by worship of the "golden calf"; France, afraid to be just; Germany, afraid to be free; Italy, ruined by the cost of a useless militarism; Turkey, with her corrupt and oppressive rule; America, degenerate offspring of Puritanism—all are in the throes of an unrest that moves like a leviathan amid all the peoples of the earth. And the reason is the same everywhere.

> Religion as a credible and credited force in the world to-day is a discredited because an invisible agency.

The prevailing ideals are fashioned out of things that are seen.

> But without some faith—some purpose that comes, if only by a Divine bye-path, men are stranded very soon on that shore of satiety which has no true ideal (however unseen) to satisfy; it is the crying need of mankind in some form or other.

Neglected spiritual laws never fail to avenge themselves.

> As we grow old it is our fate to lose our friends; but the friends we have lost are often nearer to us than those who remain. Will they never be quite near to us again? Stars meet stars after thousands of years, and are we not of more value than many a star?

These are the words of Professor Max Müller in his preface to his last volume entitled "Auld Lang Syne," and they agree in sentiment with many similar words by different authors. They express the natural faith, which is only a faint reflection of the faith begotten by the Gospel, that lives so useful here must somewhere be continued, and that souls which have known each other here must come together again. It is good as far as it goes, but the faith that comforts and sustains rests on the risen Saviour. "If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also who sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him." The dim light which comes from reason would fade away, or certainly would not grow brighter, were we not sure that "Now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that are asleep."

One of the facts that do not receive their proper value in the eyes of the world is the amount of excellent and lasting service rendered by capable but unknown men, whose names are never prominent, and whose only memorial is a modest headstone with two or three initials. Probably the greatest benefactors of the world are to be found among this class. Their quiet example tells to an extent never realised. Their names are quickly forgotten, but their influence continues in other and probably more prominent lives long after their memory has passed away. Of such the gracious words to the angel of the church in Ephesus are spoken, and they ought to be of infinite comfort to such as have to do their work for God in circumstances of obscurity. "I know thy works and thy toil and patience. . . . and thou hast patience and didst bear for my name's sake, and hast not grown weary." There will be a great army which no man can number of these noble spirits whose names will shine forth as the sun on the great day when "every man will receive according to his works."

Readers of the New Testament are familiar with the fact that conversions in the early times occurred under most unlikely circumstances. Matthew, Zaccheus, the Ethiopian eunuch, the Philippian jailor, are instances. Paul won Onesimus for Jesus during one of his imprisonments at Rome, and few more touching scenes could be imagined than that of the great apostle labouring in prison to turn the heart of a runaway slave to the Saviour. The seed of truth may be dropped anywhere. City missionaries find it possible to get it into the hearts of engine-men whilst they are waiting at platforms, on sidings, or in engine-sheds. By tact and courage they find they can reach every other class of railway servant, and that without hindering them in their work. Perhaps the rapidity with which the work must be done, if it is done at all, is favourable to its effectiveness. But for the doing it at all, a heart full of love to Christ is the supreme necessity.

The doctrine of a final judgment is usually enforced as a terrible warning to those who are living evil or careless lives. There is little said about the immense encouragement and comfort it contains for those who are doing the will of God in sincerity. And yet there are few doctrines fuller of impulse and strengthening power. Appreciation of real and solid worth seldom comes to the best men in life. The claims of modest goodness are oftenest ignored. Earthly rewards and punishments are based on the crudest estimates of worth; they ignore all the subtle differences in temperament and temptation; at best they are only rough approximates to justice. It is a splendid incentive to the highest endeavour to know that the Judge of all the earth shall do right; that every man is certain to have his exact place in the last count; and that no simple service, however hidden and secret, shall fail of its final reward. In moments of depression and weariness this thought has power to renew the heart and strengthen the will to faithfulness.

Give Ye Them to Eat.

By REV. JOHN McNEILL.

THERE is a difficulty running all through this story, of course. Suddenly the problem had to be faced of feeding a large mass of people who, at a time of enthusiasm (for this was the day of Christ's early popularity), had come from the cities and villages into this quiet desert place. The problem was not to feed the people but to get the disciples put right. The feeding of the people never was any problem to the Lord. John says: "He Himself knew what He would do."

And that is about the Lord's only difficulty yet. We talk about the problem of London's masses. It is no problem at all to God Almighty. His real problem, if He has one, is that He should get his Church right. "The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib; but Israel doth not know. My people doth not consider." Isaiah, you remember, bursts out in a magnificent passage in the fortieth chapter, and says: "Who hath directed the Spirit of the Lord, or being his counsellor hath taught Him? With whom took He counsel, and who instructed Him, and taught Him the path of judgment, and taught Him knowledge and showed to Him the way of understanding?" You are not to think that this is a magnificent rhetorical device to bring out the unspoken and needless answer, that nobody has directed the Lord. God's people every day are more or less tempted to instruct God, and show Him how to manage things.

See how the story stands. Jesus was preaching, and this great multitude had gathered. The disciples said "Master, this is a desert place." As if the Lord, who made the place,

DID NOT KNOW HIS OWN GEOGRAPHY!

Oh, it is beautiful to hear the disciples telling the Lord the country side He was in, and pointing out the features of the landscape. "And the time is now far past." As though He who made the sun did not know what o'clock it was unless they kept Him right! I tell you, we are all at it nearly all the time. Instead of listening to Him, He has to listen to our clatter and verbosity. Whenever I get a little earnest and eager, and the word of God gets big upon my heart and tongue, I see you pulling out your watches. "Master," they said, "you are forgetting the bodily conditions and bodily needs of the people." Oh, if we were not lying by and watching, what would happen to the world? I think it would jog along pretty well. Have you never noticed, when you wake in the morning, that it has gone spinning along through the night and never missed you? Take it easier, The Lord does not thank you for looking after Him; his great trouble is to look after you.

Then the disciples brought forth their magnificent scheme: "Master, you have been forgetting things, in the heavenly-minded eagerness of your teaching and preaching. But we have been looking at the things Thou hast forgotten." And here was their plan: "Send them away." What a scheme! What brilliant genius and intellect and heart! "Send them away"; and "devil take the hindmost." We stand and chatter in the face of Eternal Wisdom, instead of coming to his feet to listen and to obey; and we propose things, and increase the muddle and chaos. If it were not that the Lord Jesus Christ is God Almighty, the panic would be worse than ever.

"This is a desert place"—and there are no shops about. When some of you lose sight of the shops you are lost. We are so

DEPENDENT ON SECONDARY CAUSES.

"The people have nothing to eat, and we have nothing to give them." What a sharpness there is in our Lord's reply. "Give ye them to eat." "Send them away? Give ye them to eat"—a sharp contradiction, a clean opposite. We who are preaching may be doing that which is exactly opposite to God's wisdom, and plan, and purpose. I believe the disciples in our days are mending. We are going right where those went wrong. For weary, shameful centuries the policy of the Church in this well-fed home-land to the nations of the earth, and especially to the heathen nations, was:—"Keep where you are; do not come to us; we have nothing to give you; we have barely enough for ourselves." Now, I say, we are reversing that shameful policy, and realising the power and presence of this glorious Lord of ours; crying to India and Africa and other lands, "Ho, there! ye need not depart; come back; we have happened upon great supplies." The glory of this century is that it is a foreign missionary century. The sorrow is that it should have been

SO LONG IN COMING.

But now it has come, let us put our head and heart to it, as well as all the churches and denominations and foreign missionary committees, in pushing this policy of giving to the nations the bread of life.

"And they say to Him: 'Shall we go and buy two hundred pennyworth of bread, and give them to eat?'" The speech of a committeeman, down to the ground. It was Phillip who said this, of course. He was a splendid fellow in a way. But when he gets his eye off the Lord and forgets His power, he makes a helpless speech. If you are going to forget Christ, you can get into your figures and calculations. Of course, I know it is possible to do all sorts of extravagant and wasteful things, but the worst kind of waste, very often, is that forgets the Lord Jesus Christ, his presence and power and Spirit, in our plans and calculations. Put in Christ, and then, as the algebraists would say, it is X to the Nth power. When we work our calculation with this mighty plus of a living faith in the absolute boundless power of Christ, then He is in the midst of us, our risen glorious Lord.

"Two hundred pennyworth of bread." He looked at it as a contractor would look at the account book of a picnic. He hastily ran it up on ready-reckoner lines—so much a head comes to so much. Well, I believe in the multiplication table; it is not safe to become heretical on that. And yet even that may mislead us. It may be a ready-reckoner not of faith but of unbelief, if you do not put Christ in. "One man shall chase a thousand; and two shall put ten thousand to flight." Twice one are ten when God is with you.

I notice that when a committee is to be formed, at once somebody says, "Let us get a few sharp business men. Do not ask these ministers." Well, I suppose Philip stands for the business man, and he did not do much with the problem. I know what you mean; ministers may not be good business men, but business men may spoil things too; you may reduce things too much to the level of the counting-house. Let us have business men and ministers, but let there be no sinking down to the level of the secular and natural, and earthly and temporal, or we shall go utterly astray. It has been the danger of God's people all the time.

"How many loaves have you? Go and see." The Master is sharp with them still. Stop your talking; go away and see what you have got. Is it not strange that He should have thrown them back on themselves? Yes, but that is the surest way to bring us back to Him. "They say five loaves and two fishes; and they brought them to Him." And that is the Lord's way still. If you are a believer at all you must have your own viaticum—as much as keeps yourself going. If you bring that to Christ and get his blessing upon it,

IT WILL FEED SOMEBODY ELSE.

It is not something grand, or striking, or heroic that is needed. The Lord never starves his own people. It was only some fish and bread; but when they brought it to Christ and He blessed it, their little supply became a supply for them and for all the rest.

It is interesting to think how near we always are to the solving of this problem. We are constantly saying: If the people who profess to believe in Christ were only right, London would be overtaken with the Gospel; a mighty revival would break out in twenty-four hours if all those we have already in churches and chapels making something like a real profession of faith in Jesus, were what believers ought to be. We cry, Oh, to get back to Pentecost! What was the mark of the ordinary average believer at Pentecost? For the most part they were poor downtrodden slaves, who had got to know Jesus and to love Him. The mark and stamp of the ordinary believer in those days was that he had a blood heat and passion for saving somebody else. God pity us! that is what we have lost. There is no use of talking. We have lost it in our churches and chapels. The ordinary Christian has no longer this blood heat and passion for saving somebody else; there is no leaping, bounding, pulsing gladness in knowing what it is to be saved.

How this applied and multiplied would solve London's problem. If this very audience went away, and wherever they were, like Samsons, threw firebrands among the standing corn, you would set London in a blaze. The early believers could not keep quiet about it. The living bread they got for themselves awoke in them a tremendous enthusiasm that everybody else should have the bread that never runs short and never gets stale.

"He commanded them to make all sit down by companies upon the green grass. And they sat down in ranks by hundreds and by fifties." Of course, it is obvious to say that "order is heaven's first law." To get them fed expeditiously and particularly as well as universally He divided them into ranks. The picture I see is this. The moment Christ gets the disciples to the right focus, everything falls into shape and order, where before there was only a big crowd, with a panic on the edge of beginning. It is to me a picture of the world, especially in this foreign missionary century. If you look at it you begin to see that there never was such a world as this for starting off through it with your bread-basket to feed the multitude. "Seas now join the lands they did divide." The sea, instead of being a divider, is a highway and a uniter. By great ocean steamships that run as regularly as trains, and at express speed, all the nations are becoming neighbour to each other. The sense of bewilderment and confusion, and the idea that the world is a big crowd there is no getting at—all that is geographical heresy to-day. The wonder is that you are not off with your bread-basket.

HOW CAN YOU SIT STILL?

You say you cannot go and be a foreign missionary. Have you gone to the Lord and spoken to Him about it? The multitudes are perishing for lack of the bread of life. The responsibility is yours; how do you get out of it? You have to settle the question with the Master.

There is another point I like to look at. "He took the five loaves and the two fishes and looked up to heaven and blessed them." If ever there was a time for being as quick as you could that was the time. They were on the edge of a big danger and panic. The people had forgotten to bring bread with them in their enthusiasm for Jesus. Yet the Lord deliberately delayed things. He seemed to do a kind of useless thing; He looked up to heaven. In the midst of all the hurry He took time to do a certain thing; and if we do not take time to do it, the more hurry the less speed. He blessed the bread and broke it, and gave it to the disciples, that they might give it to the multitude. Without that blessing

IT NEVER WOULD HAVE DIVIDED.

So with preaching. There can be an unblessed preaching and a blessed preaching. The one does not feed the multitude and comes to nothing; the other is Divine and does Divine work, and saves men's souls. The one may be done at the street corner by the Salvation Army man, littering the pavement with dropped aspirates, and making fearful havoc of his grammar, yet it may be divine bread that he is giving out. On the other hand, an archbishop in a cathedral, with all human appliances, and music to boot, may be choking the people with stones. [Do not applaud; you are too soon; let me finish.] The archbishop may be giving divine bread, and the Salvation Army man may be doing the stone business. The thing is this: Is the blessing of God with it? You may be eloquent. You may have read everything in English, bearing on your sermon. You may deliver it seemingly with grace and effect. But the congregation wanders out after the benediction with a lean look on its face; and that is

YOUR WORST CERTIFICATE AS A PREACHER.

I wish you would watch yourselves as you go home. Have you got the living bread? Then pray look a little more like it, for the minister's sake, for your own sake, and for the Lord's sake. Maybe if you come out of church next Sunday morning with a fed, rested, satisfied look on you, some poor starved sinner will go there, you recommend the place so well.

May God give all preachers and Sunday-school teachers in this tremendous crisis, standing between the living and the dead, to be in such quick, naked, immediate contact with Himself, the source of all power, effect, and blessedness, that out of them shall flow rivers of living water to refresh and save a parched, thirsty, perishing world.

The Testimony of Jesus

Concerning Himself.

By Rev. DR. JAMES CULROSS.

II.—THE SAVIOUR (Luke xix. 10).

THIS forgiveness is not a blessing held back and deferred till we enter the unseen world. Just recall what Scripture says. In Psalm xxxii. David tells how for long he had kept silence before God about his great sin. It is the way that many take to get peace; they wait till they forget. But silence brought David no peace—only misery. "My bones waxed old through my roaring all the day long; for day and night thy hand was heavy upon me." At length he humbled himself before God and made a clean breast of it. This is what followed: "I said, I will confess my transgressions unto the Lord," I had only said it—"and Thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin": so swiftly did pardon follow.

In another place our Lord tells how a certain publican, a man whose sin probably could not be denied, went up to the temple to pray. He stood afar off—not afar off from God, for the Lord is nigh to them that be of a broken heart, but afar off from the other worshippers; in utter shame he would not lift up so much as his eyes to heaven; he smote upon his breast, like a man in inward pain, while one short, sharp, broken cry rang out—"God be merciful (God show mercy through sacrifice), to me the sinner." How did he fare? "I tell you," the Lord Jesus says, and He knew, "this man went down to his house justified." He had gone up with a black shadowy burden on his shoulders which he could not get rid of; he went down to his house without it—cleared, acquitted, "justified," in the great meaning of that word, able to say, "There is therefore now no condemnation" to me; "For Thou, Lord, art good and ready to forgive." This is the grace which the Lord Jesus invites the penitent sinner to share. "Behold," He says, "I bring near my righteousness." He asks no price either beforehand or afterwards. He does it freely for Love's sake. The grace is yours for the taking.

You break in: Ah, if you knew what a sinner I have been, you would speak in another style. I do not know what a sinner you have been. The person at your elbow does not know. If he did, he might shrink from your side in horror. You yourself do not know. But God knows; knows the very worst about you; knows all the sin you have done, all the sin you have imagined, and desired to do, and would have done, if He had not held you back; and He who knows the very worst about you says, "Come now and let us reason together," for there is no forgiving in the dark—"Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool."

There is another thing: Who so undertakes the work of Saviour, undertakes to meet the cry of the heart: "Who will show us any good?" That cry comes up in all lands, in all ages, in all ranks of society, in all forms of speech, in no form of speech at all, in inarticulate groanings, or the voiceless misery of despair. Not from the poor only, the friendless and forlorn, the men beaten in the struggle of life; but from the most fortunate and envied. Even in the hour of success, when the hand closes on the coveted prize, the disappointed heart will exclaim, "Is this all?" and the unquenched longing for something unpossessed burns as fierce as ever. The stir and tumult around us, the restlessness and agitation of society, the eager rushing after pleasure, excitement, change—what is it all but the world's exceeding great and bitter cry, "Who will show us any good?" Things will not satisfy;

THE HEART MUST HAVE GOD.

And God suffices. The proof lies in experience. They who can look up, though it be from the depths of poverty or pain, and say, But God is my Father; He has cast all my sins behind his back; He loves me; He has won my heart; I belong to Him; these men find the heart's need met. It is not that desire is quenched; but in God all good is found. "O taste," the Gospel calls aloud to the weary and heavy-laden, "O taste and see that the Lord is good; blessed is the man that trusteth in Him," blessed indeed in God's great meaning of the word, and blessed already.

Think of just one thing more that a Saviour must deal with—prevailing sinfulness. We all know something about this. We have seen the wrong, and resolved against it, and then committed it. Reason has pointed one way, and desire has drawn us the opposite. Conscience has said, "Thou shalt not;" and passion has answered, "But I will." The heart needs God, and cannot do without Him, and yet turns away from Him. "The good that I would, I do not; and the evil which I would not, that I do." "I know and approve the good, and yet I pursue the evil." Ah, there is no room for human pride. Flattery of human nature has a terrible irony in it. Man can subdue the earth, and have dominion over it; can rule the elements; can tame and control the fiercest natures; but he cannot subdue the lawlessness, or tame the lusts, or curb the passions that he finds in his own breast, making it a pandemonium.

Now Christ is Saviour, inasmuch as He delivers those who trust Him from the law of sin and death, subdues our iniquities, and introduces us into the glorious liberty of the children of God. His redemption is no mere breaking of bonds and delivering from death. It is not as when one comes upon some wild animal caught in a snare, and undoes the snare, and lets the panting, struggling thing return to its wild freedom again; but as if he tamed it, and made it love him, and follow him, and do his will. So does Christ with us. We are the glad captives of his love, and our will learns to stand and wait on the blessed Will, like an angel continually beholding the face of God. I cannot explain how this comes about; because I of the Holy Spirit: but as a matter of experience, whosoever surrenders to Jesus Christ finds a new and living power within his breast, delivering him from the old thraldom, and moulding him to a new and heavenly life, that he can say with triumphant joy, "I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord."

I sum up all by saying, "There is no difference, for all have sinned and come short of the glory of God." There is no guilt so great and shameful but it may be forgiven; no soul so sin-stained, but it may be restored to purity; no heart so demon-haunted but it may become a temple of the Holy One; no man so lost, but he may be saved by the omnipotence of Grace, and made "an heir of God and a joint-heir with Jesus Christ." "To you" whose eyes light on these lines, "is the word of this salvation sent." The Gospel points you to the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world, and calleth aloud to sinful men in tones of tenderest pity and holiest love and most solemn urgency, Come straight back to God. May every soul answer this call by consenting; "and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you; and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty."

From Rev. F. B. Meyer.

AFTER one of the most beautiful of twelve voyages across the Atlantic, I am once more in English waters. The noble vessel, Campania, is majestically passing up between the coasts of Ireland and Wales—the outlines of the Welsh hills looking so exquisite in the light afternoon mist. But how can we forget the days we have left behind, when the water looked its richest blue, the sunshine as it fell on the southern deck was warm and balmy, the air so full of summer that one could not bear an overcoat.

And what a retrospect! I am hoping to preach on Sunday to my people on Paul's fulfilment of the work to which he had been called. It is good to have fulfilled—unhindered by sickness, or accident, or failure of voice. God has enabled me to fill up the chalice of these wonderful days, not with the best wine perhaps, but with the water which He has made wine.

The record of ninety-one addresses in thirty-seven days, of 12,000 miles traversed, of vast crowds in which there was no alarm, of opportunities of speaking to hundreds of Christian ministers, of the co-operation and demonstration of the Spirit, is one that I make very thankfully, very humbly; that the excellency of the power might very evidently be of God. Oh, that one may ever lie at his feet, ready to be used as He will! Not proud, not jealous, not emulous.

If one had done nothing more than lead that wonderful two-hours' inaugural meeting of the World's Student Volunteer Convention, it would have well repaid for crossing the Atlantic. Or, if one had had no other work than to address on eight occasions the representatives of the New York State Y.M.C.A.'s at their biennial gathering, it would have compensated for leaving one's beloved work in London. Of course all this must involve a deeper work in one's own soul, more pruning, more humbling, more experience of the Cross and grave of Christ, but who would not be willing to know death's in-working to see life working in so many new directions!

There are many lessons for us from the state of religion in the United States.

1. Let our ministers beware of drifting into preaching on social topics and questions of the day, apart from the person and work of the Saviour.

2. Let us maintain the custom of expository and experimental preaching.

3. Let us not announce sensational subjects to draw congregations.

4. Let us be strict to keep outside of our churches objectionable ways of raising money.

5. Let us carefully maintain church discipline; and let people understand, that if they want cards, balls, theatres, etc., they must dissociate themselves from our churches, and be one thing or the other. If they feel able to serve Christ in these things, let them stand or fall to their own Master, but let them do it apart from the Church lest they invalidate her testimony and impair her life.

6. Let us see to it that we act as light and salt on the movements of the time—not allowing the government of affairs to drift into the hands of irreligious and professional politicians.

7. Let us avoid having too many paid officials in our church work, and train our members to fill the various functions of church life.

8. Let us avoid throwing on the evangelist duties to which God has not called him. His work is not primarily with the Church, but with the world; and he should not be called in till the Church is in a healthy condition, and there is already a symptom of God's work through her upon the world.

Nothing could have been more loving and courteous than the treatment which I have universally received, and there are in the churches of Christ in U.S.A. thousands of the choicest souls that God ever made.

Again I thank my friends for prayer and sympathy, and ask that these may be continued as the months and years pass. F. B. Meyer.

[Mr. Meyer received a warm welcome from his people on Sunday, when he occupied his accustomed place at Christ Church, and spoke with much intensity of purpose.]

Special Providences.

A TRUE INCIDENT.

"THEN you don't believe in a special providence, Mr. Macdonald?"

"Well, that is putting it rather baldly. Oh, yes. I think there is such a doctrine in the Bible—in fact, I remember several passages that seem to indicate it. But I should say they are more especially intended for those 'unlucky dogs' who are always in low water. Now, I have never needed them. Things have gone smoothly with me, and I ought to be very thankful; but, then, I am a great believer in the old saying (is it in the Bible too?), 'God helps those who help themselves'"; and Mr. Macdonald folded his plump hands, and smiled complacently.

Mr. Grey looked at him with an expression of pity that needed the influence of his fine nature to preserve from a dash of contempt. He had called upon the prosperous merchant that bitterly cold winter's morning to ask his help in a case of pressing need—almost starvation—and had been met with the usual platitudes about "the danger of indiscriminate giving," and of "pauperising people," etc.—often a convenient barricade behind which selfishness and parsimony entrench themselves.

In bygone days Mr. Macdonald and he had been fellow-members and workers in a Christian Church, before riches increased, and his friend's heart had been set upon them to his grave spiritual detriment. But Mr. Grey felt that this case of soul-famine was more pitifully needy than even the cause he had come to plead.

"Am I interrupting any work just now?" he asked; "if not, I will give you an incident of my own experience."

"Oh, no, my dear fellow," said the other, visibly relieved by the change of subject; "you could not have come at a better time. I am quite glad of a chat with you; it reminds me of old times—very pleasant ones they were," he added, with a tone of regret, "but, as we get on in the world, new duties push out the old—a rising family, you see, and fresh social claims. But tell me this incident; I am sure it will be interesting."

"You say, 'God helps those who help themselves,'" Mr. Grey responded quietly. "I am sure He does. But sometimes the and tests the faith pretty sharply. There are many 'steps of bewilderment' in the path of life, and some stiff climbing; and though it develops muscle we don't enjoy it while it lasts. I had a time like that a few years ago. I have never been a rich man, but neither my wife nor I troubled about that, so long as we could pay our way and make the home bright, in an unpretending way, for the children. I do not think any one could say I did not help myself, by real steady work and care, to keep down expenses; and my wife—well, I never could tell anyone how she helped me in that struggle.

"But I had what some call 'a run of bad luck.' A large stock of furniture like mine needs extensive premises, and I could not afford to pay the rent in the best thoroughfare; so men who could got more than their share of the trade. Still, I could have got along if people who bought my goods would have paid for them honestly, but some kept me waiting for years and others never paid at all. Thus it came about that a bill for a heavy amount was falling due, and I did not know how to meet it.

"I shall never forget the terrible days I passed through when this difficulty faced me, and I could not see a way through it. Not to be able to pay my debts seemed to me worse than death, and for a long time I clung firmly to the confidence that God would never permit such a disgrace to fall upon me. I knew that He could easily send some good customer my way, and oh, how I did plead with Him to do it. But so far as I could tell there was no voice, nor any who regarded.

"It was a time of the year when trade was always dull and the days dragged on until I came to the very last one before the bill was due. I had never before kept a secret from my wife, but all this time I had hid this trouble from her, for I thought it would almost break her heart. However, at last I lost all hope, and grew so desperate that I think, if I had not told her, my reason would have given way. After a long preamble I had to tell her straight out; and then I was sorry I had not told her sooner, for though at first she turned so white that I thought she would faint, she brightened up, and with a brave light in her eyes said, 'Thomas, you haven't forgotten God?' 'No, but I think He must have forgotten us,' I was wicked enough to answer. 'No, dear,' she said; 'we know better than that. This is just the time He has warned us of, and told us how to act in it. Call on Me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee. You know,' she went on, 'we cannot always ask confidently for temporal relief, because it might not be good for us; but to be able to pay our just debts must be according to God's will, and so we will call on Him, and, Thomas, He will deliver us!' It amazed me to hear her talk so, for she was so retiring, and always seemed to lean on me in everything, and now she was my helper! But her words came with all the more power on that account, and my faith began to revive.

"We knelt down, and as we prayed all dread left me. I no longer saw my circumstances, I only saw my Deliverer. I knew from that time the meaning of the words 'Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee, because he trusteth in Thee,' for during the rest of the day all the burden was gone, and I found myself continually humming the familiar words:—

March on then right boldly,
The sea shall divide.

"I did not feel quite so restful and satisfied next morning when the way still seemed shut in; yet as I went into the shop I had a curious feeling of wonder how God was going to divide the sea, for, with a desperate faith, I believed He would do it.

"About 11 o'clock a well-dressed gentleman came in, and after enquiring in a businesslike way for expensive pieces of furniture, selected one thing after another. Suddenly he said, 'I must not buy any more this morning; if you will make out the bill I will write a cheque; but I hope it will not inconvenience you to keep the things until I need them, which may not be for a few weeks.'

"I was trembling so that I really could not write, but called a clerk. That morning I had gone carefully over my bank-book and cash to see how much was still needed to meet the bill, and when the account was totalled I saw that it came to the very amount required. I fairly broke down, and greatly astonished my customer by bowing my head on the desk and bursting into tears. It was only a momentary weakness, and then I explained to him that his purchases that morning had been nothing short of a Divine deliverance from a most pressing need. His benevolent countenance lighted up as he listened.

"'It is indeed wonderful,' he said; 'for I must tell you that I have had your address in my pocket for several days, given to me by a friend who recommended you. But not needing the goods at once, I almost forgot the matter until this morning. Being in this neighbourhood, with an hour to spare between two appointments, my attention was suddenly attracted by your name, and I thought it would be a good opportunity to look at your stock.'"

Mr. Grey paused. "Thank you very much," Mr. Macdonald said, with a slight huskiness of tone. "That story has done me good. I am afraid prosperity does materialise us a little, and it must almost be worth a little strain to see the hand of God stretched out like that. You might let me look at that subscription list again."

Mr. Grey took away with him a substantial proof of the "good" that had been done to his wealthy listener—a good that would be largely multiplied if there were among us fewer murmurs at the "mysteries" of God's Providence, and more joyous praise of his manifested love and guardian care.

Liverpool Sheltering Home.

DURING the winter the usual work among the widows and destitute children has been prosecuted. Many needy and touching cases have been received; while the sixpence and good meat meal given every Wednesday to 200 deserving widows has been a great blessing.

A bright band of boys and girls are now awaiting emigration to Canada. A considerable sum is still required to provide outfits and despatch this fifty-second party from Liverpool.

Hundreds of letters were received at the New Year from those in Canada, speaking gratefully of the impressions for good made on them in the the Sheltering Home. Many are showing evidence of change of heart.

Communications regarding the work may be sent to Mrs. Birt, Sheltering Home, Myrtle-street, Liverpool.

John Wesley's House.

WEDNESDAY week was the 107th anniversary of the death of the founder of Methodism, and the celebration in connection with the settlement and endowment of his house had especial interest for Wesleyan Methodists, who gathered from all parts of the country.

The opening meeting, held on Monday night, was in some respects the most interesting of all. It was, as one of the speakers remarked, "a unique manifestation of Christian union." The Church of England was represented by Dean Farrar, the Presbyterian Church by Dr. Monro Gibson, the Baptist Church by Dr. Clifford, and the Methodist Churches by Alderman Duckworth. It was pleasant to hear the brotherly tone that pervaded all the addresses. As a matter of fact, all the speakers, except perhaps the chairman (Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P.), said a good deal more about unity and catholicity than about John Wesley or his house. So far as the house was concerned, the remarkably clear statement read by Rev. T. E. Westerdale, the superintendent minister, gave all necessary information.

A large and representative congregation more than filling Wesley's Chapel assembled on Wednesday morning, the President of the Conference and the following ex-Presidents being present:—Revs. Dr. Jenkins, Dr. Waller, Dr. Stephenson, Dr. Marshall Randles, Thomas McCullagh, Charles H. Kelly, and Walford Green. Dr. Parker, of the City Temple, was the special preacher. Sir Henry H. Fowler, who presided at luncheon, said that in Wesley's house his father lived and died—the only minister who had died in that house save the founder of Methodism himself. He considered that the work now undertaken should have been done ten years ago. He hoped that the scheme would be gone through successfully, and he believed it would. Speaking of the day's proceedings as a celebration of John Wesley's personality, Sir Henry said that they must not consider that the house, the chapel, the buildings, and the tomb behind were John Wesley's monument. His work, his life, and his death were mightier monuments than anything to be found in England of to-day. Methodism had grown and developed. It was first the blade, then the ear, and now the full corn in the ear, that gave promise to many subsequent harvests. They recognised that there had been a Divine force running through the whole course of human history from the earliest period to the present day, and its appearance had been perhaps more marvellously developed in later than in earlier years. They could not ignore the Divine influence in the Church. Methodism still retained the unique position which Wesley laid down for it—"the friend of all and the enemy of none." It was an aggressive Church and a missionary Church, but it must never become a proselytizing Church, nor a political organization.

Rev. Dr. Parker and Rev. W. L. Watkinson, the President of the Conference, also spoke.

The formal dedication of Wesley's house took place in the afternoon, the President of the Conference being assisted in the service by Rev. Marshall Randles, D.D., of Manchester, ex-President, and Rev. Marshall Hartley, secretary of the Conference. The public reception followed, and was largely attended.

The final great representative meeting was held in the historic chapel on Wednesday evening.

The Jews and Palestine.—The eighth annual conference of the Chovevi Zion Association was held on Sunday at Clerkenwell. The delegates, about 200 in number, included "Lovers of Zion" from many lands. The objects of the association are to foster the "national idea" in Israel, to promote the colonisation of Palestine and neighbouring territories by the Jews, the establishment of new and assisting old colonies, and to diffuse a knowledge of Hebrew as a living language and improve the status of Israelites. There are now twenty-seven colonies in Palestine, with some 5000 poor Jewish refugees engaged in agricultural pursuits, and they have been very successful. Papers were read on several questions pertinent to the objects of the association. It was stated that the delegates represented 10,000 Zionists; and a committee was appointed to draft a scheme federating the whole of the Zionist bodies in great Britain.

American Notes.

THERE is considerable jealousy and irritated feeling toward Great Britain expressed in some of the newspapers in the Western States, originated and fostered by the representations made in school-books rather than by any actual cause in the conduct of our country. It is, therefore, pleasant to record anything on the other side. Bishop M'Cabe has given many times during he past thirty years, a lecture on "The Bright Side of Life in Libby Prison," which was the place of confinement for prisoners of war taken by the Confederate army. The Bishop delivered it here last week at a meeting of the Epworth League. It was full of incident, and intensely interested the crowded audience. But I have here specially to record his hearty and cordial reference to our Queen. Napoleon III. was said to have proposed to our Government to unite the fleets of England and France, and break through the blockade of the Southern ports by the Northern vessels. But the Queen replied: "My people shall never go on such a mission." Under great applause the speaker continued: "She has been reigning since I was a year old. May she continue to reign—and reign—and reign!" The name of Bishop (formerly chaplain) M'Cabe is one of the most popular of the survivors of the war, and he told us, with evident pleasure and pride, that his mother was an Englishwoman.

Another incident making for peace is the following extract from the Los Angeles Times:—

A CURIOSITY OF LITERATURE.

During the American civil war the English comic paper Punch, sharing the prejudices of a majority of the English people, was heartily in sympathy with the seceding South, and lampooned and caricatured Lincoln and the North bitterly. After the assassination of Lincoln, however, Punch published a cartoon representing Britannia sympathising with Columbia by the bier of the dead President. On the opposite page was a poem, which for its honest, earnest, and manly apology to the dead, and its glowing and appreciative tribute to Lincoln's genius, deserves to rank among the most remarkable contributions to modern literature.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

[Foully assassinated, April 14, 1865.]

You lay a wreath on murdered Lincoln's bier!
You, who with mocking pencil wont to trace,
Broad for the self-complacent British sneer,
His length of shambling limb, his furrowed face—
His gaunt, gnarled hands, his unkempt, bristling hair,
His garb uncouth, his bearing ill at ease,
His lack of all we prize as debonair,
Of power or will to shine, of art to please.
You, whose smart pen backed up the pencil's laugh,
Judging each step as though the way were plain;
Reckless, so it could point its paragraph,
Of chief's perplexity, or people's pain.
Beside this corpse, that bears for winding-sheet
The Stars and Stripes he lived to rear anew,
Between the mourners at his head and feet,
Say, scurrile-jester, is there room for you? * * *
Yes—he had lived to shame me for my sneer,
To lame my pencil, and confute my pen—
To make me own this kind of prince's peer,
This rail-splitter, a true-born king of men.
My shallow judgment I have learnt to rue,
Noting how to occasion's height he rose,
How his quaint wit made home-truth seem more true,
How, iron-like, his temper grew by blows.
How humble, yet how hopeful he could be;
How in good fortune and in ill the same;
Nor bitter in success, nor boastful he,
Thirsty for gold, nor feverish for fame.
He went about his work—such work as few
Ever had laid on head and heart and hand—
As one who knows, where there's a task to do,
Man's honest will must heaven's good grace command.
* * * * * *
The Old World and the New, from sea to sea,
Uttered one voice of sympathy and shame!
Sore heart, so stopped when it at last beat high,
Sad life, cut short just as its triumph came.
O deed accurst! Strokes have been struck before,
But the assassin's hand, whereof men doubt
If more of horror or disgrace they bore;
But thy foul crime, like Cain's, stands darkly out.
Vile hand, that brandest murder on a strife,
Whate'er its grounds, stoutly and noble striven;
And with the martyr crown crownest a life
With much to praise, little to be forgiven!

This uncompromising change of front, and the "glowing and appreciative tribute" to the intrinsic worth of one of the noblest men of history, is an honourable memorial of the English Press; and its reproduction now, when there is so much antagonistic sentiment towards England, is no less honourable to the American Press. The Gospel in Spain.

THE report of the Association for the Diffusion of the Gospel in Spain tells of a continuance of quiet, steady missionary work. The Gospel has been preached to many, a few have accepted it, and believers who live under the fire of fierce persecution have been encouraged and built up in the faith and hope of the Gospel.

Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong, who are self-supporting missionaries, have continued their practice of spending the summer months, of extreme heat, in Switzerland, and the rest of the year in Spain, but whether in Spain or in Switzerland they have maintained a frequent and intimate correspondence with the workers at those stations which it has not of late been within their power personally to visit. The blind woman, Carolina Bautista, continues her service in San Lucar, a small town in the province of Cadiz.

An interesting work at the town of Aguilas, which was begun years ago by Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong, is being continued by an energetic and efficient evangelist, Mr. Simpson. At Valladolid there is a little company of believers, as well as small bodies in the surrounding villages. From these Mr. and Mrs. Nisbet, of Madrid, received a call to take charge of the work. God has given abundant proofs that his hand was in the call. In various centres the Word is preached and dropped by the wayside. Some receive blessing direct from reading the Scriptures; and in these cases it is the privilege of the evangelist to water that which has been already sown. The work is represented in England by two committees, the secretaries of which are Messrs. B. F. Badcock, 9, Tithebarn-street, Liverpool; and S. Southall, 51, Cliff-road, Leeds.

North American Indians.

My friends will like to know of the effort now being made to clear from debt the C.M.S. Children's Homes among "Blood" Red Indians of North-West America. When labouring amongst these people I found itinerating work a failure, so turned my attention to the children, and with the assistance of an English lady and others raised a sum of money, with which I built boarding homes for the boys and girls, also a hospital. I furnished the homes at a cost of some thousands of dollars. For these things I had to become personally responsible, as the C.M.S. is unable to give grants for these special undertakings.

I have, unfortunately, under doctor's orders, to give up the work, but am still responsible for the debts. Rev. A. de B. Owen, who has been appointed missionary in charge, is doing good work, and the homes are being continued, and with the aid of a grant given by the Canadian Government they are self-supporting. But it is necessary and urgent that the bills owing, and for which I am responsible, should be paid. Communications may be sent to me, care of C.M.S. House, Salisbury-square, E.C.

Blind in China.

In Manchuria, as in other provinces of China, there is a very large number of people afflicted with blindness. Reliable statistics as to the extent to which blindness obtains cannot be procured, but manifestly the sufferers from this calamity are so numerous as to call for special consideration. Already in blind Chang, the story of whose devotion and success as an evangelist has been often told, proof had been given to our missionaries of the value of the Rev. W. H. Murray's system of teaching the blind to read. Rev. J. Webster, on his way home last year, visited Mr. Murray's school at Peking, and was led by all he saw of the working and fruits of Mr. Murray's system to give an enthusiastic verdict in its favour. The Manchuria committee have unanimously approved it as well adapted for the blind, and have recommended that a school on a small scale might be opened for the blind at Moukden; and the Board have now sanctioned this proposal. The expense will be very limited, while the benefits likely to accrue from such a school are likely to be great.—Missionary Record.

Indian Pariahs.—Rev. W. Raju, of the Methodist Episcopal Mission, Mount-road, Madras, writes: "I am labouring among the Pariahs, who are regarded by caste-ridden Hindus as social lepers. God is planting the seeds of salvation, and they are coming up. My church is composed of poor, helpless Pariah converts, who know that I am their friend. They have their difficulties and trials as Christians. They are the serfs condemned to hard labour for a trifling remuneration. Pray for us."

A Romish Convert.

PASTOR O. Golia-Mauro, Waldensian Pastor, Verona, gives a deeply interesting account of a young Redemptorist priest who recently sought him out for assistance in throwing off the fetters of Romanism. He writes: "Father G——, like many in the Church of Rome, was made a priest, so to speak, in childhood. He was born near Rome, but is now teaching philosophy in a seminary of priests in the province of Verona. He assures me that he has never been convinced of the Romish doctrines; on the contrary, although he has not yet a very clear knowledge of the Gospel, he feels his conscience in continual opposition to the Papal system.

"Father G—— is twenty-eight years of age, and seems very intelligent; in fact, several of his sermons, as well as printed poetry, are a proof of it. Morally speaking, his conduct up to the present time has been irreproachable, and the reason of his seeking me out and coming to me is with the sole aim of embracing the truth and being put into the way of preaching the Gospel. My hope and my plan is to satisfy his ardent wish by letting him study under my personal supervision, and at the same time to learn practical experience by working as colporteur; and, later on, when (D.V.) he is equal to so doing, to let him preach also."

Signor Golia-Mauro adds that there are many openings for such work as he hopes his new friends will shortly take up. On all hands there are cries for Gospel information and help. Meantime, however, there is the problem of maintaining the ex-priest; regarding this, communications may be addressed to Pastor Golia-Mauro, at 12, Lungadige Re Teodorico, Verona, Italy.

Winter in Palestine.

Our manager at Abraham's Vineyard, Jerusalem, Mr. W. H. Dunn, reports winter weather of great severity in Palestine. Throughout January and in February there have been continuous frosts, almost unprecedented, and repeated storms of high wind, with rain, hail, and heavy snowfalls. The intervals, though fine, have been intensely cold, and most trying to the poor Jews, ill-clad, ill-fed and housed, among whom there has been an epidemic of measles, and much illness besides.

This society employs fifty-six Jews at Abraham's Vineyard, of whom fifteen live at the Box Colony, which consists of wretched dwellings, partly dug out of the ground and partly built up with walls of old boxes and rough stones, roofed with bits of old tin and wood. Our lady visitor among the sick and feeble has lately distributed clothing to above 500 souls, and a little food to nearly 200 more. But thousands are in bitter need, and entreat us to give them work. E. A. Finn, Secretary Society for Relief of Persecuted Jews (Syrian Colonisation Fund).

The King of Glory.

"Lift up your heads, O ye gates;...and the King of glory shall come in."—Psa. xxiv. 7.

Lift up your heads, ye gates,
The King of glory waits
To enter in.
He comes, the Prince of Peace,
To bring the soul release
From death and sin.

Jesus—the name He bears,
The crown of Life He wears,
His sceptre Love;
His robe is dyed with red,
His hands and feet have bled—
Oh, look above!

Welcome, most royal guest,
As monarch in each breast
Now deign to dwell.
Come, holy heavenly dove;
Come, Prince of Life and Love;
Our passions quell.

Enter our hearts to-night—
We own thy sovereign right—
Expel all sin.
We would not Thou should'st wait—
Wide open is the gate,
O Lord, come in.

The Anti-Opium Protest.

THE assertion has been made, not without careful investigation, that "during every hour, night and day, of the Queen's reign, half a ton of opium has, on an average, been exported from India," and a very large proportion of that has found its way to China. Well may it be asked, who is responsible for trading in so pernicious a drug? It is demoralising in every respect. Morally and spiritually it means loss of all things; loss even of the soul to those who abandon themselves to its habitual use.

There is no greater hindrance to the success of the Gospel in the great land now being wonderfully opened than the opium traffic. So terrible a thing is it in the eyes of missionaries that if a candidate for church membership be only a moderate opium-smoker he is given a proportionately longer time of probation before his application for fellowship is accepted.

The agitation now renewed concerning the trade in opium is most timely. It would be a grievous wrong to the Chinese people if, as their ports are made free to the commerce of all nations, England did not take effective measures to reduce the evil that this particular traffic has wrought in the nation for so many years. We, therefore, heartily rejoice that the Representative Board of the Anti-Opium Societies has bestirred itself in the matter.

The meetings held last week in the Memorial Hall, though perhaps not quite so largely attended as could have been wished, or as the importance of the cause itself demanded, were most thoroughly representative of the religious sentiment of London, and will have great weight in developing Christian opinion on the subject. The "all day" assembly was begun in fellowship with God, who alone can influence the minds of our leading statesmen in "national righteousness." The first prayer-hour was presided over by Preb. Webb-Peploe, M.A.; the second by Rev. W. L. Watkinson, President of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference. A day of special preparation for a great crusade could not have been commenced in a better manner.

The afternoon meeting was probably the most important of the gatherings. Missionaries from various parts of the field related their personal experiences of the vicious consequences of the practice of opium-smoking. India, Ceylon, Singapore Burmah, had each its representative. The testimony given left no doubt upon the minds of the hearers of the great injustice done to China by the exportation to its shores of such enormous quantities of the drug. Sir Matthew Dodsworth, Bart., who presided, said, "he was convinced that it had hitherto been the policy of the English Government to see what could be squeezed out of China for its own benefit."

In the evening the meeting was rather a demonstration on the part of the great missionary societies of the metropolis; and a worthy representation of indignation at the continuance of the traffic it proved to be. On this occasion Mr. John Edward Ellis, M.P., was the president. The London Missionary Society sent as its advocate Rev. Arnold Foster, B.A.; from the Church Missionary Society, Rev. H. M. Eyton-Jones, M.A., came; Dr. S. R. Hodge represented the Wesleyan Society; Rev. Duncan Ferguson, M.A., appeared on behalf of Presbyterian Foreign Missions; Dr. A. W. Douthwaite was from the China Inland Mission; whilst the Methodist New Connexion had commissioned their President of Conference to express sympathy and co-operation with the revived movement.

Such a union of Christian societies, so Catholic in their endeavours to save the nations of the world for Christ, all protesting against the same iniquitous thing, cannot fail of leaving a great impression for good behind it. At the close of the meeting the following resolution was unanimously adopted, "That as opium smoking in China is by general and unquestionable testimony working great harm in every direction to the people, and that inasmuch as the export of opium from India has brought about the rapid extension of the poppy growth in China and a great increase of opium consumption by the Chinese, and further, that as nothing in the way of effective restriction is possible in China whilst the export from India is continued, this meeting calls upon the British Government to stop the export from India, except for medicinal use."

JOHN THE BAPTIST BEHEADED.—Matt. xiv. 1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life."—Prov. iv. 23.

HEROD THE TETRARCH, son of Herod the Great, who slew the children of Bethlehem. Tetrarch = ruler of the fourth part. Herod only inherited a quarter of his father's kingdom (1).

A GUILTY CONSCIENCE.

Herod had beheaded John the Baptist. Never easy in his mind about it. Now when he hears of the wonderful work of Jesus, he is superstitious and tells his officers that John must be come to life again, bringing with him the power of the spirit world. (2): "A guilty conscience needs no accuser."

Lessons.—1. Conscience, the voice of God in us. 2. It may be silenced for a time, but it will speak out in the end. 3. We cannot escape from conscience.

Illustrations.—Nero rushing along the shore of Italy thinking that the ghost of his murdered mother was following him.

"The wicked fleeth when no man pursueth."

WHY JOHN WAS IMPRISONED.

Herod in his palace at Tiberias; John in a dungeon caged beneath the palace. Herod had enticed his brother's wife from him, and then put his own wife away in order to marry his brother's. Every step was wrong, and John repeatedly told Herod so to his face (4). John was condemning the common people for their sin so the king could not escape.

COURAGE FOR THE RIGHT.

It takes a brave man to point out a king's sin. Hugh Latimer condemned the sin of Henry VIII.; John Knox preached to Mary, Queen of Scots; Elijah denounced Ahab. Heroes of the world in all ages have been those who "dared to do the right."

SUCCESS OF HERODIAS.

Compare Herodias with Jezebel, and contrast her with the mother of Samuel.

She gained her point. John was beheaded, but both she and her husband must have regretted that day's work for the rest of their lives. It is not always good for us to succeed. God does not answer all our prayers. We must not be angry with our parents if they sometimes deny us what they know would bring pain. It is better to fail than to succeed in doing wrong.

RIGHT ON THE SCAFFOLD.

Seems strange that God should allow John to be put to death while the wicked Herod lived on in luxury. Compare the fate of Christ. The righteous man expects his harvest in the next world.

Illustration.—By the brave deeds of our fathers they were killed, but their bodies have formed a bridge over which we march to the promised land of liberty.

Right for ever on the scaffold,
Wrong for ever on the throne;
But that scaffold sways the future,
And behind the dim unknown
Standeth God amid the shadows,
Keeping watch above the sun.

A DRUNKEN KING.

Herod was sorry as soon as he heard the request of Salomé. He would not have made so rash an oath if he had been sober.

In a state of intoxication many have sold virtue, honesty, love, their very soul—their birthright. They were mad at the time, but the gift cannot be re-bought when they come to themselves.

THEY TOLD JESUS.

The disciples, horrified at the crime, went to Jesus for comfort and inspiration. This is what we should do at all times. Tell Him our troubles, sins, sorrows, difficulties, and He will give us strength, forgiveness, comfort, guidance.

What a privilege to carry
Everything to Him in prayer.

JOHN'S SUCCESS.

He came to prepare the way of the Lord, and he fulfilled his mission. In years his life was short, but it was crammed with good deeds. There is a depth and breadth to life as well as a length.

"He most lives who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best."

No life is a failure, but the grandest success, if God at last says to us "Well done!"

[See S.S. LESSON FOR MARCH 13.]

I WAS startled the other day to see a family of six grown-up children and their mother, who had been taken suddenly ill within a few minutes of each other. A physician came, and on the evidence of sight, smell, and hearing, it was clearly a case of poisoning. As is usual in a case of sickness or accident, the neighbours flocked in; an inconvenient custom, to be sure, but sometimes some good comes out of it. Those assembled, especially the older women, freely expressed their opinion as to the cause of the trouble, and as freely prescribed remedies; not more than three or four of them speaking at the same time! Our everyday proverb is: "Consult one who has tried, rather than a doctor," and sometimes it does happen that we have an illustration in such cases of the usefulness of "many counsellors" (Prov. xi. 14).

All of a sudden one woman could be heard to say that it is a case of tare-poisoning. Addressing the father, the woman asked him many questions, and now he could be heard uttering imprecations and curses upon the flour merchant, who had the day before supplied the meal out of which the poisonous bread had been made, and which was the cause of all the trouble. This being made plain, it was felt that no fatal results would ensue, although temporary pain and inconvenience would still be felt for some days.

My mother affirms that the mere smell of tare-bread made my late father very sick. We do not suppose, however, that any merchant, however unscrupulous, ever purposely mixes tares in wheat for the sake of gain; rather some of the wheat is unavoidably sprinkled with the tares which had grown amongst and with it, and from which it could not be totally freed. This poisonous grain is found to grow among the wheat chiefly in the countries of which Cyrenius and Lysanias were governors (Luke ii. 2; Luke iii. 1). The farmers maintain that a certain state of the weather converts wheat into tares in the very soil, but desk and library philosophers refuse to believe in this sudden and sharp transmutation. They say, on the contrary, that tares are wafted by the winds, or carried by animals into the wheat-sown fields, where in its earlier stages it grows undetected and undistinguishable from wheat.

The most experienced farmer or miller may find it difficult, if not impossible, entirely to separate every particle of chaff or tares from his wheat. No such difficulty, however, is felt here or hereafter by Him who searches the heart, and will "judge the world in righteousness," and separate unerringly the good and the bad, and consign them to their respective destinies. G. HOWIE.

Shweir, Mt. Lebanon, Syria.

The Guest.

My will, like Mary, sits at Jesu's feet,
My thoughts, like Martha, hurry to and fro
Across my courtyard opening on the street,
Where trains of burden-bearers come and go.

My roomy mind with unlocked, wide-flung doors,
Shows all disordered; signs of haste and care,
And heaped anxieties bestrew the floors,
Miswrought, unfinished tasks lie everywhere.

O waiting Guest! The power of carking fears,
Of sanctioned doubt and earth-born trivial aims,
Have worked this cumbrance that my spirit wears—
This turmoil with its vexed, uneasy claims.

And yet Thou knowest my adoring heart
Cleaves, cleaves to Thee: I am not all unrest;
Long since I chose that better, saving part
That holds my will in thine, securely blest.

What lack I yet? Thy silence makes reply;
This Guest needs not my fevered stress and strain;
No anxious toil demands of his supply,
My carefulness is but self-chosen pain.

Lord, let the fragrance of thy presence flow
Throughout my chambered life as Gilead's balm,
Let mind and thought serener, stiller grow,
Till every word and act reveal thy calm!

SUNDAY, March 13.

"He sighed deeply in his spirit."—Mark viii. 12.

THIS Evangelist twice over calls attention to the Lord's sighs—in vii. 34, and here. A sigh is one of the most touching and significant tokens of excessive grief! When Nature is too deeply overwrought to remember her necessary inspirations, and has to compensate for their omission by one deep-drawn breath, we sigh, we sigh deeply in our spirit. There is the sigh of profound grief, of long-sustained suspense, of intense and absorbed thought.

Looking up to heaven, He sighed.—As the deaf mute stood before Him—an image of all the closed hearts around Him, of all the inarticulate unexpressed desires, of all the sin and sorrow of mankind—the sensitive heart of Jesus responded with a deep-drawn sigh. But there was simultaneously a heavenward look, which mingled infinite hope in it. If the sigh spoke of his tender sympathy, the look declared his close union with God, by virtue of which He was competent to meet the direst need. Whenever you sigh look up to heaven. Heaven's light turns tears to jewels!

He sighed deeply.—The obdurate and impenetrable hardness of the Pharisees, their wilful misinterpretation of his words and mission, their pride and bigotry, wrung the Lord's heart with bitterness. He turned sorrowfully away. There was no possibility of furnishing help, since on their side there was no desire for it, or belief in Him. Perhaps such sighs still break from his heart, as He views mankind; but through them He is doing his best to bring about the time when all sorrow and sighing shall flee away for ever.

MONDAY, March 14.

"If Thou canst...And Jesus said unto him, If thou canst!"—Mark ix. 22, 23.

Yes, there was an if in this sad case. But the father put it in the wrong place. He put it against Christ's power, "If Thou canst do anything." But it was really on the side of his own ability to believe. If only he believed, all else would be easily possible. Even though his faith were small it would suffice; the tiniest seed can appropriate the chemical products of the soil, and transmute them into digestible products; the narrowest channel will suffice for the passage of the waters of the whole ocean if you give time enough. Let us not worry about the greatness or smallness of our faith; the main point is as to whether it is directed towards the living Saviour.

There are many issues to which these words may be applied. If Jesus can save me from the power of sin! No; if thou canst believe, He can. If Jesus can deliver out of a mesh of temptation and perplexity! No; if thou canst believe He will. If Jesus can revive his work mightily to the upbuilding of his Church and the ingathering of the lost! No; if thou canst believe for it.

Dost thou want that faith? It may be had thus. Look away from difficulty and temptation to Jesus; consider Him; feed thy faith on its native food of promise; familiarise thyself with fellowship with the promises; study what He has done for others; thus thou wilt believe. For every thought of thy little faith take ten thoughts of his faithfulness.

All things are possible to God,
To Christ the power of God in man,
To me, when I am all subdued,
When I in Christ am formed again,
And witness from my sins set free,
All things are possible to me.

TUESDAY, March 15.

"They were in the way going up to Jerusalem; and Jesus was going before them; and they were amazed; and they that followed were afraid."—Mark x. 32.

The radiant vision of the Transfiguration was deliberately forsaken, as the Lord took the way of the cross, going to Jerusalem to die. The shadow of his awful exodus had already fallen upon the little group. Behold that resolute figure—the wan face lit up with the fire of an invincible resolve—going in front, climbing the difficult ascent. The apostles cannot keep step with his eager steps, and they fear as an instinctive dread of coming events casts its chilling mantle around them. There was something in their Master they could not understand, an expression on his face they could not decipher.

Such moments come to all lives, when Jesus leads us to the cross. How often He asks for a deeper consecration, a more complete crossing of natural inclination for the sake of his Gospel, an intenser purpose. At his bidding we must tear ourselves away from ambitions which had fascinated, and dreams which had allured. We must no longer live on the lower level, however pleasant to flesh and blood, but gird ourselves to go up to Jerusalem.

At such moments He always goes before us. We may not see Him until we begin to follow in the direction of his voice; but so soon as we set ourselves to obey, we become aware of his prevenient grace. He is just in front. He never puts forth his own sheep without going before them. He never asks us to tread a path which has not been trodden by his footsteps. Happy are they who follow Him here, for in the eternal land they shall follow the Lamb to the fountains of waters of life, and God shall wipe away all tears.

WEDNESDAY, March 16.

"Jesus answering saith unto them, Have faith in God."—Mark xi. 22.

The marg. of A.V. suggests that this command might be rendered, Have the faith of God. As long as I live I shall remember this text in connection with my first meeting with Hudson Taylor. He was to preach for me on a Sunday morning, now years ago, and gave out this as his text. But he said that he had always interpreted it as dealing rather with God's faith to us than ours to Him; so that it ran thus: Reckon on God's faithfulness. Since then I have learnt to rest much more on God's troth than my own. If we believe not, He remaineth faithful; He cannot deny Himself. There are two or three conditions to be fulfilled, however, before we can do this.

1. We must be sure that we are on God's plan.—There is a prepared path for us, along which God has stored up all necessary supplies. But if we want those supplies, we must find and follow it. Along the track which He has marked out between this and Home, our Father has erected cairns full of provisions, but we must let his route prevail over our own notions and wishes, if we are to enjoy his preparations.

2. We must be prepared to wait on Him.—For these things He will be inquired of. Though He knows what we need, He expects our humble request, that we may be perpetually reminded of our entire dependence on Him. He sometimes appears to tarry to draw out our faith and prayer. But He will never utterly fail.

3. We must walk worthily of Him.—God shows Himself strong only on behalf of those whose heart is perfect towards Him. By his enabling grace we must put away the old manner of life, and be renewed in the spirit of our mind, that we may be such whom the great God shall delight to honour. Let such trust Him to the hilt; they will find Him faithful.

THURSDAY, March 17.

"He is not the God of the dead, but of the living."—Mark xii. 27.

Since God spoke of Himself as the God of the patriarchs, centuries after they had been borne to their graves, it stood to reason that they were yet living, and on this ground our Lord met the allegation of the Sadducees that there is no life beyond death. But what blessed considerations arise from this marvellous commentary on God's words at the bush.

Death is not a state or condition, but an act.—We speak of the dead, but in point of fact there are none such. We should speak of those who have died. They were living up to the moment of death, but they were living quite as much afterwards. Death is like birth, an act, a transition, a passage into a freer life.

All our dear ones are living.—As vividly, as keenly, as intensely as ever: with all the love and faith and intelligence with which we were wont to associate their beloved personality. It may be that they think of us as only half alive, compared with their own intense and vivid experience of the life which draws its breath from the manifested presence of God. Oh, do not fear that they will cease to recognise, know, or love you. Yet it remains true, "Without us they cannot be made perfect."

Those who live on either side of death meet in God.—Those who are present in the body, and those who are absent from it, meet in proportion as they approach God. When we come near Him in thought, and prayer, and love, we are come to the spirits of the just made perfect. God is the glorious centre of all the lines that radiate into all worlds. The spokes of the wheel of Ezekiel's vision converge there.

"Ye know not when the lord of the house cometh, whether at even, or at midnight, or at cock-crowing, or in the morning."—Mark xiii. 35.

No, we know not. It is better that we should not know. But He must be very near. Even has past; the beams of his presence had just died off the world, and the after-glow was still lingering in the ministry of the apostles in the early Church. Midnight has past; it reached its deepest darkness in the middle ages, when only a few holy souls shone like stars in the surrounding gloom. Cock-crow has past; Wickliffe and Luther, and others, heralded the morning. And now the morning is upon us; nay, it is shining more and more unto the perfect day. He must be near, even at the doors. Be ready, O virgin souls, to go forth to meet Him!

But may not these words be interpreted in yet another way? Jesus comes to us in the evening twilight, when the joy of our life seems slowly waning. He comes to us in the deep night of depression, bereavement, and anguish. He comes to us in the hope and expectancy of each new dawn, when we gird ourselves to fresh toils and endeavours. He comes to us in the morning, and satisfies us with his mercy, that we may rejoice and be glad all the day. Only let us watch for his coming, with ears attent to his lightest footfall, his softest whisper. Then, when He shows Himself through the lattice, or softly whispers, "Come away," we shall arise and go forth with Him to the beds of lilies and the gardens of myrrh.

SATURDAY, March 19.

"But Jesus said, Let her alone."—Mark xiv. 6.

The lovers of Jesus are often misunderstood. Those who judge only by a utilitarian standard refuse to acknowledge the worth of their deeds. You might as well despise the electric light because it makes no register on a gas-meter. But when the voices of criticism and jealousy are highest, Jesus steps in and casts the shield of his love around the trembling, disconcerted soul, saying, Let him alone. So He speaks still:—

To Satan.—The adversary stands near to resist and tempt. As Judas criticised Mary, so the Evil One seems at times to pour a perpetual stream of chilling criticism on all we say and do; or he meets us at every turn with some evil suggestion. But Jesus is on the watch, and He will not allow us to be tempted beyond what we are able to bear, but when heart and flesh fail, He will step in and say, Let him (or her) alone.

To sorrow.—We must pass through the fire, and be subjected to the lapidary's wheel; we must drink of his cup, and be baptized with his baptism; we must bear our cross after Him. But He is always on the alert. And whenever the feeble flesh is at an end of its power of endurance, He will step in and say, Let be—it is enough.

To human unkindness.—Some of us are called to suffer most from our fellows; our foes belong to our own households; our brother Cain hates us. It is hard to bear. To have one's motives misunderstood and maligned, to lose one's good name, to be an outcast—all this is hard. But Jesus goes beside us, and at his word the storm will drop into a deep calm.

A Song for Little Pilgrims.

Hebrews xi. 13.

I AM a little pilgrim ;
My God, I walk with Thee!
No greater name my heart would claim
Since Thou has set me free.
The pathway lay
Through shadows grey ;
But now I see the dawn of day.

Acts xxvii. 23 ; Romans xii. 11.

I am a little servant,
And, oh, my Lord is kind!
Labour is sweet at Christ's dear feet,
His burden light I find.
His will I know,
And gladly go ;
I run his errands to and fro.

2 Tim. ii. 3-4, 1 Tim. vi. 12, John iii. 4.

I am a little soldier,
The King must take command,
And those who fight in his great might
Most valiantly shall stand!
No foe we fear
When Christ is near,
For He has all we hold most dear.

Acts ix. 15, 2 Timothy ii. 21.

I am a little vessel,
Christ's blessed Name to bear ;
The water pure, the Gospel sure,
The life that all may share.
Though small my store,
He makes it more,
And fills the pitcher while I pour.

1 Tim. i. 15, Heb. vii. 25, John i. 7, 8, 9.

I am a great, great sinner,
But Christ for me has died,
And in his Name I pardon claim,
And Home at his dear side.
He will not leave
One soul to grieve,
Who comes salvation to receive.

"Something New."

HOW fond we all are of new things! When Jack gets a new coat or Polly has a new hat, how delighted they are. I knew a little boy who was wild with pleasure because he was going to have his first new little sailor suit, and when mother came to try it on he kicked his little petticoats hither and thither and shouted: Get away old things, I shall never want you again, for I am going to have everything new. There is a Bible text which says, "Old things are passed away ; behold all things have become new"; but we cannot get rid of our old sins like the little boy did of his clothes ; oh, no!

What can wash away my sin ?
Nothing but the blood of Jesus.

There are a great many new things spoken of in the Bible, and I want you to find some of them with me.

I. The New Heart.

This is the first new thing we need. We can never be good, never please God until we get a new heart. And God promises to give it to each one who asks for it, for Jesus Christ's sake.

II. A New Creature.

When we get the new heart that makes us a new creature, disagreeable people become pleasant, cross boys are made kind, selfish girls become generous, etc. A mother said to a friend who was calling on her, "I cannot think what has come over Jennie, she used to be so sulky and unwilling, and now she is as bright and happy as possible and so ready to run my errands ; she is quite a different creature." Jennie happened to be just coming into the room at the time, and exclaimed: "That's just it, mother. I've got a new heart, and I'm so happy."

The reason why we can get the new heart, and be made a new creature, is because of

III. The New Covenant.

You know a covenant is an agreement between two people. The old covenant was between God and man, and man broke his side of it. The new covenant is between God and Jesus Christ, and therefore is sure. Jesus keeps God's law for us, and yet bears the punishment we deserve ; so for his sake God's precious promises are all fulfilled to us.

When by this new covenant we are admitted into God's family we get

IV. The New Name.

When the heathen are converted, the missionaries give them a new name. If a child is adopted into a family, she gets the family name. So Jesus gives us his new name, and we are called after Him.

And learn his

V. New Commandment.

All the Ten Commandments bound up in one—and that is "Love." Keeping the new one we keep all the old. Then we can begin to sing

VI. The New Song.

We read more about the new song in the Bible than about any other new thing, because when we have got all these new things we are so full of joy that our hearts keep singing and the new songs come out.

VII. The New Home.

This comes last. Jesus is getting it ready for us, and we must be getting ready for it. Oh, dear children, let us make sure that we do not miss this last new thing by getting the first.

"He that sitteth on the throne said, 'Behold I make all things new.'" E. J. Banks.

One small niece sends me a packet of pincushions for distribution. I am sure they will be much appreciated.

Several of my nephews and nieces in answering the questions this last week gave references only. I must again repeat that, unless specially stated, answers must be always written out as well as references, and I do not accept papers where references only are given.

Bertie Baker (Edinburgh).—Am glad you are joining. As there is another nephew of the same name, will you give yours in full ; otherwise it will possibly cause confusion ?

Lena Barber.—Pleased to welcome you as one of my nieces.

Reginald Findlay.—Your writing is not very good, and you are rather careless in putting small letters instead of capitals for names of persons.

Katie Oliver.—Yes ; it is better to give your address with your name and age. I am sorry Sidney is not in the list this week, but he only gave references.

Ella Williamson.—I will index your name for No. 111, considering the circumstances. I also hope you may be successful.

Lizzie Symon.—Am pleased to hear you like doing the Searcher so much.

Geo. Wright.—I had a paper last week with your address, but no signature, so could not include it in the correct list. Am sorry Arthur has been ill.

Evelyn Constable.—You will not find the text as you quote it. In 2 Cor. v. 15 it says, "He (meaning Christ) died for all."

Lottie Carmichael.—You can answer in your own words, only be sure and give the reference.

Muriel Ecroyd.—Thank you for your letter. Your pets must be a great amusement to you all, especially "Floss" and "Smut."

John MacMurray.—You will find your name in the correct list. As you are one of my small nephews I think you might find a pencil easier than ink.

Home Missions.

Mr. McNeill in London.

THE evangelist has now concluded his labours in the more central parts of the City, and has transferred his efforts to the suburbs. On Sunday last he began to address meetings at Woolwich, where he will be in the Drill Hall, this and next week, with afternoon meetings during the week at the Concert Hall, Blackheath.

The experiment of having consecutive midday meetings in Exeter Hall was in every way a success. The hour is by no means a convenient one, especially for ladies having home claims. Nevertheless, there was a very large muster from day to day last week, the audiences being pretty well divided in the matter of sex. One noteworthy fact was the attendance of several members of Parliament, who came repeatedly, and evidently enjoyed the expositions given by Mr. McNeill. That, we shou'd ju ge, was the common experience. One day he off red some remarks on the Second Coming of Christ that created much interest. Speaking on the miraculous draught of fishes recorded in John xxi., the preacher said, the waiting time that the disciples passed through in Galilee after the resurrection before Christ appeared to them was a testing time. They did well to apply themselves to the honest, useful work of fishing, instead of wandering aimlessly on the shores of the lake looking for the Master. This led Mr. McNeill on to a brief exposition of the doctrine of the Second Advent. He warmly cautioned his hearers to avoid the two extremes of heresy—forgetting or ignoring the fact of the promised return—and lunacy—the fixing of dates wholly unwarranted by anything in the Scripture. This latter practice, said Mr. McNeill, has burlesqued and brought into disrepute the whole study of Second Advent truth. Another very telling discourse was that upon God's audit of Gideon's army, when thirty-two thousand were weeded out, till only three hundred fighting stalwarts remained. In the course of this address there was a protest against the modern proneness to figure up and tabulat results in Christian work, with the view of making a big show in the annual report. The closing address at Exeter Hall, on the lessons to be deduced from the miracle of feeding the five thousand in a desert place, was so full of practical points that we reproduce the address substantially in preceding columns.

SOME VERY ENCOURAGING RESULTS

have revealed themselves. One case may be mentioned as a sample. The head of a business house had arranged for those in his establishment to attend some of the earlier meetings in Exeter Hall. As a result, the manager and several of the assistants were led to Christian decision. A weekly Bible-class has been commenced in the house, with a good attendance, and it has already borne fruit in further conversions. The ramifications of the outcome of these mission meetings can never be fully known, but enough is known to awaken thankfulness and encourage continued effort.

THE GREAT ASSEMBLY HALL

meetings of the past week might tersely be described as replicas of those of the previous week. The crowds that flocked into and generally filled the big hall night by night were on the whole genuinely East-end in their composition. Poverty and toil—aye, and sin—were plainly stamped on many a countenance. The cheering and hope-giving Gospel messages of the evangelist seemed to fall on the ears of the multitudes like healing balm. Responses are no rarity in any of Mr. McNeill's meetings, but these East-end gatherings were remarkable for the expressions o' assent and consent that were evoked. The second meetings held every evening were taken advantage of very heartily by Mr. Charrington's band of helpers, and they had the reward of seeing many led to fulness of conscious trust in Jesus Christ. Some were met with, but we do not deem it wise to publish details.

The addresses, while they were unfailingly evangelistic, were also full of sharp rebuke to Laodicean or self-righteous professors; so that all sorts of hearers were led to feel that the touchstone of divine truth had been applied, bringing every soul down to the level of penitent faith and humble resolve, in the promised strength of the ever-present Spirit.

At the conclusion of the Woolwich mission, Mr. McNeill will take another interval of rest, and then commence a period of work at Stratford. The succeeding mission of the series will be at the Agricultural Hall, Islington, which has been secured from April 17 to May 4.

Ratcliff Strangers' Rest.

FOR twenty years the Strangers' Rest in Ratcliff Highway has afforded shelter and comfort to sailors of many lands, and been a sphere of Gospel work. As our readers well know, the Rest is simply a house and shop situate in the heart of a district notorious for vice, where sailors may always receive a friendly welcome and hear the glad tidings of salvation. The round of work is an o'er-told tale, and the blessing attending the unremitting labours of devoted men and women is a familiar story. The new report gives some cheering testimonies.

Here is one from Rotterdam:—"I have been a poor and helpless sailor, who never could withstand the temptation to sin. I led a life of utter disgrace till seventeen months ago, when I was brought to the knowledge of the truth at the Strangers' Rest, and now, through the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, I am living a better and a nobler life, for his blood cleanses from all sin. The Lord give me grace to stand up boldly for Him among my shipmates." One who had been a criminal writes:—"I am glad to tell you that I am still trusting the Master; it is good to serve Him, and I mean by his help to go on seeking to please Him. I firmly believe that if I had not come to the Rest I should never have found the Master, and now I would not for worlds lose Him. It is so good to be able to take all to Him. Of trials I have plenty, but, thank God, He is with me."

"While buttonholing men at the door one afternoon," writes a worker, "a young man saluted me by name; but although I had seen his face before, I could not remember him. On being told that he had the advantage of me, he replied, 'I ought to know you, as you were the means of my conversion two and a-half years ago.' Having made himself known to me, I remembered his coming into the Rest one afternoon in great distress of soul, and on being dealt with he yielded to Christ. On his departure he took with him a New Testament, which he gave some time afterwards to a young sailor who was leaving for a voyage. Six months afterwards this young sailor returned, a bright and earnest young Christian, having been led to the Saviour through reading the Testament."

The daily record gives a total attendance for the year of 6661 English, 556 Swedes and Norwegians, 526 Germans and Jews, 339 Spanish, and 12 French. These figures are exclusive of special teas and bank holiday meetings, when the average attendance on each occasion has been about 225 of various nations. The Bible-class is of great importance and much appreciated by the Christian men, of whom 398 have attended this year. As usual there is need of helpers in the foreign department of the work. Communications should be addressed to the hon. sec., Mr. J. Theo. Isaac, 163, St. George's-street, E.

The London Diocesan Police Court Mission employs nineteen missionaries, thirteen of them men. These, by the kindness of magistrates, are in daily attendance at the courts. Last year no fewer than 1889 special cases were handed over to them, and they expended the sum of £1,649 11s. 7d. on them. The missionaries save thousands of first offenders from ruin; they get lads away from bad surroundings and evil companionships, sending them out to sea, or to farms, etc. There are six mission women who visit female cases charged at the courts. In many instances they have been successful in reconciling husbands and wives, and influencing for good the husbands as well. The new report shows that a vast amount of work was done last year. Copies and other information may be had from the secretary, Rev. J. H. A. Law, 4, Sanctuary, Westminster.

Rotherhithe Free Church.

THE nineteenth annual meeting of this vigorous mission centre was held last week, when the hall was crowded out. Mr. Joseph Kitchin presided. Amongst those who spoke were Hon. Granville Waldegrave, Rev. John Wilson, Mr. John Colville, M.P., Messrs. W. G. Bradshaw, G. E. Morgan, F. A. Graham, George Nokes, Joseph Clarke, and Thomas Richardson.

The report presented gives a most cheering account of the whole work. The membership shows an increase of seventy-eight, making 290 during the four years of Mr. Richardson's pastorate. The total membership on the books is 607. The Gospel meetings have been crowded all the year through. The only two complaints are lack of room for the crowds who come and the unhealthy atmosphere created by overcrowding. A place twice the size could be filled with the greatest ease, so ready are the masses of the people to come and listen to the simple Gospel message. God has blessed his own Word to the salvation of many at these gatherings. The prayer-meetings are extremely encouraging. The "People's Own" meetings on Thursday nights is only a few weeks old, but already has a membership of just over 500 men and women. An address is usually given to believers, with a Gospel invitation to the unsaved.

The "Men's Own," which meets every Sunday afternoon in the Rotherh.he Town Hall, has been a remarkable success in every way. Although only started in April last 951 men have joined. If ever anything proved the power of the Gospel of Christ, surely this does, for it is confined to God's Word, and many have been the cases of conversion.

A "People's Service" is also held in the Town Hall on Sunday nights. The object in starting this late meeting has been to try and get hold of those who will not attend a regular place of worship, and to induce the members of the "Men's Own" to bring their wives and friends. It also affords some relief in the overcrowded state of the church. The attendances have been good, and the work accomplished very encouraging. The Sunday schools are in a flourishing condition, and record further increases. Here again the cry is "More room!" Every nook and corner is occupied. Similarly the Bible classes, Christian Band, Band of Hope, Gospel Temperance effort, and the open-air services are reported as full of life and activity.

As to the future, it is stated:—"We have been able to secure the site upon which the present building stands, with three houses in front and six cottages at the side. The freehold has been acquired for £3,000, and is acknowledged by all who know the value of property in the district to be a splendid bargain. The leases of the houses and cottages referred to expire next Christmas, and when we are in a position to erect a new building we will do so. We do not ask for funds to carry on the work, but in the erection of a new building we are bound to appeal for help. We do not want an ecclesiastical edifice. We want a substantial, light, airy structure, to accommodate some 2,500 people, to whom we can tell of the love of Christ. We make a most earnest appeal for asssistance. South-East London is more neglected spiritually than any other part of the Metropolis."

The anniversary collections and receipts amounted to £54 2s. 3d. The pastor, Mr. Thomas Richardson, may be addressed, 48, Lower-road, Rotherhithe, S.E.

The Lowestoft Bethel Mission (in connection with the British and Foreign Sailors' Society) has for fifty years been the centre of work among fishermen and sailors, which has been the means of the conversion of hundreds of souls. The blessing is not confined to the port of Lowestoft, as many hundreds of Scotch fishermen and foreign sailors come to the port, and many have borne testimony to the blessing that the Lowestoft Bethel has been to many living in Scotland. The old building is now unsafe in stormy weather, and is utterly unable to receive the crowds who come. Scores of persons have to be turned away because there is no room, even to stand and listen to the old, old story of Jesus and his love. A splendid site has been secured facing the Herring Docks, and the new building will, it is purposed, be commenced this spring. It is estimated that the cost of the new building, with site and other incidental expenses, will be at least £3,100. Help is earnestly desired. The treasurer is Mr. A. G. Boyd, Stronsay, South Lowestoft.

Deep-Sea Fishermen.

THE Mission to Deep-sea Fishermen was ably represented on Thursday afternoon at a meeting held in the Mansion House, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor (Col. Davies); the Egyptian Hall being filled by a deeply interested audience. The Chairman congratulated the society on the great and important work it is doing on behalf of a large class of arduous toilers. During last year the society has contributed to the medical, social, and spiritual welfare of 20,000 fishermen of the North Sea, to 30,000 fishermen on the Labrador coast, and to 10,000 fishermen on the Scotch and Irish coasts. Thus some 60,000 deep-sea toilers have benefited by the efforts of the M.D.S.F.

The energetic medical superintendent, Dr. W. T. Grenfell, reviewed briefly the extent and value of the fishing industry, giving emphasis to the great urgency of the mission. The sea fisheries of the United Kingdom represented a money value of seven-and-a-half millions sterling. The British supplied every country on the Continent with fish, the number of men engaged in the work being over 90,000. That number would be doubled if those men were included who gained a living in industries ashore which were kept alive by fishermen. Dr. Grenfell recited some of his experiences among the fishermen in the North Sea, and paid a tribute of admiration to the bravery and endurance of the British fishermen, whose character, he said, had undergone of recent years a great and welcome change.

The High Commissioner for Canada, Lord Strathcona, followed with a warm commendation of the work the M.D.S.F. is doing among the scattered fisher folk on the coasts of Labrador. Naturally he laid peculiar emphasis on the medical aspect—considering that vast areas are without any medical aid at all. He felt convinced that no grander and more beneficent work could be undertaken than that being carried on by the Mission among a long-suffering and hard-working race, who are as tenacious of their claim to be Englishmen and as loyal to Queen and country as any home-dweller can be.

Dr. Willway, who has spent more than one winter in desolate Labrador, followed with a statement of the work done among sick, injured, and suffering fishermen along that bleak and inhospitable coast. After recalling how, in 1892, Dr. Grenfell visited Labrador, discovered the isolated and helpless condition of the people, awakened interest in Newfoundland, and commenced that work which has been so remarkably used of God, the speaker closed with a rousing appeal for a new steamer, and for an additional £700 per annum to support the work.

Sir Terence O'Brien, for seven years Governor of Heligoland, and later of Newfoundland, spoke, as one fully acquainted with fishermen on both coasts, of the great value of the work the Mission is doing.

Details followed by Mr. Frank Wilson and Mr. G. A. Hutchison of work on the British seas, and the proceedings were closed with a few words from Mr. T. B. Miller.

Blackgang Mission.

ALL the various departments of works have been carried on as usual during the year. The special blessing vouchsafed to the Mission during the year has been in relation to its temporal interests. Through God's gracious providence a site of freehold land has been acquired for the erection of a mission hall. The land was purchased in November, a friend personally interested in the work kindly advancing the sum of money needed. There is sufficient ground for other purposes, but the present requirement is £300 for an iron hall, with necessary outbuildings.

The week of prayer this year was one of special power; but the annual revival services have been deferred until October, when we expect to open our new mission hall. Prayer is earnestly requested on behalf of the messenger, the message, and the people to whom it shall be delivered, and heartfelt thanks are again expressed to all who have kindly assisted the work by their prayers and practical sympathy during the past year.

Evangelisation in Glasgow.

THE annual meeting of the Glasgow United Evangelistic Association, held in St. Andrew's Hall a few days ago, was largely attended. This Association is now in the twenty-fifth year of its existence, and the annual report read by the secretary, Mr. J. W. Arthur, was full of interest and encouragement. Indeed, its work is practical, full of life and energy, and aggressive in character. The results of the past year give ample testimony to the power of the Gospel for taking hold of men and women, and lifting them to be good citizens as well as redeemed souls.

The report divides the work thus:—(1) Preparation: This refers to the Bible Training Institute, where 450 students (58 of whom are resident) are prepared for Christian service. These resident students, in addition to their class work during the year, carried on 1390 meetings, with an attendance of nearly 150,000 people. (2) Evangelization: Under this head reference is made to the Tent Hall, the Bethany Hall, and the Mizpah Band Hall, which are the chief centres. On almost every night one may hear the Gospel's joyful sound in these places, and the total attendance cannot be far short of half-a-million. Tens of thousands of tracts are distributed, and vast numbers reached by open-air, kitchen, and back-room meetings. Special work is carried on among the Jews, and reference is made to the travels of Rev. John McNeill, as the accredited representative of the Association. (3) Amelioration or the improvement of the condition of the poor is the object of such work, as the free breakfast, with its attendance of 1,500 poor people every Sabbath, the poor children's Sabbath dinner, day refuges, etc. (4) Fresh air is the fourth item, and tells of 8000 children sent out for a fortnight, 5000 for a day, 200 weary workers for a fortnight's rest, and fully 2000 weary mothers for a day's outing at coast or in the country. The figures fairly take one's breath away, and, no doubt, would have seemed incredible to the founders four-and-twenty years ago. Much is owing to Mr. Moody, who at that time began the great work, which has flowed on ever since.

The workers are all voluntary, and everything is done prudently and with economy. The income last year was £29,941 6s. 7d., and the expenditure £29,006 5s. 1d. As the Association is entirely dependent on voluntary contributions, and, in view of next year's requirements, it is evident that there must be no diminution in the subscriptions to such a glorious and Christ-like work in the second city of the Empire.

The speakers at the annual meeting included Messrs. John Galloway and George Macfarlane, and Lord Overtoun, who rejoiced in the union among Christians which made such work possible. The Association was entirely unsectarian. It began in a time of blessing, and had continued for nearly a quarter of a century. The directors and workers consisted of members and ministers who, while thoroughly loyal to the Church of Christ in the land, were working together on one great harmonious platform for the spread of the Gospel at home and abroad. The Association, on its part, was thoroughly loyal to the Churches. A large class of persons sneered at evangelistic work, and suggested that it was time they were becoming a little more practical. The Association was nothing if it was not practical. The Socialists might sneer, but what do they do to lift up the fallen, the unfortunate, and the needy? Who provided the free breakfasts, fresh-air fortnights, and day refuges? Was it the Socialists, atheists, and infidels? Were these things not being provided by those who were touched by the love of God?

What to do with Good Books.—A correspondent writes to us:—"During the last few years I have made a practice of passing on to others books that have proved a means of blessing to me, and which, after careful reading, I have felt could prove of service to others. I have a small list of Christian workers, male and female, who are unable to purchase many books, and it is a great joy to be able to help them in this way. Many are the cheering letters I receive, as for instance, one from the wife of a poor curate:—'Thank you most sincerely for the book received this morning; I had tried to borrow one, but failed. I shall enjoy reading it very much.' Are there not many readers of The Christian who could help and cheer other workers in this way?"

B. and F. Bible Society.

THE annual gathering at the Guildhall of juvenile collectors, to celebrate the birthday of this Society, took place on Saturday afternoon. The Lord Mayor presided. Including the parents and friends of the children, the attendance numbered about 1500. The customary ceremony of cutting the birthday cake was performed by Miss Irene Spicer. The cake, which weighed 94lb., the number corresponding with the age of the Society, was afterwards taken to the crypt and divided into portions which were distributed among the young people at the close of the proceedings.

The Lord Mayor expressed his satisfaction at finding the Society so well supported by the young, and urged them to increase their efforts in the coming year. As the Society grows older its sphere of usefulness becomes wider, and consequently a larger income is required.

Rev. J. E. C. Welldon said that one of the causes why he adhered to the society was that it unites in a common task Churchmen and Nonconformists. The amount of work the society had accomplished was astonishing. It had issued, in whole or in part, 150,000,000 copies of the Scriptures, its issues last year alone being nearly 4,000,000. When the society came into existence it was impossible to buy a Bible in England for less than about 5s., or a new Testament for a smaller sum than 1s. 6d., whereas to-day it was possible to get the latter for one penny. The number of translations which owed their origin directly or indirectly to the society was 339. He thought these facts justified an appeal for more liberal support to be given to the society.

Richmond-street Mission, Walworth.

THE annual meeting was held on Tuesday, 1st inst., of this Mission, Mr. H. Wood, J.P., Chairman of Ragged School Union Council, presiding, supported by Rev. James Douglas, Rev. J. Waite, Mr. J. T. Dunn, the president of the Mission, and others.

The general secretary, Mr. C. G. Barr, read the report, which was full of encouragement. Special mention was made of the fact that two of the trustees had taken upon themselves the responsibility of raising the balance required to free the building of debt — a responsibility which the committee felt rested equally upon themselves, and which they trusted their friends would very speedily remove by coming to their aid. The various reports upon the many useful works carried on—such as the Ragged School, Sunday-schools, cripples' work, mothers' meetings, penny bank, and many others show that the activity for which this Mission has long been known is fully sustained, and in the larger premises has assumed increased proportions, calling for more workers and increased financial support. There are at least 130 busy workers in this hive, all striving to uplift the children, and train them in the fear of the Lord.

Mr. Wood, the Chairman, in a speech full of sympathy and encouragement, expressed the pleasure it gave him to be present, and urged the workers to persevere in the many duties they had to perform, and to gather the lambs within the fold so as to preserve them from the life of sin into which they were bound otherwise to fall.

Rev. J. Douglas followed in a similar strain, and his valued and weighty words were listened to with much attention and delight. The other speakers included Mr. Dunn, Mr. Waite, and Mr. A. H. Ward on behalf of the Ragged School Union. Mr. T. W. How and Mr. Llewellyn followed, and a very happy gathering was brought to a close.

Fresh workers and subscribers are earnestly desired. Mr. T. W. How, the hon. secretary, will forward a report upon application to him at 5, Barnmead-road, Beckenham.

United Gospel Mission, Nottingham.—Mr. Walter Notman preached his farewell sermons in connection with the pastorate of this mission on Sunday, Feb. 27. The work during his ministry of thirteen months has been marvellously owned and blessed of God: 180 new members have been received into church fellowship, God's saints have been wonderfully helped and blessed, and many brought to know Jesus. At the farewell meeting the church presented Mr. Notman with an illuminated address, expressing regret at his resignation and recording its high sense of his earnest and faithful services.

The Evangelistic Field.

MRS. BAEYERTZ IN LIVERPOOL.

GREAT George-street Congregational Chapel, Liverpool, has been the scene of a remarkable work of God during the last sixteen days of the month of February. Again and again the most commodious of our Lancashire chapels has been crowded to its utmost capacity on Sunday afternoons and evenings.

The attendance at the afternoon Bible-readings steadily increased to the last day of the mission, and many Christians received definite blessing. No "after-meetings" have been held, as that phrase is usually understood. Those who were "convicted of sin" were asked to retire to the schoolroom to be further instructed in the way of salvation. The total number of those who did so was 1022, all of whom wrote their names and addresses on cards given them for that purpose. Further, all these were carefully and slowly dealt with over God's Word, for about half an hour, each person finding and reading the passages of Scripture for themselves. These meetings were quiet, impressive, and devoid of the least excitement. More than 200 of our P.S.A. men left their names in the inquiry-room.

It is the most real and the most remarkable work of God I have ever been connected with. Mrs. Baeyertz says it is the best mission she has had during her twenty years' experience. Can this fact be explained?

(1) Passing by the exceptional personal gifts of the missioner, it was evident to all that she sought for herself that fulness of the Holy Spirit which is the essential qualification for fruitful service.

(2) The accent of conviction with which she proclaimed the Gospel truth, and such clear presentation of it as to be well understood by all classes of hearers.

(3) The wide area of Scripture truth covered by the addresses appealed to the most advanced Christians as well as to beginners in the Christian life, and those who needed or were seeking the forgiveness for their sins.

(4) We did what we could to prepare the way for the mission by pleading with God at our two regular Sunday prayer meetings and during the week, and by definite prayer for individuals, and loving personal effort during the mission to win them for Christ.

(5) We held a "half-night of prayer" on the Monday before the mission began, from nine to twelve o'clock. That meeting will never be forgotten by those who were present. It seemed to me that the Holy Spirit took control of it from first to last—so still, solemn, earnest, the spirit of prayer continuous and intense. Some present knew for the first time what it was to be cleansed and filled with the Holy Ghost.

(6) Many letters were written to praying people in other towns to have the mission "in remembrance" before God. Many members of other churches in this city joined in this concert of prayer.

(7) Mrs. Baeyertz spoke at every service in the atmosphere of prayer. Our church motto last year was, "Lord, teach us to pray." And He has been teaching us. For the result we give all praise to Him! (Rev.) J. K. Nuttall.

BOLTON SIMULTANEOUS MISSION.

A correspondent writes:—Four Methodist evangelists have been co-operating in a mission in Bolton and Farnworth. The mission has been a great success in each place. Rev. Thomas Waugh, at Bridge-street, drew large congregations and had many seekers after Christ. The meeting for men was very effective. Rev. E. Davidson was at Wesley. Every evening souls were brought to Christ. The great bulk of the inquirers were from the congregation and Sunday-school. Park-street was in charge of Rev. J. Grange Bennett. The mission has been greatly blessed to members of the church. The last night of the mission was really a wonderful service, when many persons professed conversion. The services at Victoria Chapel were conducted by Rev. Sidney Harris, who effectively presented the sterner aspects of the truth, and with no excitement, and yet with deep convictions as to the sinfulness of sin, and the danger of professing religion without true conversion. Night after night penitents came forward, until, on the last night of the mission (when the largest of the weekday audiences gathered), it was found that few were left who had not decided for God. Rev. Thomas Cook was at Farnworth. The congregations throughout the week were large and deeply impressed while the preacher dealt with tremendous truths in a most convincing way, and each evening many yielded themselves to God. It was noticeable that the majority of the converts were not yet hardened in sin, and much hope attaches to lives thus early devoted to Christ. Nearly 300 entered the inquiry rooms, and of these 204 were over fourteen years of age. The Church has been greatly refreshed.

EVANGELISTS' MOVEMENTS.

During the past fortnight the Lord has given Sergeant Pullinger great blessing at the Gospel Hall, Christchurch, Hants, both to saint and sinner.

A series of Gospel services was held in Park Hall, Barking, by Mr. C. Inglis, February 13 to 23. The meetings were for the most part well attended, and several cheering cases of conversion and restoration of backsliders are reported by the workers. The Christians also seem to have been stirred, and altogether we have much cause for praise for our brother's visit to Barking.—W. F.

Under the auspices of the Wimbledon and District Free Church Council, a United Gospel Mission was conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne, at the Baths Hall, from February 13 to 20. All the services were largely attended, and about seventy persons passed through the inquiry room.

A remarkable revival is taking place in Skibbereen, co. Cork, in connection with the efforts of Rev. M. Morris of Clonakilty, and others. Scores of young people and others have professed to have decided for Christ. Rev. John Good, Methodist Conference evangelist, has also closed a fruitful mission at Drumshambo.

A very interesting mission was conducted in February by Mr. Lapsley, of the Evangelisation Society, in Bishopmill, Elgin. The meetings were held in the Bethesda Hall, and also in the hall which was built by the late Browlow North. Children's services were held twice a week, and these were a great attraction to the young. It is several years since Mr. Lapsley had visited Elgin, but the workers hope he will not be long in returning for a mission on a larger scale.—J. S.

A note of praise comes from Stromness, in the Orkney Islands, where Mr. J. C. Smith has had much blessing in a special mission. Seldom has wider interest among young men been seen in the place, and there has been manifest anxiety on the part of those who nightly raised their hands desiring prayer; sometimes it was impossible to speak with all who waited. On the last Sunday evening of February, there was a gathering of 700, although the night was wet and stormy. In the after-meeting the workers were kept busy in the work of pointing anxious ones to the Saviour, and many professed in this meeting. Such scenes of tears and joy cannot be put on paper, but the power of the Lord was evidently manifest. In several shops in the town there are three young men who have decided for Christ. The Free and U.P. Churches have united for the first time in the work, and the ministers have been much blessed among the awakened ones. Though the mission finished on the 2nd inst., there is to be a united meeting on the Sunday evenings and other means will be taken to gather in and build up. Mr. Smith's brother, also of the Gordon Mission, was to begin a mission in Kirkwall, another town in the far-off Northern Isles, on Sunday, the 6th inst., and prayer is asked for the meetings.—R. C.

A series of special services have been held in the Havelock Place Mission Hall, Belfast, by Mr. Harry Driver. The meetings grew from the first night and many have professed salvation, some being very remarkable cases. The crowning meeting came last Sunday evening. Before the time of commencing, the hall, and the small hall adjoining, were packed to the door, and many, unable to get in, had to be turned away. At the after-meetings the workers all over the hall were dealing with men and women broken down under the earnest proclamation of the Word, and every night souls were deciding for the Lord. It would be impossible to say how many were saved; the day alone will declare it. We can only praise God for the numbers that rose at the closing meeting to confess that God had saved them during the special services. These meetings will be continued during the coming week by Mr. Cowan, from Glasgow. The prayers of God's children are asked for continued blessing.

Mr. William Forbes began an eight days mission at Holbeach on Sunday last. He preached in the Baptist and Free Methodist Chapels, and conducted two services in the Assembly Rooms. During the week he preaches in the five chapels in the town.

Mr. G. W. Clegg has closed a nine weeks mission in the Looe district, Cornwall. Hundreds have trusted God for pardon and salvation. So great were the crowds that the chapels would not accommodate them. There were open-air meetings which brought people out to the services that were not in the habit of coming.

Mr. F. C. Spurr, to Easter, Penzance, Falmouth, and Truro.

Gipsy Smith, Kingston-on-Thames, Mar. 19-28; Rugby, Apr. 3-11.

Mr. Charles Inglis, Rochester, Mar. 13-21; Tottenham, Mar. 27-Apr. 5.

Rev. W. Hay M. H. Aitken, in the parish church of Harwich, Mar. 12-28.

Mr. Monro Collings, Enfield, to March 13; Fakenham, March 20-April 4.

Mr. E. P. Telford, Birmingham, Mar. 13-24; Islington, N., Mar. 27-Apr. 7.

Mr. Josiah Nix, Walton, Liverpool, Mar. 8-14; Devonport, Mar. 26-Apr. 4.

Mr. W. R. Lane, Maidstone, Mar. 13-21; Sudbury (Suffolk), Mar. 27-Apr. 3.

The Weaver Bros., this week at Stoke Newington; Liverpool, March 19-Apr. 1.

Mr. J. J. Sims, Merrion Hall, Dublin, during March; City Hall, Glasgow, during April.

Sergeant Pullinger, Old National Schoolroom, Windsor, Mar. 13; Holdbrook, Ipswich, Mar. 20.

The Evangelisation Society.—The following missions, amongst others, will be in progress on Sunday next, the 13th inst., by members of the Evangelisation Society.—Upper Teddington, H. Collins; Dunfermline, H. Young; Clitheroe, J. B. Rochfort; Salford, W. Notman; Norbury, G. Pell; Gimingham, C. Chenery; Innerleithen, D. Pittendrigh; Sydney, C. Galletly; Blackburn, J. Greenwood; Nethy Bridge, R. Hill; Burgess Hill, E. Bailey; Ottery St. Mary, J. Simmonds; Southall, H. Bray; Oswaldtwistle, J. Shields; Glasgow, J. W. Moodie.

Requests for Prayer.

For eleven days' meetings at Harlow, March 13 to 23.

For special evangelistic services in the Baptist Chapel, Fleckney, Sunday 13th to 21st.

For a ten days mission in the Parish and Free Churches of Aboyne, N.B., commencing March 27.

For much blessing on the annual teas of the Metropolitan Railway men on March 16 and 25 in Paddington Baths.

For much blessing on an eight days' mission, March 13 to 20, at the Vale Chapel, St. Lawrence Valley, Jersey, by B. H. Angel.

For blessing on evangelistic services in Bessbrook Presbyterian Church, to be conducted by Mr. B. Jackson, commencing on March 13.

For mass meetings for men on the three great evils, "Impurity, intemperance, and gambling," to be held at Ilford on March 15, 16, and 17.

A Friend asks prayers on behalf of Miss Nellie Warr and Miss Pollock, missionaries all alone at Nan Chang-fu, near Kiu-Kiang, Kiang-Si, China, who have found themselves seriously threatened through the irritation of officials and people. Open-air preachers in Cork that they may have wisdom and patience and love, in using every opportunity of telling out among the people the glad tidings of salvation.

Dock Labourers' Mission.—The annual report says: "We have been greatly encouraged in the preaching of God's Word, for many souls have been born again, and are kept through great temptation. During the past year we have been favoured with an increase of funds for the sick children's fortnight at our home, and this has enabled us to increase the number of children. One poor fatherless girl, who had been in an hospital for many weeks from sunstroke, was sent home to her widowed mother as incurable. We gave her five weeks of fresh air at the home. The first two weeks she grew weaker, and appeared to be worse; but we were anxious for her recovery, and made it a matter of special prayer, and the Lord answered in a most marked manner. One morning, on rising from prayer, the girl declared that she was much better, and from that hour she began to improve. Now she is able to follow her employment at a factory. Many other sickly children we nursed and returned to their homes in health." The superintendent proceeds to give an appalling account of the misery endured by many dockers and their families. His address is—Mr. C. H. Coleman, 150, Boleyn-road, West Ham Park, E.

THE MASSACRE OF THE INNOCENTS.

Dear Sir,—Your articles on "Child Drunkards" reveal such horrors that I have been in great misery and depression since reading them. For as long as the English people and most of English Christians suffer the wicked temptations held out by the publicans to obtain, we are all guilty of consenting to these awful offences against the little ones. We have need to clear our nation of this great guilt, and to stir ourselves up both to prayer and work against this canker of the nation's hope—its young ones—and never rest until it is cut out. To what end are our Bands of Hope when they are counter-checked by gifts of sweets held out by the publicans?

One Boxing-night as I passed by a large gin-palace I was attracted by the sound of many childish voices within. I pushed open the door, and (frightful sight) I saw some fifty young children, all struggling to obtain packets of sweets, which were being dealt out from the bar. I burned with indignation, but supposed the case exceptional—yet your articles reveal that it is common, occurring generally, and not on Boxing-day only, and thus these simple ones are beguiled into confidence in the publicans as their friends. The wolves don sheeps' clothing that they may get the tender lambs within their ruthless jaws.

Faithfully yours, F. Shields.

"IT MEANS WHAT IT SAYS."

Sir,—It is reported of Mr. Spurgeon that on an occasion when some inquiring Christian, who had been brought up under a system of perverse "spiritualising" of Holy Scripture, asked him to explain some passage in the prophecies of Isaiah bearing upon the future kingdom of Christ, that he replied, with emphasis, "Why, it means what it says."

I think that this canon of interpretation deserves more attention than it receives among the thousands who profess to accept the Old and New Testaments as the record of a Divine revelation, yet who, as they term it, "spiritualise" the prophetic Scriptures until they cease to exercise any influence upon the faith and practice of their readers.

In opposition to this pernicious system of interpretation, it requires to be pointed out that all the prophecies which were fulfilled in the first Advent of Christ, were fulfilled in the most "literal" sense—in his history and ministry, in his suffering of death, in his resurrection and ascension, in the foundation of his eternal Church, and in the calling of the Gentiles. The fifty-third chapter of Isaiah consists of a large number of prophetic statements concerning our Lord's first Advent, every one of which received the most punctual and literal fulfilment in his history; and it was this precise fulfulment, in a literal sense, of those predictions, which carried the faith, not only of his Jewish disciples, but of his Gentile followers, such as the treasurer of Queen Candace, in the early ages of the Gospel. There was not one prediction respecting the First Advent and its results which did not receive a precise and punctual accomplishment in a "literal" sense at the beginning of the Gospel. A "figurative" fulfilment would never have convinced any of the Jewish literalists, nor have satisfied the critical taste of Greek and Roman inquirers. In Justin Martyr's Dialogue with Trypho, the Jewish adversary, of the second century, it is the literal fulfilment of prophecy which is the main argument for the faith on which Justin relies for the persuasion of his opponent.

Now the prophecies, whose fulfilment in the most literal sense in the First Advent of Christ, became the chief instrument of conviction both among Jews and Greeks, in nearly every instance form introductory portions of inspired writings in which the remaining sections are manifestly unfulfilled. And these unfulfilled portions, in nearly every instance, relate to the Second Advent of Christ, as the great event for which the Church is "to wait," as the era of the world's "regeneration." It is impossible to deny that the apostolic writers of the New Testament, following on the four narratives of the life of our Lord on earth, one and all represent the great object of hope to be Christ's return from heaven to judge the rebellious nations, and to establish the kingdom of God in visible supremacy.

As a matter of fact no other expectation appears in the apostolic writings, or in the writings of early Christendom, than this of the return of the Lord Jesus from heaven at the end of Satan's kingdom—to judge the nations and to establish a supernatural and perhaps aerial reign over the earth, in conjunction with the risen saints of former generations. There is not, in either Old or New Testaments, one single promise of a triumphant ending of the world's history, apart from the promise of a visible kingdom of God in the last days! There proved to be nothing incredible or impossible in God's personal and direct sovereignty over the Jewish people for fifteen hundred years, and there is nothing incredible in the expectation of that direct sovereignty being extended over the whole earth in the person of Christ in the last days, though having its centre in the land promised to Abraham for his heritage. Such a consummation of history would be simply the extension of the idea of David's Divine kingdom over all the earth.

I have only to add that all the prophets, including Isaiah, Daniel, and Zechariah down to St. John, place the commencement of this glorious age at the period when the "Babylon" of the "Seven Hills" shall be smitten to destruction, and when the Gospel shall have been "preached in the whole world."

I know not how it is that comparatively few lay Nonconformists are persuaded to undertake a systematic and orderly study of the prophecies, pleading the follies of half-learned and eccentric interpreters as an excuse for such neglect. But no inquirer needs to be ashamed of the study, or of the conclusions, which reckon among their adherents such scholars as those of our own time, who, with Sir Isaac Newton, follow in the path of all the ante-Nicene writers of Christianity in these anticipations.

Mill Hill, Feb, 12, 1898. Edward White.

Obituary.

DR. ROBY FLETCHER, NYASSALAND.

Sad news comes by telegraph from Nyassaland, British Central Africa, announcing the death of Dr. Roby Fletcher, at Bandawe, and the final invaliding of Dr. Ramsay at the port of Karonga, at the head of the Lake. Dr. Fletcher died on February 18. Only last August he left Edinburgh, with two nurses from the Western Infirmary of Glasgow, in the service of the Livingstonia Mission. A distinguished student of Edinburgh University, born in Australia, and having visited India, he seemed specially qualified for medical missionary work in Africa. He volunteered, when no one else was ready, at once to relieve Dr. Prentice, whose furlough was due. His service, though short, has been marked by much devotion.

SIR WM. M'CAMMOND, BELFAST.

One of the most respected citizens of Belfast passed away on Wednesday week in Sir William, who had been twice Lord Mayor of the town. He commenced life in humble circumstances, as he was never ashamed to avow, and by economy and industry attained to the highest municipal honours. He was a devoted Presbyterian elder, and took a deep interest in the religious and philanthropic movements of all the Churches, and in every good work.

SHERIFF COWAN, PAISLEY.

There passed away in Paisley on the last Sunday in February Sheriff Cowan, for thirty-two years Sheriff of Renfrewshire. He was born in 1833, a son of Lord Cowan, one of the judges of the Court of Session. He was, like his father, an ardent supporter of the Free Church. An elder in Free St. George's, deeply interested in the work of the congregation, conducting for many years a large Bible-class for young men. He was a vice-president of the Y.M.C.A., a good citizen, deeply interested in social and religious work.

MR. WILLIAM HEAD.

After a prolonged illness and considerable suffering, this earnest brother fell asleep in Jesus on Sunday morning, February 27. Formerly in fellowship with the church meeting in Bethesda Chapel, Clifton, he was one of the first to join Mr. Gordon Forlong in the work at Talbot Tabernacle, Notting Hill, where he has been labouring ever since. For over twenty years he has conducted the 10 o'clock prayer-meeting on Sunday mornings.

Firm almost to sternness in his loyalty to Christ and his Word, deeply spiritual and unworldly in life and walk, Mr. Head seemed to possess not a little of the vital godliness and heart convictions which marked many of the Puritans of old. His visits and quiet ministry to the poorer members of the church of which he was so long an elder were greatly valued, and many were the words in season which fell from his lips.

REV. A. HAWORTH, MANCHESTER.

This venerable Protestant champion passed away on Friday week, in his seventy-fifth year, after a long and painful illness, which was endured with wonderful fortitude. About two years ago it was deemed necessary to perform a surgical operation, since which he has been incapacitated from active duties. The immediate cause of death was an attack of influenza which seemed to much aggravate his already painful condition. Though suffering intense pain, his resignation has been a source of comfort and consolation to his family and friends. He was called to minister some forty years ago in the densely populated and poor district of Angel Meadow, and for thirty-nine years he laboured as its pastor. Under his ministrations, the church has gone forward, and whilst neighbouring churches with the introduction of more ornate ceremonial have almost entirely lost their congregations, Mr. Haworth drew together a large congregation of sympathetic people. During his ministry quite a crowd of agencies have sprung up, including Sunday-schools, day-schools, ragged schools, Bands of Hope, and other forms of mission work. He was a warm supporter of many evangelical societies. Whilst always firm in his adherence to Reformation principles, there was a tender earnestness which called forth the admiration of all opponents.

REV. FRANK W. DODDS, TORQUAY.

On Friday last, in the beautiful cemetery here, were laid, in hope of a joyful resurrection, all that remains of Rev. Frank W. Dodds—a man greatly beloved—who passed away in perfect peace, aged 42. A native of Berkshire, he was one of the first-fruits of the labours of the late Mr. Joseph Weatherly. Passing at once into liberty, he threw himself with intense desire into his Master's service, and, after passing through Cambridge, became curate at Birmingham and vicar of All Saints, Islington, where his ministry was much blessed. Ever earnest in evangelistic work, he visited South Sea, Sierra Leone, and many other places. For two years he was chaplain at Neuchâtel, and also at Wiesbaden, and many were the seals of his ministry. Then came the long season of suffering and silence, when, unable either to preach or speak, save in a whisper, he preached by his holy and devoted life, and at Davos, Eastbourne, Cheltenham, and finally Torquay, glorified the Master and walked with God. An attached member of the Church of England, he was in loving communion with all who bore the image of his Lord; and during his residence at Torquay, by his unique and saintly character, won the love of all. His call home came suddenly at last. Three days only laid aside—"in Beulah Land"—to him the happiest days of his life; then passing up the shining way, "he was not," for God took him.

Personalia.

Rev. Archibald McCaig, B.A., LL.D., has accepted the principalship of Mr. Spurgeon's Pastors' College, vacant by the retirement of Professor Marchant.

Rev. R. Wallace, of the Marchmont Home, Belleville, has arrived from Canada for the purpose of taking out the usual party of boys in the early spring. The boys will be from the Homes of Mr. L. K. Shaw, Manchester, and Mr. J. Galloway, Ardrossan, Scotland.

Dr. Barnardo writes to us: "At a meeting of my friends, held on March 2, it was decided, on various well-considered grounds, that I ought not to allow myself to be nominated for the vacancy in the Stepney division of the Tower Hamlets. I accordingly retire from the contest, although I do so with unfeigned reluctance, for it would have given me sincere pleasure to have been the chosen candidate in Parliament of a constituency in which I have worked for over thirty years, and where I possess so many true-hearted friends."

Canon Barnett, whose name has been known in Whitechapel for twenty-five years, first as vicar of St. Jude's, and then as Warden of Toynbee Hall, received on Sunday the congratulations of many friends on the completion of a quarter of a century's strenuous labour. In the evening Canon Barnett preached in St. Jude's, on the progress of twenty-five years. His text was "Hitherto the Lord hath helped us," and in accordance with its spirit there was of man's work in the East-end no account, but of God's work much.

HOME.

The activity of the police is highly commendable in the arrest of thirty-three men on Saturday night at a gambling club in Soho.

For the protection of English sailors at home and abroad against the practice of "crimping," which has done such cruel wrong to seamen, the Board of Trade are taking what it is hoped will be effective measures.

The latest returns of the London County Council election give Progressive gains as 16 against 4 Moderate gains. Of the 116 members elected 68 are Progressives and 48 Moderates. Ten aldermen have yet to be elected.

On the question of foreign sugar bounties the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce urges Her Majesty's Government at the forthcoming European Conference to take measures to secure the abolition of foreign State bounties.

The ocean cattle traffic cries for speedy reform. The dumb travellers need every protection in their transit from port to port. Fines of over £30 have been inflicted upon a captain of a cattle steamer for breach of stipulated precautions for safety.

At the Church House, Westminster, the united meeting, convened by the National Temperance League, was presided over by the Archbishop of Canterbury, who moved the first resolution. Representatives of all the Free Churches, as well as the Established Church, took part in the proceedings.

In view of recent disastrous fires in London and the provinces, we are pleased to hear that the National Fire Brigade Union is so great a success. Established to commemorate the Jubilee of the Queen in 1887, it now has thirteen districts, 356 provincial fire brigades, volunteer, part-paid and paid, representing upwards of 6000 men.

The Mansion House opens its doors on April 1 to Mrs. Bramwell Booth, for a meeting on behalf of her rescue work.

Various City Companies have sent donations from £5 5s. to £60 to the London City Mission. This timely aid will help to relieve the Mission in its financial anxieties.

It affords sure ground for congratulation that so excellent a record of service comes from the New Hospital for Women during the past year. Over a hundred thousand patients have been treated.—The National Orthopædic Hospital has also rendered good service to children and adults. Last year 3124 visits were paid.

The Irish Distressed Ladies' Fund is doing excellent service. The work depôts in London and Dublin afford employment to a large number of ladies. Pensions from £1 to £3 per month are granted. Assistance is also rendered in the education of children.

The stream of benevolence continues to flow toward hospitals and philanthropic institutions. The latest to benefit are the Industrial Home for Boys and the Miller Hospital, Greenwich, the former being assisted with £25 by the Grocers' Company, the latter by the Leathersellers' Company to the extent of ten guineas.—Further response has been received by the London Hospital to its appeal in aid of the maintenance fund, the Bank of England contributing £500.—Middlesex Hospital will benefit by £1000 as a legacy from the late Mr. H. W. Freeman, of Bath, for an obstetric scholarship.

There is no diminution of effort on the part of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children to grant relief to little folk suffering from the cruelty of those who should be their natural protectors. Last month 2439 cases of neglect, starvation, and ill-treatment were investigated; 2185 were dealt with; 2067 cases were found true, and affected the welfare of 5917 children.

The Women's Industrial Council did good service when, with other interested bodies, it waited upon Sir J. Gorst to plead for the raising of the compulsory school age, and the condition of children in the elementary schools, who, while attending full school time, are employed as full wage earners out of school hours. This question demands immediate practical attention for the sake of the generations that are to be.

The joint committee on manual training of the City and Guilds of London Institute and the Drapers' Company state that there is accommodation for nearly 1000 boys in the six woodwork centres. About 140 boys are also receiving instruction in metal work.—The Jews Free School, carried on under the auspices of the Jewish Religious Education Board, has had a successful prize-day. Nearly one half of the whole number attending the Sabbath classes received prizes either for efficiency or good conduct. How we wish these lads were being trained in the knowledge of the true Messiah.

Representative managers of the London Board Schools consider the question of supplying meals to needy Board School children of the utmost importance and regard the Savings Bank scheme amongst the children with much favour.—13,316 separate cases of child-misery have been attended to in Dr. Barnardo's Homes during the past year. The emigration scheme by which thousands of lads and girls have been able to begin life exempt from the miserable conditions of slum surroundings is worthy of the highest praise. Most of the child emigrants give great satisfaction to those who receive them.

FOREIGN.

A number of Russians will shortly start for Abyssinia to act as teachers; also one lady and four assistant surgeons for service at the Court of King Menelik.

In connection with the Zionists' movement in Palestine there are now in this Bible land twenty-seven colonies, with some 5000 poor Jewish refugees engaged in agriculture.

The King of Italy has assigned 150,000fr. from his civil list to relieve the distress prevailing in some of the Italian provinces. No doubt many Italians will follow this kingly example.

There can be little doubt of the beneficial results from the International Congress that is to assemble at Antwerp this year to discuss the protection of children morally abandoned, and the best means of preventing crime in youth of both sexes.

The Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge has granted £1500 towards the new see of North Australia, while smaller sums have been voted for church and school buildings in Canada, the West Indies, South Africa, India, and Tasmania.

India.—In Bombay the plague has by no means spent itself. There is an increase of fifteen deaths for last week, as compared with the previous week. Another scourge is visiting our Indian dependency. The "black blister" has broken out, killing fifty people a day.

Crete.—Spasmodic suggestions continue to be made with regard to this unfortunate island, but no formal proposal has been made for some time. The inhabitants have simply to wait the pleasure of the Powers.—Improving conditions are, however, manifest. Markets, twice weekly, have been established outside Candia. This will greatly relieve the prevailing distress.—Admiral Skrydloff, the new Commander-in-Chief of the Russian Mediterranean flotilla, has left Odessa for Crete.

West Africa.—The Kings of Borgu and Yoruba, it is reported from Lagos, have settled their own feuds, and have agreed to a treaty of friendship in view of the common danger from the French. Only generous Christian measures can establish a lasting peace in these unsettled regions.—Troops have been despatched to the Sierra Leone Hinterland, where a serious rising has taken place among the natives.—The Royal Niger Company's force has started from Lagos for Sokoto to assist the Sultan in resisting the occupation of his territory by the French.

Uganda and the Soudan.—The suspension of missionary labour is much to be deplored through the continuance of hostilities.—Several Indian officers have been selected to accompany the native regiment formed for service in Uganda.—Reports are to hand from the Soudan that Mahmud, the Dervish commander at Melammeh, is preparing to attack either Berber or the Atbara camps. General Gatacre's Brigade is being pushed forward with the utmost rapidity.—Three British battalions have now reached Atbara, and the Sirdar has 14,000 men under his command. The report that the Dervishes were marching northward is not confirmed.

America's Movements.—The American Government has voted £10,000,000 for purposes of national defence.—The War Department has given out contracts for a million dollars' worth of war material.—President McKinley is giving serious consideration to the Cuban difficulty, and is holding daily conferences on the subject with leading members of both Houses of Congress.—The U.S. warships Montgomery and Nashville are being despatched to Cuba with food supplies for the distressed people.—America has refused to recall General Lee, the U.S. Consul at Havana, as desired by the Spanish Government, or to substitute merchant vessels for warships in sending help to Cuba.—Spain has bought two Brazilian war-ships.

China.—Now that the finances of the country are in a fair way of settlement we trust that missionaries will enter in and possess the land.—The loan contract has been signed between the Chinese Revenue Board and the Hong Kong and Shanghai Bank, redeemable in forty-five years. Interest is to be four and a-half per cent. Should there be any revision of tariff the loan is to be a first charge on the increased revenue. This is an additional security.—Serious news is reported from Russia, who has demanded that China shall surrender to her all sovereign rights over Port Arthur and Ta-lien-wan on the same conditions as those granted to Germany in the case of Kaio-Chau. In the event of non-compliance, Russia threatens to move troops into Manchuria.

Austria.—Political agitation is increasing throughout the country. A mass meeting of the Styrian Peasants' League has been held under the presidency of Baron Rokitansky, leader of the Alpine Agrarian Movement.—In the lower Provincial Diet at Vienna, Prince Auersberg was reproached with being a Social Democratic prince because he spoke and urged the necessity of treating the minority with impartiality. There was a disgraceful scene.—Moral anarchy characterises the present domestic state of affairs. A suspension of the constitution and the promulgation of Imperial decrees are being discussed on all sides. No such imperialism should be resorted to unless as an extreme measure.—The Emperor has accepted the resignation of Baron Gautsch, the Premier. Count Francis Thun is entrusted with the formation of a new Cabinet.

Turkey.—The Sultan was "much disturbed" at Mr. Curzon's statement in the House of Commons about the tortures in Kossovo.—From Artaki, in the Sea of Marmora, strife between Christians and Mohammedans is reported. The aggressors were Moslems, who pillaged the church and tore crosses from the graves.—Replies to the Porte's circular for the settlement of the Crete question before Thessaly is evacuated have been received from the Powers. Russia, France, and Italy agree that the matter has no connection with Thessaly, the evacuation of which is regulated by the treaty of peace with Greece.—Great uneasiness exists at the Porte concerning the attitude of Bulgaria.—Shocking details are given of the atrocities recently perpetrated in Macedonia by the Turkish authorities and soldiery on the Bulgarians at Uskub. The Turkish commission of inquiry seems to have been a complete farce.

Friedenheim.—In our account, last week, of the annual prayer and praise meeting at this institution, a serious error appeared, arising from a misapprehension on the part of the writer. It was stated that Sister Jessie has been removed from Friedenheim by death. She left the institution in January last on her appointment as matron of the North London Consumption Hospital, and, we are glad to say, is quite well. We much regret the unfortunate inadvertence.

The House of Rest.—Rev. C. G. Moore gave a stirring address at the House of Rest on Friday last on the miracle of the feeding of the five thousand, and from it he drew a picture of the ideal Christian life which may be enjoyed by a realisation of what Christ is able and willing to do in and by a wholly Christ-possessed follower. Each incident in the story was turned into a point which demonstrated this fact, and the whole was a beautiful illustration drawn out for the purpose of deep teaching.

A Christian Crusaders' Band is now being organised in the district of East Kent, in order to unite a few earnest workers who glory in open-air work, to fight the good fight of faith, and to preach the joyful tidings of the Gospel. Open-air services are held in various streets in Sittingbourne. Any who would like to help in this work can do so by sending Gospel periodicals and tracts. Communications to be addressed to the Supt. Mr. W. D. Kennard, Lorrimore Park-road, Sittingbourne, Kent.

Seamen's Christian Friend Society.—The workers at this Society's headquarters in Ratcliff-highway were greatly encouraged at last Thursday's muster of the Christian Harbour Lights by the testimonies of converted seamen and others. A captain declared that he despaired of no one's conversion since his own. A greater slave to drink never lived, but Christ had set him free at this institute, and whenever able it was here that he loved to be. A young officer said that few men had seen, for his age, more of life than he had seen, or had tasted more of the world's pleasures; but since he was converted in this Bethel three months ago he had been led to see that the past had been a wicked waste, and that he had only just begun to live. A ship's fireman told how he had been brought to this place by a Christian shipmate; that the "life-line" had been thrown to him, and he had grasped it, and now the love of Christ had expelled the love of drink. A wharf labourer said it was eight months ago that he had signed the pledge in this building, and, being urged to attend the prayer-meeting next evening, he came and was converted. From that night he had ceased to be a blasphemer, which he had been for years before. Many more testimonies to the same effect were given by some who had been converted in the old building on the same spot as far back as twenty years, and others in the new institute so recently as the last year or two. Rev. J. G. Hill gave encouraging tidings of work round the coast.

The Y.M.C.A.

The Neuchatel (Switzerland) Y.M.C.A. has entered a new building, the cost of which has been about £3,200.

The Association at Southend-on-Sea has completed its first year. It has now a membership of fifty-two, and a record of much useful work accomplished.

The Totterdown (Bristol) Association has just held its annual conversazione and public meeting under the presidency of Mr. C. E. Beavis. Much blessing has recently been experienced in the work.

Mr. J. H. Tritton welcomed a large number of young men waiters at a social reception at Exeter Hall, between 10 o'clock and midnight on the 4th inst. Rev. W. R. Mowll gave an earnest address.

The Camden-road annual meeting was exceptionally good. The report proved unmistakably that the Lord's hand has rested on the work. The treasurer presented a clear balance sheet for the year.

The Wolverhampton Y.M.C.A., which, as one of its many agencies, is doing excellent work amongst the lodging-houses of the town, and on behalf of youths and young men of the poorer class, has suffered considerable loss through a fire at its Salop-street premises.

The Nottingham Association has closed its first year in the new building in Mansfield-street, free of debt, by raising within the last few weeks a sum of £400 to meet its obligations. This achievement, side by side with the recent great accessions to the membership, has greatly encouraged the workers.

The Bedford Association is making rapid progress. At the annual meeting, the report showed that when Mr. Arthur Edmonds was appointed secretary in 1895, there were only nineteen members, now there are over 200, with a Bible-class attendance of fifty. The committee have purchased a public-house in the centre of the town, upon the site of which a new Y.M.C.A. is to be erected at a cost of £11,000.

The monthly meetings of the National Executive were held on Friday at Exeter Hall, Mr. Henry Conder presiding. The reports of the travelling secretaries were of unusual interest, and showed considerable developments in many centres throughout the country. Arrangements were advanced for the International Y.M.C.A. Conference, which is to be held at Basle from July 6th to 10th next.

At the general committee meeting of the Belfast Association, held a few evenings since, the audited accounts for the income and expenditure for 1897 were reported by the auditors. The income for the year amounted to £1,600, while the expenditure was £1,550, leaving a balance to the credit of £50. The statement caused great satisfaction. During the past fourteen years this association has never once closed the year with a deficit. The above figures are apart from the new buildings funds.

A large number of Christian workers of all denominations assembled at the Town Hall, Northampton, on Tuesday evening, at the invitation of Mr. F. G. Adnitt, J.P., president of the Y.M.C.A., to welcome the newly appointed general secretary, Mr. Matthias Griffin, late of Sheffield, and with the view of stirring general interest in the work of the association, for which a new building in King-street has recently been secured. The Mayor (Councillor W. P. Hannen), Sir Philip Manfield, J.P., and many other representative public men were present.

The report of the Calcutta Association gives a hopeful review of the whole work. It is noted that there are 10,000 English-speaking students pursuing their studies in Calcutta, and more than twice that number of other Bengalis who understand English. Among this army of educated men, representing every part of India, and particularly of Bengal, there is a great spiritual hunger, and some three hundred, almost all non-Christians, come to the building each day. Encouraging results in the way of definite confessions of Christ have not been wanting. In connection with the central department, fourteen young men professed to enter the Christian life. It is of course much more difficult for the Bengali young men to take such a stand openly.

Newton Abbot Convention was held March 1-4, with encouraging attendances. Dr. T. H. White and Captain Tottenham conducted the meetings throughout, and marked blessing has followed the opening up of the Scriptures.

Bible Carriage Work.—The report of the Ross Bible Carriage, Tent, and Evangelistic Mission shows wide itineration in towns and villages of Hereford and counties contiguous. Both the tent services and the Bible carriage operations report blessing. Copies may be had of Mr. John Coates, Northleigh, Cantilupe-road, Ross, Hereford.

Irish Notes.

It is expected that the gross receipts of the Palestine Exhibition, just held in Dublin will amount to £1700.

A largely attended meeting was addressed in Grosvenor Hall, Belfast, on Thursday last, by Rev. Dr. T. B. Stephenson, on behalf of the Children's Home.

An effort is being made by the Endeavourers of the Methodist Church to send out a missionary of their own to China, and already some twelve societies have promised £112 a year to the project.

The Irish Church Representative Body have received the following bequests:—Rev. J. G. Porter, £1720; Rev. B. N. White Spunner, £800; Deputy-Inspector-General Mullins, £750; and Miss J. M. Martin £100.

Elmwood Presbyterian Church, Belfast, in some respects the most important congregation in the Irish Presbyterian Church, has been without a minister for about a year. A call has now been given to Rev. David Purvis, of the Free Church, Gourock.

Successful meetings with reference to the State Regulation of Vice in India have been addressed in Dublin and at the Curragh Camp by Mrs. Andrew and Miss K. Bushnell. The meetings were largely attended by soldiers, but the officers were conspicuous by their absence.

The Dublin Female Orphan School, which was founded in 1804 by the late Mr. Solomon Walker, has been presented with additional premises at a cost of £1000 by Messrs. R. and R. W. Booth. About £1500 is, however, still required towards furnishing and alterations, and of this sum £600 has been subscribed at a meeting of Methodists held in Dublin.

Scottish Notes.

Dr. H. Battersby has been in Edinburgh and Glasgow last week addressing large meetings in connection with the prevention of the demoralisation of the native races by the liquor traffic.

Dr. Clouston, Superintendent of the Edinburgh Asylum for the Insane, in his annual report states that the proportion of cases admitted to that institution attributable to the excessive use of alcohol is above the average of previous years.

Good meetings are reported at Edinburgh in connection with the week of prayer for young women. The spirit of prayer has been manifest, and there has been signs of blessing. While the workers feel that much has yet to be done they are encouraged to go forward.

Special meetings, with a view of reaching the coalmen, have been conducted in the Coalmen's Mission Hall, Edinburgh. Mr. Prentice, one of the London "Coalies" missionaries, conducted the meetings. They were fairly well attended, and not without signs of blessing.

Dr. Maclaren, of Manchester, has been addressing large and interesting meetings in Edinburgh and Glasgow this week in connection with the Baptist Home Mission of Scotland. This society was established seventy years ago, and employs twenty agents in the Highlands and Islands. Its agents have done excellent work amidst many hardships.

A very largely attended Band of Hope demonstration was held in Edinburgh on March 2. Short addresses, in encouragement of the Band of Hope movement were delivered by Dr. Cunningham and Rev. Dr. Whyte. Subsequently Mr. Ramsay gave an instructive lecture, illustrated by limelight views, on "Drink, how it is made, and what it makes."

For thirty-two years the Glasgow Foundry Boys' Society has been at work with satisfactory results. At present eighty branches are in operation, with 17,589 young persons on the roll, and the average attendance every Sunday forenoon is 12,146. The workers number 2052; average attendances, 1707. The directors claim to have tackled the home mission problem with some measure of success.

Mr. Stewart, children's evangelist from Glasgow, conducted a mission for boys and girls during the first week of March in the Carrubber's Close Mission. The children turned out in great numbers. The subject each night was Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," and the evangelist was able, by the help of capital limelight views, to put the Gospel before his young hearers in a very lucid and simple manner.

A committee has been formed in the capital of Scotland for the purpose of forming a society to be called "The Edinburgh Sunday Society," having for its objects the provision, for the people on Sundays, of sacred and classical music, lectures on interesting subjects in science, literature, history, and art, and generally to promote what is called the rational observance of the Sunday. As showing the present tendency of things this proposal is significant.

An enthusiastic meeting, to bid farewell to a number of outgoing missionaries, took place in the Free Assembly Hall, Edinburgh, on the evening of the 27th ult. Dr. Whyte, of Free St. George's Church, presided, and addresses were delivered by Rev. Wm. Gavin (first Scotch missionary to Pondoland), Dr. McCosh (volunteer medical missionary to Lovedale), Rev. A. W. Robertson (Lovedale), Dr. Dalziel (Natal), and Rev. A. G. McAlpine (of Livingstonia).

Navvies at Tweedsmuir, N.B.

SOME months ago I made request for a supply of literature for distribution amongst the workmen employed in my parish at the new Water Supply Works for Edinburgh. Since that time the works have grown to enormous proportions, and in the course of a few months there will be at least a thousand navvies working on the two large contracts centred in this district. An agent of the Scottish Navvy Mission is doing excellent service amongst the men. A large recreation and reading hall has been erected, doing duty on Sabbaths for our meetings, which are well attended. It is proposed to make special efforts at reaching these men, many of whom have known better days, and are often very responsive to the Gospel message. A temperance association is in course of formation, the temptation to drink being made very strong by the presence of a canteen, and of the daily incursions of havoc-working drink-vans. May I renew my request for literature, tracts, magazines of all kinds, and books will be most welcome. A library would be a boon, and we are hoping to establish one. Kindly address railway parcels to Biggar Station, Caledonian Railway; post parcels to Tweedsmuir, Broughton, N.B. I hope occasionally to let the readers of The Christian know how the work progresses. Will you pray for a blessing on the means used to brighten and better the lives of those navvies, and that many of them may be won for Jesus?

W. S. Crocket.
Minister of Tweedsmuir.

Spring.

With song and verdure, with birds and flowers,
With music, and love, and mirth,
With golden sunshine, and crystal showers,
An angel has flown to earth.
Lightly she soars upon rainbow wing.
Her name is the beautiful, beautiful spring.

She has kissed the slumber from Nature's eyes,
And crowned her with garlands fair,
Smiling and blue are the vaulted skies,
And incensed the sunny air;
Whilst her choral voices in concert sing,
The psalm of praise to the great Love King.

Far, far away o'er the breezy hills,
Blossoms the wild broom gay,
From frost-chains loosed dance the laughing rills,
And the young lambs frisk and play.
The zephyrs sigh, and the bluebells fair
Bow their heads as in silent prayer.

In merry woodlands the violets peep,
The meadows are robed in gold,
Midst budding branches the squirrels leap,
And the hawthorn buds unfold;
Whilst bird and blossom and sunbeam tell
Of his pitiful love, who doth all things well.

Away, away, o'er the sparkling main
Is echoed the seagull's cry;
The green corn waves o'er the fertile plain,
And the skylark soars on high;
Whilst on sunlit heavens and daisied sod
Is written the wonderful name of God.

Then welcome, welcome, O lovely spring,
As Hebe's thy step and tone;
Thou hast made the beautiful earth to ring
With a song that is thine alone.
Sing! sing on, let thy balmy breath
Ever whisper of life from death.

Harriet Julia Evans.

Hampshire Village Mission.—The report of this mission gives a cheering account of last year's colportage and evangelistic work. The Gospel has been declared in remote places, and souls have been saved. "We have, during the year, visited with the Bible van villages in Hants, Dorset, Surrey, and Sussex. More than 200 places have been visited for long or short periods. The work does not cease when the van is put up for the winter, and many places nearer home are then more frequently visited." The superintendent is Mr. J. Hasell Charlton, Southampton-road, Farcham, Hants.

Among the Churches

Church of England.

A new church has been opened at Hunslet, Leeds.

The Church Association Spring Conference is being held this week at Derby.

The Bishop of Carlisle, who has been suffering from severe dysentery at Assuan, is progressing favourably.

By the death of the Hon. Aubrey Vivian, brother of Lord Swansea, the Church has lost a most devoted adherent.

Rev. E. J. Kennedy, Vicar of St. James's, Hatcham, was the preacher at the mid-day service at St. Paul's Cathedral last week.

Canon Wilberforce is reported to be confined to his bed by an attack of influenza, and all his engagements have had to be cancelled.

The C.M.S. have accepted an offer of foreign service from the Rev. Napier Malcolm, curate of St. John the Evangelist, Broughton, Manchester.

Rev. J. I. Cohen, formerly secretary of the C.P.A.S., Vicar of Thame, has accepted the Vicarage of St. Mary, Low Harrogate, a parish of considerable importance, in which a sound and thoughtful ministry will be valued.

Prebendary Kitto is giving addresses to men on the Sunday afternoons of Lent at St. Martin-in-the-Fields. His subject last Sunday was "I'm no worse than others"; on Sunday next it will be "I've no time for religion"; on 20th, "I couldn't help it"; 27th, "I don't mean any harm"; April 3, "What's the good of it?"

The third of the course of Church History Lectures being delivered at Exeter Hall, under the auspices of the National Protestant Church Union and the Central Y.M.C.A., was given by Canon M'Cormick, on "The Church of England in the reign of Edward VI., or how we got our English Prayer-book." The chair was taken by Mr. W. F. A. Archibald. The lecture was thoroughly appreciated by the audience, which was, as at the other lectures, largely composed of young men.

While the Dean of Canterbury was taking part on Monday week in the dedication of Wesley's House in company with Nonconformist ministers, the Archbishop of Canterbury was taking part in a temperance meeting, also open to Nonconformist representatives, at the Church House, Westminster. On the platform with the Archbishop were Rev. Alfred Rowland, chairman of the Congregational Union; Dr. T. B. Stephenson, an ex-president of the Wesleyan Conference; and Rev. S. Vincent, president-elect of the Baptist Union.

Congregational.

Rev. J. B. Uffen has been recognised at Anvil-street, Bristol.

Rev. M. F. Peterson has entered on his new charge at Nottingham.

The centenary of Paul's Meeting House, Taunton, has been celebrated.

Rev. J. G. Binney, of Gateshead, has had a call to Park Chapel, Camden Town.

Dr. Goodrich's church, Chorlton-road, Manchester, reports a membership of 1128, and a large circle of vigorous and enterprising Christian effort.

Rev. Edward Darley, of Towcester, has conducted a successful eight days' mission at Rugeley, for the Free Church Council, in which Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists united with the Congregationalists.

The mission church in connection with St. James's, Newcastle, has had a prosperous year. Three years ago it was commenced with seventeen members, now the number is 149. Thirty-eight were received into fellowship last year.

Rev. J. Legge, the chairman of the Yorkshire Congregational Union, addressing a meeting of the Guilds Union, dealt with the modern growth of sacerdotalism, and recommended a return on the part of Nonconformists to the principles and the attitude of the Puritans.

An envelope which afforded no trace whatever of the name or address of the sender, was on Wednesday week left at the office of the Colonial Missionary Society, at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street. On being opened it was found to contain bank notes for £250 in aid of the work.

The largest and most influential Congregational church in Scotland will again have a pastor when Rev. Ambrose Shepheard, now of Reading, settles at Elgin-place, Glasgow. Although the present interregnum has been one of eighteen months' duration, the various activities of the church have been well maintained.

The Year-book of Camberwell-green Chapel gives account of fifty-eight organisations. There are now 595 members on the church roll, of whom forty-four have been admitted during the past year. The number of scholars in the Sunday-schools is 883; in the young people's institutes there are 288 over fifteen years of age. The Literary Society has a membership of 150; the Christian Endeavour Society 71 members; the Band of Hope 397.

Baptist.

A new chapel is being built at Lowestoft.

Rev. J. C. Carlile, of Trinity Chapel, has accepted a call to Folkestone.

Special services have been held in the various chapels in the Hatherleigh district.

East-hill Chapel, Wandsworth, reports 574 members, and much work of an aggressive kind.

Rev. Charles Joseph commenced his ministry at St. Andrew's-street Chapel, Cambridge, on Sunday.

The Sunday-school at Woolwich Tabernacle reports 1200 scholars and a large round of earnest soul-saving work.

Rev. H. Frank Griffin has been recognised at Bridlington, and Rev. R. Walker has been recognised as pastor at Maidenhead.

Regent's-park Chapel, Park-square East, reports a membership of 727. The total amount raised last year was £2764, including £1399 for chapel expenses, £649 for home missions, and £550 for foreign missions.

The year-book of the church at Brockley-road, New Cross, S.E., reports a membership of 466, and receipts for all purposes amounting to £1842. Under the pastoral care of Rev. J. Lewis, the church shows a practical interest in many good causes.

The manual of Cavendish Church, Ramsgate (Rev. T. Hancocks), reports 307 members. The building has been [illegible] renovated, repainted, and relighted with incandescent lamps. £1500 has been raised toward new schools, to cost quite £2000, and to be opened free of debt.

Rev. A. Streuli, of Manchester, celebrated on Sunday his seventh anniversary at Moss Side. When he began his work the place was at a very low ebb; now the church is filled every Sunday evening. The Sunday-school has over 700 scholars, and the numerous agencies are prosecuted with the utmost vigour. Besides that, much good work has been done in the "slums."

The annual meeting of the church at the Metropolitan Tabernacle was held last week, Rev. Thomas Spurgeon presiding. The roll of membership, it was stated, had been rigidly revised, the result being that there are now 4212 persons in fellowship. There are twenty mission-halls in connection with the church, with 4154 sittings, as well as twenty schools, with 8847 scholars and 694 teachers.

With tokens of much encouragement the friends at Uxbridge-road Tabernacle have opened the first portion of their new building, a comfortable hall, eventually to be used as school-room. The work, under the care of Pastor F. B. Monti, has grown steadily and is full of promise. The opening meeting, on Thursday last, was preceded by a tea, at which Pastor Frank H. White spoke with much tenderness. Rev. Charles Stirling presided at the subsequent meeting, addresses being given by Rev. G. D. Hooper, of Luton, J. Conway, M.A., Hammersmith Presbyterian Church, and Mr. M. C. Leite Rozas. This suburban extension becomes all the more important because of the Electric Railway, and the rapid growth of Shepherd's Bush population. The local friends are still few, and need sorely the help of richer brethren.

Methodist.

A six weeks' mission has been held in Lindley by Mr. A. Booth, formerly of the Manchester Central Hall Mission.

Special evangelistic services have been conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Padgett at Ashfordby, Melton Mowbray, with blessed results.

The Conference Committee of the Wesleyan Methodist Connexion has decided that the Conference of 1899 shall be held in London.

Judge Waddy, Q.C., will deliver an address at Wesley Chapel, City-road, on March 22, at a memorial service for the late Dr. Moulton, of Cambridge.

The Methodist New Connexion Home Missionary Society has now ten home missions proper, with seventeen chapels, 1130 members, and 2269 scholars.

Mr. A. F. Jones, of Gateshead, a local preacher, who has now passed his medical examinations, has offered himself for the medical mission hospital at Kai-ping, North China.

One of the most encouraging missions ever held at Hilton, Kirkby-Stephen, has been conducted by Rev. E. Rhodes and Mr. R. C. Lyne, who preached to gradually-increasing congregations.

Mr. George Hooper, Free Methodist evangelist, has held a mission at Dudley, under the auspices of the Free Church Council. The attendance increased nightly till the spacious building overflowed.

One of the oldest officials among the Primitives in Cheshire, Mr. Joseph Moore, has passed away. He was superintendent of the George-street, Chester, Sunday-school for thirty years, the leader of a large class, and a most acceptable local preacher.

The Manchester Wesleyan Mission Committee has decided on large extensions. The new hall and schools in Hulme will be ready for opening this summer. Plans for the women's shelter, training home, and coffee tavern in Great Ancoats have been accepted. The present shelter has received 600 girls and women during the past three years, the majority of whom are now with friends, in situations, or in homes. The mission workers are in communication with nearly 500 out of the 600. This is in addition to the general relief and preventive work amongst women and girls, of whom 2545 were counselled and helped during the last year alone. An encouraging report is also given of the work at the men's home, shelter, and labour yard. Over 160 men are dealt with week by week.

The Liverpool Mission (so closely associated with the honoured Rev. Charles Garrett for the past 23 years) held its anniversary last week. The remarkable evangelistic work is continued with unabated zeal in the three chapels and eight halls, the two lodging-houses, and two railway-stations. Besides the social work, the Mission supports Homes for Friendless Girls and Boys, for Lads and Young Men, for Servants and Aged Widows, and for Little Children. It has a mission dining-room for work-girls, where 30,000 dinners are served annually, and a mission for the dwellers in lodging-houses, while temperance reformation is promoted by all means in every place. Some of the halls are inconveniently crowded every Sabbath, and have been so for years, while the Sunday-schools in those places have to refuse admission to any more children! There is also a men's Bible class, 500 strong.

Presbyterian.

St. James's Church, Wood Green, reports a membership of 513, and many indications of healthful activity.

Rev. J. Cunningham has been lecturing to crowded audiences in Wandsworth Town Hall during the past month.

The forty-second anniversary of the settlement of Rev. J. M. Wilson at Hexham has been celebrated with much enthusiasm.

Mr. J. P. Maxwell, son of Dr. J. L. Maxwell, has offered himself as a medical missionary to the Foreign Missionary Committee.

Dr. McGaw has improved in health since his arrival at the Cape. He purposes returning to England about April 17, a week before the meeting of Synod.

The Students' Missionary Society connected with the London Theological College collected last year the sum of £277 towards the purchase of premises for the Jewish Mission at Aleppo.

The annual report of the Yorkshire Presbytery of the Presbyterian Church of England states that during 1897 there was an increase of 155 church members in the fourteen churches within the Presbytery.

Fallen Asleep.

At Edinburgh, on the 27th ult., in her seventy-fifth year, Miss J. CAIRNS, sister of the late Rev. Principal Cairns, who was well known as quiet, true, and genuine, supporting her brother loyally in his work, and as his housekeeper watching over his health with an unselfish fidelity which did not waver for six-and-thirty years.—At Hitchin, on 1st inst., Rev. A. ENGLISH, who many years ago became popular as a local preacher around Hitchin; entered the ministry and did good work at Plymouth, Wells, and Trowbridge, till, health failing, he was compelled to retire.—At North Finchley, on 18th ult., Mr. EDWIN RIDLEY, aged sixty-eight, for nearly twenty years a leader among the Baptists at Finchley, and in earlier days at Hackney.—At Wimborne, Rev. V. R. SELLS, for many years Congregational minister at Martock.—At Brighton, on 1st inst., Rev. JONAH REEVE, aged eighty-seven, a retired Congregational minister.—At Hornsea, Mrs. WALES, wife of Rev. J. A. Wales, Methodist minister.—At Newcastle, Mrs. STOKOE, highly respected as a quiet but generous giver, the wife of a very prominent Methodist layman.—At Moor Lodge, Rutland Park, Sheffield, aged seventy-six, Mr. W. K. PEACE, honoured as a leading Christian citizen and an earnest worker.—At Dover, Rev. JOSEPH BOULTON, a Wesleyan minister.—At Elmwood, Blackheath, Mrs. GILL, widow of the late Rev. George Gill, formerly well-known as L.M.S. missionary in Madagascar.—At Torquay, Rev. J. MACONACHIE, aged seventy-five, in his day a useful Congregational minister.—At Heaton, Bradford, Mr. MARTIN FIELD, an active temperance worker.—At Elstree, Herts, Rev. P. H. WENTWORTH PEACH, rector of the parish.—At Eastbourne, on 18th ult., Mrs. CORSBIE, of Cockfield Hall, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Haldane, of Westbourne-terrace, London.—At The Rectory, Great Chart, Rev. V. G. LONGDEN, aged sixty-one, rector of West Retford, Notts.—At Dublin, Dr. DARLEY, Q.C.—At Monkstown, Mr. DANIEL SPEERS, for about forty years an active Sunday-school and Christian worker.

Notices.

A READER would be glad to know where to find a poem, familiar in childhood, of which the first stanza was:—

What think ye of Christ? is the test
To try both your state and your scheme,
You cannot be right in the rest,
Unless you think rightly of Him.

A Generous Act.—Here is a singularly touching instance of unselfish feeling in unexpected relations. A Yorkshire barber, who is a lay preacher, noticed one week recently a great increase in the number of his customers. Inquiring into the cause, he discovered that his rival at the other end of the village was smitten with illness. At the end of the week he carefully counted his earnings, made a calculation, and took the surplus over and above his average takings to his brother-barber, "with the warmest expression of his Christian sympathy." That is the sort of Christianity the world needs. The "brother-barber" will believe there is "something in religion" now, if he did not before.

The Bible League.—Through the kindness of Lieut.-Colonel Corry Smith (treasurer) and Rev. F. Lindesay (rector), a successful series of meetings has been held at St. Cuthbert's Hall, Bedford. Valuable testimonies to the full inspiration of Holy Scripture were given by Revs. E. Brewer (vicar of Old Hill, Birmingham), W. Fuller Gooch (West Norwood), G. D. Hooper (Luton), and John Tuckwell (hon. sec), whose archæological lecture on recent discoveries in Babylonia and Assyria, illustrated with beautiful limelight views, drew a crowded audience. A large number of engagements are in hand, including conferences at Bournemouth and Boscombe on 16th, 17th, and 18th inst.; Bath, 31st inst. and April 1; Newport (I.W.), April 14; and Winchester, April 21. Particulars can be had from Mr. A. H. Carter, Assist.-Sec., 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

OUR publishers desire to inform our readers that the applications for the Paragraph Bible are now in excess of the supply, their stock being practically exhausted ; and, although the advertisement has been withheld for several weeks, orders are still being daily received. The publishers, while regretting that they are unable to comply with these later applications, are endeavouring to meet the case of those friends by preparing an assortment of Biblical works to the value of 12s. 6d. for the same price as the Bible. Full particulars will be announced in our advertisement columns next week.

The slight illness of the Queen prior to her departure for the Continent raised such a feeling of concern as enables one somewhat to understand how thoroughly her people repose in her, and how great would be the alarm were she dangerously ill or actually removed by death. Amid the many changes of men and Ministries that occur, we have a sense of permanence in the life of the Sovereign. With her as the head we feel that nothing violent will take place, that there will be no serious departure from a general national policy with which we have all become familiar. Were the Queen, however, removed, no one can foresee what new influences might gain the ascendancy. Her people are rejoiced that it was only a trifle that gave them a flutter of fear, and they will not cease to desire for her a renewal of health and strength by her stay on the Mediterranean.

The Romish Bishop of Clifton must have a sense of humour to class Mr. George Müller with those who "seek the Lord if haply they might feel after Him and find Him" (p. 20)—surely an "infelicitous quotation"! Nor do his references to the veteran's "erroneous doctrines," having "a religion peculiar to himself," and being "outside the pale of the Church," indicate any great clearness of spiritual vision. But Mr. Müller's life vindicates itself, disarming all such criticism, come whence it may.

The splendid gatherings of the Free Church Federation in Bristol last week bore remarkable testimony to the progress of the movement, as well as the immense numbers and influence of the Churches which it represents. A high spiritual tone seems to have pervaded the various sessions. The drawing together of the evangelical bodies has awakened a new and buoyant sense of brotherhood, and the frictions and divisions so often manifested in inter-denominational relations bid fair to become a thing of the past. One of the features of the past year's work has been the number of Free Church missions held in great centres, at which the various bodies joined their forces with enthusiasm, with results that promise in many cases to enrich the life of all the communities concerned. We wish there was more sign of similar cohesion between the Established and Free Churches so that (at any rate in practical work) "they all may be one."

The Methodist Recorder, which thinks that the million scheme has captured the mind and heart of Methodism, and "which no one doubts will be carried to a triumphant issue unless someone egregiously blunders," hopes that the idea may be adopted by other denominations. It wants to know what should hinder the Congregationalists, the Baptists, and Presbyterians, as well as the Church of England, setting themselves to inaugurate the new century by a million scheme. The character of the century might be stamped at the outset. No doubt it would, if the movement were an expression of real religious feeling, and many things point to the coming of a happy change. One sign for good is that a paper so representative of Methodism as is our contemporary should thus stir other Churches up to love and good works.

Many theories have been advanced to account for the number of dull sermons delivered in our pulpits. One view, lately expressed, is that it is due to the preaching of a "dead Christ." Of course, to preach a really dead Christ is labour in vain. But preachers worthy of the name of Christian do not preach a dead, but a living and risen Saviour. "I am He that liveth, and was dead, and behold, I am alive for evermore." They go to the New Testament, not to discover a figure belonging to the first century, and to study his teaching for that distant generation, but that they may unfold his thought and redeeming purpose for us, on whom "the ends of the ages have come." Really dull preaching is that in which this supreme and awakening fact is ignored or forgotten.

How often at the family table is conversation deliberately and wisely guided into channels that are pure and profitable? How much oftener is it allowed to drift aimlessly from topic to topic, just as one stray remark after another turns it hither and thither? Like a boat filled by unskilful men of unequal strength, it needs a helmsman. That is the place of the father or mother ; they should keep an eye on tendency, and quietly move the tiller, and prevent the vessel of family talk from turning round and round, or getting into stormy waters, or foundering from sheer incapacity. Among other good things of a negative kind they may keep themselves and also their children from discussing their minister on Sunday, and discuss, in a reverent way, his sermon instead. An experienced man says he has known many instances in which children's minds have been poisoned by parental criticisms upon their ministers.

The revelations in the columns of the Daily Chronicle of "Life in the Shop" bring home a very serious question, especially to heads of business houses that claim to be Christians. Overcrowding, under-feeding, undue length of work-time, insalubrity and homelessness of quarters, and unreasonable regulations as to relaxation are among the sources of complaint, and the list might be greatly extended. Abuses of this nature are almost invariably of slow growth, unnoticed by the eye familiar with each changing detail, but apparent at once to outsiders, who are seldom charitable in their judgments.

In approaching the question, the large and growing number of firms—and usually those among the most successful—which do make every possible provision for those they employ, physically, intellectually, and morally, is highly gratifying ; and it is further encouraging to observe how many of the great philanthropists of whom our nation is proud have been self-made men, who never willingly let an employé suffer any hardship that they could prevent. No excuse of hard times or keen competition will relieve a Christian of responsibility in such a matter, and no excuse of ignorance can avail. No honest business ever suffered yet from adequate discharge of personal responsibility to either feeders, work-people, or customers.

An East-end worker says that an inquiry into the reading habits of the people showed that Mr. Stead's penny novels and similar publications have almost entirely displaced the penny dreadfuls, and that sporting papers have an enormous sale. People in that part take to betting as a relief from the monotony of life. Some of the men are said to be very well read, but the number is evidently very small. By placing good things within reach of the people evil things may often be got rid of. One of the most remarkable things at the East End is that on a summer Sunday evening as many as a thousand men will gather round a favourite speaker to hear him on the Christian evidences. From which it may be gathered that they like something to stimulate the intellect.

Negations never satisfy the human heart in its search for truth, and many of the more earnest-minded Unitarians are restless under the present tendency to make their churches mere centres of dogmatic "anti-trinitarianism." Rev. I. Fripp has been writing a series of letters to the "Seed Sower," a Unitarian monthly, urging a more spiritual campaign against immorality and irreligion, instead of being satisfied by empty polemics. This is a protest that may be pondered over by other than Unitarians, for the tendency to preach brilliant negations is by no means confined to them. Error is best met by the presentation of the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, before which doubt and scepticism often melt away like hoar frost before the morning sun. The ministry under which "the hungry sheep look up and are fed," is the parent not of faith but of blank discouragement and despair.

The political world is kept in a state of perpetual unrest from the daily and varying reports sent by foreign correspondents as to the diplomatic relationships of this country with foreign powers. The chief function of Her Majesty's Ministers seems to be to contradict or correct these reports, which are often alarmist in the extreme. The public sentiment meantime is in a continual ferment, and the final result is to play into the hands of the military party, and to make it possible for the ever-increasing naval estimates to pass almost without discussion. There is nothing more needed just now than a calm and self-possessed mind regarding public affairs. Alarmist views are always perilous; especially is this so at a time of tension in international affairs.

The spectacle of the great Western nations competing with each other in naval and military armaments is sad indeed; yet these peoples, armed to the teeth, profess to be Christian nations! What a burlesque it is of the good news the angels of the olden time proclaimed. Where does the Christianity these empires acknowledge really take effect? It does not seem to restrain the war spirit in any appreciable degree. Millions of treasure are expended in the production of war materials and firearms, intended for the deliberate destruction of human life. Surely it can never be in harmony with the Gospel which Christ lived and died to expound. Is there not an urgent need that the "Gospel of peace" should find voice sometimes in the teaching of those who profess to be followers of Him who once said, "Blessed are the peacemakers"?

We give on page 12 a communication from Dr. Colin Valentine, of Agra, in which a significant passage occurs with reference to the importance of canals to the social well-being of the people of India. The following words of a landed proprietor in the country should be seriously pondered:—

If there had been a network of canals, as there should be, all over the country, there would have been no famine; and so several millions of pounds sterling would have been saved to the Government, and thousands upon thousands of men and women and children would have been alive to-day, who perished miserably in the jungle, and were eaten by wild beasts.

It seems that the Lieut.-Governor of the North-West Provinces has emphasised the same facts as to the need of irrigation and communication by canals. Friends of India should exert their influence to keep this urgent need before those who are responsible for the administration of our great Eastern dependency.

We do not remember seeing or hearing anything that so powerfully brings home the ignorance of the Gospel in France as the fact related by M. Paul Guignard at the Free Church Congress.

He vouched for as a fact the statement that a woman who had attended one of their meetings at Clermont Ferrand, a town of 50,000 population, went to a bookseller's and asked for a New Testament. The bookseller had never heard of it. "A New Testament?" he said, "I have not heard of the book. I suppose it is not out yet. If you like, I will write to Paris and get you a copy as soon as it is out."

Some English Protestants are unwilling to aid Protestant work in France, because it seems to be a reflection on Roman Catholics; but in view of ignorance like this, what is the use of pretending that there is any well-grounded intelligent religion? Superstition there may be, but this evidence, and it comes from every part where Rome is in the ascendant, shows that, at any rate, the Bible is needed; and really Protestant work all the world over is not the propagation of Protestantism as such, but the diffusion of Gospel light and truth.

The Bishop of London, who is now as well known for outspokenness as his predecessor, Dr. Temple, says that he entirely disagrees with persons who express their astonishment that cruel and inhuman conduct can be practised by anyone in Christian England.

There is no Christian country in the world. Because a certain number of persons are Christians, it does not follow that the country deserves that title.

Such language from such a quarter may lead many who think that baptism makes a Christian to reconsider that conclusion. If it did, there ought to be very few of any other spirit and life among us, for the number of the baptized is, we should think, far in excess of the unbaptized. But here is the dictum of the Bishop of London—"England is not a Christian country." From the laws sometimes passed by our legislators, from the customs in our trades, from the treatment we give to subject races, from the daily habits of multitudes of our people, this is only too evident.

The House of Commons Committee on Money Lending heard some evidence from Sir George Lewis which ought to do a great deal towards ending the present shameful practices of money-lenders.

He believed the extent of usurious money-lending was a national scandal. Money-lenders were the encouragers of young men to bet, to gamble, and to rush into extravagance. Borrowing led them into the commission of crime for the purpose of getting money to meet those difficulties so caused.

The first thing the money-lender does is to see who is the father and who are the relations of the would-be borrower, and what is the chance of screwing money out of them. At the rate of interest charged, in one case forty per cent. on hundreds of thousands of pounds, there is no wonder that lenders become rich and that borrowers are beggared. This trade is largely in the hands of Jews, yet Sir George said:—

The Jewish community despised and loathed these men and their trade. They were not allowed to hold any public position in the community. They were utterly ignored. The Jewish clergy preached against them and their usages. He knew this of his own knowledge, as he was himself a Jew. Asked if these statements applied to the country generally, he said they did. The Jews would be only too glad to see them put down and abolished altogether.

On what simple matters are we sometimes misunderstood and "corrected." If some Scottish correspondent writes of a service held "last Sabbath," we are promptly notified that the Mosaic age is past, and that the weekly rest is "the Lord's Day." If, again, in an uncritical moment, we associate a sacred act or function with "Sunday," we are told that the privileges of the first day of the week have come by Christianity, and on that account the day should not be designated by a name of heathen origin. If, accordingly, we proceed to speak of "the Lord's Day" we are no less open to criticism, for one after another our friends write to convince us that, according to the strictest sense of dispensational truth, the Lord's Day is a time of judgment yet to dawn upon the earth.

"So many men, so many minds." We are not made Jews by speaking of the Sabbath, nor do we become heathens by using the word Sunday. No one will dispute that the first day of the week is Sunday in the civil calendar; we claim that we can employ the term without condoning paganism, or being corrupted with thoughts of Dies Solis. No less are we sure that to those who regard the day as "holy unto the Lord" (Isa. lviii. 13), it is in deed and truth a Sabbath of rest to heart and mind. Again, as by Christian dedication the hours are devoted to the Lord, who shall deny to the day the designation of "the Lord's," apart from any teaching regarding a coming Day of the Lord? In a word, all three names are lawful, and either may be expedient; so it is desirable that those who feel strongly in favour of one should not overlook the grounds and reasons for using either or both the other terms.

A "Country Parson," writing in the Contemporary Review, discusses the question of the decline of Tractarianism with great force and insight. In spite of the great and apparently increasing influence of the movement, he affirms that it has reached its zenith, and that it is doomed to certain eclipse. He bases his belief on the fact that while the earlier forms of Anglicanism represented by Keble and Pusey was built on the co-ordinate authority of the Bible and the Church, the new cleaves to the latter, and has practically accepted the principles of the Higher Criticism. What follows? This—

The neo-Tractarians of Canon Gore's school have practically cast aside ecclesiastical authority, and have become advocates of an understanding with modern thought.

There is here an inner inconsistency, which is sure to show itself in a loss of influence as time goes on. The seeds of decline are thus imbedded in the heart of Ritualism.

A paper by Mr. Ormuzd Rassam, a Chaldean of Mesopotamia, forms part of the last number of the Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archæology, and contains some interesting illustrations of the survival of Biblical customs in the East. The covenant of salt, the practice of rending the garments in anger, of smiting upon the breast in prayer, and of throwing dust on the head in sorrow, still form part of the customs of nomad Arabs, and in Abyssinia it is still the practice to wash a stranger's feet as a token of hospitality. Mr. Rassam adduces strong arguments for the identification of Ur of the Chaldees with Orfa, the scene of the most terrible of all the Armenian massacres.

A north-country clergyman, speaking at a missionary meeting recently, pointed a striking contrast between the amounts raised for missionary purposes and for athletics. In Accrington, where the speech was delivered, £205 was raised for the C.M.S. during 1897 while a bazaar for the purposes of a cricket club realised £1,400, and the takings of a football club not far away were over £1,100. A certain statistician has computed the national football bill at £1,175,000, and the money spent on the six leading sports in the country at £33,000,000, while the total contribution of all the Christian Churches in the land was only £1,300,000. The tremendous hold of the "athletic" craze is thus shown in a startling light, and the contrast is nothing short of humiliating when we realise the disparity in the quality of motives at work, and the issues at stake.

The consciousness of sin, as one of the marks of the saintly life, is conspicuously absent in modern times, and this is, doubtless, one reason of the shallowness of much of the religion of the day. For, till we realise the evil out of which Christ redeems us, we cannot rightly measure the value of the salvation which He brings to us. "To whom little is forgiven"—i.e., the man who has only a vague and insufficient sense of the Divine pardon—"the same loveth little." The old passionate adoration of the Cross of Christ was the direct fruit of its realisation as God's method and means of rescuing the sinner from the grasp of eternal death. To regain the Puritan sense of sin, therefore, is one of the deepest needs of the present time. And this can be done only by reading our own hearts in the light of the great sacrifice which was offered for sin.

Finding and Losing.

CHRISTIAN discipleship means love to Jesus Christ. Not simply a true creed and a virtuous character, but personal love. And not simply must it be in the heart, but must command there as the ruling passion; and all other love, even that which we bear to a father or mother, must seem as hatred in comparison. Jesus puts this in a very startling way: "If any man come to Me, and hate not his father and mother and wife and children, and brethren and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be My disciple."

In sending forth the Twelve, two by two, on a preliminary mission through the land, He gave them instructions which, while adapted to the immediate present, looked to the far future, and involved great guiding principles for the remotest generation. He forewarned them in the plainest way of the hatred and opposition they would have to encounter for his sake. Even blood relationship shall not avail for their defence. They go forth like sheep in the midst of wolves. The world shall be against them and the world's law. "The brother shall deliver up the brother to death, and the father the child; and the children shall rise up against their parents and cause them to be put to death."

Under such conditions there would be strong temptation to hold their peace, or to speak with bated breath, to be recreant to the truth, or to deny the Lord altogether, and thereby to evade the cross. In presence of this temptation, Jesus says: "He that findeth his life shall lose it; and he that loseth his life, for my sake, shall find it." The principle holds both historically and spiritually, and that not only in extraordinary conjunctures, but as

THE FIXED LAW OF THE NEW LIFE.

The penalty of faithfulness to Christ may not amount to what is here suggested. It may be no more than the loss of friends, or the spoiling of goods, or the casting out of one's name as evil, or the wrecking of worldly prospects. But let the worst come to the worst, and let it be that one's life is placed in hazard for Christ's sake; and suppose that the man, seeing the hazard, stands aloof, or recants the profession he has made, and thereby saves his life and secures his temporal comfort. He puts this earthly life in the chief place, and saves it by infidelity to Christ—as if a sentry stationed at some post by his commander, and required to keep it at all hazards, should desert it to save his skin.

In the martyr ages, it happened again and again that recantation of the faith was made as easy as possible. The opposers of the Gospel saw that apostacy from Christ was a heavier blow to the Christian cause than ten martyrdoms. Only let a man throw a pinch of incense on a heathen altar, and say, Away with the accursed; or let him only produce a magistrate's certificate, easily got, that he has complied with the law, and it will be enough. Clinging eagerly to this earthly life, postponing all spiritual interests to temporal safety, the man yields, and "findeth his life."

Well, this finding is the most awful conceivable losing. In the deepest, dreadest sense of the term, a life thus saved is "lost"—lost as a life, lost for all purposes worth living for. The man has chosen the wide gate and the broad way that leads to destruction. His very success is his undoing. He might have worn a crown of life; he has sold his prospects for a bit of tinsel. He has become like the savourless salt that is fit neither for the land nor yet for the dunghill, but men cast it out. Suppose the last we had heard of Simon Peter had been his denial of Jesus, when with oaths and curses he said, "I know not the man"; how we should have classed him with Demas, if not with Judas! Or, coming down to later days, suppose the last we had heard of Archbishop Cranmer had been by which he hoped to save his life; or suppose that Rogers, and Hooper, and Ridley, and Latimer, wearing his nightcap and his old frieze gown, with a shroud underneath, or our Scottish martyrs, from Patrick Hamilton downwards, had renounced their faith to save their lives—how we should have mourned over them as fallen stars! How keenly we should have felt that in finding their lives they had lost them! For "Whosoever shall deny Me before men, him will I also deny before my Father who is in heaven."

Men may evade the force of Christ's saying by persuading themselves that as the old conditions of the martyr ages have passed away, and as we are so near the close of the nineteenth century, therefore the "finding" and "losing" that Christ speaks of are out of date. Let us not be too sure. Choose out a man calling himself a follower of Jesus from any class of society that may be named, and suppose that the powers of this present world bear in upon him. I do not mean by "this world" the twelve hundred millions of human beings who people this globe of earth, but the comparatively few in whose society the man mingles, whose friendly regard he wishes to retain, whose "opinion" forms the atmosphere which he daily breathes, and whose ways are for him "the course of this world."

Now suppose that the general spirit of this little world is cold or hostile to Jesus Christ. The man's comfort, his happiness, his worldly success, the prospects of his family seem to be dependent on his maintaining pleasant relations, and conforming in a hearty fashion to their customs. How strong and subtle the temptation to evade discomfort, to secure worldly advantages, to have the entry into "good society," by being unfaithful to the Saviour, and complying with "the fashion."

One meets men again and again, who make their religious profession, or the place of worship they attend, subservient to worldly considerations, and who do not seem to be ashamed of it, or in any way troubled in conscience. But here, as inevitably as when life is in hazard, the principle of Christ's saying holds, "He that findeth his life shall lose it." He may win station, and honours, and the world's smiles, but in all the awful significance and down-bearing force of the expression,

HE IS LOSING HIS LIFE.

Oh! what he might have become—and is not.*

What, then, would Christ have? He tells us in this expression: "He that loseth his life for my sake." This losing is not a throwing away. No man has a right to throw life away. Soldiers in battle who rush forward when the commander's bugle calls them back, are as really unfaithful as cowards, though in another way. As a Christian man, my life is not mine either to keep or to throw up; it belongs to Jesus Christ, and is held absolutely at his disposal.

In the early ages, in times of persecution, there were not only men who evaded persecution by apostacy or by slinking away from their divinely-appointed post; there were those also who vain-gloriously courted martyrdom for the sake of the crown. This word of Christ is not for such a thing. The losing on which his benediction rests is a losing "for my sake." We trust Him as our Saviour; we love Him with a true heart-love; we surrender ourselves into his hands for both worlds; we place our life at his sovereign disposal; we yield ourselves to the doing of his will; and quietly accept the consequences. A man of this stamp He appoints at some outpost as sentry; the man steps out and takes his place there at Christ's bidding—his WHOLE CONCERN TO BE FAITHFUL.

He is shot down. There is no publishing of the glory of his deed or fate, nothing but a single line, "Private Faithful shot dead at his post"; that is all. Has he then lost his life? Nay; on the contrary, he has found it unto life eternal—found it in highest and divinest possession. There has never been wanting a glorious minority of such men, to whom fidelity to Christ their Saviour has been the supreme aim of their existence.

Jesus Christ lures no man to become his follower by false representations, or by concealment, till it is too late to back out. On the contrary, while He undertakes to save men freely and graciously, He does not promise them a path of earthly pleasantness, and a paradise of sensuous delights at the end. He tells us plainly beforehand that we must come after Him, bearing our cross, and loving Him above all earthly honours, all earthly good. He does not call, "Come to this happy land," but, "Who," He asks, "will die for my sake?" This is really the fealty He seeks—a fealty whose ambition is, "That I may know Him and the fellowship of his sufferings."

Grasping the principle that lies in the heart of the saying, it is this: Selfish gain is spiritual loss. Loss for Christ's sake is immeasurable gain. The power we wield as Christian men is in the losing of self for Christ's sake.

* Compare in the lower sphere what Robert Browning says of "the Lost Leader," who for "a handful of silver," and a "riband to stick in his coat," deserted his cause:

"Blot out his name there, record one lost soul more,
One task more declined, one more footpath untrod,
One more devil's triumph and sorrow for angels,
One wrong more to man, one more insult to God,
Life's night begins——."

Jesus.

Tune: "The Sweetest Name" (Songs and Solos).

The gift of love from God above
Is only found in Jesus;
'Twas He alone who could atone,
And from our yoke release us.

Before he came to suffer shame,
The angel named Him "Jesus":
And rightly so, for now we know,
From sin and death He frees us.

Upon the tree at Calvary
They nailed the blessed Jesus;
His life He gave our lives to save,
And bore our load to ease us.

Within the tomb, enwrapt in gloom,
Silent and still lay Jesus;
To soothe our grief, and grant relief,
When fear of death should seize us.

In spite of foes, to heaven He rose,
For God exalted Jesus;
So now He lives, and comfort gives
When bowed with care He sees us.

And soon again He'll come to reign,
For "King of kings" is Jesus.
"Lord, haste the day!" we gladly say,
For this alone can please us.

The Lockhart Mission.—The Canning Town branch of this mission reports a variety of temperance, Gospel, and Sunday-school work, reaching many who are far from God and sadly enslaved by the vice of intemperance. The superintendent is Mr. G. H. Driver, 8, Percy-road, Canning-town.

From Other Lands.

An Indian Beggars' Church.

In a recent letter, Dr. Colin Valentine reports that he arrived in Agra on Dec. 6, after a pleasant voyage east in the P. and O. s.s. Caledonia. He was heartily greeted by the workers at the Medical Missionary Training Institute, who had long been engaged at high pressure owing to the famine. He reports that the cold weather rains have again been a failure over Northern India, so the crops depending upon them have withered in the field. The recent famine was not only attended with widespread suffering and need, but through it thousands of people have been reduced to want, and are now wandering homeless and "picking up the most precarious living." He gives facts and figures that show how large a work of mercy has been done by the institutions under his direction at Agra, and by other agencies which he has been privileged to help.

Dr. Valentine intimates that the dispensary, which was of such great service during the famine, is being continued; as it is absolutely necessary, he cannot close it, and he is sure that Christian friends will assist him to discharge the responsibility he has assumed in carrying it on. We make a brief extract from his letter:—

"The other day I was speaking to a large landed proprietor about the late famine, and I added: 'I suppose you and your tenants were heavy sufferers, like others?' 'No,' he replied, 'we were great gainers; we had splendid crops, and got three times the prices obtained in ordinary years.' 'How was that?' I inquired, with astonishment. The answer was that they had canal water at hand, and the landed proprietor added: 'If there had been as there should be, all over the country, there would have been no famine, and so several millions of pounds sterling would have been saved to the Government, and thousands upon thousands of men and women and children would have been alive to-day who perished miserably in the jungle and were eaten by wild beasts? I am glad to observe that the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces has emphasized the same facts."

The Beggars' Church in Dr. Valentine's compound is an institution that cannot but command the interest of all who sympathise with the poor. A Scottish lady who recently attended a Sunday morning service writes:

"At 8 o'clock the gate into the compound was opened, and a great gathering of men, women, and children filed in. Many of them had been waiting for an hour or more, and on this cold winter morning (January 16th), to keep themselves warm, some had gathered leaves and lighted fires. It is a pathetic sight; a gathering so different from anything seen at home. One poor man comes in, who is paralysed in his lower limbs, and can only move along in a sitting posture. He lives in a village two miles away, but trusts to some one giving him 'a lift' for a consideration. When the hour of meeting was 6 a.m., he used to sleep somewhere near on the Saturday night, so as to be in time on the Sabbath morning. He has come to for three years. One woman, paralysed, is conveyed on a board placed on four wheels, a distance of three or four miles. Another woman crawls on hands and knees; her home is about three miles away. There are some that can be seen carrying bundles on their heads, and you may know them to be homeless ones, their worldly possessions not being cumbersome. Several, who are unable to walk, are carried on the backs of their friends, and others, being blind, are led. There are others whose sadly maimed limbs tell the old story of leprosy, and on others the famine has left its mark only too obviously.

"As they seat themselves outside the verandah, and one gazes at this congregation of over eight hundred persons, and thinks that this is their one chance in the week of hearing of a Saviour's love for them, the thought is borne in on the mind, 'who maketh us to differ?' and 'to whom much is given, of them will the more be required.' A native hymn having been sung (a choir of blind people leading), an address in Urdu is given by one of the students in training for a medical missionary. After that Dr. Valentine speaks a few earnest words and engages in prayer. The congregation joins in, clause by clause, as various sins are confessed and forgiveness asked. Before dispersing, every one comes up to the verandah, where Dr. Phillips and the valued native assistant of Dr. Valentine is seated; and unless able-bodied, well-fed, and fit for work, they receive one or two pice, which procures them a little food. It requires no small skill to discriminate and apportion according to need, but Dr. Phillips is well acquainted with them, and manages admirably. A good many assistants are needed to repress the eager ones who are coming for their pice, and to hurry on those who have received theirs, or who are not considered needy enough to receive any. Of lepers there are about fifteen, while the blind are believed to number well on to three hundred.

"Friends at home will wonder if there is any fruit from this weekly sowing of the good seed, and it is delightful to hear from Dr. Phillips that he believes there are about fifty who are ready to be baptized if there were only any means of livelihood for them. If it were known that they were Christians, no Mohammedan would give them anything. We can rejoice over these secret disciples—these hidden ones who are known to the Master. At the time of the famine, when Dr. Valentine was at home, many friends sent him subscriptions, which have enabled Dr. Phillips to relieve from January 3, 1897, to January 16, 1898, 103,144 famine-stricken ones; but though the famine is over, the 'Beggars' are with us always."

Aggressive Work in France.

We have several times mentioned the Gospel work carried on in the Charente Inférieure. It arose through the conversion of a priest belonging to that district, M. Bonhomme, curé of St. Palais de Phiolin. Another converted priest, M. J. B. Corneloup, came out and linked his efforts with those of M. Bonhomme, under the direction of the pastor of the Protestant church at Pons, M. B. Robert. With the blessing of God, this work has not ceased to prosper.

The Gospel is regularly preached in twenty-four localities, and in six of these there are now little churches, with members admitted to the Lord's Supper; also a Bible school, meeting either on Sundays or Thursdays. The pastors are asked for in other localities, but they cannot go to them because they are such a little company, and the present labour already exceeds their strength. Hitherto the religious meetings and services have been held in the unfloored kitchens of peasants' cottages or in barns and sheds. But it has now become a matter of urgency to build temples wherever there is a pretty large assembly of converts; it is a seemly thing for worship, and the buildings are needful also for the impression they will make in that region. A temple has, indeed, already been begun at Le Puy-Haut, the peasant population of which are making real sacrifices to secure the building. The whole expense will not exceed £500, and half of that sum has already been obtained in France. For the remainder the workers appeal to Christians in other lands who desire to extend the kingdom of God.

In days gone by, this region of Charente Inférieure was wholly Protestant; and at the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes it contained no less than 104 Protestant churches. But the frightful persecutions that followed scattered everything. Yet memories of the past remain, and even old Bibles of those days have been kept by some families. It is hoped that present effort will reclaim this countryside to the Gospel.

M. Corneloup has recently visited England and solicited the interest of friends in his growing work. His home address is Pons, Charente Inférieure, France.

Argentina.—Mr. F. Lister Newton has settled at Tandil, and is working with the small Christian community of the town. In a letter to Mr. Roger Jones, of the Missionary Bureau, he says: "The people are very poor, and the work is all up-hill. M. Paul Besson, of Buenos Aires, has been here for a week holding meetings. The people are ignorant of the simplest truth of the Gospel, but they are disposed to hear." Mr. Newton's address is, 778, Avenida Colon, Tandil, F.C.S., Buenos Aires, Argentina.

Australian Aborigines.

We were visitors to New South Wales in search of health, but anxious, too, to gain information as to what our brothers and sisters on the other side of the world were doing in the Master's work. The news that there was a native camp within possible reach, with a resident lady missionary, proved too great a temptation to be resisted by my husband and myself.

It was a beautiful day in December, last year, the beginning of the Australian summer, and to reach the "station" was not a very easy matter, involving a drive of some miles through wild bush scenery. Emerging at length upon a beautiful headland, overlooking the far-famed Botany Bay, we saw in the distance the monument to Captain Cook, marking his first landing place upon these shores. From between the bush peeped a very black-looking primitive tent, such as the Government is now replacing with corrugated iron houses, more useful for the inhabitants. Soon we came in sight of several tents, with the little mission-hall in their midst, and the brown-skinned lads and maidens playing round amongst the browsing goats. Our question, "Where is your lady missionary?" was answered with evident pleasure, and we felt at once that she was recognised as the true friend of all. We found her in the little mission-hall, and received a hearty welcome from a bright young Christian lady, who (a member of a Baptist church) had been led to give up home and family, and come to live amongst these people and try to win them for Christ. "Ah! but there is since she came," said a fine, manly fellow, one of the natives, as he rowed us back across the bay, and it was pleasing to see their respectful affection for their leader and friend. "They always bring me the best fish they catch," she said. It is certainly a primitive life for a young educated girl to lead. The Mission is building, or rather "putting up" for her, two rooms, but at present her only abode is the wooden mission-hall, one end of which is curtained for a sleeping apartment. Life at Botany Bay must be a perpetual picnic, but with none of its usual pleasantries, though the simple, homely meal to which the lady bade us welcome was thoroughly enjoyable, despite the dark-skinned, black-eyed children who were peeping in at the open door.

But what of the spiritual work? We found that there was to be a service later on in the day, and decided to wait. That meeting was one never to be forgotten. It was like a bit of the Keswick Convention strayed to the Australian bush, as one after the other of those dusky Christians rose to testify to God's keeping grace and power. "I can't get the Lord out of mind," said one who also told us afterwards, "I wish I'd tried this life long ago. I've tried every other, and this is far and away the best." "I can't read," said one in the course of a prayer which would have at home, "but, Lord, I thank thee that I can pray. I didn't know Thee once, but now I do." Five short years ago not one in that native camp was a Christian, not one knew the saving power of the grace of God. Now they talk the language of Zion. "How did this all begin?" Simply through visits to the camp by this young lady, to tell out "the old, old story."

The Mission is supported for the most part by contributions from members of the Christian Endeavour Society. We were told, indeed, that there were, in the camp, eighteen active members of the Christian Endeavour, besides a juvenile branch. These men and women too are showing the reality of their profession by their lives, although they are sorely tempted by those who should be an example, and who often come out to picnic in the bush on the Sabbath Day and tempt them to sell their wares (shell baskets, which they make), yet many stand firm and true for Christ.

Among those who will one day sing the new song will doubtless be some of these lambs, saved through the instrumentality of the Australian Aborigines' Mission and the self-sacrificing love of Christian endeavourers. The present resident missionary may be addressed, Aborigines' Station, La Perouse, Botany Bay, N.S.W. M. McC.

Mr. Meyer in America.

THE reward of service, as someone has truly said, is more service. This maxim has been verified in a marked manner during the recent visit of Rev. F. B. Meyer to America. Our brother has had to pay the penalty of his popularity as a writer by being overwhelmed by invitations to speak in almost every section of the country.

When it became known, during the early autumn, that there was a possibility of Mr. Meyer's visiting America for January and February, letters were received from all parts of the States and Canada asking that his itinerary might be so arranged as to include certain cities or communities. Owing, however, to the very limited time which Mr. Meyer could give to this work, it was thought best so to plan the tour that large centres might be reached, and by the aid of the religious and secular Press notices might be so distributed as to bring together the Christian people, not only of the city visited, but of the entire community. The results far surpassed every expectation, and from first to last the great difficulty has been to secure churches sufficiently large to accommodate the audiences which have sought to listen to the teaching which Mr. Meyer has so systematically and thoroughly presented.

In some case the hearers have not been pleased. That was exactly what Mr. Meyer wanted, for he repeatedly told his audience that his object was not to tickle their fancies or amuse their intellectual faculties; he had come to teach plain truth, and he would feel disappointed if they enjoyed it. He illustrated this by comparing his addresses on certain occasions to surgical operations, and said that while he prayed that God would own the work to the welfare of the hearers, he did not believe that in any case the searching work and the Holy Spirit would be at the time enjoyable. There are many who can testify to the truth of this, many also bear witness to the blessing they have experienced after passing through the bitterness of humility and self-abasement. In some cases those who at first were critical have become friends of Mr. Meyer, and have been most grateful for the help he has afforded them.

At the time I write Mr. Meyer has visited eleven cities, where he has conducted over eighty services. These cities have represented a large portion of the North-Eastern States, and the audiences must aggregate over one hundred thousand. The importance of these meetings can hardly be over-estimated, as they have been representative of the Christian element of every place, and have included hundreds of ministers and theological students in every denomination.

Of course, it is impossible to measure the results of such a work in definite terms. The size of an audience may indicate either curiosity regarding the preacher or interest in his message. An audience should rather be weighed than counted in order to ascertain its possibilities. In this mission, however, continuing for less than six weeks, and now about to close, it is remarkable how many have been the evidences of great blessing to Christians on all hands. From every city visited Mr. Meyer has received the most encouraging news of ministers preaching with new power and Christian workers being used as never before.

While recognising the importance of the regular ministry to which Mr. Meyer is bound in London, there are thousands in America who will reluctantly bid him farewell, and we shall console ourselves by the thought that he may again visit America, to continue a work which has been wonderfully blessed to tens of thousands.

East Northfield, Mass. W. R. Moody.

Northfield Conferences.—Arrangements have been completed for the annual "College Conference" at Northfield, which will be held this season from July 1st to 10th inclusive. Bishop Potter, of New York, and Robert E. Speer are to be among the speakers, and it is hoped that Rev. Prebendary H. W. Webb-Peploe, may also be present. These Northfield student gatherings have grown in a most remarkable way during the past few years, and are representative of the religious life of the American schools and colleges. The Christian workers' Conference for Bible study will follow the student gathering in less than three weeks, beginning July 29th, and continuing sixteen days. Among those who are expected to be present are: Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, Rev. R. A. Torrey, and Rev. C. I. Scofield.

Cretans in Distress.

ALTHOUGH there is a slight improvement in the condition of the Cretans, they are still in the deepest distress. In the midst of our abundance, it is almost impossible to conceive of the misery that prevails throughout that unhappy island. A contemporary quotes a letter from a lieutenant on one of Her Majesty's warships, which paints the picture in a terribly realistic manner:—

"There are thousands of poor men, women, and children actually starving and homeless, just huddled together in caves, with barely rags to cover their poor shivering bodies. The helpless look of misery in their faces is awful to see; one poor girl of nineteen, with a newly born baby, was lying in a cave in the bitter cold with scarcely any covering. The family had caught, killed a dog, and were actually eating it."

This young naval officer appeals for warm clothing, and says that the need is so urgent that the sailors of his ship, in their attempts at sympathy, have made warm petticoats, etc., for the sufferers. Mrs. E. Dundas, 8, Mornington-avenue Mansions, West Kensington, will receive anything in the nature of warm clothing.

The Ainus of Yezo.

AT the last monthly meeting of the Western Board of the National Bible Society of Scotland, held in Glasgow, there was laid on the table the first copy of the Ainu New Testament which has reached this country. The translation is the work of Rev. J. Batchelor, of the Church Missionary Society, who has devoted his life to work among this, till lately, savage people. Mrs. Bishop, in her "Untrodden Tracks in Japan," draws a vivid picture of the wild Ainu, survivors of the original inhabitants of Japan, and their animal and superstitious life, without a written language, without God, without hope. They have since come under the influence of Christianity, and are now provided with the New Testament in their own tongue. The book has been printed at Yokohama at the cost of the Bible Societies of England, Scotland, and the United States.

Conquest of Madagascar.—Mr. Curzon, speaking in the House of Commons, informed Mr. William Johnston that he was not in a position to give particulars concerning the number and value of churches, hospitals, and other property belonging to English Protestant missionaries in Madagascar which had been destroyed since the conquest of that country by the French. Certain claims for compensation for loss arising out of the French military operations in Madagascar had been submitted to the French Government, and were now under their consideration, and others were held in reserve until a decision had been arrived at by the French Government as to the claims of all sufferers, both French and foreign, from those operations.

Colonial and Continental Church Society.—Urgent appeals from many quarters crowd in upon the committee, and, having regard to the funds at their command, but a small portion of them can receive the response they deserve. It is no easy matter to turn a deaf ear to the cry of the distant settler, who begs someone to help him to remember the life of the world to come amidst his struggle for existence here. It is hard to say 'no' to the Servant of God, whose parish extends over some two or three hundred square miles when he begs for a fellow-labourer to lift up the standard of the Cross as his wearied arm lets it fall. It is heart-breaking to hear of Colony after Colony of Englishmen and women, for whose souls no one cares, and yet to be unable to help them.—Greater Britain Messenger.

The Army in India.—A memorial signed by seventy-nine medical women has been presented to Lord George Hamilton protesting against the Indian Cantonment Rules of 1897. Objections are raised to the secret denunciations of supposed diseased persons, and to the means of compulsion employed to bring suspected persons under observation and treatment. Among the questions discussed are:—The length of the contagious period, the impossibility of a really adequate detention, and the fallacious nature of certificates pronouncing persons who have been known to be diseased as healthy. The slight amount of medical treatment usually given to the troops is commented on, and the necessity of trustworthy statistics is urged. A system of dispensaries making treatment easy and popular among the civil populations of cantonments is advocated. Regulations rendering vice difficult and dishonourable are suggested, as well as the instruction of the soldier when recruited on the moral conduct expected of him.

Mr. McNeill in London.

BLACKHEATH AND WOOLWICH.

THE evangelist has had as hearty a welcome here as elsewhere in London. We invited him to an empty hall—a drill hall—a dreary place for the audience, and a most difficult place for the speaker. Christians were urged to attend their own places of worship and endeavour to fill the hall with outsiders. The effort was largely successful. The percentage of the population attending places of worship must have risen considerably for that day. Woolwich is not easily moved. The natives are as cautious as the Scotch, perhaps a little more so. They take nothing for granted, and came to hear Mr. McNeill somewhat critically at first. But there can be no doubt about the result; a deep impression has been produced.

Mr. McNeill's aim is never lost sight of. His presentation of the truth is so clear, so forceful, that if it were possible for human speech to spiritually enlighten men, then all the evangelist's hearers would be compelled to see the truth as it is in Jesus. After the address on Friday night one felt that a second meeting could surely add nothing to the effect. The preacher seemed to meet every difficulty, and leave the sinner no loophole of escape. And yet, in justification of the second meeting, I may add that I spoke to one who had attended every service, and did not see the truth until personally spoken to.

The Concert Hall, Blackheath, has been full every afternoon. They are great gatherings, and are felt to be a wonderful witness to the power of Evangelical truth. The meetings in Woolwich have increased in power. Thursday was the largest, and, as far as man could judge, the most influential time was a deeply spiritual after-meeting. Husbands prayed for their wives, children for their parents, and parents for their children. Many men and women stood up and asked prayer for themselves. Some were completely broken down and cried out for mercy. "It is," said the preacher, "the Gospel times up to date; they cried after Jesus."

On Friday the subject was evidently intended to help such. "Let him that is athirst come." To get saved through the finished work of Jesus is as easy as to take a drink of water, if you are only thirsty, but if not it is as difficult as to drink water when you do not want it. And for others who had no earnest longing to be saved, he added, "Your case is anticipated;" "And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely;" "You can make a decision, and it will bind you as much as any decision you make in excitement and hot blood." I spoke to one who was just waiting for that message. He went home on Thursday feeling that he was left out. He said, "If I could only feel as deeply in earnest as the young man who wept and cried aloud for mercy last night, I believe I would be saved." I can add that he came as he was.

Last Sunday night there was a great rush of people to the Drill Hall. Numbers were turned away. The workers were all rejoicing. Many had held up their hands to be prayed for. We have entered the second week full of gratitude and hope. We are expecting great things. Mr. McNeill will stay till Friday, and as the Drill Hall is not available after Wednesday, he is to preach in the Woolwich Tabernacle on the last two evenings. It is almost certain that special meetings will be arranged for the soldiers. Some have already been won. I spoke to one who was leaving next day for India. He said as we parted, "I am to take Christ with me."

Woolwich. J. Wilson.

Next week there are NO MEETINGS.

Two weeks' meetings at Conference Hall, Stratford, E., commencing Sunday, March 27.

We hope to give full details in our next issue.

Home Missions.

Mr. Charrington's Mission.

THERE are few who can enjoy the company of fifteen or sixteen hundred warm friends at their birthday party. This, however, it is the privilege of Mr. F. N. Charrington to be able to do. As the fruit of twenty-nine years' faithful service he has gathered around him over four thousand members, and as many as possible of these he is wont to invite to a birthday tea, combining therewith the anniversary of the Tower Hamlets Mission. This took place on Tuesday week, when the scene as one looked down from the rostrum was very striking, the long rows of eager happy people affording a wonderful object-lesson of the reality and scope of the work. Regular East-enders the large majority of them looked—plain, hard-working people. Just the type to be found in thousands of streets outside; but with a comfortable, well-clad appearance, as those who had found a better use for their earnings than that of filling the publican's till. It was very interesting to observe, both from references made in prayer and in addresses, how deep had been the impression made by the recent services held by Rev. John McNeill in this vast hall—it is believed that many have been led to take the decisive step through his vigorous and persuasive addresses.

But to the anniversary proceedings. Mr. E. H. Kerwin, having read some letters of apology, mentioned that at the beginning of the present year great pressure was felt by reason of lack of funds. A special appeal was made, which, through the help of generous friends, brought in £827, while smaller donations from members and friends added £390, bringing the total to £1200 to meet the pressing need.

Mr. F. N. Charrington, who was received with great enthusiasm, and some difficulty in gaining a hearing by reason of the volley after volley of cheering which burst out all over the building, gave some details of the work and of its growth. It appears that the Great Assembly Hall stands open to the public every evening of the week except Friday, which is reserved for choir practice, while a testimony and prayer meeting is held in the old and smaller hall at the side. The musical proficiency of this great work, under the instruction of the talented organist, Mr. G. Day Winter, counts as a very important item in the service of God. The vestibule of the hall is always brilliantly lighted up, and the magnificent organ pealing forth its invitations to anyone and everyone to enter acts like magnetism on passers-by, of whom, alas! so many are composed of waifs and strays, lost and ruined, of human beings, who, by some irresistible force, drift to East London!

The services, conducted by leading evangelists, attract large numbers. The hall, which seats 5000, is thronged on Sunday nights, and well attended on week evenings. It is wonderful how many working people come in night after night, straight from their work, to hear the simple Gospel. During the past year 191 persons have entered the fellowship, the total membership being now 4195. This is remarkable in such a district, especially when it is borne in mind that the large majority of these were converted in the hall. Besides many others led to the Saviour have joined other churches, while numbers are now to be found in all quarters of the globe, leading earnest and useful lives.

Nor do these figures afford any idea of the thousands who have been led to abandon strong drink. None know better than these experienced workers that signing the pledge is not conversion; but the victim of strong drink who has given it up easily acquires the habit of going to Christian and Gospel temperance meetings, if it be only to find something to pass the time he used to spend in the public-house, and thus many who sign the pledge are found later on becoming followers of Christ.

Special mention was also made by Mr. Charrington of the "Men's Own" meeting on Sunday afternoons, which is already showing good results; also of a splendid body of temperance workers, with a large number of members, having their own organisation, their own meetings, their own band, and their own special "march round" in their continual warfare against "the world, the flesh, and the devil," as set forth by the reign of "strong drink." The Y.M.C.A. is also a very flourishing branch of the work, composed of artisans—young men with a fair share of "grace and grit and gumption" which make up the elements of a truly Christian man. The loved and honoured secretary of the Tower Hamlets Mission, Mr. Edwin H. Kerwin, J.P., is looked up to by them as their father and founder, and he seems justly "very proud of his boys." As open-air workers they do a good work in the parks and other public places, and all, without exception, are enrolled total abstainers. The Y.W.C.A. is another very interesting feature of the Mission, and has a large number of earnest Christian girls, whose light shines in the various workshops and other employment to which they belong.

The Sunday-schools and other services for the young held in the Children's Hall are full of encouragement. There is a regular attendance of over a thousand children each Sunday. Mention was also made of the Rosslyn Weary Toilers' Rest, at Dunmow, given six years ago by Blanche, Countess of Rosslyn, for overworked women and girls; also of "the Babes in the Wood," Mrs. Kerwin's Forest Cottage Home for poor children at Leytonstone.

These few points from the wide circle of a busy organisation will serve to show how the Tower Hamlets Mission reaches and helps all classes of the East-end dwellers.

Brief mention must be made of the speeches of the evening. Mr. T. A. Denny, the chairman, recalled his early associations with Mr. Charrington and added a few hearty and warm words on the extent and importance of the work being done in the Great Assembly Hall.

Lady Hope, who followed, moved a resolution in support of the work carried on in this, in the poorest district in the civilised world. After a few sympathetic words, her ladyship proceeded to a pointed and earnest address on God's gifts, such as a new heart, a new life, a new name, and a new song.

Rev. Marcus Rainsford, of St. James's, Holloway, came next with an animated and sparkling talk on "Grow in Grace." His grand point, which he emphasised and enforced by illustration and argument, was that there must be life ere there can be growth, a root before fruit, or, in other words, a man must be converted before he can grow in grace and acceptably serve God.

Addresses were also given by Messrs. G. E. Morgan, George Nokes, Thomas Richardson, Joseph Clarke, and E. H. Kerwin, and Rev. T. J. Hazzard.

The Lighthouse, Bow Common.

THE ninth anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. T. J. Hazzard was celebrated last week. The pastor preached on the Sunday, and on the following day Rev. Archibald G. Brown preached in the afternoon. A tea meeting followed, at which over 200 were present. A largely attended public meeting was presided over by Dr. Barnardo, and addressed by Revs. G. T. Bailey, J. H. French, D. Taylor, and G. S. Cook,

The report showed that 279 had been added to the Church in the nine years, an average of thirty-one per year, the present membership being 265. The steady growth of the church had been sustained. The Sunday-school had risen from 375 to 810 scholars, and the teachers from nineteen to sixty-one. 6000 visits and calls had been made by the Mission workers during the year, and a debt of over £60 on the Mission fund had been wiped out by the generosity of a good friend of the work. The building scheme (including the purchase of the site) had cost £5462, of which £628 remained to be raised; £500 of this amount having been advanced as a loan by the Baptist Building Fund, £145 had been promised on condition that the entire sum should be raised, less the £500 loan. Many encouraging features of the work were referred to, and a hope expressed that greater things would be done in the coming days.

London Wesleyan Mission.

THE annual meeting of this great forward movement was held on Monday night in Exeter Hall. The audience was crowded and enthusiastic. The Mission has four principal centres—East (Rev. Peter Thompson), West (Rev. Hugh Price Hughes), Central (Rev. J. E. Wakerley), and South (Rev. J. H. Hopkins). There is also the Grove Mission, Southwark, of which Rev. John Fletcher is the pastor, and several other agents are at work in various parts of the metropolis.

Mr. Robert Booth, J.P., of Dublin, who presided, declared that he had visited the centres of the Mission, and had been struck with the good work going on. In Dublin and in Belfast similar work had been started on the same lines.

Rev. W. D. Walters, in giving some account of the work, pointed out that there was prospect of considerable extension in the South London Mission, where Messrs. Hopkins and Meakin were setting themselves to build a great hall, at a cost of £25,000. Central London was also now reporting extension. Financially the year had not been so encouraging, and £1500 was needed to complete the grants to the various branches, while they had a debt of £5000. He strenuously urged his hearers to raise £1000 that night.

Rev. Walford Green supported the appeal, and announced subscriptions to the amount of £230 before the collection was taken. The keynote of the London Mission was to "go forward" all along the line.

Other speakers included Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P., who declared that the success of the methods of the Mission had lived down attacks; Rev. J. Ossian Davies, of Paddington Congregational Church, who declared that London could only be saved by regeneration through Jesus Christ; and Rev. Peter Thompson, who outlined his work in the East-end. He was thankful for the County Council and for the School Board. The Mission had been making great efforts among the children of the slums, and there was a glorious contrast between the children now and thirteen years ago. Their open-air work was never so welcome and never so fruitful, and the Mission was recognised as a great opposing force to the liquor traffic and sweating, and everything that oppressed the poor. Revs. Hugh Price Hughes, J. H. Hopkins, J. E. Wakerley, and W. D. Walters also spoke.

Scripture Gift Mission.

IT is a pleasure to report the steady development of the work of the Scripture Gift Mission. Both at home and in the foreign field there is a continual demand for its publications. For hospitals and other institutions the large type Gospels, with many artistic illustrations, are a great boon; for more general circulation the small Scripture portions, also accompanied by engravings, find universal favour.

Mr. James Clark, the well-known figure artist, during a prolonged residence in the East, has executed a special commission in connection with this interesting undertaking. He has at length supplied drawings for the illustration of the entire New Testament, and further portions have just been issued, completing the work. All the parts are beautifully produced, clear in type, and true to life as regards illustration. The English New Testament is comprised in eleven parts, from which a fair idea may be formed of a work which is calculated to attract and benefit people of many nations and tongues. We cannot conceive anyone refusing such pretty books; and the Word may be left to exert its own blessed influence upon those who read.

One of the latest issues is the Gospel of John in German; and St. Matthew is to follow shortly. The Countess Schimmelmann intends using these Gospels in her work among Continental sailors and land folk, and 50,000 copies are now on the way to her. A specimen of St. John in this edition is before us, handsomely produced, alike as to exterior (several colours) and interior (including truthful pictures). The Crystal Palace Bible Stand, which is incorporated with the Scripture Gift Mission, offers valuable opportunities of disseminating the Sacred Word in this attractive form. We understand that the eleven English portions, making the entire New Testament, are sent post free for 1s. 1d. from the office, 84, St. Paul's Churchyard; Mr. W. Walters, secretary.

SUNDAY, March 20.

"My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me?"—Mark xv. 34.

This was the darkest hour of the Saviour's human life. Lover and friend stood away from Him, and those for whom his blood was being shed covered Him with contumely and abuse. Let us consider:—

His quotation of Scripture. He is quoting the first verse of Psalm xxii., which is truly known as the Psalm of the Cross. It may be that He recited to Himself that wonderful elegy, in which David was led to anticipate so minutely the sufferings of his Lord. As we climb the like well-worn steps, we always remember the sacred feet that trod them with the profoundest meaning.

His vicarious sufferings. There is no possible way of understanding, or interpreting, these words, except by believing that He was suffering for sins not his own, that He was being made sin for us, that He was bearing away the sin of the world. It is not for a moment conceivable that the Father could have ever seemed to forsake his well-beloved Son, unless for the moment he had stood as the Representative of a guilty race, and during those hours of midday midnight had become the propitiation for the sins of the world.

His Perfect Example of the Way of Faith.—In doing the Father's will, He yielded up his life even to death, that He might enter upon the yet fuller Resurrection Life, that is only possible through death. But to do this, to become obedient to the death of the Cross, for the Resurrection and Life to submit to the power of the Last Enemy, involved an entireness of surrender and faith which have never been paralleled. But amid it all He said, "My God, my God."

MONDAY, March 21.

"The Lord working with them."—Mark xvi. 20.

This was the secret of the progress of the early Church. Theirs was the simple commission to preach; but wherever they did so, the Lord confirmed their word with signs following. In Jerusalem, Samaria, Antioch, Rome, and to the uttermost end of the world, wherever these simple men stood up and made their proclamation, their invisible Lord was present, and his Spirit bore witness to their word.

Nothing less than this will account for the marvellous successes of those early preachers. He who sat at the right hand of God in the attitude of majestic rest, was always beside them in the intensity of the most untiring work. This blessed partnership has never been repealed.

A few rules must be observed, however, before we can count upon Him thus:—(1) We must be clean in heart and life. He cannot identify Himself with those who are consciously delinquent. (2) We must not seek our own glory, but God's, and the pure blessing of men. (3) We must use the Word of God as our sword, our lever, our balm, our cordial, our charm. (4) We must be in loving harmony with those who name his name, as He cannot countenance churlish or uncharitable feeling. (5) We must by faith reckon upon Him—consulting with Him about the message before it is delivered, relying on Him during its delivery, and conferring with Him about its effect. Not anxious, or depressed, or elated, but at rest.

TUESDAY, March 22.

"And Mary said, Behold the handmaid of the Lord: be it unto me according to thy word."—Luke i. 38.

The angel's message meant, for this young, pure-hearted girl, a great deal of misunderstanding and reproach. It was inevitable that clouds would gather about her character, which would sorely perplex the good man to whom she was betrothed. But so soon as she realised that this lot was ordained for her by God she humbly acquiesced, with these model words of patient faith. Let us often say them.

First: To his commands. God often speaks within our hearts, and no word of his is devoid of power. We must test what seems to be his voice by these three corroborations:—First, his Word; second, the trend of outward circumstances; third, the advice of Christian people not immediately interested. When these concur, we may take it that God has spoken to us, and whatever the burden of his words we must respond—Be it unto me according to thy word.

Secondly: To the responsibilities thrust on us. It may be a trusteeship for some dying friend; a charge of orphan children; a babe cast on our parentage; an invalid; a difficult and trying piece of Christian enterprise. But whenever it comes on us, imposed by the evident appointment of our Father, notwithstanding the shrinking of our flesh and the fearfulness of our soul, we must say: Be it unto me according to thy word.

Thirdly: To any burden of pain and suffering. Are you one whom God has set apart to manifest the power of his grace in suffering and pain? Are you sleepless by night, and helpless by day? Are you likely to spend years in one position, as paralysed or rheumatic? Well, still dare to look up and say: "Here am I, O Lord; be it unto me according to thy word."

WEDNESDAY, March 23.

"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace."—Luke ii. 14.

These twain are joined together, and none can sunder them. Do you want peace? your highest aim must be the glory of God. Do you seek God's glory as your highest aim? then, the inevitable result will be the peace that passeth understanding.

Glory to God in the highest. Higher than our own comfort, or success, or popularity, should be the one thought of the glory of our God. Let Christ be honoured, loved, exalted. Let Christ get some tiny addition to his glory out of our little life. Let men think better of Him as they see our patience on beds of pain, our self-restraint amid luxury, our meekness in provocation, our heroism in confessing his dear Name, our self-denying devotion to the cry of human need. Always the thought of the Master's glory—in our eating, and drinking, and whatsoever else we do.

On earth, peace. It will come, because when the heart has only one aim to follow, it is delivered from dividing and distracting cares. It will come, because the glory of God is so lofty an aim that it lifts the soul into the atmosphere of the heavenly and eternal world where peace reigns unbroken. It will come, because we are not greatly troubled by the reverses and alternations of fortune that are incident to all work in this world, since the main object is always secure and beyond fear of failure. What though there be the ebb and flow of the wave, yet the tide is coming up the shore, and will presently stand at high-water mark.

This peace is said in the R.V. to come only to men in whom God is well pleased. Live to please God, and He will breathe peace on thee.

THURSDAY, March 24.

"He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and fire."—Luke iii. 16.

They had received the negative, water; they were to receive the positive, fire. Water is not sufficient for natures such as ours. The Baptist pointed to a greater Baptist than himself. Jesus plunges the soul into a baptism of fire. Has He done this for thee? Dost thou know this mighty, searching, cleansing process?

Fire cleanses.—Ore may be mingled with ingredients from which it is imperative to free it. A chisel or pickaxe could not extricate it. But when it is plunged into the furnace the metal runs out in a molten stream. So our characters are full of impurities and earthly ingredients, but as they are brought into contact with the power of the Holy Spirit these are eliminated and drop away, and we attain degrees of purity and love which otherwise had made us unserviceable to our dear Lord. Seek the baptism of the Spirit; for He is like a consuming fire.

Fire illuminates.—As the express-train hurries the traveller, by night, through a district where the smelting furnaces are in full blast, his eyes are arrested by their glow, and the very heavens are lurid with the light, reflected for miles. So when the Spirit comes in power to the soul, He teaches us to know God, and truth, and things hidden from the wise and prudent. We are illuminated by the glow of the fires that sanctify us.

Fire enkindles.—It is contagious. It will spread over an immense area, where inflammable material attracts it. When the Spirit of God touches a soul, like an unlit candle, it begins to glow; and from it the blessed spark may pass from heart to heart, and church to church, till an entire continent may blaze with Heavenly Fire.

FRIDAY, March 25.

"The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because He hath anointed me."—Luke iv. 18.

Though our Lord Jesus, in his Divine nature, was one with the Holy Spirit in the Holy Trinity, and in his human nature had been begotten of the same Spirit, yet He could not begin his public ministry till He had received the definite anointing of power. The winds as they breathed around Nazareth were laden with the appeal of a dying world, but He forbore to go to its help until He had received the anointing chrism.

It was our Saviour's Pentecost. That happened in the experience of the Head which was afterwards to happen to his Body. The Spirit was given Him without measure, as the power in which He was to cast out devils, preach the Gospel, and glorify his Father—so far as his human life and ministry were concerned. His recognition of this momentous experience enabled Him to address his fellow-villagers after a new fashion. It was as though He bade them realise how great a change had passed over Him since last they had met in that same village synagogue.

How foolish are we, if we attempt to preach to the poor, to proclaim release to captives, sight for the blind, liberty for the bruised, or to announce the day of jubilee, without a similar anointing! If Jesus did not put his hand to this work till He was conscious of his anointing, though He was one with the Holy Spirit in an especial sense, how much less should we! What wonder is it that our words are so powerless, our touch so impotent, when we lack the anointing which would teach us all things, and endow us with all power. God waits to give his Spirit to us, to seal, to anoint, and to be an earnest of our inheritance (2 Cor. i. 21, 22; 1 John ii. 20, 27).

SATURDAY, March 26.

"He stretched forth his hand, and touched him saying, 'I will, be thou clean.'"—Luke v. 13.

This leper, as this physician-evangelist remarks, was full of leprosy. It was a very aggravated case. He lay in the dust before Jesus. What a contrast! Loathsomeness and Divine beauty; disease and health; humanity at its worst and best; sinner and Saviour; one of Satan's most miserable victims, and the Almighty Deliverer. So, my reader, if thou art conscious of a heart and life which are full of sin, I would have thee meet thy Saviour now. There is no if above his power, even the leper recognised that. His only doubt was about the Saviour's will; there is, however, no doubt on this score now, since He has healed myriads, and promises healing to all who come. Throw thyself, then, at his feet, and ask for cleansing.

"He stretched forth his hand, and touched him." No one else would dare to do as much. To touch that flesh, according to the Levitical code, would induce uncleanness. But Jesus shrank not. On the one hand, He knew that the ceremonial restrictions were abolished in Himself: on the other, He desired to teach that sin cannot defile the Divine holiness of the Saviour. Whatever be the stories of sin that are breathed into his ear, whatever the open bruises and putrefying sores which are opened to his touch, whatever the sights and scenes with which He has to cope, none of these can leave a taint of evil in his sinless heart. And He will heal thee. Reckon on it, rejoice in it, act faith, as this leper did.

National Free Church Council.

FEW recent movements have taken hold so firmly and spread so quickly as the Federation of the Evangelical Free Churches. The National Council is but six years old, yet already it embraces 500 Councils, representing 1200 churches and some six millions of Nonconformists and bringing together in earnest and helpful co-operation Baptists and Presbyterians, Congregationalists and Methodists of all types and names. Abundant evidence of the strength and vitality of the movement has been supplied by the great meetings of the Congress held during the past week in Bristol.

On the Monday evening the proceedings were of a social and friendly character. The Victoria Rooms were crowded. Mr. W. Howell Davies, J.P., ex-Mayor of Bristol, gave, as chairman of the local Council, a warm welcome to the visitors and delegates. Presidents, past, present, and to come, such as Dr. Clifford, Dr. Monro Gibson, and Rev. H. Price Hughes, were among the speakers.

On Tuesday morning Dr. Monro Gibson gave, in the large Broadmead Chapel, his presidential sermon to a crowded audience. The sermon was an eloquent discourse upon the real unity of Christendom and its basis in righteousness. Two capital errors, he declared, were now being rectified by the churches. The first was that narrowing of the Christian conception of duty to our own individual salvation; and the second was the disunion of the Church.

Dr. John Clifford, of Westbourne-park Chapel, was then installed as President for the year. Taking as his theme, the Problem Solved," he began by saying that the problems they were seeking to solve in this Federation of Free Evangelical Churches were nearly as old as Christianity itself. Before the first Christian communities had passed the glow and passion of their youth their unity was strained by unexpected and perplexing events; and their peace was menaced by factiousness and pride, immaturity and self-seeking. And though the nineteenth century was drawing to its close, still they felt painfully distant from the full manifestation of the prayer of Jesus for the unity of his people. If a strong majority of the churches would declare and manifest their unity (not necessarily in their creeds and forms of worship, but in the one Spirit of Christ), those who stood aloof from unity would feel that they were rebuked and humiliated. The speaker declared: that "strong majority of churches" with this "demonstration of unity in Christ" is coming; in fact, it is here to-day in this National Council of Free Evangelical Churches. As a movement of these later days it is unique. We do not meet as independent atoms. We are representatives of some 500 groups of Christian Churches, belonging to different denominations, but realising their oneness, in their own areas, embracing the feeble and the strong, the young and the old, the tired dwellers in the crowded cities, and the brave rural folk, who, with iron stubbornness, resist the subtle and relentless tyranny of sacerdotalism.

"UNITY OF THE CHURCHES:

FEDERATED AND CO-OPERATIVE

On behalf of the local council, Rev. Urijah Thomas, ex-chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, welcomed the National Council.

M. Paul Guignard, president of the French Evangelical Free Churches Committee, treated the assembly to an admirable address in English on the peculiar difficulties of his Protestant compatriots. He spoke of the Protestants (in France) as but 600,000 (many of them Protestant only in name) against thirty-six and a-half millions. He graphically described the ignorance and irreligion which had been produced by Rome. Not long ago a woman who had been to Evangelical services at Clermont (Auvergne) went to a bookseller to purchase a New Testament. The man said that he had never heard of it; probably it was not yet out, but he would write to Paris and order one!

Dr. C. A. Berry followed with an account of his mission to the American Churches and people. Cheers greeted his report of his reception in the United States. Briefly, he was convinced that ninety-seven per cent. of the American people were in favour of a treaty of arbitration.

THE LADY SPEAKERS.

The Women's meeting was well attended. Mrs. Hugh Price Hughes advocated sisterhood work; Mrs. Armitage, of Bradford, pleaded for other kinds of women's work among women; and Miss Townsend, of Bristol, offered whole-hearted and experienced testimony to the work of women on public bodies. A resolution was also passed at the instance of Mrs. Amos (London), seconded by Rev. J. Kirk Maconachie (Manchester), condemning social impurity in India, and appointing a sub-committee to watch the attitude of the Government in reference to the matter.

In the evening, at Old King-street Wesleyan Chapel, Rev. J. G. Greenhough, ex-chairman of the Baptist Union, preached the annual Council sermon.

On Wednesday the morning sermon was delivered by Rev. A. Connell, of Regent-square. "Free Church Organisation" was the topic for the succeeding session. The chapel was closely packed, and all the leaders of the Free Churches were in evidence. Mr. George Cadbury has shown a generous zeal in promoting the more perfect organisation of the Councils, and to him was given the duty of advocating, what is perhaps the newest device, the formation of for visitation purposes, especially in the great centres. The paper was significant for the evidence it supplied of the widespread and still growing dissatisfaction in Nonconformist circles with the small practical hold of the Free Churches on the non-church-going population. The Established Church has its system of parishes and its house-to-house visitation. As there are already numerous centres where this scheme is in full operation, its adoption in many other centres may be anticipated.

The remainder of the morning was devoted to the discussion of points in local and country F.C.C. organisation, certainly very practical and important for those engaged in the work, but not of great interest to general readers. Strong resolutions were also passed against the opium traffic, and in deprecation of gambling.

UNITED MISSIONS.

The afternoon was devoted to a business session, the report of the Federation for the past year being presented by Rev. Thomas Law, the organising secretary. In referring to the spiritual work of the Councils during the year, special prominence is given in the report to the United Missions which have been promoted. Since the National Council met in London there has been quite a wonderful and most cheering development in this direction. This United Mission movement has laid hold of practically the whole country. It is speaking well within the truth to say that fully half the local Councils have taken part in this work, and with very few exceptions all the Evangelical Free Churches have heartily thrown in their lot with it. This tide of spiritual revival has touched almost every county in England, and has laid hold of the largest as well as the smallest towns; and the most blessed results have followed. While the masses have been reached, the movement has also been the means of bringing the leaders and workers of the churches in the different localities into such close and living association that the influence of it will long be felt. The committee, feeling the great importance of this work, decided to invite Gipsy Smith to give the whole of his time to it. This well-known evangelist, whose praise is in all the churches on both sides of the Atlantic and Pacific, heartily accepted the invitation, and entered on his work last September. The Councils throughout the country are now so generally promoting these united missions that the demand for suitable missioners has become serious, and the committee of the National Council after careful thought and prayer, recently decided to invite Mr. W. R. Lane to devote the whole of his time to this work, along with Gipsy Smith.

In the evening a public missionary meeting was held. Mr. Evan Spicer, recently returned from Madagascar, presided. The speakers were Rev. John Innocent, Mr. Frank Lenwood (Mansfield College, Oxford), and Rev. R. Swallow, M.D., of China.

Thursday began with a sermon by Rev. Alfred Rowland. Then followed a resolution on slavery in Africa, which Rev. Arnold Thomas moved in vigorous terms, while Rev. W. Perkins seconded. Early in the day the death of Mr. George Müller was reported, and the sentiment of the Council was embodied in a resolution of condolence.

Later in the day Professor Massie (Mansfield College, Oxford), proposed a resolution condemning as retrograde and dangerous the proposal to institute and sustain by public money a Roman Catholic University in Ireland. He said the battle was against clericalism, and Free Church Councils were making the iron red hot wherewith to sear the decapitated stumps of the clerical hydra. The decapitation was not yet, but they felt it was not far off, and in the tussle they had some strong Churchmen and many of the clergy on their side. They would have opposed the University project even had it been for Congregationalists or Baptists.

Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P., seconded the resolution, and deprecated any feeling of panic against the inroad of Popery. They were in favour of absolute equality, but they could not afford to put the higher education of Ireland in the hands of priests, and he was convinced that if Free Churchmen held strongly together no Government would run the risk of wrecking its fortunes by running up a standard of Roman Catholic education in Ireland. The resolution was carried, with two protests against.

Rev. Dr. Mackennal was elected president of the National Council for next year, and the next Congress was appointed for March 14-16, 1899, in Liverpool. A United Communion Service in the afternoon concluded this interesting and inspiriting convention.

Thoughts for Parents.

Gal. v. 22.

LONG-SUFFERING (PATIENCE).

"Ye have need of patience."

God dealeth with you as with sons; that is He is long-suffering, not easily provoked.

Does your love for your child lead you to "bear all things, endure all things"?

Put yourself in the children's place, remember the time when you were young; do not expect them to be as mature as yourself, or to be able to begin life with all the experience which years have given to you.

Take time to listen to the childish griefs and sorrows. Hasty and unjust judgment on the part of parents injures children's temper. Help and encouragement they all need. Hastiness of all kinds must be avoided.

Have patience with your growing boys and girls in the transition period between childhood and maturity. Many excellent people are yet fretful, irascible, peevish, sullen—in fact, ill-tempered; not that they were born so, but because they were allowed to grow up in an atmosphere of impatience.

Watch patiently and hopefully for good in your children, and be not too much cast down by failure, "Who knows the end?"

Frances S. Hallowes.

Women and Children.—A meeting was held at St. Martin's Town-hall, Charing-cross, on Thursday, to further the objects of the Associated Societies for the Protection of Women and Children. The Bishop of London presided. Canon Fleming remarked that, while so much misery was caused by brutal husbands as was the case in the present day, such societies were an absolute necessity. Mr. F. D. Mocatta and Mrs. Malden, hon. secretary of the Mothers' Union, also supported the claims of the societies.

Railway Mission.—A conference of workers from branches of the Railway Mission in the Cardiff district took place in the Cory Memorial Hall, Cardiff, on March 7. Meetings were held in the afternoon and evening, presided over by Mr. Richard Cory, who expressed his deep interest in the mission, and said it deserved the hearty support of all who travel by rail. Encouraging reports of progress and blessing in the work were given by Christian railway men from various branches. Rev. Henry Dening, of Bristol, and Mr. R. Nixon, general secretary of the mission, gave addresses. Gospel meetings are held at a number of mess rooms in Cardiff every week during the dinner-hour. The workers receive a cordial reception from the men, by whom these meetings are greatly appreciated. Miss Morgan, who superintends the branch, would be glad to receive help from Christian ladies who could visit the homes of the railway people or take charge of meetings.

Girl Orphans at Brixton.

IT is much to be desired that the young readers of this page should not only study the "Bible Searcher" from week to week, but get to know something of what is being done for the true happiness of the many poor and needy children at home and abroad. Last year Uncle Tom's nephews and nieces showed a very practical interest in famine orphans in India. This little article is written to tell about orphan girls at Brixton, in the south-west of London. This week's number of THE CHRISTIAN has much to say about that good man, Mr. George Müller, of Bristol, who has been such a friend to the orphan, and who has now been taken home to the presence of the Eternal Father. Mr. Müller's work was only one of many of the same sort, and among these is the Orphanage for Girls at Brixton, the kind, motherly superintendent of which is Mrs. Montague.

For more than twenty-two years now, this Orphanage has been a place of shelter and of training to fatherless girls whose mothers were very poor and unable properly to care for their little daughters. The annual meetings of Mrs. Montague's Home are always very happy occasions. In some wonderful way the chief magistrates of the City of London have been led to give a helping hand in the good work. No fewer than ten times the Lord Mayor for the year has presided at the annual meeting. So it was last Monday evening, when the present Lord Mayor, with the Lady Mayoress and one of the sheriffs of the City, came in their state carriages all the way from the Mansion House. There was quite a crowd outside to welcome them, and a much bigger crowd inside Brixton Hall, where the meeting was held.

There is so much that could be told about the meeting and the Orphanage that one hardly knows where to begin and where to end. The first place must be given to Mrs. Montague's printed speech, or annual report, which was read by one of the trustees. From that we learned that 297 girls are under care just now. They are educated and taught to love Jesus Christ, and are trained to be good domestic servants. More than 250 girls have been started out in life in this way since the work began. The report spoke of the great kindness shown by friends on all hands in providing for the daily needs of these girls; meat, vegetables, and all sorts of good things are freely given, year after year; while other friends give concerts, or make articles to be sold on behalf of the Orphanage. It only costs £12 to keep a girl for one year. Would it be possible, think you, for the young readers of THE CHRISTIAN to raise that amount in the course of this year, so that at least one girl should be fitted for the duties of life by Mrs. Montague and her kind helpers?

There were some eight or nine speeches during the evening, including the Lord Mayor's, and every speaker seemed more anxious than another to praise the work of the Orphanage and to plead for it. It was not to be wondered at, therefore, that the donations given at the meeting, added to the collection taken, ran up to the goodly sum of £234—a larger sum than has been given for some years past. But, of course, as one speaker said, the most powerful argument in favour of the work was the presence of a number of the healthy and happy-looking girls from the Orphanage, who nearly filled the big platform, and sang hymns and songs most sweetly. The Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress must have felt well rewarded for coming all the way from the City to be present; and every inhabitant of Brixton feels quite proud of its Orphanage in Barrington-road.

Tommy's Lesson.

DEAR CHILDREN,—I should like to tell you how my patting a little rough pony, drawing a cart of vegetables for sale (his daily duty), taught me a lesson I hope never to forget.

The woman in charge of the cart and pony was pleased with my notice of him, and said he was "a good, hard-working little fellow"; and then, pointing to an elderly man who was helping her, she added, "That is the man who is kind to Tommy, and he is deaf and dumb."

Before I spoke to Tommy I was very sad with my own troubles, caused by my own fault. Tears were in my eyes and sorrow in my heart, but when I contrasted this poor man's life with mine—of how many blessings he was deprived—speech, hearing, and many comforts, and yet he could think of poor hard-working Tommy, and be good and kind to him, I felt ashamed of my want of gratitude to God for all his mercies. Dear little friends, do not forget to thank Him for the many good things He has given you. M. S.

A Letter of Thanks.

MISS PERKS, Soldiers' Home, Winchester, writes to thank the kind little friends who sent the most welcome parcel of blotters, cuffs, and pincushions. Some of them were given to sick and suffering men who had been sent home from the Indian frontier, and they began to use them by writing to their friends at once. It was a great pleasure to them to find they had been so kindly thought of by little unknown friends. The other blotters were given to men on active service, and they are now on their way to Egypt and South Africa. The soldiers appreciate these little presents greatly, and send their thanks to the kind donors.

The Bible Searcher.

RULES.

Answers to the "Bible Searcher" are acknowledged in two lists:—
(1) Those received up to Monday morning, in the next Thursday's issue.
(2) Those received later, in the one following. But no answers can be dealt with which are received later than the Thursday morning following the issue in which the competition appears.
No Concordance may be used or help given with the answers, but the questions may be explained when necessary. No papers can be re-examined.
It is necessary that letters should be properly stamped; and that names should be written very distinctly. A star (*) is given for neatness and extra care in answering the questions.
A Prize Competition is given the last week of March, June, September, and December. To be eligible, every child must have been correct nine times during the preceding twelve weeks.

EVELYN H. WOOD.—Please post your paper to reach me at the latest by first post Thursday.

NELLIE BENSON.—If you want to belong to the Scripture Union write for a form of membership to Mr. Bishop, 13A, Warwick-lane, E.C.

ISA KAY.—You all made the same mistake in (f) of this last week's Searcher; the answer was in the last half of the verse.

ALFRED GIBBS.—So glad you are joining. Your paper was correctly done, and I gave you a star, as your writing is neat.

THEODORE WOLFE.—It was a pity you answered (e) wrongly. All who are thirteen years of age and over answer the whole of the Searcher. There is no limit as to age for those who answer the weekly Searcher, but for the Prize Competition the age is limited to twenty.

FREDERICK CHISHOLM.—Your paper was, unfortunately, incorrect, otherwise you would have found your name under "C" of the Correct List.

LUCIE HOURDAIN.—Am glad you and your friends are joining the Searcher. Unfortunately your answer to (f) was incorrect.

DOROTHY AND EVELYN HEWER.—You will find, by looking at the key, you made a mistake last week.

TWO SPECIAL CONFERENCES of Local Secretaries will be held (D.V.) on Thursday, March 31, in St. Martin's Hall (Small Hall), Charing Cross, afternoon 3; evening 6.30; chairman, Mr. E. T. M. Dennes NINETEENTH ANNIVERSARY of the Children's Scripture Union will be held (D.V.) on Friday, April 1, in Exeter Hall, Strand (Large Hall), afternoon at 3, Rev. E. A. Stuart, M.A., will preside; evening at 6.30, Rev. J. W. Hacker will preside.

The Evangelistic Field.

MR. C. INGLIS AT NEW BROMPTON.

An eight days' mission has been held at New Brompton, Kent, from Feb. 26 to March 7, by Mr. C. Inglis, being the first part of a united mission arranged by the Free Church Council to be held in New Brompton, Rochester, and Chatham. Special prayer meetings were held, and a house-to-house visitation made.

The mission began by a reception, when Mr. Inglis met the workers on Saturday night, and addressed counsels and suggestions to help them during the mission. The evangelist visited all the Free Churches. From first to last an earnest and enthusiastic spirit characterised the large audiences that gathered to hear the Gospel. The churches were filled with prayerful Christian men and women, and anxious seeking souls.

The manly, straightforward addresses of the evangelist were greatly appreciated, a special feature of the mission being the large number of men who came to the services.

The clear exposition of the truth of the Gospel, the bold denunciation of sin, the heart-stirring appeals, and the tender pleadings with sinners, were greatly blessed by the Holy Spirit, and a large number of souls were converted—many of them remarkable illustrations of the power of the Gospel to reach the hardest heart and save the most daring sinners.

On two Sunday afternoons services were held for young people. Crowded audiences gathered to listen to the earnest words of the evangelist, and he used the opportunities to the best purpose and with the happiest results. His pathetic appeals were listened to with marked attention, and at the close of each service the inquiry-rooms were filled with anxious seekers after Jesus Christ.

On the last evening Mr. Inglis gave a lecture, "Round the World in Eighty Minutes," illustrated by limelight views. An attentive audience that crowded the capacious building in every part was deeply interested in the lecturer's account of his travels and experiences as an evangelist among Indians, aborigines, and peoples of many lands. This closed a series of meetings that will long be remembered with joy and gratitude to God.—W. B.

MR. W. R. LANE AT KIDDERMINSTER.

This well-known evangelist has concluded an eight days' united mission in this town, arranged by the Free Church Council; and never before in its history has the town been more deeply moved. No efforts had been spared to make the services known, and all who united in the special effort testify to the deep impression that has been created. Special meetings for prayer were held before the mission began, and on the first Sunday the Town Hall was packed, hundreds being unable to obtain admission. The interest grew and deepened as the mission advanced, and on the Friday night it was found necessary to hire the Corn Exchange, a building adjoining and opening into the Town Hall. Between the doors communicating with the two buildings a temporary platform was erected, from which the evangelist addressed the vast gathering. It was estimated that at least 1600 persons were present; for twenty-five years no meeting of political or civic interest in the town has drawn together such an assembly of eager listeners. Mr. Lane's addresses are carefully prepared, clothed in choice language, and marked by great directness and power, combined with intense earnestness. Thus he is enabled to hold his audiences in rapt attention to the close. Hence we have had wonderful blessing. Over 300 persons have given in their names as professing conversion, and hundreds of Christian workers have received fresh power. The men's meeting on Sunday afternoon was a memorable one, the great hall being packed from floor to ceiling. The following is taken from a local newspaper, descriptive of the mission from a journalist's point of view:—

"Usually one associates with missions of this kind a good deal of nervous excitement and passionate declamatory appeal. Mr. Lane does not adopt these methods. He has a fine commanding appearance, and a sonorous voice which even in its softer tones penetrates to every corner of the hall. His views on religious matters are of the sturdy Evangelical type. He is evidently a man of wide and general reading, and while he seems to be thoroughly familiar with all that has been written upon the 'higher criticism,' he has remained unaffected by its spirit, and ably vindicates the teachings of the orthodox school. He is an earnest magnetic speaker. His style of address is quiet and authoritative; and he clothes his thoughts in well-selected words, and with a glow of eloquence and burning conviction which make a profound impression upon his hearers. He treats his subjects in a fresh and attractive manner, free from the conventional style of pulpit utterance, making use of story and incident to illustrate and drive home his points."

Many prayers will follow our friend, and all the ministers unite in ascribing praise to God for the marvellous blessing that Mr. Lane's visit has left upon the churches. Rowland Sturt, Hon. Sec.

MR. JOSIAH NIX AT ANFIELD, LIVERPOOL.

It is some years since a special mission was held at Anfield Wesleyan Chapel, which stands in the midst of a large artisan population. The oldest members say that they have never witnessed such scenes as those that have transpired during the ten days' mission conducted by Mr. Josiah Nix. The preparatory prayer-meetings, led by the pastor, Rev. F. Church, were well attended and full of power, and the whole band of workers entered into the work with good spirit.

The congregations were large, and on the last Sunday the place was crowded. Mr. Nix employed most effective methods of reaching the consciences and touching the hearts of the people; but he never failed to ask God to save them in his own way. At all times he gave the glory to God and left the responsibility of the service with Him.

The first meeting, held on Saturday, February 26, was a time of great spiritual power. After an exhortation to workers on the first Sabbath morning, Mr. Nix directed his addresses to the necessity, simplicity, and reality of conversion; while he constantly reasserted that the best test of true repentance must rest on a ceasing to do evil and a learning to do well. Every service was full of brightness and tenderness, and every truth uttered was plainly enforced by earnest and powerful appeal.

Many children were brought to the inquiry-room by parents and teachers, and the hearts of converted children were gladdened by their parents' conversion. Masters and mistresses had the joy of leading servants to Christ, and servants were used by the Spirit to lead employers to the Saviour. Wretched victims of strong drink signed the pledge, and many found pardon; others who had been dragged down and down by bad company were enabled to snap the chains asunder. The widespread influence of the work is seen in the fact that out of the 370 young people and adults who professed to be converted, upwards of 100 attended other churches in the neighbourhood.

The last Saturday evening was devoted to the subject of total abstinence, when 213 persons signed the pledge. Perhaps the most striking and memorable one of the series was that of the closing Monday night. The condition of admission was the production of the quarterly ticket of membership, the convert's ticket, or one given on the personal request of the holder made at the vestry. Although this rule was strictly carried out, the chapel was soon filled. During the evening many took the pledge and made their peace with God, and all were greatly profited by the missioner's practical address, in which he insisted on the necessity of a careful study of the Word of God, much prayer, and constant witness-bearing as the means of spiritual health and growth.—F. C.

EVANGELISTS' MOVEMENTS.

A deeply interesting and most encouraging fourteen days' mission has been held in Enfield by Mr. Monro Collings, who came as a stranger; but from the first God's hand was with his servants, and night by night the Word preached was with much acceptance and power, and with many signs following. Believers have been refreshed and roused up to carry the glad tidings to the unsaved around them. Backsliders have been restored, neglecters of the house of God have been reached, and numbers of all ages have come forward to seek and find the Saviour. Earnest prayer is now needed that such may be "kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation," and that Mr. Collings may be still more abundantly blessed of God.

Probably never before has Waterloo, Liverpool, witnessed such an audience as assembled in St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church (Rev. John James Muir) on the closing night of Mr. Henry Thorne's mission there. After the seats were overfilled with people, chairs were brought in from the hall and placed in the aisles and in every available space. The audience listened in rapt attention to a most interesting story, and the testimony of the sufficiency of Christ at the close evidently made a deep impression on an audience composed of very heterogeneous elements. Both the afternoon Bible readings and the evening services gathered in their quota of fruit.—J. J. M.

The winter months have scarcely passed, but the racing fraternity cannot wait; the fever of gambling burns in their breasts. The Monmouth races are among the first of the season. Under the auspices of the Open-Air Mission, Mr. Gerald Coultas, of Barry Dock, started for the scene of battle early on Thursday morning, the train being crowded, and the very air seemed polluted with the vile blasphemous language of the gamblers. Reaching Monmouth, he began, after prayer and counsel with a few Christian friends, the attack. Suitable tracts were given, and an open-air meeting was arranged at night in the Market-place. The people stood listening to the words of life. The incursion of the motley crowd which the races bring to Monmouth causes much grief to the Christian friends, as many of the young people are led away with the excitement. The visit was not only used in arresting the careless, but the local Christians were refreshed and cheered by the counter-attraction of the Open-Air movement.

At a meeting held at the Y.M.C.A., Bristol, an Evangelistic Cycling Club was formed from the amalgamated clubs of the Bristol Wesleyan Mission Band, Union Cycling Club, and the Christian Cyclist Union, who have for some time past been conducting open-air and indoor services in the towns and villages in the neighbourhood of Bristol. This club being unsectarian, Christian cyclists who would like to co-operate in this work will be most heartily welcomed, as there is great scope for mission enterprise in this direction; and owing to the marked and encouraging results already seen, a National Christian Cyclists' Union has been formed, the Evangelistic Cycling Club being the head centre for the Bristol district. Further particulars may be had from the hon. sec., Mr. Silcox, Sefton Lodge, Surrey-road, St. Andrews, Bristol.

At Brunswick Chapel, Liverpool, where Rev. Thomas Waugh conducted a very successful mission three years ago, he has just held a short mission, finding, to his joy, that most of the converts are still holding fast; some have become local preachers, and many are engaged in Christian service. The present mission was largely worked by those who then received blessing. The week of prayer, conducted by Rev. S. H. Hallam, was a great blessing. Brunswick Chapel was crowded on Sunday evening. The mission was continued on Tuesday and following days by Miss Cook, and her helper, Miss Fisher. Their addresses were very impressive, and there were many tokens of blessing.

A mission has been held in Gayton, King's Lynn (Feb. 20 to March 4) by Mr. Ralph Williams, of the Evangelisation Society, and God's blessing has indeed rested upon it. Believers have been refreshed and strengthened, souls have been awakened, and there were those who made a profession of faith in Christ. The meetings were largely attended by all denominations, the mission being a united effort on the part of all sects for the salvation of souls, and we praise God for the blessings vouchsafed by Him.—F. T. H.

Mr. Ernest Bailey, of the Evangelisation Society closed on Sunday a fifteen days' mission, in Magdalen-road Mission Hall, Oxford, which has been a time of great blessing to many. On the three Sundays the hall was very full. Last Sunday night many testified to the blessing the Mission has been to them. All the addresses were full of the Gospel, and practical. We are looking forward to reaping much fruit from the services.—H. C.

Very successful evangelistic meetings have been held at Donaghmore by Mr. Jackson; similar services have been held at Kilkenny Methodist Church, by Rev. A. Knox, of Carlow.

Rev. J. Manton Smith, who has conducted evangelistic services in Toronto for some weeks past, has left for New York, where he is now holding special services.

From February 27 to March 10, Rev. J. Baird, a U.P. evangelist, conducted meetings in Dalmeny-street Church, Edinburgh. One hour each evening was devoted to the children and to interesting and impressive lessons drawn from the "Pilgrim's Progress," illustrated by limelight views. The children crowded into the building so that over 1200 would sometimes be present. The adult meetings grew in interest and attendance, and have not been without signs of blessing.

A fourteen days' mission has been concluded by Mr. Wm. Smith, at Scoutbush, near Carrickfergus. This is his second visit this year, owing to the great work of grace and manifest tokens of blessings during his first mission in January. The meetings have been large and fruitful, God having blessed his Word to the salvation of souls and the edification and strengthening of believers.

Mr. Thomas Hogben has concluded a ten days' fruitful mission at the Gosport Seamen's Bethel. We praise God for the conversion of sinners, the restoration of backsliders, and the spiritual quickening of his own people.—S. A. C.

A month's mission has been held at the Dalton-in-Furness Bible Christian Chapel by Rev. W. T. Down. The services were well attended, and many persons have come out on the Lord's side. Prayer is asked for continued blessing.

Mr. A. E. Knight, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a series of special services at Berkley-road Chapel, Chalk Farm, in which many evidences of Divine blessing have been granted.

Tiffin, Ohio, has recently been the scene of an earnest and far-reaching Gospel mission, held under the auspices of eleven of the leading churches of the city, and conducted by Major Whittle. A grand work of grace has resulted, both in the lives of professing Christians and among those who were enemies of Christ. A local paper writes of the mission: "It was quite an experiment to attempt to bring eleven churches into a union evangelistic movement. These churches represent such varieties in doctrines and methods in polity and policy that many predicted the utter failure of such an experiment. The pastors, however, felt that it could be successfully accomplished. Their feeling was that, for the general good, denominational differences should, for a time, be subordinated, and all churches should unite under the leadership of an evangelist well known for ability, experience, wisdom and consecration unto his work. Major Whittle has been in Tiffin for two weeks and he is accomplishing the very results yearned for by the pastors, i.e., quickening the consciences of church members, giving them higher conceptions of the privileges and duties of Christian life, and producing desires for fidelity in service that will yet result in having all the churches attempting larger things."

The Weaver Bros., Liverpool, March 19-Apr. 1.
Sergeant Pullinger, Holdbrook, Ipswich, Mar. 20.
Mr. Monro Collings, Fakenham, March 20-April 4.
Mr. Josiah Nix, Walton, Devonport, Mar. 26-Apr. 4.
Mr. F. C. Spurr, to Easter, Penzance, Falmouth, and Truro.
Gipsy Smith, Kingston-on-Thames, Mar. 19-23; Rugby, Apr. 3-11.
Mr. Charles Inglis, this week at Rochester; Chatham, Mar. 27-Apr. 5.
Rev. W. Hay M. H. Aitken, in the parish church of Harwich, Mar. 12-28.
Mr. E. P. Telford, Birmingham, Mar. 13-24; Islington, N., Mar. 27-Apr. 7.
Mr. W. R. Lane, Maidstone, Mar. 13-21; Sudbury (Suffolk), Mar. 27-Apr. 3.
Mr. J. J. Sims, Merrion Hall, Dublin, during March; City Hall, Glasgow, during April.
Mr. George Clarke, this week at Wood Green, to Mar. 21; Holloway, Mar. 27-Apr. 3.

Requests for Prayer.

For the Ipswich Monthly Gatherings, March 21.

For fourteen days' mission, Tower-street Chapel, Bristol, by Mr. F. Holmes, from March 20.

For an eight days' mission, by Miss Gill, at the Baptist Chapel, Redditch, commencing on March 20.

For blessing on the special services for young people and adults, now being held at Axmouth, S. Devon.

Praise.—For spiritual success at the Whittlesea Mission.

Praise for God's blessing on three weeks' special meetings at Colyton, Devon.

Missions to Seamen.—The Duchess of Westminster presided, on Thursday, over a special meeting of the Ladies' Association of the Missions to Seamen, at Grosvenor House, to discuss plans and organise arrangements for the purpose of securing increased funds for the augmented work of the Missions afloat and ashore.

The Y.M.C.A.

The annual meeting of the Alton (Hants) Association was held on Thursday evening, and was attended by several clergymen and ministers.

Mr. J. Stuart Holden sends home most encouraging accounts of the tour he is making in the interests of the Y.M.C.A. work in Egypt and Palestine, at the instance of the English National Council. In several centres, small bands of young men have been formed, which it is believed will in a short time develop into useful associations.

The committee of the Anglo-American Y.M.C.A., 160, Rue Montmartre, Paris, are being much encouraged by the testimonies as to help received from the Association by many who are leaving Paris at this period. The winter's work is flourishing. Sunday attendances are beyond all past averages. Evening family prayer (a new feature) is being found a means of much blessing.

The City of Dublin Y.M.C.A. have issued their forty-eighth annual report, which shows a large increase in their membership. They began their year with £30 in debt and closed with £25. They are making a special effort to wipe out the £1500 still due on the new building, etc. No week passes but young men are professing to trust the Saviour, and a large number of Roman Catholics are attending the meetings and inquiring the way of salvation.

In connection with the present crusade against social evils of the day, a demonstration was held in Fulham Town Hall, on Tuesday last week, Sir C. E. Bernard, K.C.S.I., presiding. Over 800 people were present, and the meeting was of a most impressive and solemn character. Though for both sexes, the speakers dealt wisely and well with their subjects. Prebendary Webb-Peploe was peculiarly impressive on Impurity, Rev. W. H. Allen on Intemperance, and Rev. H. J. Shirley on Gambling.

The chairman of the North-Eastern District Union Council, Mr. H. Crawford Smith, and Mrs. Smith, of High Cross House, Newcastle-on-Tyne, on Wednesday evening entertained at a social gathering at the Sunderland Association a large number of the members and associates and friends. Mr. J. C. Moor acted as chairman, and, in the course of the evening, Councillor Crawford Smith expressed his deep interest in the work of the associations, and particularised the district work as providing a link of mutual help and interest between the different associations.

The second South African Conference of Y.M.C.A.'s has just taken place, at Cape Town, delegates attending from that important centre and from Kimberley, Queenstown, Oudtshoorn, Stellenbosch, Pietermaritzburg, Durban, and Johannesburg. The business extended over three days, and was presided over by the Hon. Henry Bale, Attorney-General of Natal. Many subjects affecting the well-being of the work were discussed; and the proceedings included a men's demonstration upon the subject of "the trinity of evil," gambling, intemperance, and impurity.

The annual meeting of the Cardiff Association was held on Wednesday evening; Mr. Sidney Robinson presided. Mr. Walter Price, the secretary, said that the work had been carried on amid difficulties, but they had progressed. At the end of 1896 the membership of the branch was 325, and at the end of 1897 it was 507. Mr. T. M. Heywood said that the current accounts showed a deficit of £250. Mr. Robert Cameron, M.P., expressed his thankfulness for at least one work that the Y.M.C.A. had done—to break down the prejudices of denominationalism.

Mr. H. E. Coleman, general secretary of the Anglo-American Association in Honolulu, writes: "The past year has been very successful for the work. Fully £100 more was taken in membership fees than in any other year of the Association, and now the total enrolment is nearly 400. Meetings for men only have been instituted for Sunday afternoons. A committee visits the ships in the harbour (numbering during the busy seasons twelve or fifteen) on Sunday morning, regularly, taking reading matter to the sailors, with invitations to the Association reading-room and meetings. A Bible-class has been conducted on Sunday evenings with good attendance and gratifying results.

The annual public meeting of the Coventry Association was held on Tuesday last, under the presidency of the Mayor (Dr. Webb Fowler), who commended the Association to the citizens as an institution deserving encouragement and support. Canon Fleming gave a stirring address on the general aims and scope of the Association. Rev. Hugh Price Hughes followed with a rousing address, in which he urged open warfare against the most glaring vices of the age. The report revealed marked progress of the Association from forty-eight members to 270, in addition to sixty transferred elsewhere. The religious work has been marked by much blessing.

IS THE HOSPITAL SAFE?

Sir,—May I call attention to a serious danger threatening the patients in hospitals? Daily it becomes more clear that the practice of experimenting on living animals leads to experimenting on poor and friendless human beings. And daily it becomes clearer that these latter experiments, so common abroad, are approved by a certain circle in the medical world among us in England.

Quite lately Professor Sanarelli, of Monte Video, gave a lecture, stating how, after a lengthy series of experiments on many animals with yellow fever, he proceeded to carry on the same experiments on poor friendless human beings. He told with pride how these poor creatures had developed all the symptoms of yellow fever, even that of "final collapse" (that means they died), thanks to the "potent poison" he had concocted in his laboratory. One of our English medical papers hailed this as "opening up the possibility of devising new and hopeful methods of treatment"; while another spoke of "the thoroughness, patience, and courage with which the young physician had broken ground in a difficult and dangerous field." This is where experimentation on living animals, alias vivisection, is leading us—to the approval of experiments which an American paper, though also greatly sympathising with Professor Sanarelli, nevertheless stigmatises as "scientific murder."

In face of the statement contained in the last report of the inspector of vivisection in England that "the large increase of inoculations and allied experiments which has been noticeable for the last few years is likely to continue"; and considering the attitude of mind which familiarity with experimentation on living animals undoubtedly fosters, it is not too much to say that if we value the safety of the community the sooner we make it illegal for medical men and physiologists in England to indulge in such practices the better it will be for us. No man is so good but that he can be corrupted, and what this work has already done with men's hearts and minds, we see in these yellow fever experiments. Already we hear ominous whispers that even here in England all is not as it should be, but that the vivisecting laboratories are re-acting on the hospital wards. However this may be, such work as Sanarelli's would not yet be tolerated by the English public. By prohibiting vivisection we shall go far to render it for ever impossible. C. J. W.

THE LATE MR. J. R. HALL.

Dear Sir,—I well remember the prayer meetings held on the Saturday evenings at the late Mr. J. R. Hall's house at Stratford. Among those who prayed and gave testimony on those occasions were the three gipsy brothers Smith. Since leaving Stratford, I have spent three years in the Bristol Theological Institute, and nearly sixteen in the Congregational ministry, but the savour of those strengthening Saturday prayers is sweet to-day. Like many others, I can say it was good for us thus to remember our own approaching Sunday labours, and the work of home and foreign brethren in their several spheres. Echoing the words of your article, my prayer is that the Church may find "many workers of the same type." From those days of the seventies until the present hour, I have found much stimulus from your valuable weekly record of Christian work.—Yours faithfully,

H. J. Bayley.

The Manse, Long Stratton.

Befriending Young Servants.—A meeting was held on Wednesday afternoon at Monkswell House, Chelsea-embankment, on behalf of the Chelsea and South Kensington branch of the M.A.B.Y.S. Association. Rev. Gerald Blunt, rector of Chelsea, presided, and, in opening the meeting, remarked that this philanthropic institution was started nearly forty years ago, its primary objects being to befriend girls brought up in the metropolitan pauper schools when placed out in service, and to form a centre for a number of girls more or less friendless. Mr. William Chance, secretary of the Central Poor Law Conference, stated that there were at present under the care of the Association 7,134 girls, 2,857 of whom came from Poor Law schools, 910 from charitable institutions, and 3,367 were local girls. The Association had a central committee, thirty-one district committees, 1,025 visitors, and twenty-one training and lodging homes; it was connected with twenty-one Poor Law schools, and under its care were nearly 4,000 Poor Law girls. He appealed for more helpers and for increased financial support. Viscount Morpeth, Rev. Dr. Ridgeway, Mrs. Westlake, and Miss Warry also spoke in commendation of the work of the Association.

HOME.

East London Hospital has received Her Majesty's annual donation of 20 gs., and the Irish Ladies Distress Fund £10.—The Royal Naval Fund has made sundry grants of money to widows and dependent relatives of seamen and marines.

Early closing is on the increase in the fashionable centres of London; but in the East-end the hours of shop assistants range from eight in the morning till ten o'clock at night, and twelve on Saturday. Something practical ought to be done to remedy this excessive toil beyond the Wednesday or Thursday early closing.

It has been wisely resolved that from the balance of the relief fund raised for sufferers by the Cripplegate fire, £795 shall be devoted to the Metropolitan Fire Brigade Widows' and Orphans' Fund, and about £300 to local charities in the Ward of Cripplegate.—The Maidstone Fund for the benefit of sufferers from the typhoid epidemic needs much augmentation before adequate provision can be made for widows and orphans.

Since December 30 there has been contributed to the Manchester Fund for the relief of distress in Ireland nearly £7800.—For the relief of sufferers by the recent boating disaster off the Norfolk coast nearly £550 have been raised.—The committee of the Sailors' Orphan Girls' School and Home, have agreed that six of the children, being girls between the ages of six and twelve years, left orphans by this sad calamity, shall be received into the Home at once without election.

Notwithstanding the difficulty the National Lifeboat Institution had to contend with last year in rebutting unfounded charges against its administration, good progress is recorded.—Scholars attending Jewish Schools have raised funds to purchase a new lifeboat, the "Michael Henry," to replace the old boat at Newhaven.—At a function held at Grosvenor House, when the Duchess of Westminster presided, Missions to Seamen were considered by the ladies branch, and methods of help adopted.

FOREIGN.

A fresh insurrection has broken out in the Philippines. Fifty-three Spanish soldiers were killed.

There has been an outburst of fanaticism among the Jews in Jerusalem. Fearful curses against the missionaries have been posted up in different places.

The Governor of Kirman, Persia, has besieged and taken Fanoch Fort, fifty miles from Geh.—Order is expected to be restored in Baluchistan in a short time.

To improve the condition of the Church in Ontario, Canada, the Archbishop of that city has appealed to the churches of Great Britain to raise a jubilee commemoration fund of £25,000.

America and Spain.—The war cloud is dispersing. The new Spanish Minister to Washington declares it to be his mission to maintain and draw closer the most friendly relations between Spain and America.

Portugal.—Notwithstanding public protests, the Bill for the conversion of the External Debt has passed the Chamber of Deputies. To secure its passage through the Chamber of Peers it is expected new Peers will be nominated.

Austria.—Count Thun's Cabinet contains representatives of Poles, Czechs, and Liberal German landowners. Fears are expressed as to a policy of pacification under the existing franchise.—It is reported that the new Ministry will deal energetically with any attempts to obstruct parliamentary settlement of the Czech question.

Africa. — The news is reassuring that the Governor of Lagos has been cordially received at Ilesha, the stronghold of Bariba, by the king and people.—The rising in the Central African protectorate has been quelled. The rebel chief Mpseni has surrendered. The Transvaal Government is negotiating for a loan of £2,500,000, which will be underwritten by the Netherlands Railway Company and the Dynamite Company.

Korea.—Discord prevails in the Korean ministry, concessions to Russia being feared.—Some friction has arisen between Russia and Korea in consequence of "the want of favour" shown to the Russian Customs Commissioner and the Russian Military Instructors.

China.—Russia is still pressing her claims. On the British minister protesting against the lease of Port Arthur to Russia, the Chinese Government declared its inability to withstand the Russian demands.—The Japanese Minister at Pekin has advised the Chinese Government to refuse Russia's demands, threatening vigorous action on the part of Japan in the alternative.—Germany has obtained a concession to construct a railway connecting Tsi'man-fu with I-chau-fu. Increased facilities for locomotion will further Bible circulation and missionary enterprise generally.

The War Fever.—In Russia an Imperial ukase has been issued ordering the disbursement of 90,000,000 roubles as extraordinary expenditure for the construction of warships.—A Bill for 50,000,000 dollars has been introduced into the House of Representatives at Washington for the national defence, and unanimously passed by the Senate.—According to the Navy Estimates, England does not mean to spare expense for the increase of the fleet. There are to be under construction this year twelve battleships, sixteen first-class, six second-class, ten third-class cruisers, six sloops, four turn-screw gun boats, and forty-one torpedo-boat destroyers. What a terribly costly thing the war spirit is.

India.—Friction has arisen between the Bombay Corporation and the plague committee, both Hindus and Mohammedans resisting the new quarantine rules. This forebodes immediate trouble, which will require judicious treatment. Later intelligence says: Serious plague riots have occurred in the native town at Bombay, several persons being killed. Troops were called out.—Lord Roberts has vigorously advocated the forward policy on the frontier, so as to obtain political control over the 200,000 tribal fighting men.—The Khyber Pass is now quite peaceful, and will be opened for Afghan caravans at once.—Reports on the wheat harvest state that in the Punjaub and Sind the crop will yield 9 per cent. above the average; in the N.W. Provinces and Bengal about the average; and Bombay and the Central Provinces much below the average.—Most satisfactory is the latest news from Sir W. Lockhart. He has held an interview with a full representative jirgah of tribes on the frontier, and the prevailing feeling seems to be one of thorough submission.

Turkey.—Mr. T. W. Legh, M.P., acting on behalf of the Duke of Westminster's committee, has recently travelled through Thessaly, and finds the state of the country, on the whole, better than might have been expected. The army of occupation numbers 80,000 men.—The Prince of Bulgaria has been received by the Emperor Francis Joseph, the tension between the courts of Vienna and Sofia being at an end.

Egypt.—A proposal from Ministers and the Quarantine Board to prohibit the Mecca pilgrimage this year, in view of the plague, has been refused by the Khedive. Certain restrictions, however, have been substituted to diminish danger of infection.

In the East.—At last the Porte admits the recent outrages upon Christians at Kossovo. Nearly all prisoners have been released, and officials punished who committed the abuses.—The Turkish Government intends to build two new railway lines for military purposes.—Russia has reduced her claim for arrears of Turco-Russian war indemnity by £500,000. The Porte forthwith makes an assignment on the Greek war indemnity of £700,000.—Excellent service has been rendered the Armenian Christians in their sore distress by the Women's Armenian Relief Fund. From the industrial relief bureau at Van comes the report that a slightly increased measure of confidence has been restored in that province.

Sweden.—Madame de Ramsay, writing from Wilhelmsro, Jönköping: "Our Homes increase in number and in inmates. Peeping out among the trees the cottages make quite a village; the children are continually running in and out, and those who are most afflicted are drawn in perambulators or pass the long summer evenings on couches. I recently had the joy of opening a delightful schoolhouse. Twenty years ago 'Eliza's Skool' was burnt by a fire occasioned by sparks from the railway engine. Now we have a much larger building, which better commemorates a name that is so dear to us all at Wilhelmsro."

Home for Motherless Children.—Two years ago Mr. R. T. Smith opened in Chiswick a small home for motherless little ones, a larger one being opened last year. Now a second and additional home has been opened in Burlington-lane, Chiswick. At the inaugural meeting, Mr. Smith sketched the opening of the home in Hogarth-place two years ago, and the subsequent removal to Heathfield-gardens. Twelve children were already in the institution that day being opened, and there were others yet to come; and then what? That must be left; that Father who had directed and supplied would continue to supply all their need. Mr. Smith intimated that he wanted £650 to build a suitable home, for which they had in promises and gifts about £350. Mr. D. Tweddle (chairman), Mrs. Thorneycroft, Rev. Nevison Loraine, Rev. J. Simmance, and others spoke heartily in favour of the Home.

The Life-boat Institution.

The annual meeting of the Royal National Lifeboat institution was held on Saturday at St. Martin's Town Hall. The chair was occupied by the Duke of Leeds.

The annual report referred to the serious and unfounded charges and attacks which had for some time been systematically made and widely circulated against the management of the institution, and the life-boats and their crews, and to the results of the investigation by a Committee of the House of Commons. During the past year new sailing or pulling boats, fully equipped, and possessing every improvement in construction and gear which had been found to be desirable and suited to local requirements, had been supplied to thirteen stations. A third steam life-boat named the Queen, in commemoration of the completion of the sixtieth year of Her Majesty's reign, was sent to New Brighton last autumn. Steam life-boats are also being built for Padstow (Cornwall) and the neighbourhood of Grimsby. There are 295 life-boats of all classes belonging to the Institution on the coast. The total amount received in 1897 in subscriptions, donations, dividends, etc., and including the amount received from the Life-Boat Saturday Fund, was £60,002 18s. 2d., a falling off of £14,585 1s. 2d. as compared with the corresponding total of the previous year.

Addresses followed by Col. Saunderson, Sir Francis Jeune, Admiral Sir John Dalrymple-Hay, Mr. Justice Bruce, Mr. Round, M.P., and Sir Edward Birkbeck.

Distress in Ireland.

There seems to be still an immense amount of distress and misery in the south and west of Ireland. The Government relief works are wholly inadequate to meet even partially the prevalent destitution. Pitiable stories are in circulation concerning some of the people in the suffering districts. After alluding to the long distances men and women have to walk to earn at most a few shillings a week, the Chronicle relates the following case:—

"Anne Flannery, of Portarlin, a girl of fifteen, must do her seventy-two miles a week and fifty hours of work before she can take home her 3s. to her starving mother and sister."

To what terrible straits must the family be reduced for one of its number to undergo such fatigue and toil for a pittance of 6d. a day. The Irish Field relates that:—

"In little villages hidden away amongst rocky mountains whole families are reduced to a state of starvation, from which death will give them relief, unless help from outside comes, and comes quickly." May God send swift aid to these famishing households!

Irish Notes.

The Society for the Orphans of Ministers and Missionaries of the Presbyterian Church paid away in grants during the past year £712 10s., while its total income was £2537 3s. 1d.

Mr. C. Braithwaite, B.A., of Banbury, has been delivering a course of lectures in the Friends' Meeting House, Dublin, on "The New Testament: its Form, Text, and Composition," which has attracted considerable attention.

While Belfast is suffering from a want of churches Dublin is said to be overchurched, owing to the emigration of the respectable classes from the centre of the city to the suburbs, and the union of some of the city parishes is as a consequence proposed.

The income of the Hibernian Church Missionary Society has increased during the year by nearly £3000. Following as this does an increase of £2000 the year before last, it has come as a most agreeable surprise on all the friends of the society, who are devoutly thankful for this evidence of increased zeal on behalf of missions.

The Dublin Prison Gate Mission is doing a good work. The average daily attendance during the past year was 119, and at the Sunday meetings ninety-five. Forty-six have been sent to situations, and seven to their homes. The accommodation proving inadequate, another house has been taken and is rapidly being made ready for use.

Mr. Ira D. Sankey has been singing at the "Keswick" Conference held in Jerusalem, conducted by Dr. Elder Cumming and Revs. F. E. Paynter and J. J. Luce. We hope in a future issue to give some account of the meetings.

Scottish Notes.

GLASGOW CITY MISSION.

THIS Mission has been in existence for seventy-two years, and during that long period has been bringing its influence to bear upon the non-church-going and neglected masses of the city. It employs thirty-five missioners, and is based upon the conviction that there is nothing short of the Gospel which will truly solve the problem of the great cities. There are other ways by which commendable efforts are being directed towards dealing with some individual aspects of this problem; and, while such efforts are not to be depreciated, the fact remains that unless these efforts have underneath, inspiring them, the spirit of the Gospel, then, whatever the amount of the external good, they will also fail to solve the problem.

In spite of the increase in the number of churches and church agencies, it is apparent that the number of the non-church-going and church-neglecting population seems to be annually increasing. This is a fact greatly to be deplored, and one which it is impossible for Christian people to overlook.

The greatest hindrances which the missionaries have to contend with are intemperance and callous indifference towards spiritual things. The most pitiful aspect is to be seen in the apparent increase of drunken wives and mothers.

It is evident that the continued efforts of a society like the City Mission is as much needed as ever. During the past year 38,219 hours were spent in visitation; of these, 5845 in the evening after six o'clock, for the purpose of teaching the men. 4169 meetings have been held, attended by an aggregate of 208,644 persons. 62,257 visits to families have been made, 13,748 to sick, and 2813 to infirm persons.

BRIEF NOTES.

Rev. G. M. Reith, M.A., has been elected pastor of Free St. Cuthbert's, Edinburgh, in room of the late Rev. R. Forrest.

A National Temperance Convention is to be held at Dundee, Saturday, April 2, to Thursday, April 7, Lord Overtoun presiding. Several members of Parliament, as also Dr. Rainy and Dr. Hulton, are announced to take part.

The West-end Methodist Mission, Edinburgh (Rev. G. Jackson), have to vacate the U.P. Synod Hall, which they have rented since the inauguration of their work. They have secured a site in a very favourable place, and mean to build premises for their forward movement. This will include a hall to seat 2000 persons. The site and hall will cost about £30,000.

Rev. E. N. Thwaites, of Fisherton Rectory, near Salisbury, has, many will regret to hear, lost his beloved wife.

Rev. W. T. A. Barber, M.A. (Camb.), B.D. (Dublin), Wesleyan Missionary Secretary, has been selected for the headmastership of the Leys School, in succession to Dr. Moulton. This is regarded as a good appointment, as, before going to the China mission-field, Mr. Barber was a master at Dunheved College, Cornwall, and left a great reputation behind as a capable and sympathetic teacher of youth.

The Book World.

A USEFUL COMMENTARY.

It is a pleasure to call attention to the popular edition of the Commentary for English Readers, by various writers, and edited by Bishop Ellicott, issued by Messrs. Cassell & Co. When this commentary was originally published, a few years ago, we heartily commended it to our readers, as admirably supplying a definite need. The work comprises eight volumes (five dealing with the Old Testament and three with the New); but whereas at first they cost a guinea each volume, now the entire set may be bought for 30s. Those who cannot consult erudite works, and all whose books must of necessity be few in number, will find this excellent set of volumes of great service. There is a sufficiency of "Introduction," helpful comment, critical and expository, and much useful information given in excursus form. The convenience of all is served by the sacred text being presented in full. The theologians who co-operated with the Bishop of Gloucester in the production of this great undertaking were all men of standing and weight, so that in consulting the pages students may be generally confident of securing reliable information, carefully digested, and expressed in perspicuous language.

MODERN DISCOVERIES AND THE BIBLE.

As from time to time Oriental research has opened up and confirmed the sacred Scriptures we have outlined the results to our readers, and have uniformly expressed a conviction that archæological discoveries would answer many a well-worn objection, and for ever discredit the speculative criticism which has of late been in high favour no less in our own land than in Germany. We therefore welcome a work by Rev. John Urquhart largely conceived on these lines, entitled Modern Discoveries and the Bible. (6s. net. Marshall Bros.) This volume is really a sequel to the author's book on "The Inspiration and Accuracy of the Holy Scriptures"; it is confined to the period from the Creation to Abraham, and is be followed by a third volume, completing a very useful undertaking. In the volume before us Mr. Urquhart first tells the deeply interesting story of modern research, including the recovery of the languages of Egypt and Assyria; then, proceeding to give confirmations of the Pentateuch, he examines the Creation history, traditions of the Deluge, the story of Abraham, and many other subjects. Against the confident assertions of some modern teachers he places the demonstrations of men of greater weight; and whether he writes on theories of Paradise, geological conclusions, or attempts to confuse history and myth, he is always clear and interesting. The pages have had the signal advantage of being largely revised by Mr. Theo. G. Pinches, the eminent Assyriologist, of the British Museum. We trust the work will steady the minds of many whose confidence in the Old Testament has been shaken by the Higher Criticism.

A new monthly paper "for the deepening of spiritual life" is Newness of Life. The first two parts are varied in contents, excerpts from the writings of saints of old being combined with articles and meditations by living writers. (1d. Office: 85, Queen's-road, Brighton.)

A useful collection of testimonies to the worth of the Bible, by modern thinkers and notabilities, is that compiled by Helen S. Kennedy, with the title, The Book of Books. We welcome a new edition revised and enlarged, and trust the pages will be of service to many, and lead to greater attention to the Book itself. (6d. Horace Marshall & Son.)

A valuable addition to the excellent "Silver Series" is a translation of Köstlin's Life of Luther, with many illustrations from authentic sources. Of the work itself it is not necessary to say anything; the cheap reissue places a good book within the reach of ordinary readers. The engravings include reproductions of portraits and historic documents that cannot but excite great interest. (3s. 6d. Longmans & Co.)

The addresses delivered at the recent conference on prophetic truth, held in Lansdowne Hall, West Norwood, have now appeared under the title, The Coming of the Lord in its Relation to Spiritual Life. These expositions of matter concerning the hope of the Church will be read with interest and profit. To be had (price 6d.) of the Editor of "The King's Herald," Lansdowne, Park-road, West Dulwich, S.E.

A capital "Manual for would-be Christians" is "Intent on Pleasing Thee." By A. R. Kelley. (1s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.) In twenty-four short chapters the author deals with personal salvation and the life of faith and obedience. We specially commend the little work to the attention of those who would help young Christians in reference to the score of questions and issues which they often encounter with hurtful effects.

Dean Farrar's writings show remarkable variety; the latest work from his pen Allegories (6s. Longmans, Green & Co.) testifies to his versatility, but is not likely to do much besides. The opening allegory, "The Life Story of Aner," is the most interesting of the four; it exhibits a typical man under temptation and in sin, and is rich in suggestiveness. We regret to find in other allegories a distinct expression of hopes beyond the present life such as are unauthorised by the Gospel and nowhere set forth in Holy Scripture.

A truly fascinating handbook to the elementary study of botany. Mrs. Brightwen carries conviction on this point in her Glimpses into Plant Life. (3s. 6d. T. Fisher Unwin.) Out of her ample knowledge, the author describes in simple and popular language the construction and functions of plants, trees, flowers, vegetables, etc. In these approaching spring days we can imagine no more delightful recreation than a careful reading of this splendidly-illustrated book, with a practical use of the directions at the close of each chapter.

Indian history and life may well have an interest for British Christians, and it is particularly to such that Mr. T. B. Pandian addresses himself in Indian Village Folk: Their Work and Ways. (4s. 6d. Elliot Stock.) After describing the village in general, the author sketches the trades and classes of people, then deals with what in India pass for "professions," with public life and officials, and with popular amusements and recreations. There are several illustrations, and an appendix outlines the attitude of the villagers towards Western people and Gospel teaching. Archdeacon Sinclair commends the work in a brief preface.

A very suggestive little work by the late W. P. Mackay, of Hull, is Types in Genesis; or, The Work and Rest of God. The pages unfold and explain the Creation chapter, giving analyses, contrasts, and germ thoughts that will prove of great service to preachers and teachers. A companion volume in the same handy series is The Second Advent of the Lord Jesus, with Subsequent Events in Heaven and Earth; ten lectures, illustrated by a coloured chart, by John Ritchie. This is a clear and compact statement of prophetic truth, from what is called the "Futurist" standpoint. (1s. each. John Ritchie, Kilmarnock.)

Centuries before Augustine was sent from Rome the Christian faith was taught and professed in early Britain. So Rev. Charles Bullock, B.D., proves afresh in Sunrise in Britain. (1s. 6d. "Home Words" Publishing Office.) A concise and popular history of the dawn of Christianity in our island. "Whether," he says, "St. Paul was himself the first preacher of Christianity in Britain, or sent it us by others, the fact that the early British Church was at least planted in apostolic days shows, apart from other considerations, how utterly baseless was the claim of supremacy made by the Church of Rome on the ground of Augustine's mission hundreds of years after."

We welcome a second edition of The Quakers, from their Origin till the Present Time. By the late Principal Cunningham. (Friends' Tract Association, 15, Devonshire-street, E.C.) This compilation of Quaker annals is of special interest from the fact that its author was a member of the Church of Scotland. He was possessed, however, of the true historic spirit. One can discern in these chapters a sincere appreciation of all that was valuable and praiseworthy in the testimony of the founders of the Society of Friends, and an honest desire to give an impartial record of their development as a spiritual power in the face of opposing elements. The book is very readable in style, and this new edition will doubtless be widely welcomed.

Dr. Marshall Lang, in this "Duff Lecture for 1897," The Expansion of the Christian Life (5s. W. Blackwood & Sons), has chosen a subject of great and permanent interest in relation to missions. Previous lecturers under the same foundation had, of course, narrowed the ground, but in these able expositions of the indirect and secondary fruits of foreign mission work the author does good service to the cause. Dr. Lang shows how the Christian faith, when fully held and lived out, has influenced and permeated every department of human life and society; more than holding its own in the face of the heaviest religious systems and codes. He adopts no exaggerated tone of advocacy, but on the foundation of proved fact he builds up the structure of Christian achievement, so full of promise for the future as well as of actual manifestation in the past and present. The book forms a fine Christian apologetic, without the disturbing element of controversy.

We understand that Dr. C. Harford Battersby is engaged upon a LIFE OF THE LATE MR. PILKINGTON, of Uganda, which will be shortly published by Messrs. Marshall Brothers.

Church of England.

Rev. F. G. Buller, of East Stoke, has been appointed to the rectory of Birch in Rusholme, Manchester.

The charge of Emmanuel, Streatham, has been offered to Rev. H. F. S. Adams, of St. Paul's, Stratford.

Rev. E. L. Reeve has been instituted to the new vicarage of St. Michael, Islington; and Rev. T. H. Steen to that of St. Matthew, Islington.

St. Barnabas, Clapham Common, vacant by the death of Rev. G. M. Claris, has, it is said, been accepted by Rev. F. W. Metcalfe, of Bournemouth.

Canon Woodward, Vicar of St. Silas', Toxteth Park, Liverpool, had a narrow escape Sunday week of being murdered in his own church by a madman.

Archdeacon Hayward, Vicar of Cirencester, has accepted the vacant Canonry of Gloucester. He has for many years been a prominent clergyman in the diocese, and the appointment is exceedingly appropriate.

At the spring meeting of the Church Association, Mr. A. S. Lamb said it would be a blessed thing if they could obtain the co-operation of Protestant Nonconformists in their endeavours to maintain Protestantism in the Church.

Mr. Kensit's methods as a militant Protestant determined to stem the tide of sacerdotalism in the Church of England have received a check from the action of the Bishop of London, who has declined to sanction any further changes in the ceremonial at St. Ethelburga's in the City.

The annual northern conference of the National Protestant Church Union is announced to be held in Liverpool on March 24. The special subject for discussion, which will be introduced by Prebendary Webb-Peploe, will be "The policy upon which Evangelical Churchmen are prepared to unite in defence of the Reformed and Protestant character of the Church of England."

"A Churchwoman" has presented to the Church Army a van for the Rochester diocese, the present van being quite unable to overtake the whole of the diocese. The Army has now forty-seven of these vans.—The Dean of Battle presided at a largely-attended meeting at the Watch-Oak, Battle, last Wednesday, in support of the Church Army work among the outcast and destitute.—The Goldsmiths' Company have voted a contribution of £25 to the Society in aid of its labour homes for tramps, criminals, and inebriates.

The Spring Conference of the Church Association and National Protestant League was held last week at the Victoria Hall, Derby. The President (Mr. A. S. Lamb) having delivered his inaugural address, a discussion on "Prayers for the Dead" was opened by Rev. Dr. Wright, maintaining that no theologian worthy of the name could say that the Old Testament upheld the doctrine of prayers for the dead. The New Testament was almost as silent, and the very few passages which were sometimes quoted had no real bearing on the controversy. The evening meeting was largely concerned with measures to oppose the introduction of the Romish mass into Reformed Churches.

Evangelical Churchmen are often somewhat dubious in contributing towards funds for building new churches. Clacton-on-Sea, however, is now urgently needing a new church, a site having been recently given by the trustees of Mr. Round's estate. The energetic vicar (Rev. H. Secley) has done much for the place by his bold and faithful defence of Protestant principles. The population increasing by leaps and bounds has caused a strain upon his health, and an additional curate is absolutely required. The Church Pastoral Aid Society has promised £50 yearly. Possibly some young clergyman of private means would throw in his lot; there is plenty of bracing air and hard work to be obtained in this pretty East Coast parish.

The Daughters of the King, an organisation inaugurated in this country last week with a meeting at the Church House, has existed for a dozen years in America. It aims at doing for women what the Brotherhood of St. Andrew — also an American organisation recently introduced into this country — does for men. Each Daughter of the King pledges herself to observe the two rules of the society, viz.:—(1) To pray daily for the spread of Christ's Kingdom among women, for God's blessing upon all members, and for the prosperity of the parish in which her chapter is situated; and (2) to make an earnest effort each week to bring at least one woman within the hearing of the Gospel and to offer at all times all possible aid to the incumbent of the parish.

Congregational.

Milton Church, Huddersfield, reports 411 members, with much earnest and prosperous work.

Five village missions are maintained in connection with Mount Pleasant Church, Tunbridge Wells.

Pastor J. Onions, after seven years labour at Tipton Staffs), has resigned, intending to join the Baptists.

St. Leonards Church reports a net increase of twenty-eight members. The new Bulverhythe Mission is free from debt.

A mission-hall is to be erected at Upnor, where services are carried on in connection with Vine Church, Rochester.

Rev. E. Hampden-Cook, late secretary of Mill Hill School, London, has accepted an invitation to the pastorate of the English Church at Dalgelly, North Wales.

The jubilee report of Pendleton Chapel, Manchester, shows a large circle of manifold activities, and indicates growth and prosperity in all the branches.

Rev. T. H. Darlow, of New College Chapel, has been appointed by the committee of the British and Foreign Bible Society to the office of literary superintendent.

Trinity Church, Reading, reports 505 members, thirty of whom were admitted during the last year. The operations of the congregation are full of activity and hopefulness.

East-parade Chapel, Leeds, reports a membership of 339, including twenty-four admitted last year. The introduction of the envelope system has proved a success, and has brought the income very nearly up to all requirements.

The Edmonton and Tottenham Church held a very happy and largely-attended annual meeting on Wednesday last, at the commencement of the twentieth year of present pastorate. Total number of members, 513; additions during the year, thirty-seven. A large number of useful agencies are in full work, including a mission hall and two Sunday-schools, Bible-classes, and Y.P.S.C.E. There is a large field for work in this thickly-populated neighbourhood.

The Lord Mayor, accompanied by the Lady Mayoress and his daughter, went on Wednesday week in semi-state to Bishopsgate Chapel, Bishopsgate-street Without, and opened a sale of work in the large schoolroom there, held for the purpose of raising funds for the renovation of the mission house, and for other purposes. Details were given showing the arduous and excellent work in progress.

Baptist.

A five weeks' mission has been concluded at Brayford, North Devon.

A ten days' mission has been held, with good results, at Hilliton Chapel, Somerset.

The annual meeting at Edith-road, Nunhead, afforded evidence of good earnest work.

Thirty-seven new members were received on Sunday week into the Tabernacle Church, Nottingham.

Rev. George Freeman, of New Southgate, has accepted the pastorate of the Westbourne Grove Chapel, and will commence his ministry on May 1.

Rev. G. Howard James, who has accepted the pastorate at Osmaston-road, Derby, has closed his ministry at Woodborough-road Chapel, Nottingham.

It is announced that Rev. W. Hackney has resigned the pastorate at Graham-street, Birmingham. It is hoped he will accept a tutorship at the Pastors' College.

Rev. E. H. Brown (late of Twickenham) has accepted the unanimous invitation to the pastorate of the Baptist Church at Wells, Somerset, and will commence May 1.

Rev. S. Pilling, late of Blackpool, has been recognised at Barry-road, East Dulwich. Revs. Peter Thompson, W. R. Skerry, Dr. Ray, Dr. Dowen, and E. Henderson spoke.

The anniversary at Ferme Park Chapel, Hornsey, showed that during the pastorate of Rev. Charles Brown the work has made rapid strides. The membership is now 463. A new chapel is about to be erected.

The anniversary of the Grays' Tabernacle has proved singularly encouraging, this live evangelistic work having been blessed to many. Stirring addresses were given by Rev. Dr. Dowen, A. G. Edgerton, and H. Trueman.

Good progress is reported at the Tasso Tabernacle, Fulham, the membership steadily rising from thirty-six in January, 1897, to 106 in March, 1898. The encouraging feature is that the increase has been through conversion and Baptism fed from the after meetings at the Lord's Day services. There is a debt of £300 on the building, and any of the Lord's servants who desire to join in wiping the debt out should communicate with Pastor Henry A. McKenzie, 65, Everington-street, Fulham.

At Rye-lane, Peckham, 121 members were admitted to fellowship during the past year, seventy-three by baptism. The total on the roll is now 869, of whom 230 have joined since Mr. Ewing commenced his ministry two years ago. A special feature of the year's work has been, in addition to fully maintaining all the usual missionary contributions, in the sending into the foreign mission field Mr. A. G. Adams, who will be entirely supported by the church. The home missions at Relf-road and Summer-road closed the year financially stronger than ever before. The church is now contemplating a fresh effort towards helping the sick poor of the neighbourhood.

The fifteenth Year Book of Woodberry Down Baptist Church (Rev. G. Hay Morgan) indicates continued prosperity in membership and finance. The membership has increased by thirty-one, giving a total of 628. The total receipts for the year were £2407 12s. The endeavour to clear the debt in the past two years has resulted in paying off £1490, leaving only £1000, and this it is hoped will be cleared during the current year. Prominent among the societies in connection are a large Sunday-school of 594 scholars with sixty officers and teachers, a flourishing band of hope, with gymnasium for the boys and musical drill for the girls, Bible-classes, Christian Endeavour societies, junior and senior, home mission, with a mothers' meeting of 200 members, also several clubs and working societies. The contributions to the Baptist missionary and Zenana Mission amount to £205.

Methodist.

Rev. Dr. R. Swallow, President of the U.M.F.C., hopes to return to his work in Ningpo, China, in the autumn.

Rev. Francis Bavin, of Leeds West, has accepted the office of general superintendent of missions in Jamaica.

Mrs. Charles Garrett, whose husband is so widely known and loved, has been somewhat seriously ill, but is reported, at latest, as recovering.

Mr. John Parker, a well-known local preacher and temperance reformer, has celebrated his eighty-first birthday by erecting a new mission-hall at his own expense.

The first anniversary of the Leeds Sisterhood was held on Monday week at Brunswick Chapel, Leeds. From the report it appeared that there are nine sisters engaged in the work.

A valedictory service was held at the Mission House, Bishopsgate, on Thursday week, to bid farewell to the Misses Beauchamp and Drayton previous to their departure for Ceylon.

The special effort of the Wesleyan Missionary Society to clear off its debt and secure an amount for consolidation and extension has now been closed. The entire amount secured has been £40,319. The debt was £30,478, thus leaving a little under £10,000 for other purposes.

The trustees of the Wesleyan Centenary Hall and Mission-house in Bishopsgate, the official headquarters of Methodism, are taking steps to secure the approval of the Charity Commissioners to a scheme of rebuilding, the premises having become obsolete and ill-adapted to the purposes for which they are required.

The seventh anniversary of the Irwell-street Mission, Salford, was celebrated on March 2, and was most successful in every sense. A fine congregation assembled in the afternoon to hear Rev. Thomas Champness. The service was appropriately followed by a testimony meeting, one of the features of which was a testimony from the lips of Mr. Champness's father. An enthusiastic public meeting was held in the evening.

The West London Mission reports that "Sisters' Sunday," celebrated a week or so since at St. James's Hall, realised some £100. This is a record for the occasion. Hitherto the "rescue work" of the Mission has had its headquarters at Walthamstow. This has been found to be too remote to render the best service possible. The house at Walthamstow has therefore been sold, and suitable premises taken at 20, Manor-place, Paddington Green, within easy reach of the services of the Mission.

Presbyterian.

Dr. J. H. Cooke will be ordained at Caversham-road, Reading, on April 7.

Rev. W. A. Galt has accepted the call to Ilford. The induction is fixed for 24th inst.

Rev. Johnstone Ross has felt himself compelled to take a further three months' rest from work.

Rev. J. B. Whyte, who has been minister at Hartlepool for thirty-three years, has now resigned.

A union of the two congregations in Norham has been decided upon, the two congregations meeting as one for the first time on Sunday last. To facilitate the arrangements Rev. G. H. Main handed in his resignation as minister of North Norham.

Rev. W. Rigby Murray, preaching on Sunday week in Manchester to young men from 1 Tim. iv. 12, made some very pointed remarks on the tendency to undervalue experience. "No candidate need apply whose head is growing either grey or bald," is the encouraging announcement made by churches. And so there are hundreds on hundreds of godly, capable, and experienced men who are thrown aside, in the very prime of life, "like a disabled pitcher, of no use," and who are slowly dying of breaking or broken hearts.

Fallen Asleep.

At 5, Gloucester-road, Croydon, on 5th inst., Mr. George Elliott Smith, aged twenty-five, a devoted young Christian.—At Wolverhampton, Mrs. Bantock, for forty-nine years a helper in Dr. C. A. Berry's church.—In Aberdeen, Rev. George Macdonald, of St. Columba Gaelic Church, aged sixty-seven, after a ministry of thirty-four years. He took the deepest interest in the welfare of Highland students attending Aberdeen University.—At Accrington, Mrs. Williams, wife of the honoured Rev. Charles Williams, minister of Cannon-street Chapel, and for fifty years his true and faithful helpmeet.—At Ealing, Mr. Robert Main, a devoted elder in the Presbyterian Church.—At Kirkden, Arbroath, on 6th inst., Rev. Jas. Anderson, aged seventy-eight, a retired minister.—At Ayr, Rev. William Granger, minister of St. Leonards, Ayr.— At Tiverton, on 5th inst., Rev. A. Edward Allen, who in January last celebrated his 100th birthday. He was born at Theale, in the parish of Tilehurst, Berks. He became master of Newark-on-Trent Grammar School and curate of Brant Broughton, and afterwards chaplain to Sir Henry Williams Wynn, English Minister at the Court of Denmark, and five years later he was appointed rector of Keinton-Mandeville, Somerset, which he relinquished in 1851 owing to ill-health, and settled at Tiverton.—At Algiers, on 2nd inst., Rev. G. G. Gutteres, rector of Carlton Colville, Lowestoft.—At New Cross, on 4th inst., Mrs. Jones, wife of the pastor of Zion Chapel, New Cross, much beloved for her work's sake.—At Consett, Mr. Robert Swainston, aged forty-nine, one of the leading Christian workers in the town.—At Sandkey, Barnstaple, Mr. Henry Yeo, an old and attached worker among the Bible Christians.—At Darfield, Councillor E. Hodgson, aged forty-four, a most useful helper.—In Camden Town, on 5th inst., Mrs. A. Lake, leader of a large and successful mothers' meeting, and an effective speaker on temperance and similar topics.—At Taunton, Mr. J. West, for fifty or sixty years an earnest worker in the district.—At Northampton, aged sixty-six, Mr. John B. Hensman, a leading Congregationalist and citizen.—At Maldon, Mr. A. C. Freeman, aged fifty-seven, an active Sunday-school leader.—At Handsworth, Birmingham, on 10th inst., Rev. Henry Bonner, pastor of Hamstead-road Baptist Chapel since 1833.—At Oxford, on 27th ult., Mrs. Nettleship, aged eighty-one, mother of the late Professor Nettleship, as also the eminent painter and oculist of the same name.—At Trim, co. Meath, Ven. Garrett Nugent, for thirteen years Archdeacon of Meath.—At St. Paul's Vicarage, New Kent-road, on 5th inst., Rev. S. M. Mayhew, vicar of the parish.—At Northampton, on 6th inst., Rev. J. Le Roberts, hon. canon of Peterborough and late vicar of Spratton.—At Carlow, Mrs. Smyth-King, widow of Very Rev. Dean Smyth-King, of Leighlin, and grand-daughter of the late Bishop Elrington.—At Dublin, Lord Holmpatrick, a generous supporter of various religious institutions.—Mr. George Woodhouse, of Bray, aged eighty-four years, a member of the Methodist Church, and a liberal contributor to various charitable and philanthropic objects.—At Weston-super-Mare, on 12th inst., Miss A. F. Cook, the dearly-loved niece of Mr. Thomas Newberry (Editor of The Englishman's Bible), after nine days' illness from peritonitis.—At Dorking, on March 9, Frederick Lee, for more than thirty years a faithful and devoted Christian worker and Sunday-school teacher, much owned of God in individual dealing with souls, passed into the presence of the King. Almost his last words were: "Father, take me home; I am thy property; thou hast redeemed me, amen."—On Sunday, March 13, at 12, Osbaldeston-road, N., Rev. James Townley, aged seventy-nine, warmly interested in evangelistic effort of various kinds.

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott to Monday, March 14, 1898.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or Post Office Orders, not by stamps.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that the Donation List is made up for the Printers on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number of The Christian.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss.

Notes and Comments

On another page will be found a most gratifying and encouraging summary of the work accomplished by Mr. Moody's Bible Institute in Chicago, during the nine years of its operations, so far as mere figures can represent it. It must be left to the sanctified imagination to picture the sum total of the holy influences that have emanated from these workers, equipped and stimulated as they have been by the training and the actual practical experience gained at the Institute.

Mr. Moody announces that the benefits of the Institute are available for residents in this country. There is plenty of room for active and devoted Christian young men, and it would be possible to double the facilities afforded without much extra expense. A period of such training for young men desiring to start their life work in the States and Canada would be invaluable. All particulars can be obtained from the Bible Institute, Chicago; or Mr. D. L. Moody, East Northfield, Mass., U.S.A.

Possibly the death of Mr. George Müller may lead some persons to reflect that "narrow views" are not unfavourable to broad practice. It would be difficult to name anyone who has been more faithful to his conceptions of Divine truth, or more fearless in upholding them (and they are not popular conceptions in this "liberal" and "advancing" age); but at the same time, it would be as difficult to name any one who has had such range of sympathy, such largeness of outlook, such magnificence of plan, and such daring of execution. He has wrought on a colossal scale. He had deep views of human needs and great virtues, of God's ability and willingness to supply them.

That he was content to begin humbly and to unfold gradually is only an evidence of his humility, faith, and wisdom. "The Kingdom of Heaven is as a grain of mustard seed." He knew that in a life of faith there must be room for growth. He never rejected small things, but took them, knowing how God could give the increase; it has been a thousandfold.

In our recent article on Child Drunkards we quoted some figures from a source generally recognised as an authority upon this subject. We have since learnt, however, that these figures (which related to the arrests of intoxicated children) are not substantiated. We quite agree with some correspondents who have looked into the matter that the cause of reform is quite strong enough, and the admitted extent of the evil sufficiently alarming, without the use of any questionable statistics, nor does uncertainty as to these figures in any way weaken the main contention of the articles referred to.

We are glad to find in The Daily News a column devoted to the subjects of "Children in Public Houses. Sweets for Little Drink Fetchers. How Tipplers are Educated. A Veto that is Wanted." After describing a terrible scene of drunkenness, the writer proceeds with an earnestness which reminds one of an old-fashioned temperance meeting :—

> It is of no use to pooh-pooh this as overdrawn and extravagant. It is not so. Such scenes are to be met with probably in all large towns, most certainly in London; and it is scandalous that houses in any way contributing to such a state of things should not only be tolerated, but licensed. The law does not permit a publican to serve any person under sixteen years of age for consumption on the premises; but he may serve children of any age with drink to be carried away, and the mischiefs of it are in many ways of the gravest character.

This article is a sign that the temper and feeling of the nation is ready for action. When so much money is spent on education, and when poor orphans are often better off than if their dissolute parents had lived to abuse and degrade them, people are becoming impatient of the destruction of children by means of an evil system. Now is the time for the friends of temperance to press for Sunday closing and the protection of the little ones.

Some noteworthy statistics have been given by Mr. John Wilson, M.P., at the annual meeting of the Scottish Temperance Life Assurance Co., dealing with the length of abstainers' lives. The statement made embraced a period of fifteen years, and a comparison was instituted between "temperance" claims and those made by non-abstainers (moderate drinkers) insured in "General" Co.'s. The result is that the ratio between claims expected and claims actually made was at the rate of 69 per cent. for non-abstainers as against 47 per cent. in the case of abstainers. Testimony like this is beyond even a quibble. It settles the question of longevity in favour of temperance. To the Christian man, whose supreme joy is in the service of his Lord, such evidence as this should end all doubt as to the advantage of total abstinence over moderation. For mere length of Christian life the temperance man will have more extended opportunities for doing good than the non-abstainer.

Long years of patient Christian effort in the East End are producing tangible results which deserve attention. For one thing, the conditions of life are greatly altered in some districts of that wide area; so much so, that the former class of sinners has almost ceased. Take, for instance, the neighbourhood of Ratcliff-highway, or, as it is now called, St. George's-in-the-East. What a contrast to what it was twenty years ago! This does not remove the necessity for Christian work, it only alters the kind of work. Training may have to supplant the old form of rescuing. Another thing is that years of hard East End work tell seriously on the workers. Our institutions should be so well staffed as that when a helper has to go away the burden may not be crushing to those who remain. This need of rest and change is, we hear, making itself more distinctly felt than ever.

Alluding to the proposed millenary of King Alfred, the Daily Chronicle says :—

> There is no doubt a certain fitness in the idea that the formal celebration of the great man who was King of Wessex as well as King of England should be at the royal city of Winchester. But it would be lamentable altogether if London, the city of the empire of which Alfred laid the broad and deep foundation, were to be without its share in the commemoration.

London does not at all seem inclined to forego her interest in this unique national function. Perhaps the king whose millenary we are about to celebrate, was the greatest of all the kings who have occupied the throne of this vast nation, and everybody will be glad that we do not intend to forget what he did, and the legacy he left of far-reaching and liberal laws.

The illness of the Prime Minister, which is largely due to the conscientious performance of his duties, has called forth a remarkable chorus of sympathy and appreciation for his character. It is curious to watch how party polemics die down in the face of such visitations, and it is one of the sure proofs that in Britain these polemics are very much on the surface, while the current of patriotism runs deeper. It is a pity that public men have to wait for the expression of the esteem in which they are held till they fall exhausted out of the ranks. We join in hoping that Lord Salisbury, who, while a strong party man and full of the prejudices of his order, is a true patriot and a disinterested servant of his country, may be speedily restored to health. The critical position of foreign affairs calls for the most watchful energy and the highest qualities of character.

The April and May Meetings of our great Missionary and Evangelistic Societies are at hand, and all friends of aggressive work cannot but be anxious for their success. During many years these gatherings were well attended by Christian people from all parts of the country, and did much to sustain missionary zeal and liberality. In recent years they have not been as well attended, or, as many think, distinguished by the same earnestness and enthusiasm. Perhaps, too, the novelty has worn off; and the multiplication of magazines and other literature has supplemented them as sources of information. But they are still full of interest.

The efficiency of the meetings largely depends upon the arrangements that are made. Speakers need to be invited, primarily because of their known loyalty to the cause they advocate, the information they can give, and their power to kindle earnestness and enthusiasm in others. Sometimes there is a lack of these qualifications at meetings; and sermons are preached on behalf of missions where the great theme is hardly alluded to. Prayer needs to be offered that all the arrangements made and the utterances delivered, may tend to root and increase the cause of God in the hearts of Christian people.

When the Prince of Wales issued his appeal to the aristocracy and the wealthy for aid on behalf of the London hospitals, it was hoped that he had tapped a new and abundant spring to supply at least some of the physical needs of our immense population. The hope has been disappointed. Although a large sum was obtained, it was small when compared with the vast fortunes of which a mere fraction was sought. To bring the fund up to the desired amount an appeal was next sent forth to the various churches, but this was to go to resources which had already given the main supply either in collections or in the subscriptions of individuals. More could hardly come from thence. The Princess of Wales has now made an appeal to the children of the country to complete the unfinished amount; but this also is being sent to ministers of religion for the young people in their congregations. How it may succeed remains to be seen. Meanwhile no new body of givers has been found apart from the churches—nor ever will be.

The question of the "Free Churches and Periodical Literature," and the "Free Churches and Journalism," discussed at the Free Church Congress, brought home some startling and anomalous facts. It is a curious feature of journalism that while Nonconformity is tolerated, or patronised, or ignored by the leading dailies, according to their particular standpoint, Roman Catholicism and High Churchism are given free utterance, even by those papers that are mostly read by Nonconformists. Mr. Howard Evans puts this down to the false sense of toleration which is one of the pitfalls of Protestantism at present. Agnostic journalists, on the other hand, have a weakness for Ritualism.

Your Agnostic editor has no objection to Anglicans, but to an Evangelical Free Churchman he has a decided dislike, because he is Evangelical. The offence of the Cross has never ceased yet, nor is likely to cease in our time.

From the broadest standpoint this is a social injustice, and should be set right. The daily Press has great and wide influence, and it should be more widely used to extend a knowledge of what is going on in the religious world. By means of it thousands can be reached who will never look at a religious newspaper properly so called, and their prejudices and animosities, which largely arise through ignorance, be softened or changed into sympathy. There is no calling where Christian men are more urgently wanted than in the ranks of journalism, and they should be men who can hold their own with vigour and devotion.

Whatever may be the character and value of the work of any particular "settlement" in our slums, there is no doubt that "settlements" as a whole are exciting a great deal of interest and doing a good work. They are helping us to know how the people live; they are turning a bright light and a microscopical gaze upon daily habits. Their information makes as good "copy" for a newspaper as a letter from the heart of Africa. Dickens, and other writers who saw much of low life, are ignorant when compared with a slum "sister." The Daily News, which gave a few months ago such admirable descriptions of child-life as seen in our London Board schools, is now directing its attention to the "settlements," from which it is drawing scenes, one being "Biby Bermondsey." Its picture of a Bermondsey baby is something to make one laugh and cry at the same moment. Take this as a specimen of heathen England:—

Her ears were attuned to the fierce and raucous tones of horrid Slumland; her eyes were familiar only with dust and decay, with wild orgy; her tiny, fragile body with the rain and cold.

> You shan't come and pliy in our yard,
> You shan't climb our shoot agine,
> You shan't holler through our key-ole,
> Or go fishin' down our drine——"

So sing the wild children of our nether regions. "Biby Bermondsey" doesn't even know how to "pliy." No—and if you ask her what cows say she answers meekly, "mew-mew." Big A and round O signify naught to her—she merely shakes her head and giggles at the sight of them.

The huge blocks of Peabody buildings scattered throughout London are not among the pleasant sights of the streets; we can hardly associate with them the idea of a cosy home. Nevertheless, plain, indisputable figures show that they are healthier places than the average London home, and that is a high though not a final test of fitness. While the population in them is thirteen times denser than in London generally, the death rate of infants is nearly twenty-two per thousand births below the London average; the total death rate is nearly three per thousand below the London average. The scheme is a paying one, as is also Lord Rowton's, which is working admirably. Would that no Londoner were worse housed than those in the Peabody buildings.

The evils of competition are nowhere more prominent than in the occupations followed by women. Until recently it was thought that in many trades wages were kept down by the fact that many women whose husbands were at work supplemented the family income by earning what they could themselves. More careful investigation, however, clearly proves that the reverse is the case. Miss Clementina Black, in her report on "Home Industries of Women in London," says:—

It is striking to note that the workers receiving the highest pay are often the wives of men in work, and are not working for very long hours; while it frequently happens that the lowest earnings are those of women depending entirely on their work—single women and widows.

Several causes contribute to this end, among which the better conditions of food and lodging and the less monotonous life of the more prosperous married woman conduce to make of her a more effective worker.

The moral is that every effort should be made by those philanthropically inclined to better the conditions of women workers depending on their own exertions, so that their power of earning may be increased and a fairer chance be given them.

The Church Times gives prominence to a communication from "A Correspondent" on the alleged decline of Tractarianism, which contains some remarkable admissions. "The general spirit of the times" would be the saddest thing to the old Tractarians, could they rise again from the dead.

The growing secularity even of the clergy, the love of amusement and change to which the Church complaisantly yields, the absence of that holy severity and impress of the Cross, the original characteristic of a movement which, beginning, as was lately said, in humiliation and tears, is ending in statistics and brag.

This is severe and humbling language, which, had it come from an Evangelical pen, would have been denounced as "bigoted." But it truly describes an increasingly superficial age.

In the Homiletic Review, Professor Adeney deals with the alleged silence of the apostle Paul with regard to the sayings of Jesus Christ, and shows that his epistles are full of allusions to them. It is a timely deliverance, in view of the present tendency to slight the apostle. This fact, which he puts in the forefront, is one of much suggestiveness and force, viz.:—

Paul insists with singular strenuousness on the duty of following the example of Jesus Christ, an example on which he is moulding his own life.

As Mr. Adeney forcibly remarks—"The Imitatio Christi implies an Imago Christi." The account which the apostle gives of the Lord's Supper shows his knowledge of the details of what occurred in the upper room, including the words spoken by Christ in instituting the ordinance. In the Epistle to the Romans about thirty allusions to the words of Jesus may be traced. In fact, as one follows the investigation, the puzzle is to imagine how anyone except an "acute critic" could have reached the conclusion that Paul was silent about the life and sayings of our Lord.

Two miners returning from Klondike have been found frozen to death with 160,000 dollars in their possession. What a typical picture of many a wasted life! Some lose heaven in the absorption of earthly gain; others with priceless talents at their command fail to benefit from them, because the springs of their higher nature are frozen up, or undeveloped.

In a well-known London thoroughfare are a number of shops which compete keenly with one another in the manufacture and sale of a certain commodity. Some have three windows, others two; another has only one, but over that one hangs the Royal Coat of Arms. The proprietor has supplied the Royal Family with his wares, and their patronage is worth more than the display of six windows. Even so, one humble life, if it be "approved of God," is of more real worth than many that are more pretentious in their outward show.

There are few more significant facts than the revived interest in the old mystics which is showing itself in the reprint of such works as Law's "Serious Call," of which two editions are just announced, one by Messrs. Dent in the Temple Classics, and the other by Messrs. Macmillan in their English Theological Library. This great book is well worthy of fresh study. The teaching is heart-searching and full of beauty and spiritual helpfulness. It belongs to the literature that never grows old because it appeals not to passing tastes, but to the elemental wants and cravings of the human heart, which are the same in every age. Amid so much that is shallow and ephemeral, it is refreshing that there is a steady and growing demand for such works as these.

Here is a practical testimony from Sir Wm. Macgregor as to the value of missions in New Guinea, which is worthy of wide attention. It accords with the experience in Africa of Sir Henry Johnston, and will, we hope, greatly strengthen the hands of missionaries abroad, as well as encourage their supporters at home:—

They are a necessary adjunct to the work of government. For instance, if a district is disturbed, I may go with a force of native police to the locality and inflict punishment on the natives, but the effect of such a lesson soon passes away. On the other hand, if a mission is established in the district I find that the work of maintaining law and order becomes a comparatively easy matter.

The breaking down of old and cruel customs is one of the first effects of Christianity in heathen lands. In China it is beginning to give rise to a strong revulsion against the foot-binding custom among women. If the vigorous crusade against this evil, which is now carried on all over China under Christian influence, succeeds in preventing the next generation from its infliction, it will react on missionary work by awakening the gratitude of millions of sorely tried women and predisposing them to accept the religion that has emancipated them from misery. Dr. Griffith John, writing on this subject, is full of hope in the matter, and urges the churches in China to take it up as part of their work.

Consideration.

"Let us consider one another."—Heb. x. 24.
"Let us not judge one another any more."—Rom. xiv. 13.

HERE are two injunctions which we may properly bracket together. At first sight, indeed, it looks as if the considering of one another and the judging of one another might be much alike; and yet, in their practical effects, they are far apart.

To judge one another is a habit to which we are naturally prone, and harsh judgments and false judgments have wrought untold mischief and misery in this world of ours. Oh, the sin and sorrow which might have been spared if the Divine command, "Judge not," had been heeded! Alas for the broken hearts, the desolated lives, the bitterness and strife which have resulted from disobedience to it!

How shall we conquer the predisposition to judge one another?

Nothing but the grace of God and the power of God can cure us of it, but one of the most effectual means which we can use is to "consider one another."

Harsh judgments are commonly the results of ignorance and want of consideration; we have taken a one-sided view of our neighbour and of his circumstances, and the motives which we impute to him are the fabrications of our own imagination.

Of a man's conduct we are sometimes compelled to judge—"the tree is known by its fruits"; but we are entirely out of our province when we judge of the motives by which he is actuated. God only can read the heart.

"Judge not; the workings of his brain
And of his heart thou canst not see;
What looks to thy dim eyes a stain,
In God's pure light may only be
A scar, brought from some well-won field,
Where thou wouldst only faint and yield.

The look, the air that frets thy sight,
May be a token that below
The soul has closed in deadly fight
With some infernal fiery foe,
Whose glance would scorch thy smiling grace,
And cast thee shuddering on thy face!"

"Judge not" is our Lord's ever-binding command. It is probable that nearly all of us are self-convicted under this impeachment; that we must nearly all plead guilty to having at some time or other, under some circumstances or other, judged. We call it criticism, perhaps, but it comes to the same thing. We are ready to excuse it, but God says it is "inexcusable" (Rom. ii. 1). The words are therefore exactly suited to our case. The apostle pleads, "Let us not judge one another any more." Let us renounce the pernicious, peace-destroying, "inexcusable" besetment; and in order that we may the more effectually do so, "let us consider one another, to provoke unto love and to good works." Possibly we have been content, hitherto, to feel we have not hindered others.

Let us seek, henceforth, to stir each other up; to allure each other to nobler heights of love and purity; to stimulate and strengthen one another. For all this consideration is required. Sliding uphill is no easy accomplishment, whether we take it literally or spiritually, and either to climb ourselves or to tempt others to climb requires something more than a sudden impulse. It would be a mistake to suppose that the exploits of faith are the results of a moment's holy daring. We come upon the precious flower indeed in full bloom, but we know that there has been the bud before the blossom. The chrysalis is before the butterfly. We hear of the successful matriculation, but the long patient years of toil of which we hear nothing are an indispensable part of the success. Of reaching spiritual altitudes it remains true, as it is true of attaining others, that "Whatever hinders or impedes

The action of the noble will,

All these must first be trodden down
Beneath our feet if we would gain,
In the bright fields of fair renown,
The right of eminent domain.

We have not wings, we cannot soar,
But we have feet to scale and climb,
By slow degrees, by more and more,
The cloudy summits of our time."

"Let us consider one another," inasmuch as it is by like steady, patient, believing effort that other souls must rise to higher air, and it is our privilege to cheer them on in the steep ascent.

It surely is not necessary to say that, apart from the grace of God, all human effort is utterly futile. As much for our growth in the divine life as for its first movement in our dead souls, we are dependent upon the Holy Spirit; and of every step of the heavenward path it is true, "Without Me ye can do nothing." But life, if it be real, will make itself known by a holy activity. Christianity is something more than a creed; faith is other than a passive assent to doctrine. The very apostle who most emphatically disclaims works as a ground of acceptance or merit is the very one who repeatedly urges to practical godliness. Neither Paul, nor Peter, nor James was afraid to plead for "good works" as the evidence of an imparted life; and we need not be afraid either.

It has been wisely said that the only incontrovertible evidence of our being Christ's is given by the intensity of our desire to please Him. Nothing can possibly be more practical than faith is. "By faith Abel offered"; "by faith Abraham ... obeyed"; "by faith Moses ... forsook Egypt," and so on throughout the whole record. "A correct opinion will not waft to heaven a carnal mind. An orthodox opinion will not save an unconverted, unsanctified man. The outward form of faith is dead if it have not love within, and break not forth into righteousness" (Arnot). Let us then be eager to remind ourselves, and to stimulate others to that life of Christliness which is our "reasonable service"; keeping in our hearts continually the unanswerable argument, "He died for all, that they who live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto Him who died for them and rose again" (2 Cor. v. 15).

Lucy A. Bennett.

A Curious Reminiscence.

AN Old Subscriber writes: "I should like you to know that it is more than twenty-five years since I was first converted to God at a mission in London. I was rather tossed about, not quite knowing where to worship or what to read, when one Saturday I bought some fish, which was wrapped in a piece of The Christian. Since then I have continued to take it in; and after lending it to a poor friend, I cut the poetry and nice pieces out to fill in scrap-books for hospitals, and the rest is used for laying over apples sent into the London markets, with many prayers that God will bless the pages to some weary son of toil. This, at first, I thought seemed like a waste, but I was led to it by finding a young man whom my husband employs reading a bad novel that had been bought as waste paper for packing. I at once burnt the book, and sent copies of The Christian. I pray God to bless it, and hope to extend its circulation."

(3) The Efficient Cause.—The Divine Spirit. 1 Cor. vi. 11.

(4) The Medium.—The Word of God. Eph. v. 26.

Practical sanctification is the extension of the dominion of the New Creation of God in us, by the power of the indwelling Spirit.

THE TWENTY-THIRD PSALM.

Seven different positions:—
Underneath me—"green pastures" (v. 2).
Beside me—"still waters" (2).
With me—"the Lord" (4).
Before me—"a prepared table" (5).
Around me—"enemies" (5).
Behind me—"goodness and mercy" (6).
Above me—"the house of the Lord" (6).

Seven steps:—
A sheep fed (2). A child guided (2). A backslider restored (3). A friend comforted (4). A warrior feasted (5). A priest anointed (5). A pilgrim housed (6).

A sheep has no responsibility. Who ever heard of a sheep being blamed for anything? All a sheep can do is to go astray. God would rather call us servants or soldiers, for that is more honourable; but if we are not, He will still think of us as his precious lambs.

Note the continuous sense in this psalm—"maketh, leadeth," etc. The God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in going on believing. Food before rest (Ezek. xxxiv. 15). This psalm is consolation at a death bed, and yet gives expression to our most joyous and festive feelings.

THE MORTALITY OF MAN.

(Ps. xc. 12).

The throng of unreturning travellers to eternity is swelled by every class of society. God repeats to man more frequently than his servant did to Philip of Macedon, "Remember, thou art mortal." "What shadows we are, and what shadows we pursue!" cried Edmund Burke on the morning of the Bristol election, his competitor having fallen dead the night before.

We die but as the spring bud dies,
In summer's golden joy to rise;
These be our days of April blessing,
Our July is beyond the tomb.

Time itself we are ever leaving behind us—a solemn thought for us mortals, in view of the disciplinary nature of this life, and its bearing on the unchanging future. Days, months, years—how silently and swiftly do they pass! Time, with all its privileges and responsibilities, all its varieties of experience, all its joys and sorrows, its errors and failures, is daily accumulating behind us.

HEART TROUBLE.

All the trouble in this passage is about Christ. The disciples could not understand Him. Pomp of empire and courts, displays of royal and martial glory, Divine honours and endless reign over subdued nations, and an ever-widening kingdom were to be his. They hoped that all this was at hand. But He whom they had taken as this Messiah talked of going away and dying. The shadow of future trouble—an absent Christ.

Their position was perilous. All that was most powerful of men and influence was set against them in immovable hatred. This had not seemed much while Christ was by to lean upon; but it appeared overwhelming regarded in the light of his absence. Looking upon these men, He knows if the warnings so disturb them, how much the events will be felt, and He directs them to the one anchor—"Believe in Me." Believe that I am right. You think that I am wrong in not taking to myself temporal splendour. You believe that I am wrong because I appear to let my enemies triumph. Because you do not understand, you doubt my rectitude. Do not fear—I am right. Believe that I am love. Absence will not alter love. If ye love Me (v. 15). The laws of states have no preface like this. They are grounded simply upon what appears righteous, and are enforced. Jesus speaks not merely as law-giver, nor is it merely as a friend. As the Saviour-King He appeals to our love, and commands.

American Notes.

CHINATOWN, SAN FRANCISCO.

In a recent meeting, in which the present economic conditions of America and their remedy were discussed, it was said by a speaker representing the working class that if visitors to Los Angeles would turn their attention not only to the loveliness of scenery and vegetation but also to those districts where poverty and misery seek shelter from rain and storm in wretched shanties they would not leave the City of Sunshine with the impression that it was the most favoured spot in the world.

On the other hand, one could say with regard to Chinatown, often supposed to be the most disreputable part of San Francisco, that if travellers took the trouble of looking at it from different sides, they would modify an opinion to which they were predisposed by hearsay. Many trust themselves into the hands of guides, who take them to the worst dens and places of vice. It has been affirmed to us that many developments of sin would not exist but for these guides.

Owing to the kindness of two ladies engaged in mission work among the Chinese, Miss Alexander and Miss Durham, and also of Dr. Minnie Worley, who is practising among the heathen and Christian Chinese families, we had been able to see enough of town and people to draw out our sympathies towards them.

The Chinese New Year, the greatest of their festivals, lasting a whole week, gave us opportunity of SEEING THE CHINESE AT HOME.

On the reception day any friend may call and bring as many friends of his own as he likes. They are kindly welcomed and treated with tea, candy, cake, and Chinese fruit. On the evening of January 22, the illuminated streets of Chinatown were crowded with people. In company of Dr. Worley and Miss Alexander, we visited many Christian and heathen families, and noticed with pleasure how far superior in taste and cleanliness were the homes of the former; but the heathen woman received her guests as gracefully as the Christian did. Introduced to the keepers of drug stores, we were acquainted with their medicine, such as the Chinese doctor prescribes to his patients. He learns his science by tradition, and, according to the wisdom of his ancestors, recommends the bouillon of a dry snake as an antidote to poison, and a decoction of some kind of beetles, boiled with rice, as a cure for fever.

We were told by those who have been working among Chinese for many years, that they are kind-hearted, obliging, and grateful. A lady missionary being asked whether she was not so late as 9 o'clock in the evening, exclaimed: "Oh, no, I never feel safer than among the Chinese; I begin to be afraid when I get beyond the limits of Chinatown, and hasten through the streets where the white people live."

The Chinese lack of charity towards the poor and destitute, and the cruelty of some of their customs, are not a part of their nature, but of their religion, which is full of superstition and dread of the unseen. They send their sick away to die in dark, stuffy places, called the Chambers of Tranquillity, because they are not allowed to touch the dead bodies. The house of the dying serves as a refuge for the homeless, penniless, and those unable to work. We saw among others, demoralised by the use of opium, a poor old man, who had been there for a number of years. He was suffering from atrophy of the muscles. His neglected body, on a heap of dirty rags, presented a pitiful sight. We wondered why he was not taken to a hospital. Dr. Minnie Worley, who, in a quiet and self-denying way, does much good among the destitute, answered with a sad smile: "They would not take him; they would send him to the Leper Hospital. They did so with another man. He was attended to and waited upon by lepers. He almost died of fear of taking that terrible disease." "Is there no hospital for the Chinese?" "No, some Christians took the initiative by collecting money among Chinese and others. A place was bought, but as soon as the purpose of it was known to the owners of the neighbouring estates they unitedly opposed the building of a hospital." Chinatown has over 25,000 inhabitants, several churches, and no place where to tend the sick. The charitable efforts of a few individuals, sometimes of the Salvation Army, provide them with the necessaries of life. Yet there is

A BRIGHT SIDE TO THIS SAD PICTURE.

The churches and missions in Chinatown, comprising the Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist, and Congregational, are slowly but surely progressing in their evangelising work. At the dedication of the (Congregational) New Central Mission Home of the California Chinese Mission as a Christian home for young men, we had the pleasure of meeting with Rev. W. C. Pond, whose heart and soul are engaged in the conversion of the Chinese. Among other incidents referring to the building of the Home a touching story was related of some poor Christian Indian women of the Sioux tribe, who, having heard of the want of their Chinese brethren, and wishing to extend a helping hand to them, collected three dollars among themselves and sent the money to San Francisco. Rev. Jee Gam, the assistant minister, and a faithful worker among his native brethren for twenty-seven years, expressed his gratitude to the friends of the Mission more eloquently by his tears than his words.

We also attended some meetings at the Presbyterian Mission

HOME FOR CHINESE GIRLS.

It belongs to the Occidental Board, as it is called, formed twenty-four years ago, and is one of the seven women's boards of the Presbyterian Church, working under the direction of the General Assembly's Board of Foreign Missions. The Mission embraces the evangelistic, educational, and medical work, and sends out missionaries to Africa, Syria, China, Japan, and supports schools and native teachers in almost every land.

The keynote of those meetings, at which different denominations were present, was love for Christ. The presiding lady, Mrs. Brown, made an appeal saying: "We do not want your money, we want yourselves. If your hearts and your minds are enlisted in the work, the result is sure to be a blessed one." One brother urged Christians to make it a point in their travels to look up missionaries; it would be beneficial to themselves as well as to those they are visiting. Others suggested that workers in foreign fields should be written to frequently and encouragingly, and sympathy shown to them by sending them books, papers, music, and other matters of interest.

The chief speaker was Major Hilton, an evangelist greatly used of God. At the time of conversion, eighteen years ago, he was in the Army. He has been preaching the Gospel for the last fifteen years. During our stay in San Francisco he had a ten days' mission at one of the suburban Presbyterian churches. We were greatly struck by the directness and clearness of his addresses. He appealed to the lost human soul with the convincing accent of truth and persuasion which came from a keen personal experience. WILMA MORGAN.

General Booth has just visited this town, where he spoke in the afternoon to a large congregation in the M.E. Church on "Boundless Salvation," and in the evening in a public hall to a still larger audience on his social work. He makes a point of being interviewed by the representatives of the Press in every town, and often has the opportunity of speaking to them of the great salvation. Having been asked what he thought of the strained relations being the United States and Spain, he replied that he did not think that either desired war, and added:—

I know only the heart of England, and that I know as perhaps no other man can. I am linked to her people by an almost mysterious bond, and I fully realise that England is a peaceful nation, with an especially warm regard for the United States. You cannot know as I do how strong that regard is.

It is good to emphasise this latter fact. I had just had the opportunity of saying the same at the Y.M.C.A. Convention at Riverside, and the sentiment was warmly responded to. We must not exaggerate the anti-British feeling, even in these Western States. It does not exist in the better and more responsible people, though no doubt the Irish Romanist is an important factor in politics, antagonistic to Great Britain.

General Booth returns by the American on April 27. We hope to come by the same vessel.

Los Angeles, March 1. R. COPE MORGAN.

An Interesting People.

THE Druses have won for themselves a world-wide fame, and stand out as a distinct and separate people among the Turks. They are very well known to the world by name, I think, but very few people seem to know much about them. They number about 300,000 souls, and occupy the mountains of Lebanon and the neighbourhood of Hermon and Hauran. They may also be found in small numbers in Damascus, Beyrout, Safed, Aleppo, and their suburbs.

Although they believe in one God, yet they differ from other Unitarians in many respects, one of which is their belief in the transmigration of souls, and in this again they are different from the Chinese and other Asiatics—in that they believe that souls are transmigrated from one human being to another, and not to lower animals. Their hope is in God's mercy, for, while admitting that "all have sinned and come short of the glory of God," they think that if they try their best to do good and avoid evil God will have pity on them and forgive their shortcomings. They know nothing of Christ as the Son of God and the Saviour of the world, and through whom was manifested God's love and mercy to man. In a word, the Druse religion may be said to be an extract from the moral law in the Bible and in the Koran, and by a founder who denounces Christ and Mohammed, and claims for himself Divine authority for instituting what he calls the true faith.

It is their custom not to possess more than one wife at a time, but they are allowed to divorce. Smoking and drinking are religiously prohibited. They are devout worshippers, and, as a class, honest and hospitable people. Their courage and warlike spirit have won for them some fame, and although less numerous they are greatly dreaded by all their neighbours. They are much behind in education, the majority not being able to read their own language, which is Arabic. They dress and live like most other Easterns, but they, like many others, are slowly adopting European fashions.

It is perfectly true that different missions have had to do with a few individuals, but as a people the Druses have not yet had Christ preached to them, and they have been greatly neglected by the Christian world. Mrs. Meredith's Palestine and Lebanon Mission nurses have now a station in Baakleen, in Mount Lebanon, an important Druse centre, where they have a qualified medical missionary, two or three trained nurses, a lady superintendent, and a Bible-woman. They have also a cottage hospital, and a large dispensary for out-patients. The work is highly appreciated by Druses, and they come in great numbers to have their bodily ailments attended to, and to hear the Gospel message, which is delivered to them before the clinic opens.

Three things have to be borne in mind, against which missionaries to the Druses have to contend:—

First.—Being extremely ignorant as a class, they are more superstitious and less ready to adopt new ideas, clinging tenaciously to their old whims; hence, mission work among them ought to be supplemented by schools for education, where the young will come under the influence of Christianity before they have time to become prejudiced against it.

Second.—The Druses get a wrong idea of Christianity from their neighbours the Maronites, who are great worshippers of pictures and of the Virgin Mary; and, being their political enemies, they have come to look upon Christianity as another name for idolatry. It takes a long time to undeceive them, and to show them that the mercy that they are seeking from God they can only obtain through Christ.

Third.—Their religion having been kept secret all this time it has remained beyond the criticism of the world, while almost every other religion has been questioned by some writers; consequently the Druses take that as a sign of the superiority of their faith.

I hope this letter may prove of some service to those who find it laid upon their hearts, either to go and preach the Gospel to the Druses, or start schools among them, or help the mission already working at Baakleen. Mrs. Meredith's mission was started twelve years ago by a lady, in a marvellous way, and was providentially conducted throughout. It has only been in Mrs. Meredith's hands for three years or so, and although still in its infancy, is highly appreciated by the people, and greatly blessed by God. A trained nurse is now pressingly needed.

Baakleen, Syria. MEDICAL MISSIONARY.

"Jack" at Dunkerque.

THE Sailors' Rest at Dunkerque is the centre of much interesting work, faithfully carried on by Mr. and Mrs. Stewart Mackenzie. The annual report gives details that cannot but be read with pleasure by all friends of seamen. We make a brief extract :—

The month of January is a time of trial in our work here—and why? A fair is held annually, which opens on the first day of the year. The large square and every open space is filled with stalls of every kind, shooting saloons, shows, and a huge circus, all of which are not only open on week days, but in full swing on Sundays. These things prove very attractive to our sailors.

We made it a matter of prayer this season that God would encourage us by sending more seamen than usual to the "Rest," and that we might see definite results. The first Sunday there was a good attendance at the Bethel service, but no one remained for an after-meeting. We felt disappointed, and were about to close, when the door opened and three seamen entered, two of them old friends. They asked if the service was over; we replied that it was not too late to begin again. Our friends were earnest Christians and good singers, so with heart and voice we began to praise the Lord.

Struck with the delicate appearance of their young companion,

WHOM THEY CALLED "JACK,"

we inquired if he also was on the Lord's side, but were told that he had not yet decided. We spoke to him of the danger and folly of delay, and the joy and peace which Jesus alone can give. He listened attentively with a far-away look in his eyes, which told that he was not far from the Kingdom. We all knelt in prayer, when, to our intense joy, the silence was broken by the voice of Jack in low earnest tones, "Lord Jesus, I am very weak and sinful, but I accept me in thy love, and keep me faithful to Thee." We rose and sang "All hail the power of Jesus' Name."

SIGN ARTICLES FOR THEE TO-NIGHT;

Jack came up the next evening with a bright, happy look, as if he had not a care in the world, without any pressure from us signed the total abstinence pledge, and put on the "bit of blue." His vessel has been in the port several times since, and he never fails to pay us a visit; we also learn from those who sail with him that his conduct is consistent with his profession.

The case of this young sailor illustrates the inspired Word, "One soweth and another reapeth." He had been some time under the influence of his two companions on board, whose godly conversation and example, no doubt, had its effect. We are convinced that there are numbers of young men who, like Jack, only need the touch of loving sympathy to bring them to decision. Thus, our prayers were answered, and, notwithstanding the fair, the attendance at the services have been more than doubled.

Canadian Churchmen.

IN July next Dr. J. Travers Lewis, the Archbishop of Ontario and Metropolitan of Canada, celebrates his ministerial jubilee. In connection with this event, the clergy and laity of his diocese are endeavouring to place the Episcopal, Widows and Orphans', and Superannuation Funds on a sound basis, and to this end a sum of £20,000 is required. In support of this scheme a drawing-room meeting was held recently at the Mansion House, at which the Lord Mayor presided.

The Archdeacon of Ontario, Dr. T. Bedford Jones, referred to the distinguished career of Dr. Lewis, and said that when the subject of a testimonial was mentioned to him, the Archbishop at once suggested that no personal offering should be made, but that any funds that might be got together should be devoted to the welfare of the diocese.

The Archbishop of Canterbury said that the appeal was of such a character that everyone should do his utmost to assist his Canadian clerical brethren. The Marquis of Lorne said he knew that many of the Canadian clergy lived in houses that no English squire would consider good enough for his gamekeeper.

The Situation in Japan.

REV. J. L. ATKINSON, missionary of the American Board at Kobe, Japan, writes:—"Interest in religious matters is not very active at present, though there is interest of an encouraging kind. The day of wild discussion has gone by, and the prevalent writing and preaching are of a more practical character. A valuable book on experimental religion has been recently published in Japanese, and I think the movement of Christians and inquirers is very much in that direction.

"The Doshisha College, whose new president is Mr. T. Yokai, does not resume its former Evangelical spirit, but some encouraging symptoms are visible. The missionaries of the American Board are occasionally invited to preach in the College chapel; Mr. Cady, a former missionary, is now a teacher of the English language and literature. Mr. Yokai is on very friendly relations with the members of the mission resident in Kyoto, as well as with others.

"So far as the general work goes, the only thing that can be said is that, breaking up the ground, sowing more seed, and training the churches, occupies the time and strength of both foreign and native workers. There are some additions to all the churches, but the time of a large ingathering has not yet arrived. The American Board Mission has now ten men in a very modest sort of school, which it has opened in Kyoto for the training of young men for the ministry. Both students and teachers are very happy in their work.

"While speaking of the interest taken in themes of experimental religion, allow me to say that I should be very glad if friends in England would send me books of the useful class advertised in THE CHRISTIAN. I should be glad to be the agent for their distribution among English-reading pastors and evangelists. The salary of these and of the foreign missionaries is too small to provide such helpful material. Practical, experimental, and evangelical books would be very useful here."

Mr. Atkinson's full address is—55, Yama Moto Dori, 5, Che Me, Kobe, Japan.

Missionary Work in China.

THE committee of the Church Missionary Society have adopted a minute, in which they say:—"The population of China is estimated at more than one-fifth of the entire population of the world. Counting all bodies of Protestant Christians, there is only one missionary for, say, every 250,000 of its inhabitants, while the number of Church of England workers foreign to the country of both sexes does not probably exceed 230. It is estimated that China has over 1,000,000 unevangelized villages, varying in population up to 20,000. The present position of the Church of Christ in the country is far from discouraging. In 1842 the number of its communicants attached to the Protestant churches was six; it is now over 70,000."

But in order to justify them in appealing to the Church of Christ at large, and to their own supporters in particular, in behalf of a great extension of missionary work in China, the committee give a brief account of the marked change which has recently taken place in that land, both in the minds of the Chinese and in the political position of the country. The long-closed province of Hu-nan, from which for years poured forth the foul stream of blasphemous anti-Christian literature, which had so large a share in evoking many of the fanatical outbursts against Christianity, is now about to be thrown open to Western influences. Rev. W. Banister has recently reminded the committee of the extensive opportunity for missionary enterprise afforded by the recent opening of the West River with the new treaty port of Wuchau, some 220 miles from Canton; and now the British nation is officially informed of the "concessions" which have been agreed to by the Chinese Government on the representations of Her Majesty's Minister at Peking. A glance at the map of China will show what a vast area of country, north, west, and south, is included in the valley of the Yang-tsze in its course of 3,000 miles, and the whole of this country is by the above "concessions" thrown more open than ever to missionary enterprise.

Chicago Bible Institute.

THE eighth annual report of this well-known institution reveals some extremely interesting figures. The students enrolled numbered 478,322 men and 156 women. These figures do not include non-resident students, or those attending the five night-classes. The total number of persons enrolled in these classes exceeds 3700. They came from thirty states and territories, and no less than fifteen foreign countries were also represented.

Reports from old students show that they are leading active and useful lives in all parts of the globe. Of those who left during 1897:—Thirty-four are pastors, pastors' assistants, and church missionaries, thirteen are in city rescue and mission work, thirty-one are evangelistic preachers and singers, six are Sunday-school missionaries, three are Y.M.C.A. secretaries, four are Y.W.C.A. secretaries, eight are colporteurs, sixteen are in educational work, twenty-two are college students and others who came for special courses, eighteen are foreign missionaries in China, South and Central America, Africa, Japan, Persia, Corea, West Indies, and Mexico, and one is under appointment.

Since the Bible Institute was founded, in 1889, two Bible lectures have been held daily on an average, and two music classes, without break. 1535 students have been enrolled in the men's department; 766 in the women's department. Of those who have passed through the institution, 195 are in city rescue and home missions, 165 are in evangelistic work as preachers or singers, 277 are pastors, pastors' assistants, and church visitors, 41 are Sunday-school missionaries, 23 are Christian Association secretaries, 21 are colporteurs, 117 are in foreign lands, 21 are in educational and philanthropic work, 67 are superintendents of city missions and other responsible institutions in the largest cities on the Continent. Many others have returned to secular occupations, equipped for better service in connection with their home churches by the training received at the Bible Institute.

Japanese Sailors.—By the end of this week over 300 sailors from Japan will be in London. Two hundred of these are navy men coming to fetch a newly-built battleship from Newcastle. Miss M. M'Lean, 62, Coolfin-road, Custom House, E., would be glad if friends will enable her to get a supply of book-bags for early distribution to these visitors to our shores.

Central France.—M. E. Camus, who has been pastor at Moulins, Allier, for twenty-five years, writes: "The Reformation in this part of France dates from 1562; the Protestants then had three places of worship in this county—one in a suburb of Moulins, the second at Chantelle, and the third at Glerisson. But by the year 1632 they had been driven away through persecution, and had disappeared. The church now existing at Moulins was founded in 1858, soon after which date the pastor founded churches at Montluçon and Vichy. My charge consists in preaching at Moulins and Vichy, and visiting the Protestants scattered throughout the country. To build the church and pastor's house I collected money in France, England, and Scotland. There is still a debt of £250, which occasions much anxiety. We pray that the work may soon be freed from debt, and continue to show the light of the Gospel in this centre of France." The work of M. Camus is well known to Sir Donald Currie, Pastor Theodore Monod, M. Reveillaud, and others.

Chinamen and Englishwomen.—The committee of the Shanghai branch of the China Association call attention to a practice which has not as yet become very common, but which has reached a point where it can no longer be ignored, viz., the contracting of marriages in England between English girls and Chinese subjects. "Such unions," the committee remark, "are not illegal, and from some points of view possibly not improper, and it is consequently impossible to call upon the authorities to interfere; but the committee desire to point out as strongly as they can that the present condition of affairs in China is such as to make the chances of a happy result of such a marriage almost nil, while there is not the slightest prospect of any change taking place during the lifetime of the present generation sufficient to justify an Englishwoman in counting on even a tolerably comfortable life if allied to a Chinese husband. So long as the married couple reside in Europe the result may be tolerable, but almost every Chinaman returns sooner or later to China, and there, whatever the husband may do, the position of the foreign wife is in the present state of Chinese society absolutely intolerable."

Steps to Faith.

By Rev. E. GRIFFITH-JONES, B.A.

"If I have told you earthly things, and ye believe not, how shall ye believe if I tell you heavenly things?"—John iii. 12.

THERE are many people in these days who seem to be in the same spiritual condition as this Jewish Rabbi. They are dissatisfied with the moulds of religious thought in which they were brought up. Many of the old doctrines do not appeal to them. Strange theories are abroad, which seem to them subversive of the religion of their forefathers.

But they are athirst for truth, and passionately anxious to possess a religion—only it must be a religion of realities, not of empty words or dead beliefs. How shall they set about mastering a creed for themselves? How come once more to a faith that shall be vital, and comforting, and full of motive-power? Are these great eternal questions of Duty, God, Atonement, Immortality to be handed over to a committee of experts, of "higher critics," to settle for the rest of the world? And are common men to stand by till these gentlemen have settled their quarrel and come to a new science of religion? Or is there some way in which they can take up the case for themselves, and come to a working creed for the direction of their conduct, the guidance of their lives? If it is to be a question of study, they will have to give it up; they have no time for that, no qualifications, no training. Meanwhile time passes, temptations press, their heart is homeless,

THEY NEED A SAVIOUR AND A RELIGION.

To such people the words of my text ought to come home with special helpfulness. For here Jesus Christ, the great Teacher, as well as the perfect embodiment, of religious truth, suggests the true method along which every man who is teachable and willing, however sceptical he may be, can come to religious certainty—or at least so much of it as is needful for the purposes of life.

"If I have told you earthly things." Then earthly things have some connection with heavenly. Sky and land meet somewhere. The unseen permeates the seen, the realities of faith are rooted in those of sense. In some dim and unreal way we can judge of the seen by the unseen. Heavenly and earthly truths have some realm in common. All the great doctrines concerning the spiritual world—God, Sin, the New Birth, Atonement, Redemption, Eternal Life—do not hang in the air, but have, as it were, an earthly end, by which we may grasp them, and

"Grasp," says Dr. Newman Smyth, in Personal Creeds, "with a firm faith those religious truths that are let down within your reach, and let them swing you up to higher knowledge. But do not let us pretend to have been wafted up into the top boughs of the tree of Christian knowledge, if we have not cared to lay hold of the branches within our reach close to the ground, and climb up by them."

There are steps to belief, and one step should be such as to lead naturally to the other. Sometimes Christian teachers demand in their converts an acceptance of the Christian position in the lump, as it were. They are taught to repeat the Apostles' Creed, and the Nicene Creed, or even the Athanasian Creed, and they are expected to believe them—then they are Christians. On the other hand, young inquirers sometimes act as though every mystery of the faith is capable of being made clear to them, and must be so made, ere they will be satisfied.

If you face the matter, you will see that this is an absurdity. We do not take up an attitude of that kind in any other department of learning, theoretical or practical. If you are studying mathematics, you of arithmetic, and leave logarithms and the differential calculus till you are fit for them. The student who attacks quantities in algebra before he has mastered the signs will only come to grief. Nor does an apprentice demand that he should be able to perform the complicated operations of carpentry ere he has learnt to use the saw, and the hammer, and the chisel. Let him start with learning how to drive a nail straight into a board.

We begin in our studies with the known and the simple, and then go to the complex and the unknown. And

THAT IS THE METHOD OF JESUS.

First the elementary, the first principles of the oracles of God; then slowly the greater mysteries and doctrines; and finally the deep things of God. First lay hold of the earthly ends of heavenly truth, then climb the heights. First see that you pass through the essential experiences, the doorway of religious life; then rise to the ampler vision, the nobler truths, the inner secrets of the Divine science. This is the true way of faith as it is the way of life.

See how this applies to the case before us. Nicodemus came to Jesus with great ultimate questions and problems, and wanted the philosophy of the Christian life at a sitting. Jesus at once put him back into the infant class. He saw that this Rabbi—this bishop, as it were, of the Hebrew Church—was totally ignorant of the first principles of religion, and he will tell him nothing of the ultimates till these have been laid hold of. "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born anew, he cannot see the Kingdom of God." At once Nicodemus, eager and teachable as he was, betrays his ignorance. He cannot even grasp the difference between a simile and the reality. He is lost on the threshold. And Jesus keeps him there, and will not take him a step further till he has realised his ignorance and of conversion. For until that step is taken no progress can be made. Only those within the kingdom can understand the things of the kingdom. To the outsider they must be for ever a closed book.

"The natural man understandeth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he understand them, for they are spiritually discerned" (1 Cor. ii. 14). The disciples came and said unto Him, Why speakest thou to them in parables? He answered and said unto them, Because it is given to you to know the mysteries of the Kingdom of Heaven, but to them it is not given (Matt xiii. 11)—i.e., till they become disciples; then they, too, shall know, for they, too, will have passed through the narrow place where heavenly things first burst upon the astonished view.

"STILLBORN THEOLOGY."

There is an abstract theology that can be elaborated and classified and reduced into an exact science, as you do the anatomy of a corpse in the dissecting room, or the figures of geometry in the professor's lecture hall. There is a good deal of this kind of theology manufactured in Germany and elsewhere. You will find it in elaborate treatises packed with learning, and most conscientiously put together. All the doctrines are there, and they are discussed with the acumen, the erudition, the insight (and the coldness) of men who would discuss the manners and customs of the inhabitants of Mars. Nor are they without their uses. A believing, experimental Christian will find mental stimulus and refreshment in them whereby he may convict his own narrowness of view, and enter on the broader heritage of truth. But there is the mark of earthliness about them—they never betray the personal touch. They tell you nothing of what their authors have "seen and felt and handled of the Word of Life." Whether they have ever been converted, whether they have ever been prostrate before the cross of the dying Redeemer, crying aloud for pardon and release from the bondage of sin; whether they have wrestled with self-despair, trusted in the blood of Christ, and felt the cleansing stream, and risen new men, emancipated, redeemed, with the power of an endless life within their hearts—of all this there is no sign. And so these systems of theology are still-born; they tell of the heavenly things in the language and accent of the earth, and they are helpless to bring the world into a knowledge of the truth. Let the earthly lead you to the heavenly, and try not to scale the heights without the progressive aids which the teaching of Jesus gives.

The Catacombs of Rome is the subject of a lecture which Mr. Henry Martyn Barnett has been delivering in several parts of London, accompanied by dissolving views. A few days ago Mr. Barnett visited Kilburn, under the auspices of the Holy Trinity Mutual Improvement Society, when the meeting was presided over by Rev. Stuart Churchill. The lecture was full of instruction and of deep interest. Communications to Mr. Barnett may be addressed, 91, Darenth-road, Stamford Hill, N.

A Martyr's Bible.

IN the days of Queen Mary seventeen noble men and women "went home" in a chariot of fire in the quaint old country town of Lewes, in Sussex. They suffered for the sake of Jesus, as witnesses for his truth, and against the errors and tyrannies of Rome. The first to suffer was a worthy inhabitant of Brighthelmstone (now known as Brighton), named Derrick Carver. The order was that his Bible should be burned with him. He was imprisoned in the cells under the "Star" Inn, and on the appointed day was led out to suffer.

A large cask was prepared, in which Carver was to stand surrounded by faggots and combustibles. His Bible was first thrown into the cask, and then the faithful witness was himself placed in it. The fire was lighted, but the heroic sufferer managed to get hold of his Bible, and, as a last effort, threw it out into the crowd. Like Bunyan's Faithful, "he was carried up through the clouds, the nearest way to the celestial gate," but his Bible lived!

Over three hundred years pass by, and in 1898 a few earnest Protestants are endeavouring to raise a monument, a martyrs' memorial, to the memory of Derrick Carver and the other faithful souls. In aid of this effort Mr. W. Stanley Martin has been delivering in the locality his lantern lecture "Some Famous Bonfires," and at one of the meetings intense interest was created by the production of the very Bible which Rome intended to burn, but which God had preserved. Derrick Carver's signature occurs in it. Some of its pages are blood-stained, and here and there the charred edges tell of a near escape from destruction.

This relic brings those far-off days very near to us, and emphasises Rome's hatred against God's truth. In a short time it is hoped that high up on one of the breezy downs that surround the interesting old town the Martyrs' Memorial will rear its head, a land-mark for miles around. Where the Star Inn stood the municipal buildings now stand, but the steps leading from the cells up which the martyrs walked are still in existence. When the necessary funds are forthcoming the erection of the monument will be proceeded with. In the meanwhile, Mr. A. Morris, High-street, Lewes, will be glad to supply information.

What Think Ye of Christ?

WHAT think ye of Christ? is the test
To try both your state and your scheme;
You cannot be right in the rest,
Unless you think rightly of Him.
As Jesus appears in your view,
As He is beloved or not;
So God is disposed to you,
And mercy or wrath is your lot.

Some take Him a creature to be,
A man, or an angel at most;
Sure these have not feelings like me,
Nor know themselves wretched and lost;
So guilty, so helpless am I,
I durst not confide in his blood,
Nor on his protection rely,
Unless I were sure He is God.

Some call Him a Saviour in word,
But mix their own works with his plan;
And hope He his help will afford,
When they have done all that they can:
If doings prove rather too light,
(A little, they own, they may fail),
They purpose to make up full weight,
By casting his Name in the scale.

Some style Him the Pearl of great price,
And say He's the fountain of joys;
Yet feed upon folly and vice,
And cleave to the world and its toys;
Like Judas, the Saviour they kiss,
And while they salute Him, betray;
Ah! what will profession like this
Avail in his terrible day?

If asked, what of Jesus I think,
Though still my best thoughts are but poor,
I say, He's my meat and my drink,
My Life, and my Strength, and my Store;
My Shepherd, my Husband, my Friend,
My Saviour from sin and from thrall;
My hope from beginning to end,
My Portion, my Lord, and my All.

—John Newton (1779).

Our Daily Homily

SUNDAY, March 27.

"Every one when he is perfected shall be as his Master."—Luke vi. 40 (R.V.)

We are not perfected yet. There is a great chasm between our highest and our Master's lowest, between where we stop and He begins: between our light, which is twilight at best, and His meridian glory. When we compare ourselves with ourselves, or with our neighbours, our standard is altogether too low; we should compare ourselves with Him, the beloved Master.

But we shall be perfected one day. That when has a hopeful ring. God "will perfect that which concerneth us," because his mercy endureth for ever, and He will not forsake work to which He has once put his hands. When he is perfected! When? Not till sorrow, sanctified by God's grace, has done its work; not till the snow and frost, the light shower and the bitter wind, the earth and sun have contributed their shares to the desired quota. Not till the perfect image of Jesus has emerged from the sculptured stone; not till the molten metal reflects each lineament of the glorified Lord—then we shall be perfected.

When we are perfected we shall be as our Master. "We shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is." It seems altogether too much to expect! To think that we shall be changed into his image, that we shall bear his impress, that we shall be as like Him as Gideon's brethren to Gideon, of whom the princes of Midian testified that they were like the children of a king. Yet it shall be so. The Lord Jesus became like unto us in our low estate, that we should become like Him in his glory. There must ever be the limitation of the creature as compared with Him by whom all things were made.

MONDAY, March 28.

"When the Lord saw her, He had compassion on her, and said, Weep not."—Luke vii. 13.

No widow stands by the bier of her only son, no mother by the empty cot of her babe, no lover beside the fading beauty of his beloved, but the Son of Man, unseen but glorious, is at hand, seeing, understanding, touched with compassion, and saying, in his tenderest tones, "Weep not."

Weep not: Love is eternal. Hast thou forgotten that there are three things which abide for evermore, the greatest of which is Love? Dost thou not remember that the risen Lord greeted his disciples, after his resurrection, with the yearning desire of a loving heart, Lovest thou Me? Is not love of God, and can God's love change, and pass away? No, though severed from your sight, the dear ones that have gone are thine to-day, and have not forgotten, but love thee still.

Weep not: recognition of the beloved dead is certain. Did not Mary and the women, Peter and 500 more recognise Jesus after his resurrection? Is He not the specimen Man? Are we not to be like Him? Recognition went so far in his case that the Magdalene recognised the very tones of his voice, when He said Mary, and she answered Rabboni. Yes, though refined and purified, the face thou hast loved shall smile, and the tones that have made thy heart-music shall speak again. Weep not!

Weep not: they shall rise again, never more to be separated. The Lord raised this youth to life, but there had to be another parting, when his mother or he died. But when thy dear ones are reunited to thee, and when they and thou meet in the bridal-chamber, there will be no more partings.

TUESDAY, March 29.

"Master, the multitudes press Thee. Jesus said, Some one did touch Me."—Luke viii. 45, 46.

Amid the pressure of the crowd that crushed on Him from all sides, Jesus detected the light touch of one thin hand, which drew from Him healing virtue. We may be very near Christ, and throng Him, without touching; but no one can touch Him, however lightly, without deriving the very grace needed.

We think of Jesus to-day amid the thronging crowds of angels, and spirits of the just made perfect. Amid their voices will ours be heard? Amid the pressure of their attendance on his sacred Person will He stay to recognise our poor trembling touch? Amid the vast interests that depend on Him, the government of the universe, the holding together and consistence of all things, is there any likelihood of our need asserting itself successfully? See, He is hastening on to raise the dead; there is many a daughter of many a Jairus waiting for his summons, in the sleeping places of the dead.

There is the touch which compels his recognition. He has always time to turn and give that. There is the touch of prayer and faith. Thou canst never exercise it, however simply, without eliciting an immediate response. There may be a good deal of mistake and superstition, as there was in this woman, who seemed to have thought that virtue clung to his robes, but He will distinguish the soul of holy trust amid many false ingredients. There is also the touch of affection. He knew when the woman crept to kiss his feet. He did not instantly speak of it, but said afterwards, "from the time I came in she hath not ceased to kiss my feet." No love is lost on Him!

WEDNESDAY, March 30.

"Behold, there talked with Him two men, which were Moses and Elijah; who spoke of his decease.—Luke ix. 31.

What a view was this, on the slopes of Lebanon, with light transcending that of the moonlight shining in the upper heights! And what converse! Possibly that transfiguration was an example of the way in which Adam and all his race might have passed into heaven, had not death come on us all through sin; and therefore it was the greater proof of the love of our Lord, when He deliberately turned from all the radiant light and took the way of the cross. That death is here called an exodus; such is the Greek word rendered decease.

Moses would remind Him of the lamb that would be slain before the people could escape from Egypt; of the rock that must be smitten before the water could flow forth for the thirsty crowds; of the serpent that must be fixed on the pole before the dying Israelites could look and live.

Elijah represented the entire band of holy men who searched what the Spirit of God which was in them did prophesy in foretelling beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow. He would remind the Lord of Psalm xxii., passing into light, of Isaiah liii., finishing with a burst of triumph, and many another sacred and familiar passage.

And after all it was only an exodus, the going forth of his spirit from the Time-sphere to the Eternal, from contact with a very weary world to victory and joy-mending. It must have been this talk that so far robbed death of its terror in the heart of one of the disciples at least, who spoke of his own death also as an exodus (2 Peter i. 15).

"I beheld Satan fallen as lightning from heaven."—Luke x. 18.

This was Christ's vision of the effect of his work in man's nature, and on man's behalf. For ages Satan had vaunted his power over man, but now and henceforward the demon-nature was to be vanquished by the name and nature of Jesus Christ. Whenever you are tempted by the demon of alcohol, of passion, of jealousy, or any other, claim instantly the protection of the Name which is above every name: make Jesus your strong tower into which you shall run and be safe: realise all that it stands for: and you will find that the demons will be subject to you. In your life also, Satan will "fall from heaven."

And what is true in your own life is true also of your influence over others. If you dare to live in the Risen Christ, you share his empire and all the fruits of his victory over Satan. He gives you authority over serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy. The Christ nature within you is the dominant, triumphant power to which all power must ultimately yield. Dare to use it. In conflict with the demon spirits that haunt so many lives, in antagonising the giant forces that are so strongly entrenched in our natural life, be sure to rely, not on numbers or organisation, but on the name of Jesus, used not as a charm, but as representing his living and ascended might.

And let it be carefully noted that as the success of these disciples over a few demons in the villages and towns of Israel reacted on the balance of power in the heavenlies, so there is no victory won anywhere by some lonely disciple, or handful of disciples, that does not react on the entire battle-field in which light and darkness contend for the mastery.

FRIDAY, April 1.

"Lord, teach us to pray." Luke xi. 1.

It was a wise and good request, prompted by the Saviour's own practice. He did not, in the first instance, command his disciples to pray, but He gave Himself to the blessed practice of prayer, and this made them eager to learn and practise the holy art. This is the best way of inculcating new and holy habits on those who surround us in our homes and scenes of daily life. Do not begin by exhorting them; but begin by living before them a life so holy, so unselfish, so consecrated and devout, that they shall spontaneously approach you, saying, "Give us your secret, tell us how we may do and become as you."

We need to ask Jesus daily to teach us to pray. Each time we kneel in prayer we may well preface our petitions with the sentence: "We know not what we should pray for as we ought, but by thy Holy Spirit, Lord, teach us to pray." And probably the Lord's answer will fall into maxims, borrowed from the form and model of prayer, which He gave his disciples. It has been called the Lord's Prayer; it should be called the Disciples'.

Address prayer to the Father, through the Son. Do not be selfish in prayer, but look out on the needs of others, incorporating them in every petition, us, we, our. Remember, you are speaking to your Father, and that his honour and glory should have a paramount and foremost place. If you desire first the hallowing of his name, and the coming of his kingdom, all your personal needs and desires will fall easily and naturally into their place, which will be a comparatively subordinate one. You will need forgiveness as regularly as your daily bread.

So often through this discourse the Lord refers to anxiety. "Be not anxious how or what ye shall answer" (11). "Which of you by being anxious can add?" (25). "Why are ye anxious?" (26). There must have been a great strain on the crowds who listened to Him; and there was every likelihood of the strain becoming even greater for his disciples as the years passed on. So, also, the characteristic of our age is anxious strain.

But the heart of Jesus was always at peace. His life was calm amid the storms of life, as the coral-island with its fronded palms and lagoons of still water is peaceful amid the ocean-tossed ocean, because of the protection of its reef. The surf breaks there, but does not intrude further. The secrets of Jesus were the perpetual presence of God in his soul, and his never-faltering faith in the loving, careful providence of God in all the experiences of his chequered life.

Can we not have this? We may if we are willing to pay the price. If we will resign or surrender our will utterly to Him; if we will tear down every veil that might hide his face, and throw open our whole being to his indwelling and use; if we will cease scheming, planning, devising, and fall back on the absolute care and arrangements of God; if we will learn to reckon on God as absolutely as on any resourceful human friend; if we will dare to believe that God holds Himself responsible for the sustenance and equipment for duty of all who absolutely seek his glory—then

> The cares that infest the day
> Shall pack up their tents as the Arabs,
> And as silently steal away.

Principles and Practice of the Late Mr. George Müller.

THE late Mr. Müller was a man of strong convictions and deeply-rooted principles. His convictions were the ground of a steady faith; his principles were the consistent support of his active life. In neither of these did he judge others; he was content to set an example of absolute confidence in God, and to assert his individual liberty of action on questions regarding which Christians "agree to differ." We give a few notes on his principles, some taken from his book, "Narrative of the Lord's Dealings"; others contributed by intimate friends.

WHAT A SURRENDERED LIFE INVOLVES.

"The passage to which I have just now alluded, John vii. 17, has been a most remarkable comment to me on many doctrines and precepts of our most holy faith. For instance: 'Resist not evil: but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also. And if any man will sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also. And whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain. Give to him that asketh thee, and from him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away. Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you' (Matt. v. 39-44). 'Sell that you have, and give alms' (Luke xii. 33). 'Owe no man anything, but to love one another' (Rom. xiii. 8). It may be said, surely these passages cannot be taken literally, for how then would the people of God be able to pass through the world? The state of mind enjoined in John vii. 17 will cause such objections to vanish. Whosoever is willing to act out these commandments of the Lord literally, will, I believe, be led with me to see that to take them literally is the will of God.

"Those who do so take them, will doubtless often be brought into difficulties, hard to the flesh to bear, but these will have a tendency to make them constantly feel that they are strangers and pilgrims here, that this world is not their home, and thus to throw them more upon God, who will assuredly help us through any difficulty into which we may be brought by seeking to act in obedience to his Word.

"Since the time I began living in this way I have been kept from speaking either directly or indirectly about my wants at the time I was in need. But whilst I have refrained, and do still habitually refrain, from speaking to my fellow-creatures about my wants at the time, I desire to speak well of the Lord's goodness after He has delivered me, not only in order that He thus may get glory, but also that the children of God may be encouraged to trust in Him."

AN APPOSITE ILLUSTRATION.

It has been declared by some, with more or less precision, that the annual report and balance-sheet issued by Mr. Müller were a "constructive" appeal to the benevolent public. On this Mr. Benjamin Perry, of Bristol, for many years on terms of close intimacy with the great philanthropist, writes:—"I think it right to mention the following facts, as proving the absolute truthfulness of statements made by Mr. Müller that his object in issuing annual reports was not to advertise his work, and thus make indirect appeals to man for funds, but that he simply endeavoured to give an account of his stewardship to those who had sent him funds. In the early days, the faith of Mr. Müller was sorely tried during the greater part of a whole year, so much so that he and his helpers had to cry to God literally again and again for food for the next meal for the orphans and themselves. But God was faithful, and the supplies came, over and over again, just in time as they were needed.

"At the end of the year the institution was still in great poverty. The usual time for issuing the report had come, and if Mr. Müller's trust had been in the report he might have pressed forward its issue with all speed; but the very reverse happened: he called together his helpers, and told them that he had decided not to issue a report for that year, as from the facts he would have to state, it would appear like an urgent appeal for funds, and men might say that the report had brought in the money, instead of God, who assuredly, in his own (the best) time, would give abundantly through his faithful stewards.

"God's time to give in abundance had not yet come, and the following year was a further time of testing, if possible more severe than ever. Again, therefore, at the end of the year, he told his helpers that for the same reasons as before he had decided not to issue a report."

"When, during the next year, funds came in abundantly, he issued his reports, to speak to the praise of God, who by the trials of the two previous years had been disciplining the faith of his servant, and had strengthened it for future days of need. These facts show distinctly the unswerving faith of our departed brother and the Spirit in which his life work was carried on. I rejoice that his beloved son-in-law and co-director, Mr. Wright, is a man of like faith and spirit; and, therefore, I expect to see the work prosper in the future as it has for so many years past. The Lord who has been the Almighty source of blessing, still remains, and will be as faithful in response to the faith of Mr. Wright as he has been to the like faith of his honoured servant now in his presence."

THE "MORNING WATCH."

"Formerly, when I rose I began to pray as soon as possible, and generally spent all my time till breakfast in prayer, or almost all the time. At all events, I almost invariably began with prayer, except when I felt my soul to be more than usually barren, in which case I read the Word of God for food or for refreshment, or for a revival and renewal of my inner man, before I gave myself to prayer. But what was the result? I often spent a quarter of an hour, or half an hour, or even an hour on my knees before being conscious to myself of having derived comfort, encouragement, humbling of soul, etc.; and often, after having suffered much from wandering of mind for the first ten minutes or a quarter of an hour, or even half an hour, I only then began really to pray. I scarcely ever suffer now in this way, for my heart being nourished by the truth, being brought into experimental fellowship with God, I speak to my Father, and to my Friend (vile though I am, and unworthy of it!) about the things that He has brought before me in his precious Word. It often now astonishes me that I did not sooner see this point.

"In no book did I ever read about it. No public ministry ever brought the matter before me. No private intercourse with a brother stirred me up to this matter. And yet now, since God has taught me this point, it is as plain to me as anything, that the first thing the child of God has to do morning by morning is to obtain food for his inner man. As the outward man is not fit to work for any length of time except he take food, and as this is one of the first things we do in the morning, so it should be with the inner man. We should take food for that, as everyone must allow. Now, what is the food for the inner man? Not prayer, but the Word of God; and here again not the simple reading of the Word of God, so that it only passes through our minds just as water runs through a pipe, but considering what we read, pondering over it, and applying it to our hearts."

Mr. F. W. Case, of Cotham, Bristol, writes to us:—"Visiting Mr. R. Chapman, of Barnstaple, I informed him of Mr. Müller's falling asleep. He said: 'I have known him intimately for sixty-eight years. We remember each other daily at the Throne of Grace. If I were asked to write the biography of Brother Müller, I should say he brought everything to God, small and great, temporal and eternal, and he brought God into everything. The details are written above, and to-morrow morning we shall have leisure to read them. The night is far spent, the day is at hand.' Then he added: 'The brevity of the Scriptures is a work of God's infinite goodness on our behalf.'"

Friends living in the North of London will be glad to know that on Sunday next, Rev. Llewellyn H. Parsons, who was for some time a minister at Bristol, and knew the late Mr. Müller's work, will, in his special monthly service for young people, speak of the faith and prayer by means of which George Müller's work has been sustained.

In Memoriam.

GEORGE MÜLLER.

Who cometh? Say is it prince or peer,
That the people go forth to meet the bier,
That the flag is lowered, uncovered the head,
And a city mourns for the silent dead?

Ay, a prince of God has gone home to-day!
To the mould we render the lifeless clay,
While we praise the Lord for the life-work done,
For the quiet passing at set of sun.

"I am tired," he said, for his feet had trod
O'er many a mile as he walked with God;
The pilgrim leaned on his staff at last,
His token had come and his toil was passed.

And who can tell of the sheaves he bore
To the Lord of his love on the golden shore,
The souls that he snatched from the paths of sin,
The homeless, the orphan, he gathered in.

Now God be thanked for that voice, which rose
As a clarion blast on this world of woes:
"One star that never has set shines fair,
God lives! God listens! God answers prayer!"

It shall ring through the ages till time is o'er,
It is echoing now from shore to shore;
Who can say where the waves of its music broke,
For a world to the power of prayer awoke!

Oxford Letter.

[BY A CORRESPONDENT.]

TERM ends this week. Colleges begin to go down on Friday; and by Tuesday next Oxford streets, river, and playing-fields will present their vacation appearance. The summer term begins on Friday, April 22.

Much interesting information concerning the work of the London City Mission was given on Tuesday by Mr. March, the Society's missionary in Smithfield Market. The Hon. and Rev. W. T. Rice presided over a meeting held in the afternoon at Wycliffe, and Canon Christopher took the chair at the evening meeting. The hearts of Oxford workers were moved by the needs of the great metropolis, and more than one has expressed the encouragement received by Mr. March's account of his work.

The attendance at the Missionary Union gatherings has been good throughout the term, and the addresses calculated, under God, to stimulate missionary interest. On Tuesday, Rev. W. Wetton Cox told the story of the noble, self-denying, and successful missionary work of the Moravians among Esquimaux, lepers, and other neglected classes.

Dr. Sanday, Margaret Professor, has arranged during the term special meetings to discuss subjects of importance relating to religion and science. Dr. Taylor introduced the subject of "Prehistoric Religion" on Saturday last, and there was an interesting discussion.

Rev. J. Walmsley, vice-principal of Wycliffe Hall, leaves Oxford this week for Normanton, near Derby, of which parish he has been appointed vicar. Besides his work at Wycliffe Hall, which has been much valued, Mr. Walmsley has helped as assistant curate in the poor parish of Holy Trinity, and also at the Oxford Prison, the chaplaincy of which is now held by the vicar of Holy Trinity. He will be much missed in Oxford, and the prayers of many will follow him to his new sphere.

Mr. E. Arrowsmith and Mr. Arthur Mercer are in Oxford with a view to interesting men in work at the seaside in the long vacation. For many years this enterprise of the C.S.S.M. has done most valuable work in training 'Varsity men for evangelisation among boys.

The interest in the prayer meetings has distinctly increased during term. An average of sixty at the weekly missionary prayer meeting is an advance, and the daily prayer meeting has very much increased in average attendance. The Martyrs' Memorial Sunday Evening Open-air Service has also been supported regularly by some thirty men. It was only the other day that the writer heard from a lady in Ireland who was brought to Christ in an Oxford church last summer, and who stated that she had gained much help at these open-air meetings.

THE LATE

Rev. George Martin Claris.

MANY have mourned the death, which took place on January 15, of Rev. George Martin Claris, first vicar of St. Barnabas', Clapham Common, at the age of thirty-eight. His career was short, but it may truly be said of him, "He, being sanctified, in a short time fulfilled a long time."

Like Samuel of old, he was dedicated to the Lord from his birth, and those who knew him in his early days can recollect his sweet lispings of praise in "Safe in the arms of Jesus," and other hymns. Like Timothy, he knew the Holy Scriptures from his childhood, and when in after years he became a proficient Bible scholar and a minister of the Gospel, he was enabled to bring out "things new and old" from the sacred treasury.

Mr. Claris was educated at the King's School, Canterbury, and the early impressions and growth in grace which he experienced under the ministry of the late Rev. G. B. Lee Warner, vicar of St. Mary Bredin, Canterbury, never lost hold on him, and decided him to enter the ministry. He went, in 1880, to the London College of Divinity, St. John's Hall, Highbury, where he had the privilege of good Evangelical training and the loving counsels of the late Dr. Boultbee, Principal of the College.

In 1883 he was ordained by the Bishop of London to the curacy of Emmanuel Church, Maida Vale, with the special charge of about 4000 poor. The strain of work broke down his health after two years, when he took a country curacy at Sandhurst. In addition to the duties of the parish church, a mile from the village, he conducted a mission service every Sunday night in an iron building, which was crowded to excess, and the riveted attention of the hearers to his preaching was very remarkable.

From Sandhurst Mr. Claris went to where he loved to work, the suburbs of London, and took sole charge of the district of Southfields, Wandsworth. He succeeded the late Rev. W. H. Green, who only held the charge a little over a year. It was uphill work, but with his usual energy and perseverance Mr. Claris initiated and developed the various branches of parochial work most successfully; and after six and a-half years' toil a severe illness laid him low.

This necessitated a change of locality, and on his recovery a sphere of great usefulness was offered him at St. Matthew's, Lavender Hill, close to Clapham Common, in the vast parish of Battersea. Here he soon threw himself heartily into the work, determined in his preaching "to know nothing save Jesus Christ and Him crucified." The church became thronged, especially on Sunday evenings, when the stillness and quiet waiting for half-an-hour before the service commenced of the densely packed congregation, was better felt than it can be described. The sermon was always looked forward to with interest and enjoyment when the people's beloved pastor occupied the pulpit.

In 1894 Canon Erskine Clarke, vicar of Battersea, seeing the rapidly increasing population of the neighbourhood, and the utterly inadequate church accommodation, suggested to Mr. Claris the formation of a new parish under the Peel Acts (to be called St. Barnabas', Clapham Common), and to make him first incumbent if he would undertake the work. This required, under the Act, that a sum of £5000 should first be raised and deposited with the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, to form an endowment. Mr. Claris accepted the charge, and undertook the work, on the understanding that the patronage should be secured under Evangelical trustees. He thereupon set to work with all the energy and zeal which so distinguished him. The money for the endowment was speedily obtained; the trustees selected and appointed; a site was at length found on the north side of Clapham Common; and £7000 collected towards the fabric fund of the new church.

On June 12, 1897, the foundation stone was laid by the Duchess of Somerset, and the new church is rapidly approaching completion, only some £2000 being required to finish the work. That Mr. Claris's undertaking was a great one, no one can deny; but his faith rose to the occasion. The labour which this entailed, the wear and tear of body and mind, few will be able to estimate; add to this the claims of a new parish of abnormal growth (now 13,000), the visitation of sick and troubled ones, Bible-readings, work among the young, temperance meetings, missionary work, both home and foreign, and faithful preaching Sunday after Sunday. It is a marvel that the frail body so long stood the strain.

At length Mr. Claris's health gave way; and the sermon he preached on the first Sunday evening of the present year was his last. He had selected three passages for the motto text of 1898:—"Who is sufficient for these things?" 2 Cor. ii. 16; "I am El Shaddai" (God all-sufficient), Gen. xvii. 1.; "All sufficiency in all things," 2 Cor. ix. 8. The church was packed from end to end, and the marvellous power given to the preacher was very noticeable, yet none thought it was the last message he would give for his Master. Another of his latest efforts was to care for the meetings in the Week of Prayer at the Y.M.C.A., Clapham Junction branch, where he showed his love for his Christian brethren of every Evangelical denomination. The funeral of this deeply regretted pastor took place on January 19, and his remains were followed to his last resting-place by a long train of carriages, and by many of his sorrowing congregation on foot. He was laid to rest, according to his wish, in Wandsworth Cemetery, on a quiet hillside, "until the day break and the shadows flee away."

A Quiet Hour and its Results.

MOST of us can remember prayer meetings that have been given over to addresses, and "quiet days" that have been largely devoted to audible exercises. Dr. James M. Gray, of Boston, Mass., writing in The Record of Christian Work (New York), describes a devotional gathering, such as many have often desired but rarely experienced. He says:—

"It was exceptional in the manner of its call. A simple note from one whose praise is in all the churches, asked thirty or forty others, supposed to be like-minded with himself, to gather together in a certain place for 'A quiet hour for the practice of the presence of God.' The aim was definite and concrete. It was to meet God and realise His presence, to grasp the great truth of abiding in Christ, and to know the indwelling of the Holy Spirit as Comforter and Revealer. It was hoped to gain this supreme blessing by soul-searching and self-surrender, full and complete, while warming each others' hearts by mutual faith and love, and 'thus kindling a fire that should long burn within us and be kindled in a multitude of other hearts.'

"The meeting was exceptional again in its character and conduct. A brother presided, but the assembly seemed to be administered by the Spirit of God. No address was given other than the simple announcement of the purpose of the gathering, although every person present seemed to understand that very clearly, and to be ready to set himself about it. Prayer was had for a while—prayer for the manifestation of the Spirit to every heart, and then testimonies were given. Would that every ministerial reader of these lines had heard them! Different denominations were represented—Congregational, Presbyterian, Baptist, but all spake with one voice. They told what God had been doing in their souls lately—within two years, within a year, within a few months or weeks. They told of a definite blessing received in the Holy Ghost—an experience which led them into a holier life, and into a more implicit reliance upon God, as compared with the machinery of organisation or the plans and contrivances of human wisdom—an experience which had made the Bible to them a new book, in their reverence for it, their knowledge, and their use of it.

"Furthermore, the meeting was exceptional in that to which it bore evidence. One brother who had been around the globe was led to seek the blessing by what he heard and saw of it in individuals in Japan, India, Africa, and the different countries of Europe. And while he was writing home his new experiences, his correspondents on this side of the globe were coming into a similar possession and able to reply in hallelujahs! It bore evidence to the value of such teaching as that recently received from Mr. Meyer, of London, Mr. Andrew Murray, and other men of God whom Mr. Moody had introduced at Northfield; also bore evidence to the value of conferences of a similar nature, though on a smaller scale. Some of these ministers had been listeners and observers on such occasions, and did not hesitate to say they had come away with new conceptions of spiritual life and power.

"But finally, the meeting was exceptional in that to which it led. It led to an all-day meeting the next week, which included the laity quite as generally as the ministers. From 10 a.m. to 9 p.m., continuous meetings were held under different leaders, when sacred themes were presented, not for discussion but for meditation. The day was for humiliation, heart-searching, confession." It will also lead to more results in consecrated lives than may at first appear.

How to Wait for Christ.

By Rev. JOHN McNEILL.

THE disciples were passing through a waiting time. Another Gospel narrative says that Jesus had told them to go into Galilee and wait for Him. Here they were, and as yet He had not come. A waiting time is a testing time; all the man or all the baby in you will come out at such a time. There is nothing tests a man more, especially if he is an active man. There is a proverb which describes a man who "would rather run a mile than wait a minute." Such a man is never a strong man. He seems to be doing everything, but he is not doing much after all.

All God's workers need to be patient and to be able to wait, without faltering or unbelief. God does not do things in a hurry. We would need to to be good waiters, as well as active workers, and many of us are sadly deficient on one side or the other.

As these disciples were away up in the far corner of Palestine, waiting for Jesus, we, his disciples of to-day, are away up in the far corner of the nineteenth century. What are we doing? Waiting for Christ. One great aspect of the Christian faith is "waiting for his appearing." I am touching here the great doctrine of the Second Coming; and it needs to be touched helpfully and wisely. I am sorry to say it has been rather discounted in the minds of many because of the way in which it has been handled. By some and it is a pity; for there is no doctrine more helpful for our daily life as Christians. Nineteen hundred years have gone since the Lord left us this word, by the man who saw Him last: "Behold, I come quickly." Even in God's calendar, to whom a day is like a thousand years, his coming must be nearer. How are we to regard this great Biblical doctrine of our Lord's return?

First of all, do not let us go groping about the shores of time, as these disciples were on the shores of the lake of Galilee, waiting for Christ. Day-dreaming or star-gazing is the worst of all ways to wait. A mother goes down to the city, and she tells the children, as she leaves them in the morning, that she will soon be back with all manner of good things for them. She is not half-an-hour away till the window is filled with little faces, looking out for mother's return. It is very fond, but very foolish. Do not let us wait for Christ in that way.

Again, do not let us sit down with the Bible between our knees, turning over its pages to see when our Lord is due. It is not in the time-table. The Bible is more provoking even than Bradshaw when you try to find out that connection. People, otherwise sensible, have made themselves foolish, and have degraded this doctrine, until we are almost afraid to touch it, by announcing that they have, as it were, found out the connection, which Christ Himself said was known to the Father alone.

Well, how are we to wait? There is the practical way. Let us avoid heresy on the one hand—that is to say, losing all faith in the doctrine; do not allow yourself to say, "Where is the promise of his appearing? Since our fathers fell asleep all things continue as they were from the foundation of the world." But let us avoid lunacy, on the other hand. I can give it no better name. There is plenty of room for a straight path in between these points. Hold it as these disciples held it; believe that the Master will return, and because you believe He is coming, go out and fish. Go and do your day's work, with this extra, plus put to everything. More than a day's work and a day's wages, more than the mere toiling and moiling in this world's gloomy waters, you have the expectation of your Lord's return to buoy you up and brighten you, even when things are at the gloomiest.

That will not spoil your pleasure; it is the very lift you need to keep you at it when you are toiling and catching nothing; it will prevent you from sinking down in despondency at your non-success. He is coming—for all I know to the contrary He may be here before the night falls. Will that hinder you as a preacher or as a worker? It is the very thing you need. And when Sunday becomes Monday it is the very thing we need in our secular work, to make it sacred; to make you feel the same down in the City to-morrow as to-day at the Lord's table.

He is coming. He is present with me now by His Word and Spirit in my soul, but as I say, there is this big plus, that He is coming back Himself. I had almost said that if you will let it alone, your heart will solve all the difficulties about His coming. You will get the lift, the gladness, the warmth of it, while you trudge along through your appointed task; and the very uncertainty helps you to bear your part of it. How are we to put in the time till He comes? Go out and fish: do your day's work. Want of success will not discourage you, and success will not spoil you, when you recollect that He is coming, and coming quickly. I know no better touchstone as to the practical state of the believer's heart than his doctrine of our Lord's return.

Thoughts for Parents.

8.—FAITHFULNESS.

Gal. v. 22.

"It is required in stewards that a man be found faithful."

If there is any cruelty in the world which is truly terrible in its consequences, it is that worked by selfish, indulgent, unfaithful parents.

It was parental faithfulness in Abraham upon which God put such honour, "he commanded his household and his children after him that they should keep the way of the Lord."

Are you consistent to your profession? Who so quick to detect inconsistency as a child?

Show your faithfulness by shunning no part of child-training which is difficult.

A dangerous silence on the subject of purity is kept by parents; they impress the duties of honesty, sobriety, and industry upon their children, but the duty of purity of life is never mentioned.

How can we expect the young to stand firm in the hour of temptation unless they are forewarned and so forearmed? If you find it difficult to speak, read Exodus iv. 10 to 12.

A Day of Prayer.

THE Glasgow United Evangelistic Association held a day of humiliation and prayer on March 16 in the Y.M.C.A. There was a large attendance. The circular calling the meeting stated that the conference was the outcome of a strong desire expressed in many quarters for public lamentation and prayer in view of the lamentable condition of religious indifference and immorality so largely prevalent. This condition, it was felt by many constitutes a call to the whole Christian community to unite in earnest prayer and public testimony, in the endeavour to promote a revival of vital godliness and a higher regard for the precepts and authority of the Word of God. The first speaker was Rev. John Parker, who dealt with the question of Sabbath desecration.

He said that a fierce attack was being made upon the Christian Sabbath, for men felt that as long as the seventh day was set apart for the public worship of God, and as long as the law of the land in some form or other sanctioned that day of rest, so long the powers of infidelity and godlessness would be held in check. Hence the rage of all infidels and anarchists against the Christian Sabbath. He was afraid that the majority of citizens were not to be found in any place of worship on the Lord's Day. The Press of the country was largely anti-Christian, and family worship had become almost extinct. The corrupt state of the Church of God, the worldliness of its members, and the low tone of piety among them was much to be deplored. The pulpit, instead of being a place where the Word of God was expounded, was often prostituted, and the time that should be devoted to the saving of souls was often spent in discussing philosophic theories, or, worse, in shaking the faith of the people in the very Word of God the preachers professed to expound.

The subject of "Intemperance, Gambling, and Impurity" was opened by Rev. J. Primrose, who spoke of intemperance as the national sin. The increase of drunkenness among women and children was one of the saddest features of the country. It was no use talking of moderation; Christians must be abstainers.

At the afternoon meeting Lord Overtoun presided, and in dealing with the subject of worldliness, spoke of the danger of Christians lowering the standard. If we found that the world did not come up to the standard of the Church, there must be danger of the Church going down a little to catch the world at a lower level.

Dr. Marshall Lang spoke of money as the god of the day. Rev. D. McIntyre delivered an address on the decline of spirituality.

The Border Line.

On the border line
Between life and death
Many mortals each day must stand;
And none ever knows,
As the river flows,
Who will next draw near its strand.

Who will next step down
By its shelving brink,
To its waters so cold and dark;
And will hear the splash
Of the waves that lash
'Gainst the sides of its waiting bark.

Should the beckoning hand
Of the One who steers
That bark to the land of day,
Summon us to Him,
From earth's twilight dim,
Then at once we must Him obey.

O Thou Pilot true,
When our call doth come;
To Thy care we ourselves commend.
Take us safe across,
Without shame, or loss,
To the Shore where the breakers end!

What the Ivy Said!

By Rev. JOHN MITCHELL.

MY name is short and my life is long. You have all seen me, and some of you are very fond of me. I am most loving, and I cling to whatever may be near me. Sometimes it is a tree, other times the ground, but oftener a wall. And I cling so tightly that the greatest storm cannot drive me away. A preacher would say, that is just how it ought to be with girls and boys. You should be loving and cling to your friends, and above all to your greatest Friend, the Lord Jesus. Cling to Him and you will be safe amid all danger; and even in death you need fear no evil. Jesus loves you and wants to put his good Spirit within you, and to make you all true Christians if you will but come to Him and trust.

I am most admired when I cling to some object. You do not care to see me unless I am clinging and covering some ugly old wall, clothing it with a new beauty. An old ruin is not very grand unless I am all over it. I do something to make earth beautiful and I am proud to be of use. Now a clinging nature is always pretty, and wants to cover up all that is loathsome and ugly. Those who cling to Jesus have their sins covered up with what can never be taken away. All that men do to cover their own sins is in vain, for God sees through the covering, and shall one day sweep it away and make bare what is beneath. Happy, then, are all those whose sins are covered by the blood of Jesus.

And I'll join the chorus with the saints above,
I've been washed in the blood of the Lamb;
'Tis the sweet, sweet song of his Redeeming love,
I've been washed in the blood of the Lamb.

You see how I cling to the wall, but there is an unseen part of me which clings to the soil and decides whether I shall live or die. Lift a bit of me by the root, plant me in another piece of ground, and if I do not cling to the soil I shall soon wither and die. And you have an unseen part which decides whether you shall live in Christ here and hereafter, or whether you shall die and be for ever lost. The unseen part of you is the soul, and if it does not lay hold on Jesus it must fade and be eternally ruined. Jesus is the Life, and it cannot do without Him. Your outward life may look well enough, but it is the inner life which God first looks to.

I am a lowly plant, and yet I can climb to a great height by clinging as I go. Upward is my motto, and it ought to be yours also. The humble heart is where God loves to dwell, and by clinging to Jesus you may climb, in spirit, above this world, and see the glories of heaven. Christians sit in heavenly places in Christ. Heaven begins on earth, and prepares the soul for a more glorious heaven above. You look upward by reading and thinking of Jesus and his love. You also look upward as you speak to Him in prayer, and seek to be like Him in thought, word, and act. Seek to go onward, upward, heavenward, looking unto Jesus.

I am not like other leaves which drop off and die in the autumn. You call me "evergreen." There is One, of whom you have read, who says, "I am like a green fir-tree" (Hosea xiv. 8), which is evergreen. Jesus is always the same. We should not like Him to be anything else. The same love which led Him to leave his home in glory and to become homeless and friendless for you He has still. And the same love which made Him willing to die for you, that you should not perish, He has still. His love never changes. Your love may grow cold, or may be fixed on another, but the love of Jesus is ever the same—"Yesterday and to-day and for ever."

Lord, it is my chief complaint,
That my love is cold and faint;
Yet I love Thee, and adore—
Oh, for grace to love Thee more!

An Arab Child's Prayer.

A lady missionary in Algiers writes that the poor Arab women are really anxious to know Jesus, and some are earnestly seeking Him. One little Arab girl fell flat on the ground (as the Arabs do in prayer), pleading, "Take away all the ugly weeds from my heart, and plant beautiful flowers there, that it may be always green for Jesus."

Was it not a beautiful prayer? And is it not one the spirit of which might well be copied by children in our own more favoured land?

All for Jesus.

Two little feet!
Shall they not travel the narrow way,
Walking with Jesus from day to day?
Running on errands of mercy sweet,
Yielding to Jesus—two little feet.

Two little hands!
Shall they not labour in Love's employ,
Working for Jesus, scattering joy?
Doing with gladness his blest commands,
Yielded to Jesus—two little hands.

Two little eyes!
Shall they not dance with heavenly light,
Beaming for Jesus, sparkling and bright?
Watchful of serving ere daylight flies,
Yielded to Jesus—two little eyes.

Two little lips!
Shall they not tell of a Saviour's love,
Speaking for Jesus—dear Friend above?
Careful that never a wrong word slips,
Yielding to Jesus—two little lips.

Two little ears!
Shall they not hearken to Christ the Lord,
Attentive to Jesus—heeding his word?
Like Samuel of old: "Thy servant hears,"
Yielded to Jesus—two little ears.

One little life!
Shall it not wholly to Him be given?
Living for Jesus—how like heaven!
Trustful in trial, peaceful 'mid strife,
Yielding to Jesus—my little life.

ANSWER TO LAST WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (115).

1. (a) Nabal; he was churlish and evil in his doings. (b) He refused to give either food or water to David's messengers, although David had treated his shepherds very kindly.

2. (a) Abigail. (b) She got ready a liberal supply of food and wine, and took it to David, begging him not to avenge himself on Nabal.

3. (a) David and Abishai discovered Saul asleep, and Abishai wished to kill him. (b) "Destroy him not; for who can stretch forth his hand against the Lord's anointed and be guiltless?"

4. (a) Ziklag. (b) A year and four months.

5. (a) The Amalekites. God told him to pursue them, and an Egyptian brought him down to where they were feasting. David slew most of them, and recovered all the spoil they had taken. (b) That the men who stayed behind to guard the stuff should share equally with those who went to the battle.

6. (a) When Saul saw the battle was going against him, and that he was sore wounded, he told his armour bearer to kill him, so that the Philistines might not take him alive; but his armour-bearer was afraid. Then Saul took a sword, fell upon it, and died. (b) At Jabesh.

Bessie Cheale.—You made a mistake in No. 3 of this last week. If your paper had been correct it was neat enough for a star.

Lizzie Symon.—Your paper would be much more easily read if you wrote on lined paper and left a margin for references and a space between each answer.

Ernest Ross.—Please give your exact age.

Alfred Gibbs.—It is not necessary to write the questions. Leave a line between each answer, and put the references in the margin.

Edward Llewellyn.—I was pleased to have your little letter, and also glad to receive the verses you so kindly copied out.

Several papers have been sent in unsigned. Will all be careful to write their names at the top of their papers, as one or two of my nephews and nieces write complaining their names are not in the correct list when they think they should be, and perhaps this is the reason.

Barbican Mission to the Jews.

THAT Jews, inquiring as to the claims of Christ to be the Messiah of Israel and the Saviour of men, have often cause to fear the watchful eyes of their co-religionists is doubtless true, and the sense of danger may be very real to some. Still, one accustomed to the full freedom of our own land does not easily feel and allow for the timorousness which may beset such an inquirer. In this way I have to confess giving considerable uneasiness to a company of men honestly seeking light.

One evening last week, turning into Finsbury-square, I saw two poor Jews—apparently father and son—walking in the shade, and as I was looking for the Jewish Mission House I followed them, much, as I speedily perceived, to their alarm. This being so, I fell further behind till they entered a modest area doorway, when I followed—instead of ringing at the front door. Entering quietly, I found myself in a little room where a group of Jews sat round a table, with open Bibles before them, while a young missionary expounded to them from the New Testament—"proving and alleging that Jesus is the Christ." Some seemed to drink in every word; but others eagerly contested the statements made and warmly advanced disproof. This, however, was taken in good part, and the result of the hour's conference appeared to be a serious impression on the minds of many—even though my entrance had unwittingly caused some anxiety and distraction, inasmuch as (until welcomed by the superintendent) I was supposed to be a spy upon them; sent, perhaps, to see who were lending an ear to Christian teaching. Unaware of the uneasiness thus aroused, I enjoyed greatly the time spent in a Jewish Bible-class.

This episode at the headquarters of the Barbican Mission to the Jews illustrates admirably the way they are attracted to hear the Gospel. The reading room is open nightly, and each evening an hour's Bible reading is held. Many who come to oppose stay to listen, and by and by are constrained to yield.

Not long ago, for example, three young Jews resolved to make a disturbance, break up the class, and, if possible, give the leader

"A BLACK EYE."

Astonished to find the room filled with attentive listeners, they came again and again, watching their opportunity. Meanwhile the exposition of Isa. liii., had touched the ringleader's heart. He sought private conversation, and, when alone, cried: "I want to know the truth; I cannot any longer fight against it." His friends seeing his interest, made a great disturbance. At length he was admitted to the Home; while by and by—angry as they were at first—they, too, came seeking spiritual help. In the end all three accepted Christ, and in due course were baptized. They had to suffer bitterly, but had grace to endure, and are now consistent followers of Him whom they once hated and despised.

THE MISSION CENTRE.

This mission has been at work since 1879, but in 1889 it was reorganised under the superintendence of C. T. Lipshytz, who has proved himself a valuable worker among his brethren. A few weeks ago Prebendary Webb-Peploe accepted the presidency, after careful examination into the principles, methods, and finances, of the society—a fact which will afford confidence to sympathisers in such efforts for the evangelisation of Israel.

The large, old-fashioned house at 33, Finsbury-square, is wholly devoted to mission purposes. The basement is used as a reading-room, the ground floor has been converted into a mission hall, the first and second floors are the private residence of the missionary and his family—for they and two other workers live on the spot—while the upper floor is used as dormitories for inquirers and converts, who, as often happens, find themselves turned out of doors. It is indeed a hive of earnest personal service.

THE BIBLE-CLASS.

Mr. Lipshytz speaks with thankfulness of the results of the Bible-class teachings, and of its evident fruit in many changed lives. A Jewish missionary having taken a course of readings in this class wrote, "I have myself often gone away very much refreshed and built up, especially after the Bible-class. To sit around the table for about two hours, with a group of anxious inquirers, searching the Scriptures concerning the Messiah, is indeed a most blessed occupation, and must result in much blessing. On inquiry, I found that eight or ten different nationalities were generally represented round the table, each of these having a Bible in the language he could understand."

Linked with this is a night school, much prized by those wishing to learn English. The Bible is made the chief reading-book.

DIRECT EVANGELISM.

Mission services are held on the Jewish Sabbath and on Sunday. The superintendent remarks:—"In all our work, evangelistic purpose is kept well to the fore. Without this our Mission would have no reason of existence. The Gospel meetings held every Saturday and Sunday have been well attended, and those who come give encouraging attention to the message delivered. From time to time missionaries of other societies occupy the platform."

A most interesting Sunday-school is also conducted—with happy results. The mothers' meeting, led by Mrs. Lipshytz, is largely attended. Many of the poor women, familiar with poverty and pain, find here much comfort and help. Above all they hear of the Saviour's love, and many have accepted it with joy.

The Converts' and Inquirers' Home meets the need of young men who wish to pursue inquiries free from the hindrances put in their way by prejudiced relatives. Those also are received who, on account of their profession of faith in Christ, find themselves without means of livelihood. In the course of the past year twenty-nine inquirers and converts passed through the home, making a total of 151 since it was opened in 1891. Several confessed Christ in baptism, some of them thereby incurring the curse of their bigoted kinsfolk for their "apostasy." Efforts are made to find work for the cast-off ones, and during the year several were apprenticed to useful trades and handicrafts.

The regular staff of the mission consists of Mr. and Mrs. Lipshytz, two assistant missionaries, a colporteur, and lady missionary. These, in addition to the constant work at the mission house, give a large part of their time to systematic visitation of Jewish homes in all parts of London; and thus the Gospel is carried to those who otherwise would never hear it, while the workers are able to comfort many sorely tried ones.

Much is done for the relief of the poor. Many genuine cases of need come under notice in the course of the year, and it is to be wished that those who supplied the money could receive at first hand the blessing of the poor, as it is invoked upon them.

Moreover, by means of a branch in Southern Germany, and through extensive mission tours by the director, important evangelisation is being done among Continental Jews. Full details of these operations may be had of the superintendent missionary, C. T. Lipshytz, 33, Finsbury-square, E.C.

A very serious matter at present presses on the committee—the need of a suitable mission house has become imperative. The lease of the present place expires in September, and it is felt that a mission building ought to be erected. To purchase site and erect premises at least £3000 is needed. The new mission hall is intended as a memorial to the late Prebendary Gordon Calthrop, whose interest in this mission was very keen. Several desirable sites in Jewish quarters are in view, and one must be selected speedily. Meanwhile about £1000 has been sent in for this purpose. Surely the Lord's stewards will earnestly consider the urgency and importance of a suitable home for a mission which God has been pleased greatly to bless in the salvation of many of the seed of Abraham.

PEARL FISHER.

Female Orphan Home.—A note of thankfulness to God for his goodness and mercy seen in this institution at Hampton, Middlesex, comes from the secretary, Mr. John D. Cooper, 79, Finsbury-pavement, E.C. There is cause for praise to God on account of spared lives and good health in the Home; also for the temporal possibilities as well as the eternal issues of the work. We learn that the financial year closes on the 31st inst., and at the time of writing, early in the month, £100 was needed to balance the annual accounts. In addition to this, it was felt to be very desirable to have a further sum of £55, which is needed to pay for the new laundry, lavatory, and wash-house fittings.

The Boys' Home, Barnsbury.

FEW works of practical philanthropy are more effective in their simplicity, more thorough in their administration, and more unostentatious in their general scope than that of the Boys' Home in Barnsbury-square, so lovingly conducted by its foundress and honorary superintendent, Mrs. Watts-Hughes. A short time since I had the pleasure of visiting this Harbour of Refuge, and interviewing Mrs. Watts-Hughes and her faithful coadjutor, the resident matron, Miss Skinner. Perhaps what pleased me most in that interview was the utter absence of professional philanthropy pervading the place. There was a happy unconsciousness of anything more than the mere sense of doing one's duty with a sense of delight in it. This earnest worker has toiled tirelessly and devotedly in this labour of love for over twenty years, and is as painstaking and enthusiastic as in the earlier days.

We felt we had come into a veritable "home" and not into a mere "institution"; that in the person of the foundress we had come into touch with a true "foster-mother," and that a healthy moral and religious atmosphere was breathed by these young "waifs and strays" who had been rescued. The idea from its inception has gradually and healthily developed. Successive stages have been reached, from the simple cottage where, in those far-off days, a few poor lads were gathered, to the larger shelter of Swan Yard, the still more important Hall in Palmer's-place, to its present habitat in the scrupulously neat and clean quarters in Barnsbury-square. Here from twenty-five to thirty lads are housed, clothed, fed, and religiously trained—the only passport to admission being poverty and want, and the consequent imminent danger of social wreckage on the great ocean of London vice and crime.

These lads attend the neighbouring Board school, returning for meals and recreation, and shelter in the well-aired dormitories at night. In fine weather a small gymnasium in a large garden at the rear affords pleasant occupation and healthful exercise, while the evening is spent in singing classes, games, Bible study, interesting and mentally stimulating reading, and the many engagements that go to make up an ideal home life. When the lads reach the highest standard in the Board school situations are found for them, and they are encouraged to contribute a trifle from their earnings—which they cheerfully do—towards the support of the home, they being free to return when work is over, for the evening social life and nightly shelter, until they are in a position to support themselves and thus make room for others. Many of them thus rescued have been started on honourable and successful careers, and testimony was lovingly borne to the gratitude evinced by former inmates.

It is deplorable that so excellent a work should languish and decline for want of funds. Hitherto nearly the whole amount required has been collected by Mrs. Watts-Hughes from her personal friends. But, as we all know by sad experience, large-hearted friends drop out of the cherished circle, and it is difficult, if not impossible, to replace them. May I, then, with the confidence inspired by personal knowledge and inspection, commend this splendid work to the sympathies of Christian people, and speak for it an immediate and extended practical support?

Juvenile Offenders.—The Howard Association, 5, Bishopsgate Without, E.C., is issuing a pamphlet reporting the result of an inquiry instituted upon suggestions received from several sources, that it would be a useful service if, in recognition of existing difficulties, the views of competent authorities could be obtained in regard to the most expedient modes of dealing with juvenile offenders. A circular issued by the Association, to some three or four score gentlemen, chiefly chairmen of quarter sessions, local magistrates, and chief constables, has evoked replies, some of which, from the position and experience of the respondents, are of a very interesting and valuable nature. The summary of recommendations branches into (1) suggested points of further legislation; and (2) hints as to an extended use of means already available for the diminution of crime among the young. The pamphlet is marked by an excellent Christian tone, and should be ordered (4d., post free) from Wertheimer, Lea, and Co., Circus-place, E.C.

London City Mission.

UNDER the presidency of the Lord Mayor, a conversazione was held on Thursday evening in the Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House, on behalf of the Central and East-end poor districts of the London City Mission.

Mr. James Dunn (district secretary) reported that connected with this particular branch of the work there are 112 districts, and the sum required annually for carrying on the operations of the Mission in connection therewith is £6,300. It was feared that at the close of the financial year they would fall short of this amount; and, if so, they would have to withdraw from some of the districts, a course which they would look upon as a calamity.

The Lord Mayor, in his address, spoke of the marked improvement which had taken place within recent years in the character of those men who find their employment at Billingsgate, Smithfield, and other London markets; and he attributed that improvement very largely to the instrumentality of the London City Mission, whose representatives habitually preached the Gospel message at those places. They all believed in the efficacy of the work of the Mission, but he reminded them that unless they came forward with their support the operations of the institution must inevitably fail. He therefore most earnestly asked them to do what they could in the interests of their poorer brethren, who had to rely for the means of grace on the missionaryship of those that were sent out to do the work of the London City Mission.

Prebendary Webb-Peploe, having described the work of the mission as a very remarkable one, went on to say that its 463 agents took the poor and outcast and degraded of the great metropolis the Gospel which could set men free from the burden of sin and restrain them from running into acts of violence and revolution. Most probably four and a half millions of our London population never entered a place of worship, and it was to this enormous proportion of the inhabitants, whose spiritual requirements it was absolutely impossible for the existing clerical and ministerial agency to compass, that such men and women as are employed by the London City Mission sought to bring the saving and uplifting power of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

Rev. Dr. Oswald Dykes said he thought the Christians of London owed special thanks to God for having raised up during the past sixty years such a stream of devoted, humble, patient, loving labourers in this blessed work of religion and philanthropy from among the working classes themselves. He had had to do with a number of their missionaries, and he believed there was no work known over which the recording angels might linger more than the work done by those humble men who were being used as instruments in bringing the love of Christ and the love of men to the most miserable homes within the wide bounds of the Metropolis.

Mr. Charles Cox gave a touching and stirring reminiscence in connection with his previous work as a missionary of the society.

Mr. F. A. Bevan (treasurer) mentioned that notwithstanding the great increase in the population of London during the last few years, in consequence of lack of funds, their missionaries had been reduced in number from 504 to 463.

Factory Helpers' Union and Flowers.

THERE are thousands of girls toiling in our factories and laundries who never see the country in the springtime, when woods and fields abound with primroses and bluebells, cowslips and daffodils. Who will help us to bring some of these treasures of spring into the close and exhausted atmosphere in which so many of these girls spend their lives?

It is work that little fingers can do, and bands of children have been organised in country villages. Flowers are greatly appreciated for distribution in the evening clubs, where the girls flock in after their day's work is over.

The secretaries specially ask those sending flowers to communicate with one of the secretaries, Miss L. E. Tritton, 68, Cromwell-road, S.W., or Miss E. M. Tritton, 36, Queen's Gate-gardens, S.W., who will send the address of a visitor or club superintendent to whom they may go direct.

Mr. McNeill in London.

THE COMING ISLINGTON MISSION.

THE great Agricultural Hall in Upper-street, Islington, must ever be associated, in the minds of this generation of London Christians, with any large combined effort for the evangelisation of the Metropolis. The memories of the monster meetings held under its roof in 1875 by Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey are still fresh in the minds of many of us. Those experiences will be still further revived, and, we hope, repeated in connection with the three weeks' mission at the hall, to be conducted by Rev. John McNeill, from April 17 onwards.

Last Friday forenoon a meeting of North London clergy, ministers, and workers was convened at the Bishop Wilson Memorial Hall for conference with Mr. McNeill on the approaching mission. Owing to the short notice given there were a good many absentees, but some fifty brethren assembled. In the unavoidable absence of Dr. Barlow, vicar of St. Mary's Church, Mr. T. A. Denny presided. After a short statement by Mr. McNeill, the proceedings took the shape of an informal conversation and interchange of views. The most cordial interest was expressed on all hands with respect to the effort, and the speakers, without exception, promised hearty co-operation with the evangelist.

During the three weeks that intervene before the commencement of the meetings, active steps will be taken to distribute notices throughout North London by house-to-house visitation and otherwise, while the clergy and ministers will seek to enlist the aid of church-workers to sing in the choir and assist in the work, as may be needful. Those present at the meeting on Friday were constituted a local committee, with power to add other brethren then unable to be present. As an old resident in the district, Mr. J. H. Putterill, of Exeter Hall, was appointed hon. secretary to the local committee. We trust much prayer will be made that a rich and abiding blessing may rest on this important series of meetings.

A second and larger gathering was held in the same place on Tuesday, when a number of sub-committees were formed to carry out the details of the work. A most cordial spirit was manifested throughout. It is contemplated to have a choir of 500, if possible, and the help of singing friends is earnestly invited; as also offers of assistance as stewards. Any who can serve in these capacities are desired to communicate with Mr. Putterill, at Exeter Hall.

The secretary of the general McNeill London Mission Committee, Mr. N. R. Hughman, Room 20, Exeter Hall, Strand, will be glad to receive contributions towards the expenses of the work.

CLOSING MEETINGS AT WOOLWICH.

The first week's meetings at Blackheath in the afternoon, and at Woolwich in the evening, have already been reported, and through a second week they have now been conducted to a close. The fine concert hall at Blackheath became crowded; area and large orchestra, and standing room were occupied, and we were treated each day to "strong meat." Mr. McNeill, as everybody knows by this time, is a living and breathing embodiment of the Shorter Catechism, on which he was reared. He rings out the doctrines of Divine Grace with fearless and even fearful energy. No other church in Christendom could have produced a preacher exactly like him, save the Free Church of Scotland when faithful to her best traditions.

A great many gentlefolk gathered to the Blackheath meetings. Indeed the people came from Lewisham, Lee, Greenwich, and the country round, and a good many from Woolwich.

One almost felt that Mr. McNeill was at his best at Woolwich in the evening. Somehow in the great Drill Hall audience there seemed to be more sympathy and expectation. And the preacher was always in very tender touch with his hearers. He had a choir and a choir master which were an inspiration to him. Mr. Potter, a devout and enthusiastic man, has proved his efficiency by training his Sunday-school choir to take the prize year after year in the local Sunday-school competition of the Union—he was a gracious and happy man to work with; and the large and reverent choir entered with spirit into the worship. "Look at your conductor," someone said to Mr. McNeill, "he works as hard as you." "Yes," he promptly answered, "he is the joy of my soul." Surely that is the way to help an evangelist in his work.

The Word was very powerful; more than once men were utterly broken down under it. One night, already referred to, 800 must have remained behind for prayer; prayer in the technical sense there could hardly be. One stood up to ask prayer for an unconverted son and two daughters, another for his father, and so on without a pause, while every head was bowed. It was all very real and very solemn, and one felt the breath of the Holy Spirit as one felt it long ago.

The last two evening meetings had to be transferred to the Baptist Tabernacle opposite, as the Drill Hall was needed, and we felt in leaving the huge, ugly place as if it had been gilded with the glory of God.

To some of us the most interesting meetings of the series were the two for officers, non-commissioned officers, and men. By the cordial consent of the chaplain, and by the kind permission of the chief officer of the staff, arrangements were made to hold short meetings on Thursday and Friday afternoon in the Royal Arsenal Theatre. It was at an awkward hour, but the only possible one to the men in the midst of their spring drills and instruction, until eight o'clock. A large number of cards of invitation were posted, so that every officer in the garrison might be reached, and similar cards were distributed among the men, the men themselves earnestly helping. Far more turned out the first day than we expected to see, and on the second the area of the house was almost full, with a good sprinkling of officers in the dress circles. If we had had a third meeting the house would doubtless have been full to the ceiling. Mr. McNeill was at his very best, and that is good.

We gratefully acknowledge that we have had times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, and our churches will feel the quickening influence for days to come.

Agricultural Hall, Islington, for three weeks, from Sunday, April 17. Details in a later issue.

A Surrey Village Mission.

AN interesting village mission is now being carried on in Great Bookham, the centre of a group of smaller villages, situated about three miles from Leatherhead. About three years ago open-air Gospel services were commenced by friends from Dorking, about five miles distant. Since then, through the blessing of God and the efforts of a committee composed of members of various denominations in Dorking, a piece of ground has been purchased, an iron hall erected free of debt, and regular services conducted with encouraging results. There is now a Sunday-school, with an average attendance of 100 scholars and eight teachers; various meetings are well sustained throughout the week, and Sunday services are conducted both morning and evening, with good attendances.

The work has grown so considerably that it has been found necessary to have an evangelist living on the spot. In conjunction with the Christian Colportage Association one has been appointed, who, with his wife, is now earnestly working for the spiritual interests of the people. A great drawback has been the difficulty of getting a cottage for the evangelist to live in. He is now occupying a kind of shed, with two rooms. Having plenty of ground at the back of the mission-hall, the committee have decided to build a cottage at a cost of about £300, but they do not feel justified in commencing to build until a certain sum has been promised towards this amount. The villagers at Bookham have contributed and collected well towards the work, and other friends have generously assisted, but the committee seek further help from fellow Christians in other places, who are interested in the spread of the Gospel in our villages.

The Evangelistic Field.

THE WEAVER BROTHERS.

THESE evangelists have concluded a fourteen days' mission at the Primitive Methodist Chapel, Stoke Newington, in connection with which God has graciously owned their labours, and a remarkable revival has been promoted. The members of this church for years past have been alive to the importance of concentrating all their energies on the spiritual work, and hundreds, since the premises were constructed five years ago, have been converted. The desire of minister and people to see yet greater numbers converted led them to ask the Brothers Weaver to give them a fortnight's labours, which were concluded last Friday. The services throughout the mission have been characterised by a deep and intense spirituality, and as the meetings have proceeded they have increased in power.

The Gospel addresses of Mr. Bewley Weaver have been fearlessly and impressively delivered, and there has been no attempt to create a sensation, but definite and positive truth has been preached in an earnest manner, some of the messages having been very searching and penetrating in their nature. One pleasing feature was the predominance of direct Biblical truth in every address. There was no hesitation in declaring the whole counsel of God. Then Mr. Frank Weaver's singing was no mean feature, some of the solos being sung with marked effectiveness and power. Every night souls stood for salvation, and quite sixty came right out and gave themselves through Christ to God. The services created quite a stir in the locality, and it is believed that they will have far-reaching results. J. J.

UNITED MISSION IN WOOD GREEN.

ON the invitation of the local Free Church Council, Mr. George Clarke has been holding in this neighbourhood a fortnight's mission, which has presented a grand object-lesson of Christian union among Christians and of effectual influence upon the unsaved, workers of all denominations having co-operated in the effort with one heart and aim. Questions of personal taste or sectarian prejudice have been laid aside during the progress of the mission, criticism and controversy have been dumb, and there has been a disposition among the servants of the Lord Jesus Christ to become all things to all men, that by all means they might save some.

The meetings, devoted to evangelistic addresses and "Bible talks," have been held alternately in the Baptist, Congregational, Presbyterian, and Wesleyan Churches, and were preceded by four special united prayer-meetings, all well attended. Printed invitations were delivered at every house in the neighbourhood, accompanied, where opportunity has offered, by personal invitations.

The missioner himself came with a long experience behind him of work for God in the British Isles and in Australia. His manly style, evident sincerity, and striking plainness of speech have made a powerful impression upon the crowds of hearers who have literally besieged the places where he has preached, and the district has been stirred.

On each of the three past Sundays alternate churches have been used, and the services were marked by a deep spiritual tone in the preacher and earnest attention in the listeners. On the morning of Sunday week as many persons were turned away from the Presbyterian Church as would have filled the building three times over, and every available inch of standing room was utilised throughout the long service. It was the same in the Wesleyan church at night. The latter place seats a little over one thousand hearers, but there must have been some hundreds more packed in. The same building has been practically filled every week-night from the start. Ministers have frequently met upon the same platform. Certainly, the past Lord's Day showed no signs of weakened effort on the part of helpers, nor of flagging interest in the congregations. The mission has had the effect of giving fresh heart to Christian workers, and further good results are confidently anticipated in increased memberships for the various churches represented.

As to results, beyond doubt earnest souls in the various church memberships had prepared good ground for the mission, by prayer and work; and they have, by God's favour, reaped an abundant harvest from their patient sowing. Up to Sunday night some 250 cards had been received, with names and addresses of those who have for the first time professed a saving interest in Christ; and these indicate that the converts are, in the main, people who have been accustomed to attend religious services, those who were on the borderland of decision for Christ. For the moment non-church-going Wood Green remains untouched as a whole, save by what it has witnessed in the crowds flocking to hear Mr. Clarke. The minor effect must have been also produced, to some extent, upon the Socialists, Freethinkers, and Agnostics who make "Jolly Butcher's Hill" and its vicinity a veritable Vanity Fair on Sunday mornings by their clamouring voices uplifted one against another.

The mission closed with a thanksgiving meeting in the Wesleyan church on Monday night.

EVANGELISTS' MOVEMENTS.

Considerable interest is being roused in Harwich by the visit of the well-known mission preacher Rev. W. M. H. Aitken. The place seems waking up; and increasing congregations from night to night witness to the hold that the mission is gaining on the attention of the people. A goodly number remain night by night to the after-meetings, which are very quiet and solemn. There is nothing that could be called excitement, but a good many of those who have been conversed with have shown signs of much earnest desire to know more of the way of salvation, and there seems every reason to hope that a good few have already found a real blessing. It is to be hoped that next week will be a reaping time, and that many who are now impressed will be gathered in. Mr. Aitken is ably seconded by his helpers. Rev. J. Nunn is most popular with the children, who crowd to his services day by day and listen with rapt attention to his beautifully simple but most telling addresses. The mission will conclude on Monday, 28th inst., after which Mr. Aitken proposes to proceed to Holy Trinity Church, Penge, on Palm Sunday, to conduct services there during Holy Week and Easter.

Gipsy Smith, at the invitation of the F.C.C., has held an eight days' mission in Batley. The services drew crowded congregations each evening, Zion (M.N.C.) Chapel, which accommodates 1500, being filled night after night. Over 700 inquirers gave their names and addresses, together with the church with which they have been or desire to be associated. On the morning of the first Sunday Gipsy Smith preached in the Congregational, and on that of the second Sunday in the Hick-lane Wesleyan Chapel. The whole town has been deeply stirred.

On the 2nd of this month Mr. T. A. Smith concluded an interesting series of evangelistic services in Stromness, Orkney. During the first week the services were held in the Free Church, and during the second week in the United Presbyterian Church, the congregations having united for this purpose. Mr. Smith, who is well known in the North of Scotland, is now superintendent of the Gordon Evangelistic Mission, Aberdeen. The services were well attended from the first, but the interest increased so much that the evangelist was induced to extend his stay for three more days. One pleasing feature of the gatherings was the large attendance of young men and women, many of whom at the close of the mission made a public profession of their faith.

In September last, Mr. J. Bennett Anderson held a month's services at the Working Men's Mission, New Cut, when many were led to Christ. So great was the blessing that another series was arranged for, and this has now been held with cheering results. The congregations were large, and the most important feature of the above mission are the large open-air mission services held every night for at least one hour before marching to the inside gathering.

Dr. Munhall has had great meetings at Victoria, B.C. It was feared that the gold fever which has recently been hot there would interfere with the mission, but the interest aroused was remarkable, and the audiences very large, and hundreds professed conversion. At the close of each service crowds of anxious souls were found.

Mrs. Amanda Smith has been busy during the early months of this year in Gospel work at different points in the States of Colorado, Oregon, and Washington Territory. God has given much blessing on her labours. For a time she suffered from a painful attack of rheumatism, but according to latest advice she had recovered and was in active work in the town of Seattle, Wash.

Mr. Walter Notman, of the Evangelisation Society, London, has concluded a fifteen days' mission in the Salford Mission Hall, Manchester. The work has been of a most inspiring and encouraging nature. The meetings have been deepening in interest and growing in numbers each night, and God has abundantly blessed his servant in the faithful and convincing preaching of the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. Numbers of anxious souls have been led to the cross of Christ, and have rejoiced in the knowledge and acceptance of a personal Saviour; while God's own people have been greatly strengthened through the preaching of the Word. The season has truly been refreshing. Mr. Notman commences a united mission at Bridgend, S. Wales, on March 27.

A fourteen days' special mission to the soldiers, women, and children in Spital Tongues, Newcastle, has closed, seven days inside the barracks and seven days at the soldiers' home outside. During the second week, in the home, finding it difficult to get the soldiers under the sound of the Gospel, coffee and refreshments were given at the close of each service, and by this means about 100 soldiers were induced to attend during the week. The power of God was manifested in each service, and the Spirit of God was dealing very earnestly with some of the men and women who came to the meetings, and more especially with the children.

Successful evangelistic meetings have been held by Mr. J. J. Smith, of Manchester, in the Methodist chapel, Newtongore; and similar services have been held by Rev. John Good, Methodist evangelist, at Charlemont.

The Liverpool evangelist, Mr. James Eyres, has conducted eight days of special mission services at Midge Hall, near Preston. The interest in the mission has been widespread, people coming several miles to the meetings as they became known. The church has been thoroughly aroused, the careless have been led to think on their ways, and turn to God. All ages have participated in the blessing, and whole families have been saved. The farewell meeting was a most memorable time, many seeking and surrendering themselves at this services. The congregations were excellent, both on the week-evenings and on Sundays. All unite in giving praise to God for his signal blessing during these eight days.—J. B.

Rev. E. Payson Hammond has been holding special meetings in Boston in Ruggles-street, the Old Cambridge, and Clarendon-street chapels. In all these services God's blessing has been manifested. Several hundred have professed conversion. Many Christians have learned how to win the young to Christ, entering into the work with great zeal. Some of the workers in these meetings will, no doubt, continue in this line of labour for many years to come. Mr. Hammond has also conducted, at the request of the Evangelistic Association of New England, the noon meetings in Park-street, the audiences generally filling the auditorium. Mr. Hammond will conduct united meetings in the interests of the young and old in Lynn, Mass., next week, and the Sunday following in Roxbury.

Rev. T. B. Castle, one of the most successful of the younger men of the Methodist Church, conducted a special eight days' mission from 10th to 17th inst. in Nicolson-square Church, Edinburgh. The subjects were announced as the greatest questions of the day, and were certainly dealt with in a manner conducive to the temporal and eternal welfare of the hearers. Mr. Castle is a very original preacher, who, while he treats his subject in a racy and interesting manner, is intensely in earnest.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has been conducting a twelve days' united mission at Bournemouth, in connection with the Free Church Council, the evening meetings being held at the East Cliff Congregational Church and the afternoon Bible-readings at the Lansdown Baptist Church.

A highly gratifying evangelistic mission by Mr. James Clark, of the Evangelisation Society, has been concluded at Yorkley, Forest of Dean. Held in connection with the united Baptist chapels of Parkend and Yorkley, the mission extended over a fortnight at each chapel. The attendance at the week evening services was excellent, and on the Sunday the chapel was full to overflowing. Mr. Clark's impressive discourses were honoured of God in the quickening of believers and the conversion of many precious souls.

A special mission, extending over nearly three weeks, has been held at Churchinford, Somerset, by Mr. C. B. Jolliffe, of the Evangelisation Society. The interest evinced in the mission was not only sustained throughout, but increased with each service. The last meeting was one which will long be remembered.

Rev. Wm. Mottram, secretary of the Congregational Total Abstinence Association, conducted, last week, a Gospel mission at Zion Chapel, Attercliffe, Sheffield. The services were attended with much blessing both to Christians and new converts.

A mission has been concluded by Mr. J. Wharton, at Shaftesbury, Dorset. The numbers were good, and the Word was with power. Several have been brought from darkness into light. The evangelist had previously visited Reading, Bracknell, and Woking, blessing being vouchsafed. He has left now for Rosslington-street, North London, and will greatly value prayer.

The special services conducted by Mr. Monro Collings at the Enfield Town Christian Mission during the past three weeks have been greatly owned by God. Night after night the meetings have been largely attended, and not a meeting has been held without some being brought to a knowledge of forgiveness of sin. A week previous to the series was devoted to special meetings for prayer. The mission has been greatly blessed to the quickening of the workers, and this has led them to earnestly seek anxious enquirers and point out the way of salvation. Large numbers of persons have professed conversion during the services, and many more are still seeking the Saviour. At the praise and testimony meetings held at the close of the mission a great number bore witness to the effect of the services. One of the most gratifying results is the work among the scholars of the Sunday-school, a goodly number being led to come out on the Lord's side and thus be enabled to devote their early years to Christ's service.—E. J. Davis, Supt. Sunday-school.

Mr. Monro Collings, Fakenham, to April 4.
Mr. J. J. Sims, City Hall, Glasgow, during April.
Mr. Charles Inglis, Chatham, March 27-April 5.
Mr. George Clarke, Holloway, March 27-April 3.
Mr. F. C. Spurr, to Easter, Penzance, Falmouth, and Truro.
The Weaver Bros., Liverpool, to April 1; Wrexham, April 17-30.
Mr. W. R. Lane, Sudbury (Suffolk), March 27-April 3; Preston, April 15-22.
Mrs. Baeyertz, in Blackburn, this month; at end of April and May, in Aberdeen.
Mr. E. P. Telford, Islington, N., March 27-April 7; Gainsborough, April 10-21.
Mr. Josiah Nix, Devonport, March 26-April 4; Old Market Square, Bristol, April 8.
Gipsy Smith, Kingston-on-Thames, March 19-28; Rugby, April 3-11; Guernsey, April 16-25.
Sergeant Pullinger, Sun., 27, Gospel Hall, Weybridge; Sun., April 10, Soldiers' Home, Winchester; Wed., April 13, The Forge, Forest Hill; Sun., April 17, Gospel Hall, Weybridge; Sun., April 24, Lyonsdowne Hall, New Barnet.
The Evangelisation Society.—The following missions, amongst others, will be in progress on Sunday next (March 27, 1898):—Ipswich, J. Whiting; Aldershot, J. G. Stanger; Bridgend, W. Notman; Plumstead, G. Taffin; West Hampstead, J Brown; Hull, G. Pell; Malmesbury; J. H. Cook; Clayton-le-Moors, J. Shields; Bristol, F. Holmes; Broadwater, J. Lovell; Eastbourne, C. Lazenby; Blantyre, R. Lapsley; Dundee, T. W. Canning; Glasgow, J. W. Moodie.

Requests for Prayer.

For special meetings by Mr. William Forbes at Stamford next week.

For a special mission by Mr. Herbert R. Francis, March 27 to April 3, at Cornwall Hall, Cornwall-road, W.

For an eight days' special mission in the Baptist Church, Harlington, by Messrs. P. R. Hurditch and F. H. Hutchins, to March 28.

For evangelistic services now being held in the large Albert Hall, Cazneau-street, Liverpool, every Sunday night till May 29 (D.V.), conducted by J. Bennett Anderson.

Caledonian Christian Club.—Last Thursday evening the rooms of the Caledonian Christian Club, in Upper Bedford-place, were crowded for a social gathering of Scotsmen in London. For the past month the resources of the club have been unusually taxed to accommodate new comers. These social reunions do much to keep in touch with those who have passed through the portals of the club into life in London. It was noted during the evening that almost every hamlet and town in Scotland has been closely linked with this Scottish Home. Its helpfulness to strangers in the metropolis at a critical time in their experience has secured many expressions of gratitude from parents and friends throughout the land.

Obituary.

REV. JOSEPH LAMPHIER, ULCOMBE.

This lover of Gospel simplicity, who for thirty years was rector of Ulcombe, Kent, has passed to his rest. He was one who dearly loved the simple Gospel of Jesus Christ, and with all gentleness earnestly proclaimed it both in his life, in the pulpit, and amongst his parishioners. Every Sunday morning he was accustomed to travel in spirit through his parish, and to pray for each household, and both in sickness and in health he endeavoured to win them for Christ. He was also a very liberal and warm friend of the C.M.S., and did all in his power to forward its work. He was only ill about six days, and many were the prayers offered for his recovery. But his work was done. A very large number of his people gathered around his grave on the 12th inst., and the church was very well filled on the following Sunday, when addresses were given by Rev. George Everard, rector of Teston.

MR. G. T. CONGREVE, BRIGHTON.

Amongst those who suffer from the scourge of our climate, or have friends endangered thereby, the name of Mr. Congreve has long been familiar. Hence many will learn with regret that he passed away on Monday week at the age of seventy-seven, after a few days of serious illness. He had been gradually failing in health for some time, but had kept at his work, holding even his large bi-weekly Bible classes till within a few days of his falling asleep. Many will recall his long years of service in Christian work at Rye-lane, Peckham, as deacon, treasurer, superintendent of the Sunday-school with 900 scholars, and a teacher of the Women's Bible-class with its 120 members which laid the foundations for the great work that has since been carried on under the pastorates of Revs. J. T. Briscoe and J. W. Ewing. Upon his removal to Hove for health, he at once commenced work again, building first of all an iron room in Holland-road, where he gathered so considerable a Bible class of young women that he deemed it necessary to found the Holland-road Young Women's Christian Institute, where the membership is nearly 400; the large hall being filled twice a week since 1884 with those attracted by his Bible readings. So many having given themselves to Christ under his teaching, and the need for a Baptist Church in Hove being felt, he built the present beautiful church and school-rooms, which together with the institute form a remarkable pile of buildings, entirely at his own expense, and handed them over in trust for the Baptist denomination. This was done at a cost of £16,000. Besides all this he was also an author, and his "Gems of Song"—a hymn-book used very extensively in Sunday-schools—"Acrostics on the Bible," and "Yonder," are widely known and highly appreciated.

MR. JAMES TOWNLEY.

This faithful servant of Christ, who has been called home, was the son of one of the first L.M.S. missionaries in India. He was born during his father's residence in Calcutta, on January 21, 1819. During his boyhood he came to England with his father, and was educated at Hackney Grammar School and also by a private tutor. When about eighteen years of age he was greatly exercised in mind about the passage, "All that the Father giveth Me, shall come to Me; and him that cometh to Me I will in no wise cast out." The latter part of the verse was deeply impressed on his heart, and he was led into peace. He henceforth devoted himself to the service of the Lord Jesus Christ. He had followed the original profession of his father, the law, in which he remained until he was fifty years of age. He then retired, and, again following his father's example, he devoted himself unreservedly to the work of the Gospel. His first sermon as a minister was preached at fifty years of age, when he assumed the pastorate of Walford-road Chapel, Stoke Newington. There he remained nine years. About this period his first wife was removed by death, whereupon Mr. Townley undertook for a short period to represent the Chapel Building Society (Congregational), and travelled throughout the kingdom. He again settled down to the pastorate at Chapel-en-le-Frith, Derbyshire, where he remained two and a-half years.

In 1881 Mr. Townley married Miss Jane Paton, sister of that well-known Christian worker the late Mr. Robert Paton, of Highbury. From that time forward he devoted himself with unremitting zeal to the Lord's service in London. He lived at Stoke Newington. To all who knew him Mr. Townley commended himself as one of the meekest and most Christlike of men. Unknown to his neighbours, his constant service on behalf of the suffering, the anxious, and the needy abounded in every direction.

On Sunday, March 13, his active life was peacefully terminated in a full old age. His body was laid in the grave at Abney Park Cemetery, Rev. Thomas Grear, minister of Bishopsgate Chapel, conducting the service.

Mr. Townley was a man devoted to the study of the Scripture. Towards the close of his life the thought that chiefly arrested his attention was centred around the inspired words "That we might be partakers of his holiness." Being dead he yet will speak by many happy reminiscences to the hearts of not a few sorrowing friends. R. B.

Personalia.

Mrs. Harvey-Jellie has removed to Seaton Villa, Mutley, Plymouth.

Rev. Dr. C. H. Waller, Principal of St. John's College, Highbury, accompanied by two of his daughters, sailed from London for Melbourne in the Westgate on Thursday week. It is to be hoped that his health will be greatly benefited by the voyage.

Rev. Andrew Murray, the well-known spiritual teacher, has been honoured with the degree of D.D. by the University of Aberdeen. As a scholar and a man of theological attainments, Dr. Murray fully merits the distinction thus conferred upon him.

Mr. I. D. Sankey has held some very interesting services in Constantinople, singing and addressing gatherings in the Robert College, and the American School, the Girls' School at Scutari, etc. Mr. and Mrs. Sankey hoped to leave for Athens on March 16. They expect to be in England about May 1, and will spend some three weeks in London.

Rev. R. M. Cole, of the American Mission at Bitlis, Turkey, passed through London this week on his way to the United States for a short term of absence. He hopes to return to his post at Bitlis early in December. He reports a fair degree of present personal safety for the native Christians, who, however, are not without apprehensions of future trouble. An interesting work is carried on among Armenian orphans at Bitlis and Sassoun.

Rev. E. N. Thwaites.—An unfortunate error (due to verbal misapprehension on the part of one of our assistants) found place in our last issue, to the effect that Mr. Thwaites had lost his wife. We rejoice to know that is not the case. It is loss of voice from which he is suffering, and for recovery of which he asks the prayers of our readers. Following medical advice, Mr. and Mrs. Thwaites are going this week to the south of France for a time.

Mr. W. Chatterton Dix, who has contributed largely to our hymnology, such hymns as "Come unto Me, ye weary" and "As with gladness men of old" being from his pen, is, we regret to hear, very ill. It has been felt that the present would be an opportune time to testify to the esteem in which he is personally held, as well as appreciation of his services to the cause of sacred song, by presenting him with a testimonial; and among the gentlemen who have consented to act upon the committee are the Rev. A. K. H. Boyd, D.D., Sir E. H. Elton, Mr. F. J. Fry, Canon Holland, Rev. Dr. Julian, Canon Murray, and Mr. Goodenough Taylor. Mr. Conrad P. Fry, Union-street, Bristol, has undertaken to act as secretary and treasurer.

Gray's Yard Church and Ragged Schools.—The annual meeting was held in the mission-hall, 13, Duke-street, Manchester-square. Mr. F. A. Bevan presided. The report, read by Mr. A. G. Fraser, stated that the attendance at the Ragged church services continued to increase both morning and evening. With regard to the three schools, there were some two hundred on the books. The various clubs, classes for girls and boys, etc., which for sixty years had been carried on, continued to do more and more useful work among the poor in the district. On Sunday a meal, consisting of bread and tea, was provided morning and evening. Their 4d. lodging-house, with its sixty-four beds, had been well patronised, and about 23,000 beds had been used and paid for. By dint of strict economy it had been possible to pay all expenses out of the charge of 4d. per night. The amount required to keep out of debt and meet the actual necessities of the Mission was £700 per annum; £120 was needed immediately to liquidate the debt, and at least £120 extra income for the future. Dr. Barnardo then gave an address. The chairman said that more workers were wanted, but they must be of the right sort. The work was carried on with wisdom and efficiency.

In the absence of any improvement in Mr. Gladstone's condition, he will return to Hawarden this week.—Lord Salisbury continues decidedly weak.

The annual National Exhibition and Sale of Irish Industrial Manufactures was opened at Lansdowne House, Berkeley-square, by the Duchess of Connaught.

The Charity Organisation Society is directing its attention to the reduction of the number of out-patients at the hospitals. The present system is liable to great abuse.

Ever showing practical sympathy with the suffering and persecuted, the Queen has selected embroideries from the work of Armenian refugee girls in the Industrial School at Varna.

For the improvement and alteration of old school premises, the London School Board has resolved to spend £100,000. This will open the way for some much-needed health reforms.

A great saving of human life should be accomplished as the result of the labours of the Select Committee just appointed to inquire into the use and sale of petroleum and other inflammable liquids.

Some anxiety is felt at the outlook of the coal trade in South Wales and all that is involved in the prosperity of that industry. It is to be fervently hoped that wiser counsels than a strike will prevail.

A resolution to commemorate the thousandth anniversary of the death of King Alfred was passed at a representative meeting held in the Mansion House last Friday. The Queen approves of the proposal.

Good progress is being made with the London University Commission Bill. It has been considered and passed by the Standing Committee of the House of Lords, the names of the Commissioners being inserted.

The temperance electors at Maidstone have met and discussed the merits of the two Parliamentary candidates. As neither is in favour of Sunday closing, no instructions will be issued as to how this section of the community should vote.

It would be a great calamity if the London City Mission should have to relinquish some of its work through lack of funds, as the district secretary recently intimated at the Mansion House would be the case unless speedy financial help were given.

At a recent sitting of the Associated Chambers of Commerce Sir A. Rollit, M.P., urged the extension throughout the United Kingdom of facilities for training youths destined for a commercial career to assist in protecting the country from foreign rivals.

We rejoice to see that, in consequence of the revelations made before the Parliamentary Committee on Money Lending, several morning and evening papers now refuse insertion to loan office advertisements in any form. We hope this good lead will be largely followed.

Humiliating and saddening statistics are published by the United Kingdom Alliance. The number of prosecutions for drunkenness continue to increase. In 1896, in England and Wales, 187,258 persons were proceeded against, compared with 169,298 in 1895; while 7,146 were sent to prison.

The Queen has sent £20 to the Cowes Compassionate Fund; the Clothworkers' Company £20 to the College for Working Women; £1000 from the Skinners' Company to the City Orthopœdic Hospital; £100 from the Duke of Fife to the Hospital for Sick Children, Great Ormond-street. Additional donations are flowing in for the memorial to the Duchess of Teck.

The Church of England Women's Help Society does good service among workwomen and workgirls. It has various branches in the provinces and the colonies.—Excellent testimony was borne to the work now being carried on by the Church Army at a meeting held in the Mansion House, Lord Farquhar presiding, while the Lord Mayor delivered a short address.—Much valuable work is being done by the Church of England Temperance Society. It has 673 parochial temperance branches, with a membership of over 132,000, in London.

FOREIGN.

The ninth General Congress of Teachers of the Blind is to be held in Berlin in July.

The agrarian rising is spreading in Hungary, and in Galicia peasants have attacked the Jews.

A rising has broken out in the Province of Battembang, Siam, the people refusing to pay taxes.

The French Senate have agreed to a supplementary credit of nearly 17,000,000fr. for military expenses in Madagascar. While missionary prospects are much more hopeful, the country is still unsettled.

Military movements of a vigorous nature are proceeding in the Soudan, where an important engagement is pending.

The news given by a member of the Berlin Chemical Society as to the consumption of beer in North Germany is amazing. 20,000,000 barrels were brewed "in the year," the consumption per head being twenty gallons.

A rising of 80,000 natives in German East Africa is a serious discouragement.—A German expedition has made a successful exploration of the Upper Congo and the Cameroons.

The Transvaal.—The outlook is not reassuring if the rumour is correct that at a meeting of the Volksraad at the President's residence, strong opinions were expressed against admitting the claim of British suzerainty, and that the Government be left to take advantage of British complications elsewhere.

Germany.—The Imperial German Diet will consider before the close of the present session a provisional modus vivendi regarding commercial relations between Great Britain and Germany. Nothing but fraternal feeling should exist between these two nations united by so many ties.—Germany is reported to have retired from the European Concert.

India.—Measures taken at Bombay to abolish search-parties and the inspection of corpses in regard to the plague will go a great way to re-establish confidence between conflicting interests and parties.—Later accounts report labourers returning to work and business generally resumed.—For last week the death-rate had decreased.—The Afridis have implored Sir W. Lockhart not to invade their country.

America and Cuba.—America's benevolent intentions towards Cuba are not acceptable to the Emperor Francis Joseph, who is seeking to promote interference on the part of European powers. Meanwhile existing conditions are growing worse.—"Friendly representations" have been addressed to the Washington Government on the Cuban autonomy question.—President McKinley and his advisers are more favourable than ever to peaceful action. In spite of this, six Spanish torpedo-boats are on their way to Cuba. He is reported to have said that he "would rather that his administration should be an ignominious failure, than that it should be responsible for an unholy war." Too often rulers who express their abhorrence of an unjust and unholy conflict are easily persuaded of the righteousness of any struggle that promises conquest. Let us hope that the Cubans may obtain relief without two countries being drawn into war, and fresh complications created.

Crete.—Burdened with sorrow and misery as this unfortunate island is, we trust that the latest suggestion of the powers that Great Britain, France, and Russia shall restore a normal state of affairs will bring relief.—The Porte has issued another circular urging the powers to bring the Cretan question to an early settlement. The Sultan is opposed to any but an Ottoman Governor.—On the opening of the markets a disturbance arose, when three Turkish Gendarmes were killed. The bitterest feeling continues to prevail between Christians and Mohammedans.—The report is still current that Prince George is to be appointed Governor of Crete for life, after the evacuation of Thessaly.—A further appeal is being made by Mr. Corgialegno, Lombard House, George Yard, Lombard-street, on behalf of the distress in Crete. More than £1200 has been contributed, but a larger sum is urgently needed. The necessity has only to be stated to call forth immediate help.

The Far East.—The mission of the Chinese Special Envoy to St. Petersburg has failed. China has no alternative but to yield to Russia's demands.—Eight days are given for a reply to the French claims.—The Japan elections show a small majority for the Government.—It is announced that the Csar's Minister at Seoul has been instructed to inform the Emperor of Korea that if Korea requires no foreign help Russia will recall her financial adviser.—France demands concessions in Hainan and in the provinces of Kwang-Si and and Kwan-Tung.—An American mission in Chung-King has been sacked by a mob, and one Chinese medical assistant murdered.

Japan.—Since Marquis Ito once more became Prime Minister the relations between Tokio and Peking have been steadily improving.—The Marquis Ito expresses very broad views on education and religion, stating that no Japanese Cabinet could consider the propriety of remodelling the educational system of the country on a religious basis. People in Japan could adopt what form of faith they pleased, and freedom in practising it was guaranteed by the Constitution.—An unsympathetic view is taken by the American press of the suggested alliance between Great Britain, the United States, and Japan.

Irish Notes.

At the invitation of the Evangelical Alliance, Wednesday, March 16, was observed in Dublin, Limerick, and various other centres as a day of special prayer on behalf of Ireland.

Never before in their history have Irish Methodists manifested such an interest in missions as they are doing at present, and never have they made such extensive or elaborate preparations for their missionary anniversaries, which are just about to commence.

The International Bible Reading Association is making progress in this country. In Ulster there are seventy-three branches and 9521 members, being an increase for the past year of nearly 2500 members, while in the other parts of Ireland there are 105 branches and 6636 members, or a total of 178 branches and 16,157 members.

The Belfast Branch of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children is doing a good work, and during the past quarter dealt with as many as 284 cases, involving the welfare of 942 children. Thirty of the cases were prosecuted and punished. If it were not for the drink there would be little or no need for such a society as this.

At the annual meeting, just held in Belfast, of the Ulster Society for Promoting the Education of the Deaf, Dumb, and Blind, a resolution was passed expressing satisfaction with the results that had attended the compulsory education of these afflicted classes in Great Britain, and a petition was adopted praying that an Act should be passed making similar education compulsory in Ireland.

Scottish Notes.

The Bristol U.P. Congregation, Edinburgh, have given a call to Rev. J. G. Goold, Dumbarton, to be colleague and successor to Rev. G. F. James.

Rev. T. Currie, of Edinburgh, who has decided to accept the call as colleague and successor to Dr. McEwan, Clapham, is an earnest and faithful Gospel preacher and a successful pastor.

At the annual meeting of the Glasgow Auxiliary of the Baptist Missionary Society it was stated that the Glasgow churches had contributed during the past year £1918, and the total amount sent from Scotland was £3075, the highest amount ever sent.

At the annual meeting of the Scottish Reformation Society it was stated that there never was more need than at the present moment for the on-carrying of the important work which the Society carried on, when the anti-Christian forces opposed to the truth of God, and to the great cause with which the Society was identified, were becoming increasingly powerful and arrogant, and more and more successful in their sinister efforts.

The thirteenth annual conference of the Railway Mission in Scotland was held in Edinburgh on Saturday and Sunday, March 19 and 20. There are now sixty branches in existence. The reports came from places as far north as Fort William, and as far west as Greenock. On the whole, while there is difficulty and discouragement, the work is of a most hopeful and interesting nature. The evening meeting on Saturday was largely attended, a large proportion of those present being railway men. Addresses were delivered by R. Nixon (London), R. Logan (Glasgow), Mr. Grieve, and Rev. T. Millar.

Barry Dock.—We are full of praise to God for the blessings which we have experienced during the past few weeks in the halls of the Gospel Tent Mission, Barry Dock. Romanism is advancing in South Wales, and that the eyes of Protestants might be opened on the subject, a series of meetings were arranged in Barry Dock and Brynmawr. The priests and their flocks were alarmed, and tried to stop the meetings, but, failing this, the poor deluded Roman Catholics resorted to stones! The crowds that pressed in to hear what was to be said were so great that the doors had to be closed and many turned away. Alderman Richard Cory, J.P., and other friends showed deep interest in the movement. Some striking cases of conversion have occurred recently. Some who had sunk to the lowest depths of society have been saved, and are sitting at the feet of Jesus clothed and in their right minds. The last annual report will be gladly sent upon receipt of post-card. Gerald R. Coultas, Gen. Supt.
Mission House, Barry Dock, South Wales.

The Book World.

In The Four Last Things, by J. M. Gibbon, subjects of sublime and grave import are discussed, not always in terms which we approve, nor to conclusions which we endorse, but uniformly with reverence, and often helpfully. (1s. net. H. R. Allenson.)

A new pastime is commended to our boys in Glass Blowing and Working, by Thos. Bolas, F.C.S., F.I.C. The book gives, with abundant illustration, lecture demonstrations, which seem to prove the adaptability of glass-blowing as a hobby. (2s. net. Dawbarn & Ward.)

An attractive little book of choice verses, compiled by Annie E. Lyddon, is For Remembrance. (1s. net.) Another booklet of deep interest is The Lord's Brother, and other verses, by M. M. Penstone. (1s.) Spiritual thoughts are forcibly expressed in these pages. (Nisbet & Co.)

Rev. Dr. Townsend, vicar of Broadwater Down, Tunbridge Wells, presents a clear outline of prophetic teaching in Watching for the Dawn. (1s. Marshall Bros.) While on details there is ample room for difference, for the most part the author presents views that are generally accepted by students of prophecy.

Dr. Alexander Whyte's latest "appreciation" deals with Father John of the Greek Church. Many interesting facts regarding the Eastern Church are recorded by the way, and characteristic passages are given from Father John's mystical and spiritual autobiography. These pages point lessons which many of us would be the better for learning. (2s. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.)

A useful little book of helps to prayer and meditation is Abba, Father, by Rev. C. G. Baskerville, M.A., vicar of Tonbridge, of which a new and revised edition has been issued by Messrs. Nisbet. (1s.) In a brief introduction, Dr. H. C. G. Moule says he has known the book to be of the highest spiritual value in the actual using; and this we can well believe. We are also confident that teachers and preachers will find many a welcome Bible reading outline in the pages.

We have all much to learn from Quaker biography, so it is a pleasure to call attention to John Woolman: a Study for Young Men. By Rev. Thomas Green, M.A. (6d. and 1s. Headley Bros.) After reading this little work one instinctively resolves to read Woolman's journal, and that famous book has lessons for young and old Christians of all ranks and orders. This is a second edition of Mr. Green's capital sketch, which Dr. Handley Moule commends in a hearty although discriminating introduction.

The New Testament division of The Biblical Illustrator, edited by Rev. J. S. Exell, M.A., is nearing completion. The twenty-fifth volume, containing matter relating to the The Three Epistles of John and the Epistle of Jude, contains over six hundred pages, full of expository, homiletical, and illustrative gatherings, succinctly served ready to the preacher's hand. In many directions we have heard of the practical utility of this work; and this volume is in all respects as good as its excellent predecessors. (7s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.)

The widening interest in the history and affairs of "The Great Britain of Asia" renders especially welcome a new edition (the third) of Japan and the Japan Mission, of the Church Missionary Society. (2s. C.M.S. House, Salisbury-square.) The first half of the book tells, in a very readable style, the story of the land and its people; and then, after a sketch of Protestant mission effort in general, there are chapters describing in detail the rise and progress of the work of the C.M.S. There are illustrations, also a map, which enhance the value of this very instructive little volume.

Parents who have growing lads looking up to them, and framing in their minds more questions than they dare to ask, will be glad to read and at a proper time pass on What a Young Boy Ought to Know, by Sylvanus Stall, D.D. (4s. The Vir Publishing Co., 44, Fleet-street, E.C.) The book is the first of the "Self and Sex" series, which promises to be of great value. The author has dealt with a difficult subject in a wise and helpful manner, and his book fully deserves the high praise bestowed upon it by Drs. Joseph Cook and Theodore Cuyler, Messrs. Anthony Comstock and J. Willis Baer, and other men (and women), whose testimonials are reproduced in prefatory pages.

Christina Rossetti. By Mackenzie Bell. (Hurst and Blackett.) The numerous admirers of Miss Rossetti's writings will welcome this sympathetic sketch of her life and critical estimate of her work, while many others, we trust, will become acquainted with her for the first time. Mr. Mackenzie Bell, himself no mean poet, has made admirable use of his material, which in some respects was scanty, and has produced a work which seems to us a biographical model. His strong religious affinities have enabled him to do justice to the purity and loftiness of aim seen in Miss Rossetti's beautiful poems and prose writings. We are glad to know that the book has already reached a third edition.

It is refreshing in these days of speculative teaching to peruse such pages as Principal Simon gives us in Some Bible Problems. (5s. Andrew Melrose.) Dr. Simon deals with inspiration and revelation, with evolution and the fall of man, with criticism and Israelitish literature. He is a theologian, and that cannot be said of many who would to-day be teachers of the ignorant and leaders of the blind. So he examines literary theories with spiritual consequences well in mind, and the glamour of novelty has little charm for him. Dr. Simon in this book dwells upon the Bible from the same point of view as when, in a work published in 1886, he studied it as an outgrowth of theocratic life. This involves the deeply-interesting subject of the election of Israel, which is discussed with learning, thought, and practical insight. We have read these pages with great pleasure, and fully agree with the venerable author's final words. "What the Christian Church needs to be on its guard against is, the acceptance of a reconstruction of the history of Israel which eliminates the special Divine aids, revelations, and inspiration, whose purpose was the reconciliation of God and man; in a word, all that has constituted, and still constitutes, its distinctive value."

A new monthly, The Sculptor (6d. R. H. Collings, 20, Bucklersbury), deals with marble, both in its artistic and commercial aspects.

Light and Leading is a monthly which thoughtful teachers and preachers will find of real service. (3d. monthly. Allenson.) A new feature is "The Local Preachers' Page."

Pamphlets and Booklets.

The Student Volunteer Missionary Union has issued a striking booklet, entitled Prayer and Missions, written by Mr. R. E. Speer, of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. We trust the booklet will have many readers. (1d. S.V.M.U. Office, 93, Aldersgate-street, E.C.)

A trenchant criticism and condemnation is administered by James Cowin in Gambling at Bazaars. Though writing with special reference to proceedings in the Isle of Man, the author has much to say that is of universal application on the illegal and immoral character of practices that have been sadly prevalent. (2½d., post free. The Author, 3, Beverley-mount, Douglas.)

Two striking pamphlets by that accomplished controversialist, Mr. Charles Hastings Collette, are A Reply to the Catholic Truth Society's Tract, "What does the Bible Say?" and Roman Priests as Described by Themselves, compiled from authentic sources. The latter is in its third edition, enlarged by a supplement. (2d. each. Office of the Protestant Alliance, 430, Strand, W.C.)

A subject of immediate interest and importance has been dealt with by Mr. W. Blair Neatby M.A., in Three Letters on the Proposal for a Roman Catholic University, addressed to a High Churchman. The pages are eminently readable and very instructive. We trust they will do something to frustrate the thing proposed. (2½d., post free. The Author, 13, Binden-road, Shepherd's Bush, W.)

Messrs. W. F. Mack & Co., 52, Park-row, Bristol, are unquestionably "up to date" with two admirable penny pamphlets: Life of the late Mr. George Müller, which is a capital biographical sketch; and Mr. George Müller's Last Sermon, preached at Bethesda Chapel on Sunday evening, October 3, 1897. The discourse is based on 2 Cor. v. 1, and unfolds in brief the doctrine of the resurrection.

The British College Christian Union has issued a booklet prepared by W. H. T. Gairdner, Studies in Prayer; or, The Precept and Example of Jesus Christ in regard to Prayer. The pages are designed for Bible classes and private use. Much thought and care has been expended upon the studies, which are likely to help in the promotion of devotion and teaching. (2d. Office of the B.C.C.U., 93 Aldersgate-street, E.C.)

Dr. Bullinger is preparing a large work on the literary figures of speech used in the Bible. The subject is of great importance. As a specimen, as well as in order to meet a much-felt inquiry, he has published a booklet entitled, This is My Body. Explaining metaphor, and distinguishing it from other figures, he interprets the words of Christ as they are generally understood by Protestant Evangelicals. He supports his position by striking illustrations, and shows that philologically, philosophically, and scientifically the words mean "This, (bread) represents my body." (1d. Eyre & Spottiswoode.)

Mr. Silas Henn has for many years been sending forth words of warning and instruction. He has now written The Tobacco Curse, in which he gives weighty reasons why Christians should abstain from the narcotic weed. We trust these pages will prevent many from placing themselves under the power of an unclean and enslaving habit. (3d., post free.) Another timely publication, by the same author, is The Theatre: Its Evils, and the Duty of Christians in Relation to it. (2d., post free.) Important facts are presented and a mature judgment pronounced. The pages are calculated to exert a good influence; we trust they will have many readers. (The Author, 4, Himley-road, Dudley.)

Rev. Theodore A. Howard, vicar of St. Matthew's, Toxteth, Liverpool, has published, with the title, The Coming of the Lord Draweth Nigh, a paper which he read in December last at a clerical conference. A large amount of teaching on a great theme has here been presented in a condensed form. The same author gives, in another pamphlet, "a word to professing Christians" against the theatre and stage plays—Come Out and Be Ye Separate. These pages evidently cost their author thought and research, and should be placed in the hands of such as are under the delusion that stage-acting is a legitimate source of entertainment for Christians. (2d. each. J. A. Thompson & Co., Elliot-street, Liverpool; J. Nisbet and Co., Berners-street, London.)

"The Woman of Canaan."—Matt. xv. 21-31.

Golden Text.—"Then came she and worshipped him, saying, Lord, help me."—Matt. xv. 25.

Christ Opposed in Capernaum (21).

FOR about two months after the execution of John, Jesus works in and around Capernaum. The opposition of Jews grows more bitter—see previous part of this chapter—John vii. 1: "the Jews sought to kill him." Christ withdrew to Tyre and Sidon, not because He was afraid, but because his hour had not yet come.

Lesson.—Discretion is often the better part of valour when we are face to face with sin. When duty bids us face danger it is the coward who runs away, but it is only the fool who rushes heedlessly into perilous positions.

The Woman of Canaan (22).

The word Canaan here refers to the woman's religion. She belongs to the descendants of Canaan, the son of Ham. She was in trouble, and hence came to Jesus. Lesson: Whatever a person's religion may be, he will cry for help to one who is "mighty to save" when he is in difficulty.

Even atheists pray in a storm.

The teacher should point out the world's need of the Great Physician, and the times, like sickness, grief, death, when the world realises that need.

The Afflicted Daughter (22).

She was possessed by an evil spirit. Her own personality was lost. Her will overcome. Simply the tool of the foul spirit within.

Contrast with this possession by the spirit of God. Man inspired speaks and acts in a way that would be impossible under ordinary circumstances. The disciples on the day of Pentecost.

Men are possessed by the spirit of God or the spirit of evil to-day. When by former, they rise above the ordinary level of morality and work; when by the latter, they sink lower than the beasts in vice and cruelty.

Difficulties to Overcome.

1. She was a heathen—not usual to have much faith in the Jewish religion. Compare the difficulty of a Hindoo coming to Christ.

2. The seeming neglect of Jesus. Many would have been discouraged at this. They can stand rebuff better than silence (23).

3. The seeming insult. The proverb which Christ quoted would have touched the pride of most people. She used it as her own argument. "If she were a dog then she must not be sent away hungry" (26-27).

She overcame all these obstacles by her faith and a mother's love (28).

Delayed Blessings.

Why did Christ delay? To reveal her faith to herself and to her disciples:—

Lesson.—God is often silent to our prayers. Silence is born of love, not of indifference. We are not ready for the blessing, or the gift, if granted, would be a curse, and not a blessing.

"Man wants to pluck his mercies green; God would wait until they are ripe."

Illustration.—Blessing of success is our work. Delay should draw out the good qualities of patience, perseverance, and trust in God.

The Triumph of Faith (28).

Faith needful in everything, faith always triumphs.

You must have faith in men for every business transaction: selling, borrowing, etc. You must have faith in your plans, and in your message if you are to make men better morally and socially.

You must have faith in God, and in his promise, if you work for the coming of Christ's kingdom.

Faith in God and in his Christ if you would be rid of all sin and put on the robe of righteousness.

Casting out Devils.

Christ is still at this work through his followers. Casting out of the devils of care, misery, ignorance, lust, intemperance, and dishonesty. These devils inhabit men; bind them. The work of Christians is to lead men to Jesus; the evil spirits cannot abide his presence.

No social and political schemes for bettering men can succeed which do not aim to bring them into contact with Jesus, who is able to cast out of them the devil and fill them with his own Spirit.

The Y.M.C.A.

WEST OF ENGLAND CONFERENCE.

A VERY interesting series of gatherings has been held in connection with the Bristol Y.M.C.A. On Tuesday, March 15, Revs. J. G. Mantle and F. B. Meyer addressed largely attended meetings (afternoon and evening), dealing specially with the power and presence of the Holy Spirit. Rev. Nevile Sherbrooke, late vicar of Clifton, presided in the afternoon. A large number of ministers were also present. At the evening meeting Mr. E. Evans, of Brinscombe, presided. Mr. Mantle's and Mr. Meyer's addresses were with great power. On the 16th two Bible readings were held, and, by invitation of Mr. J. Storrs Fry, president of Bristol Y.M.C.A., a number of Christian workers partook of tea. A feature of this gathering was the presence of several medical students of both sexes, members of the Students' Prayer Union. Rev. F. B. Meyer gave a most interesting account of his recent American trip, and of the large audiences that at every town were gathered together to hear him speak. The meeting, he said, that impressed him above all others was a gathering of over 2000 students, the flower of American life, to whom for nearly two hours it was his joy to speak of life in Christ. Revs. J. G. Mantle, W. J. Morgan, Henry Moore, and other friends took part. Later in the evening a meeting for men was held in the Large Hall, and upwards of 700 attended, a very large proportion being young men. Earnest addresses were delivered on Christian manliness. Mr. Meyer spoke of manliness and Christianity as mutually helpful. Let character be Christlike, and in home, business and church our influence must tell. Mr. Gregory Mantle instanced the life of the late George Müller as an example of simple faith and trust—of true Christian manliness.

BRIEF NOTES.

As an outcome of the social gathering held recently at Exeter Hall for waiters, a Bible class has been arranged for this class of young men, to be conducted every Thursday afternoon, at 3.30, by Mr. J. P. Werner.

A friend has placed a commodious building at the disposal of the Brussels Y.M.C.A. It is by the side of the University, in the heart of the city, and when renovated and adapted will afford excellent facilities for the work.

The annual meeting of the Penge Association was held on the 14th inst. in the parochial hall. The president, Mr. T. D. Chaytor, occupied the chair, and addresses were given by Revs. G. Martin, W. C. Jones, Messrs. J. Fidler and W. Hind Smith.

The anniversary of the Bath Y.M.C.A. was observed at a conversazione and subsequent meeting, which were attended by upwards of 300 persons. Rev. Prebendary Lunt occupied the chair, and an address was given by Mr. Walter Price, secretary of the Cardiff Association.

A reception for young Irishmen in London was held at Aldersgate-street on March 17, St. Patrick's Day, at the invitation of Mr. J. E. Hillbrook. The proceedings were specially arranged, Irish music and Irish pictures being provided, and an address was given by Rev. W. R. Moore, rector of Stapleford.

The annual meeting of the Sydney Association was held under the presidency of Mr. J. H. Goodlett. The secretary, Mr. David Walker, who has been identified with the institution for twenty years, presented a report of excellent and comprehensive work carried on by and in the interests of the 650 members now on the roll. Archdeacon Langley gave an address. Mr. Walker gave some interesting statistics relating to the period during which he has held office. Theatre services had been attended by 110,000 men. In the Y.M.C.A. hall 240,000 had heard the Gospel. It was estimated that prayer meetings and Bible classes had been attended by 151,000. At Gospel tent services there were some 46,000; 2,165,000 portions of Scripture had been distributed; 10,020 beds had been found for young men in need, and 15,737 meals had been given.

Some interesting figures are given in the annual report just published by the New York Y.M.C.A. Fifteen branches carry on work in different parts of the city. 6022 was the daily average attendance last year of young men at the reading and social rooms; 2802 joined the physical classes at the gymnasiums which are to be found at eight of the centres; 5395 situations were obtained for young men through the employment bureaux; at the Bowery branch 34,241 lodgings, 85,513 meals, and 583 garments were provided for young fellows who were destitute; 1741 paid fees for educational classes, of which 75 were conducted in 32 different branches of study; 3583 Bible classes and religious gatherings were held, with a total attendance of 207,268, of whom 5176 personally sought spiritual counsel, while 174 were known to have joined the churches.

Among the Churches

Church of England.

Dr. Johnson, Bishop of Calcutta, is about to resign his see under medical advice.

It is proposed that the South Yorkshire Bishopric scheme be deferred for two years.

Rev. H. F. S. Adams, vicar of St. Paul's, Stratford, has accepted the vicarage of Emmanuel, Streatham.

The Archbishop of York left home last week for the Continent to undergo a long course of treatment for rheumatism.

Canon Brown, vicar of Barnard Castle, has accepted the living of Houghton-le-Spring, vacant through the resignation of Canon Norman.

Grave news has been received from Egypt of the illness of the Bishop of Carlisle. He is now better, but it must be some time before he is completely restored to health.

The second annual report of the Federation of Junior Clergy Missionary Association shows that seventy-five members have gone on foreign service within three years.

The Council of the National Protestant Church Union is holding the annual Spring Conference of the society in Liverpool this day, in the lecture hall of the Y.M.C.A., Mount Pleasant, Liverpool.

An Order in Council has been made for the sale of Addington Park, Croydon, one of the residences of the Archbishop of Canterbury, on the ground that it is "expensive to maintain." With the proceeds it is proposed to provide a house for the Archbishop in or near Canterbury.

A meeting in support of the Church Army was held last week at the Mansion House. The report showed that upwards of 13,000 cases were dealt with last year in the seventy labour homes, the inmates of which had earned £13,000 in wages by wood-chopping and laundry work.

A missionary exhibition is to be held in the Kensington Town-hall from May 10 to May 14. The Bishop of London is president; Canon Pennefather, the vicar of Kensington, chairman of the executive committee; and Rev. Leonard Dawson organising secretary. The object is to increase a more intelligent knowledge of and interest in the missionary and colonial work of the Church.

A large and influential gathering of Evangelicals took place on Monday week by invitation of Sir Charles and Lady Gage-Brown, at 88, Sloane-street, S.W. After a few words of welcome from the host, an address was given by Rev. Herbert J. R. Marston, the blind Incumbent of Belgrave Chapel, on "Grace and Culture." The president, Prebendary Webb-Peploe, opened a profitable and practical discussion, the interest of which was well maintained by Rev. Gosset Tanner and others.

Congregational.

Rev. Henry Batchelor, of Weston-super-Mare, has celebrated his ministerial jubilee.

Rev. C. A. Lyon, formerly of New College, has accepted the pastorate at Gore, New Zealand.

Rev. W. Penry Jones, formerly of Mold, has become minister at Port Victor, South Australia.

Rev. H. H. Jacobs, recently of Mansfield House, Canning Town, has accepted the pastorate of Pilgrim Church, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

Mr. T. M'Kinnon Wood, the new chairman of the London County Council, is connected with the historic King's Weigh House Chapel, of which Rev. A. Sandison is pastor.

The spring meetings of Western District of Surrey Union have been held at Weybridge. There was a conference in the afternoon on the Christian Endeavour movement, and at the public meeting addresses were given by Revs. J. de B. Brewin, G. Manington, and Mr. W. Morten-Smith.

Steady progress is being made with the Church Extension Fund, which was launched at the meetings of the Congregational Union last autumn. The amount now paid or promised has reached to over £20,000, in addition to the handsome gift by Mr. Charles Birt of a new church on a freehold site at Richmond.

Rev. J. Stevens, who has been for the last five and a-half years pastor of Union Church, Shanghai, China, had an interview with the directors of the London Missionary Society on Tuesday week. Lately he has visited some of the interior cities, centres of missionary activity. His conviction was that in China there would be a Chinese Christianity, organised according to the needs and feelings and intelligence of the Chinese Christians.

The church at Forest Gate reports 642 members. In the Sunday-school are 986 scholars, with fifty-seven teachers. Among the organisations are the Men's Own, the Christian Women's Service Guild, the Society of Busy Bees, the Happy Monday Evening Hour, the Golden Cord Band, etc. As to the Men's Own, the pastor writes:—"Between ninety and a hundred men gather every Sunday afternoon to a service which is essentially devotional and evangelical."

Baptist.

The pastorate of Rev. R. C. Evill, at Fulham, will close on April 17.

A new chapel has been opened in Mauldeth-road, Withington.

Rev. Walter Hackney, M.A., has joined the tutorial staff of the Pastor's College.

Rev. C. H. Marsack Day will resign his pastorate at Bridport in June next.

Mr. Earl Todd, of Chester, has accepted the pastorate of West London Tabernacle.

Rev. J. C. Carlile has resigned the pastorate at John-street, Marylebone, to the great regret of the congregation.

The new Handbook of the Baptist Union of Victoria gives an encouraging report of the work of our brethren in the distant colony, through their various agencies, and also the President's address.

The Year-book of Bloomsbury Chapel shows that, notwithstanding the recent vacancy in the pastorate, the church and its institutions have been well maintained, and the outlook is very hopeful. The number of members is now 633. The total sum collected during the year amounts to £2334. The new pastor, Rev. B. J. Gibbon, refers to the large attendances at the Thursday evening services, and the celebration of the jubilee of the chapel, which will take place on December 5, 1898.

The name of Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, of Norwich, is being publicly associated with the vacancy in the secretariat of the Baptist Union, caused by the retirement of Dr. Harris Booth. It is generally recognised that Mr. Shakespeare is one of the ablest of the younger men in the Baptist ministry, and he has rendered important service by the way in which he has appealed to the conscience of the denomination for a great national fund of £100,000 to carry out the church extension scheme for the large towns.

Methodist.

Rev. Jabez Warne, of New Quay, is lying seriously ill at Bugle.

Rev. Thomas Waugh has had an interesting, though short, mission in Derby.

New chapels are being held at Burnley, Oakhampton, Tregony, Fleet (Hants), Ramsey, and Penzance.

A scheme is on foot for the erection of a large mission hall in one of the busy thoroughfares of Newcastle.

Dr. Rigg has considerably improved in health. He is still in the West of England, and will remain there until the end of the month.

The President of the Wesleyan Conference, Rev. W. L. Watkinson, has been officially visiting Cornwall, preaching to very large gatherings.

The Blackburn Mission reports that the workers have ministered to the needs of the people in a most indefatigable manner, and with most encouraging results.

Rev. Dr. Davison, who preached the annual Trust sermons at Brixton Hill last Sunday, will shortly sail for America to fulfil his engagement as representative of the British Conference to the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

The Soldiers and Sailors' Homes Queen's Commemoration Fund Committee met on Friday week to consider the report and the accounts of the Fund. It was found that after providing £3000 for the purchase of the lease and the enlargement of the Buckingham Palace-road Soldiers Home premises, and meeting all the expenses of the Fund, the Committee will be able to hand over £4,400 to the board of trustees for soldiers and sailors' homes appointed by the conference for that purpose.

Presbyterian.

The Ellesmere Temperance Hall, in the Pitsmoor district of Sheffield, has been taken for a new preaching station.

Rev. John Park Noble, Congregational minister, Lister Hills, Bradford, has applied to be received into the Presbyterian ministry.

Rev. Robert Duff, late of Belgrave, who recently removed to Ireland, to become minister of Mount Pottinger Church, is mourning the death of his only son.

Rev. Dr. M'Ewan, of Clapham (Presbyterian) has been elected president of the Metropolitan Federation of Free Churches in succession to Rev. C. H. Kelly.

Rev. W. B. Stevenson, assistant professor of Semitic languages in the University of Edinburgh, has been chosen for the professorship of Hebrew at the College, Bala.

The statistics of the Presbyterian Church of England for the past year show the following results:—The total membership of the church is 71,444, as against 70,639 in 1896—an increase of 805. Over a thousand scholars have been added to the Sabbath school roll, the number being 81,943. The church is now composed of 311 congregations in full standing, a net addition of six during the year; church extension enterprises have been commenced in a number of districts.

Fallen Asleep.

At Hadleigh, on 15th inst., Rev. William Butcher, aged seventy-three, a faithful Congregational minister, who had done good service for many years.—At Norwich, Mrs. James Porter, for over fifty years an active helper in Dr Barrett's church.—At Cape Town, aged seventy-two, Mrs. Michael, widow of an honoured Baptist minister, formerly well known at Halifax.—At Buxted, Sussex, Rev. J. P. Gell, aged eighty-three, rector of the parish for twenty years, who married the only child of Sir John Franklin, the renowned Arctic navigator.—In Lankok, N.B., Rev. Thomas Little, aged sixty-one, for twenty-six years minister of the parish.—In Glasgow, Rev. John Murray, of Calton, suddenly, in the vestry of the church, just before the commencement of the morning service; ordained in 1859, he went to Calton in 1865, where he soon gathered a large working-class congregation.—At Wadsley Bridge, Mr. A. Sheard, aged seventy-five, well known as a very active worker.—At Bury, Mr. W. Lucas, aged fifty-four, an earnest helper in the Gospel.—At St. Peter's, Kent, on 16th inst. Canon Whitehead, aged sixty-seven, vicar of St. Peter's Thanet.—At Davos Platz, Rev. James Loudon, minister of Ballysillan Presbyterian Church, near Belfast.—At the Castle Monkston, co. Cork, aged ninety years, Mr. Adam Newman.—At Irene, Rev. Garrett Nugent, Archdeacon of Meath, aged seventy-six years.—At The Lilacs, Harlington, on 20th inst., Mrs. Wild, in her eighty-second year, for over half a century a member of Harlington Baptist Church, and for many years superintendent of the Sunday-school; widely known and beloved by many Christian workers and in connection with numerous good works. She exercised her ministry to the last by correspondence and in her own house.—At Wrotham, Rev. Canon W. F. Erskine Knollys, rector of Wrotham and hon. Canon of Canterbury, in his eighty-second year.

Notes and Comments

MANY of our readers who send reports of work, appeals, etc., desire us to add that contributions in response thereto may be sent to our care. This may always be taken for granted. We should not insert a notice of any work which we could not endorse in this way. Such gifts are acknowledged in our Donation List (see p. 28).

Rev. John McNeill will preach in the Metropolitan Music Hall, Edgware-road, W., next Sunday afternoon and evening. The workers wish to crowd the building in the afternoon as well as the evening. The former task will be more difficult than the latter. Those who have acquaintances whom they would like to bring under the sound of the preacher's voice are specially requested to influence them to attend the afternoon meeting.

Was there ever a time when the advice of the Apostle Paul was more binding upon British Christians than the present in relation to prayer—"for all that are in authority, that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty"? Considering the perils and perplexities into which the ship of State is brought, the Government is now in urgent need of the prayers of Christians, individually and collectively.

The Prince of Wales is reported to have said, at Cannes, that he trusted the relations between France and England would become more and more friendly; and, as regards international relations in general, he expressed the belief and hope that armies and navies would soon be no longer needed, and that we should have universal peace. These sentiments are said to have been received with great applause. A few more such speeches from men in the Prince's exalted position would moderate the fever for increased armaments.

Lord Rosebery spoke some wise words in his recent speech to those who put all their reliance for the stability of the empire on the efficiency of our army and navy. He said truly that if we rely simply on our military and naval strength we have built up the British Empire to very little purpose.

> Surely more is necessary than the fleet in the maintenance of the empire, and more than the army; if our fleets and army are not guided by statesmanship, if not animated by fair dealing, if not regulated with foresight, the fleets and armies of the greatest empire that has ever existed on the face of the globe would be futile.

There was also a solemn warning against the light and almost jovial way in which the possibility of war is discussed by many. It is forty years since we have been engaged in a great European contest, and the present generation has no idea of the exigencies and horrors of a great war, or the rash and random language so often indulged in would be much tempered and modified. It is a hopeful augury for the maintenance of peace when our leaders on both sides show such a salutary shrinking from words and actions that might precipitate a struggle.

Much excitement has been caused in Washington as to the hospitality that should be extended to Prince Albert of Belgium, who is visiting the States.

> Vice-president and Mrs. Hobart have refused absolutely to give or to be present at entertainments on Sunday, and could not break a life-long rule even to entertain the Prince. The matter was adjusted by the Prince dining with the Vice-president on Saturday, but the same difficulty arose in the proposed entertainment of the Prince by the Secretary of State and Mrs. Sherman, and their example has been followed by all the other members of official society.

It is very gratifying to find the keeping of the Lord's Day thus made a question of principle amongst American functionaries. It will help to preserve the Sabbath from wanton desecration in high life. May the day be far distant when a lifelong rule so useful to the observance of religion is thoughtlessly broken.

Sir Richard Tangye's letter to the Masters' Federation contains a confirmation of the position we have always taken with regard to employers and employed, viz.: that a firm determination to do right to working men would, as a rule, prevent misunderstandings and strifes. Sir Richard says that, although his firm had no quarrel with their men, and the men had made no demands on them, although they had enjoyed forty years of peaceful relations with them, they were asked to turn them—nearly 2,500 persons—into the street. They declined to commit this "crime." He says that his firm has > Long possessed all the advantages the employers claim to have secured as a result of the late ruinous contest; advantages which I firmly believe they also might have possessed without conflict, had their relations with their employés been the same.

After all, it pays best for masters "to give to their servants that which is just and equal," and for servants to do the same to their masters.

Such persons as district visitors, mission workers, deaconesses, residents in settlements, and others engaged in social and religious work, are often hampered in their endeavours to promote the welfare of the poor, through ignorance of the laws that exist for their protection. Many of the evils that remain untouched to-day could be checked and often removed by the simple enforcement of laws already on the statute-book. The officials and inspectors whose business it is to see that these laws are carried out are quite insufficient in numbers for their duties, and voluntary workers can often discover abuses which such officials could never discover just because they are officials.

In this respect, therefore, there is an important function to be fulfilled by a society just started, called the Industrial Law Committee, whose object is to supply information as to the legal protection of the industrial classes with regard to the conditions of their trade; to constitute a central body to whom may be reported breaches of the law, and to promote further beneficent legislation. We hope that the lectures to be given in various parts of London, under the auspices of this society, by women inspectors and others, will be taken advantage of widely by those whose work lies among the poor, and that the Society will be heartily backed up by those who are able to help it to usefulness and success. Hon. Sec., Miss Gertrude Tuckwell, Club Union Buildings, Clerkenwell-road, London, E.C.

It would be a public benefit if the British Women's Temperance Association branches all over the kingdom were to follow the vigorous initiative of that body in the North of London to bring under the notice of magistrates the serious evils arising from children being habitually sent to public-houses for drink. Memorials have been got up earnestly entreating the magistrates to do as magistrates in certain parts of the country have already done—to instruct the police to report to them for consideration when licensing day comes round any house persisting after written warning in serving children apparently under thirteen years of age. We have recently laid before our readers the terrible evils resulting from this custom. Those who lead the temperance cause everywhere ought to leave no stone unturned to rouse the public conscience in this matter. Nothing short of persistent and earnest action will stay the course of such a widespread evil.

Many years ago a committee of women on "The Purification of the Press" was appointed by the Baltimore Yearly Meeting of the Religious Society of Friends, which has done excellent service. The Philanthropist (New York), in referring to its work, says that individual protests sent to editors and publishers against shameful advertisements are valuable, but they have to be persistently continued. The committee sends its report each year to the Press of the country, and asks for co-operation, and "its influence has been widely extended in this way." The president of the International League of Press Clubs, in acknowledging the receipt of one, says:—

> Accept congratulations upon the good results of your work that have been so far secured...There has never been a time, it seems to me, when this effort was so much needed as now, and you deserve every encouragement.

A Kansas editor writes: "One paper shall be decent, whether it loses business or not." A committee of women in England might do a signal service in purifying our Press from the gambling and betting news, and also from some other evil things.

This is how The Morning Post reviews the performance at one of the so-called "high-class" London music-halls:—

> Twenty-two items is enough for anyone, and he would be hard to please who could not find half a dozen of them to his taste. As a matter of fact all were good, and it was interesting to note how much nearer life the music-hall is than the theatre of to-day. Take at random the topics touched on in the songs which delighted the audience most: drunkenness, the amenities of the tramcar, bigamy, difficulties with the rent and with the police. One lady sums up the outcome of a tussle between her husband and eight policemen thus:—
> Half a dozen of them now is on the sick list,
> And the other two was buried yesterday.
> Then there are wife-beating, fleas, cold feet, betting.

And so on. Yet we are assured that the moral tone of these entertainments has been so elevated of recent years as to render quite unnecessary the supervision of County Councils or Vigilance Societies. And The Morning Post and other respectable dailies commend them!

Dr. Berry, in a stirring sermon to the Warwickshire Congregational Union the other day, made the wise remark that "the study of human character was a necessary point of a preacher's life, and he could wish that the colleges paid more attention to this matter.' There is no doubt that there is much futile preaching for lack of adequate knowledge of human nature. It deals with truth in the abstract, and those who listen are not made to feel its grip on their practical lives. It is one thing to draw the bow at a venture; it is quite another to send the arrow into the air right over the heads of everybody. Nothing stands out more prominently in the discourses of our Lord, and in the addresses and epistles of his apostles as recorded in the New Testament, than their close application to the actual lives of the people who listened. The suggestion, therefore, that the concrete study of character should have a more essential place in the training of ministerial students is one that merits sympathetic consideration from those who have influence on our college committees.

The adjudicators in the prize competition instituted by The Methodist Times on "The Leakage in Methodism" have made their award. One hundred and sixty essays were sent in, apparently from all parts, and they so harmonise in opinion that the six which will be published contain nearly everything worthy of attention in all the rest. Methodism suffers, in common with other churches, from the prevalent unbelief and worldliness of the age, the lust of wealth, the passion for pleasure, the lax habits of Sunday observance, and the generally low tone of spiritual life. Many of the essayists, so say the adjudicators, attribute the leakage chiefly to not carrying out the class system rigorously. Pastoral visitation is named as being imperiously necessary, and there is a strong opinion in favour of an extended ministerial term in the circuits. It will be a joy if this examination and expression of opinion on the whole question should lead to a revival of life and power. But we cannot help feeling that one of the weakest points in Methodism is its exclusiveness, especially in these days of Christian co-operation.

Rev. J. Frome Wilkinson writes a rather sad article on the darker side of the rural parson's life. Diminishing incomes cause ever-deepening poverty. Servants are a vanishing luxury; the butcher's bill has to be cut down almost to vanishing point. But he says that perhaps the hardest feature of all is the oppressive sense of isolation, the absence of corporate church life, and the mental "rust" that comes from these facts. The late Bishop of Ely, Dr. Woodford, said that he knew no one single enemy to clerical efficiency and to true manhood so much to be dreaded as this peril of intellectual and spiritual stagnation that afflicted so many country clergymen whose lives are lost in back eddies of the national life. And yet we know ministers who have been driven by their very isolation into a deeper communion with the Spirit, who is as near to them in country as in town.

My whole life has been a preparation for the ministry of the Gospel. From my earliest remembrances I have longed to deliver messages to Christ[illegible]. The public instinct, of which I have always been conscious, was simply irresistible. Preaching has never been to me a laborious and distressing occupation. May not this have arisen from the fact that I have never changed the Gospel which I ardently desired to proclaim?

From the beginning I have loved and adored the Son of God as the only Saviour of the world. I have not played the part of an infidel with irregular Christian tendencies. I have never been a lecturer hired to proclaim a superficial system of ethics. The Gospel is Jesus Christ crucified or it is nothing. That alone can evoke and direct the highest emotion, and without that emotion no man can ever secure a deep hold of public attention and confidence.

I pray God that our rising preachers may be something more than essayists, moralists, Socialists, and adventurers. I would have them all live within the shadow and the glory of the Cross, and draw from that sacred tree the one message which can penetrate the human soul, and work out in it the mystery of regeneration.

So writes Dr. Parker in the preface of his last book. (STUDIES IN TEXTS. Vol. I. 3s. 6d. Horace Marshall & Son.) Earnestly we echo his prayer, as we thank God for his testimony.

Among the many good things by the late Mr. Spurgeon that are now to be had in volume form, few, if any, surpass in interest and edification a collection of sermons now published by Passmore & Alabaster under title of THE MESSIAH. (7s.) The Titles and Attributes of our Lord form the subject of one hundred and thirteen discourses. The trend of present day preaching is away from, rather than toward, consideration of such themes; the person of our Lord, as manifested in the Gospels, being more freely dwelt upon. But the Old Testament Scriptures figure largely here, and reveal the eternal foundations upon which true theology is based. Preachers of all ages and dispositions will find stimulus and profit in the study of these fresh and comprehensive sermons.

Prof. Sayce, in the preface to his new volume on "The Early History of the Hebrews," mentions an interesting discovery of a tablet containing the story of the Flood, dating from the Abrahamic age, and bearing traces of being a copy of a much earlier document. This was made public recently at a meeting of the Oriental Congress in Paris by Dr. Scheil. The peculiar interest of the tablet is to be found in the fact that the text agrees, not with the so-called "Elohist" or "Yahvist" writers in Genesis, but with the supposed combination of the two documents in that book as finally edited. Since one at least of these writers is stated by the Higher Critics to be of the 7th century B.C., it is difficult, as the discoverer remarked, to see how the "literary analysis of the Pentateuch can be any longer maintained.'

The discovery shows the minute care and accuracy with which the literature of the extreme past was handed down. Edition after edition had been publishing the Story of the Deluge, and yet the fact of the Abrahamic age and that of the 7th century B.C. agree even to the spelling of the words.

It is clear that many of the hasty conclusions of scholars will have to be revised.

The Westminster Gazette, which successfully exposed the absurdities of Theosophy, is now on the track of the Christian Scientists, who profess to heal disease by Christian methods, and have established themselves in comfortable quarters at the West End. Their system, if system it can be called, appears to be nothing more than a jumble of great swelling words signifying nothing. But the fees to those who wish to be initiated are clear and definite enough—£20 for the course of lectures; a guinea for the book which the learner should possess. If ever there was a man in our time who might have been a faith-healer and a "Christian Scientist" it was George Müller. He had had cases of healing in answer to prayer, as many a Christian family has had, but Scripture does not reduce it to a "science," nor encourage us to expect it as an invariable result. This he maintained, and so do we.

[illegible] ultimate end, as happened to Barney Barnato's nephew, Woolf Joel, a few weeks since, the occasion gives rise to a great deal of cheap and mushy sentiment in the secular Press, and we might imagine that some saint has been taken away to the immense loss of the whole world. It is therefore refreshing to find so vigorous a writer as Mr. A. J. Wilson, in The Investor's Review, dwelling on the huge loss which the British public have sustained through the manipulation of stocks and shares by this unscrupulous family, and saying—

It is necessary to protest against the indiscriminate praise which is nowadays so readily showered down upon any notorious individual, or group of individuals, merely because it is supposed that he or it is enormously rich. To the sad-eyed thousands whose vanished savings have gone to swell the millions of these Barnatos, the shocking deaths of one and another of them will seem as a judgment of heaven on crimes human laws cannot apparently be framed to reach.

This we are sure expresses the sober conviction of the country generally.

A "distinguished Irish correspondent" of the British Weekly writes to say that the Roman laity do not want the proposed Roman Catholic university, but much the reverse, as all men can see by their whispered clamours for it. He gives three anecdotes in proof of this fact. Here are two of them:—

Mr. —— said plump to a Roman Catholic nobleman, "My lord, if such are your views what brought you to their platform?" and received the answer, "My bishop would not let me have any rents if I did not go." A well-known lawyer was loudly greeted at a mixed gathering by a Roman Catholic, who said, "You must help us to get our university." Before the evening was over the same man had the lawyer in a corner, and quoth he, "You know we must say these things, but I can tell you I hope my sons will have graduated before it comes."

This is in line with the widespread tendency of the priestly party to demand in the name of their people what really they only want for themselves, and affords another proof that a priest-ridden people is a people who have no liberty of conscience or of action worth calling by that name.

Friendship in the Holy Spirit,

Phil. ii. 1.

By Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A.

THIS is the Epistle of Friendship, of tender human ties, especially subsisting between absent and severed hearts. It reminds one of those many passages in Dr. Nansen's diary, where, surrounded by waste solitudes of snow and ice, he describes the terrible force of the home-longings, which made him at times indifferent to success or failure if only he might see his wife and child again. That diary reminds one of the beatitude, "Blessed are the home-sick, for they shall reach home."

The Apostle had a very tender heart. He longed after his converts in the tender compassions of Jesus Christ. The fewness of his references to his natural kindred, when compared with his ardent expressions to his converts, suggests that the affection which was pent up and resisted on the one hand, broke out with increased force and tenderness on the other; and he discovered in those whom he had won for Christ mothers, sisters, and brothers, in place of those of whom the charge of apostasy from the Jewish faith had probably deprived him.

Directly a man comes to Jesus Christ he finds himself in a warm gulf-stream of love. There is comfort administered to those who have themselves been comforted of God; there are the consolations of loving hearts, who know how to pour in the balm of Gilead to gaping wounds; there are tender mercies and compassions; but there is specially fellowship and communion in the Spirit. It is of course true that the believer has the personal friendship and co-operation of the Holy Spirit, as is taught in 2 Cor. xiii. 14, but the connection of the words here and the personal appeal based on them indicate that the Apostle is dealing with that union of heart with heart which takes place in and through the Holy Spirit, and to which neither distance nor absence can make any real difference.

We all need fellowship. It is not good for any of us to be alone. Our nature can only realise its best in the fellowship of kindred hearts. Love is the past tense of Live; we can only be said to have lived, as we have loved.

We need more than contact, as of the sand grains which may be compressed into a mould, but drop apart when the outward constraint ceases. It is necessary that we should realise an affinity like that with which iron-dust clings to the magnet. Hearts must leap to hearts, and become one.

We need a common element in which to find our friends. The common atmosphere of home to brother and sister; the common fascination of a similar study to scholars; the common glow of rapture at the same natural scenes to artists; the common absorption in the salvation of the father-land to patriots; but the best bond of all is in a common devotion to the Person of Jesus our Lord, as revealed by the Holy Spirit. Those that touch here meet in the most intimate and sacred fellowship. All other ties may fade and fail. The cheek of beauty may lose its bloom; the brilliant wit may lose its sparkle; the strength of the intellect may become paralysed and decrepit; the soul may have to pursue its pathway apart from the presence of its sister-soul—but when the spirit has met and found a kindred-spirit at the feet of Christ, separation is no longer possible. Whenever we touch Him, we are in contact with all who have touched Him. Whenever we come to Mount Zion, it is always also true that we come to the spirits of the just made perfect.

It is important that we should bear this in mind when forming our friendships, and especially in regard to the union of man and woman in the holy bond of marriage. Choose according to the sight of your eyes, and you will be inevitably disappointed. That which begins with the flesh ends with it. Even the attraction of soul to soul in some common intellectual pursuit will not be strong enough to resist the disintegrating effect of life and death, of things present and things to come, of height and depth. But when spirit and spirit meet in Jesus, not only is there a friendship of perfect transparency and purity, but one in which bonds are woven that strong waters cannot quench, and which the shears of distance and absence cannot cut. To such a friendship, the sea is no more.

Of course we shall be always keenly sensible of the wrench, when the great ship bears the beloved friend beyond the line of our horizon: and many are the recipes given for the heart's relief. Do not let your mind dwell in pensive musings on the past; such is one specific which is often recommended. Do something, do the next thing, throw yourself into your life-work, such is another. Do not permit yourself to dwell on your suffering: the less you say and think about it the better—this is yet another. All things come to all: it is part of the common destiny of man: do not be surprised, do not give in, do not flinch: rally yourself and be strong—this is another. There may be gleams of metal in these siftings; but the heart turns from them, as Job from his comforters, and after listening carefully, cries out bitterly, "Miserable comforters are ye all."

Is there not something better? I think so, and it is supplied through the fellowship in the Spirit. Keep your friend next your heart. Let your spirit meet him still in praise, and prayer, and fellowship with Christ. Realise that there is no distance between you, because He is living in your life and you in his. You are each in speaking distance of Jesus, and therefore of each other. You are each walking with Him, and working in his fellowship, therefore you are walking and working in close neighbourhood and proximity. You are animated by the same devotion to Jesus, are being infilled and possessed of the same spirit, are consecrated to the same purpose of making Him King, are ministering in the same Holy Temple—dwell on these bonds of union; remember that spirits which have received the life of God are superior to decay, to time, to distance; consider that these things which unite are more than those which divide. And in the light of such considerations your heart will be comforted with the comfort of the Eternal and Unseen.

The bonds of friendship are apt to become purer and stronger, when the outward presence is withdrawn. So long as we are dwelling in the same home with our beloved, meeting from hour to hour, we are apt to lose sight of the rarer spiritual characteristics, amid the lovely radiance which streams from the physical presence, the endearing word, caress, or ministry. It is when these are withdrawn, and only the spiritual is left, that we realise the true worth of our friend. In our poor measure, it is with us as with the disciples, who could not adequately value their Master, whilst He was yet with them, and who needed his Advent as a Spiritual Presence before they could properly appreciate Him, who had been so long time with them, but whom they had not known.

We are too absorbed in the seen and temporal. It fills our thoughts, and aspirations, and ambitions. And God is sometimes obliged to deprive us of that which has so ministered to our outward sense that our spiritual faculties may arouse themselves to spread their wings and fly, or soar, or skim the surface of the sea of eternity.

> We are better for the longing,
> Stronger for the pain;
> Through the harrowed soul comes thronging
> Seeds in sun and rain.

Thou wilt not have to wait very long, bereaved and suffering one, who almost wishes that thy heart did not cling so tenderly, or that thou hadst not loved, forgetting that love is the wine of life, which must be crushed from the grape. Remember the words of this apostle in another place: "We beseech you, brethren, touching the Presence of our Lord Jesus, and our gathering together unto Him, to the end that ye be not quickly shaken from your mind, or troubled." Yes, He comes quickly, and then we shall be gathered together unto Him, and therefore to one another. This one from China, and this one from India, and others from the distant colony. In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, we shall be caught up together with them to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we be for ever with the Lord, and for ever with one another.

And in that great For-ever, who can doubt that love will find its mate, that friend will meet with friend in a love from which all selfishness and impurity will have been eliminated, that the society of eternity will be based on the affinities of earth, and that we shall meet in unhesitating recognition and embrace in that same fellowship of the Holy Spirit. Listen! do ye not hear a great voice from heaven, saying, Behold all things are new, the former things are passed away, and there shall be no more parting, nor misunderstanding, nor heart-break, nor unfulfilled longing, because God shall call all severed ones to meet within the curtains of his own pavilion; and lo, there shall be no more sorrow, nor crying, nor pain of severance, for love shall abide with faith and hope for evermore.

Assurance.

It is written, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

> Poor troubled heart, why look within
> To know your sins forgiven?
> With nothing there but guilt and sin,
> Your peace must come from Heaven.
> I rest upon the word of God,
> No surer rest I know;
> I trust in Jesus' precious blood,
> It washes white as snow.
> What can you feel before you live?
> What do before believe?
> The work of Jesus is to give,
> And yours is to receive.
> You cannot calm sin's stormy wave,
> It mocks at human will;
> But He who came to seek and save
> Can whisper, "Peace, be still."
> Good news is sure to make us glad
> When be believe it true;
> And you no longer may be sad—
> Salvation is for you.
> Trust in the Lord to make you whole,
> To heal your deadly sin:
> His love to fill your empty soul,
> And He shall pour it in.

Ikwezi Lamaci Mission.—Mrs. Aitchison writing on February 3rd, says a great calamity has befallen them, the rinderpest having cleared their cattle. The privations through the loss of these animals will be very great, as it means no milk or butter, and the loss to the mission of at least £50 per annum. It will also be difficult to replace these beasts of burden, as the prices will advance to a prohibitive price. Mrs. Aitchison asks for the sympathy and prayers of their friends and supporters. Communications regarding the work may be addressed to Mr. Edwin A. Page, Y.M.C.A., Birmingham Leominster Orphan Homes.—Uninterrupted blessing from the Father of the fatherless was enjoyed in these Homes during 1897. The children, now numbering forty-two, are admitted without denominational distinction, provided they are needy orphans. They come from all parts of the country as long as there is room to receive them, without vote, interest, or partiality in selection; indeed, a foreign element is represented in the little community by the presence of an Armenian baby and a mulatto girl. The family character is preserved as far as possible; while religious instruction, elementary education, and industrial training is undertaken in the fear of God. The Orphans' Printing Press and the Leominster Tract Association are offshoots worthy of every encouragement by orders for printing and for Gospel literature. Mr. H. S. Newman, Buckfield, Leominster, has issued an illustrated record, which may be had by all who feel an interest in the good work.

God's Methods with Man:

Past, Present, and Future.

By Rev. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN,
New Court Chapel, Tollington Park, N.

VIII.—"After the Thousand Years."

A SCHOLARLY and lucid exposition of the subject with which we now deal is contained in a book written by Mr. Geo. F. Trench, and from the name given to that book I have borrowed the title of our present lecture. The events following the Millennium are chronicled for us in that section of the Book of Revelation commencing at xx. 7 and ending at xxii. 7. Rev. xx. 7-11 reveals the loosing of Satan, who straightway deceives the nations, in the four corners of the earth. True, there will be everywhere those who refuse enlistment under his banners; but the picture here is that of an enormous apostasy, the most fearful ever seen. The armies of the nations gather together against Jerusalem, the centre of godly government upon earth. There is no doubt that to some who have dreamed of the Millennium as a finality, the outlook afterwards is disappointing; but ere the kingdom of Jesus Christ in all its glory can be ushered in, the unbelief and disloyalty which lurks in the hearts of men must be brought to a final head.

A study of the long list of apostasies from that of the Fall to this under the personal leadership of the Devil, opens before us an awful depth of human depravity, and should lead to heart-searching in the sight of God as to how far the elements of evil still abide within us. A short, swift, burning sentence dismisses the rebellious host—"Fire came down out of heaven, and devoured them."

Verses 11-14 give us marvellous scenes in the closing drama of evil and the beginning of humanity in its freedom from sin: "I saw a great white throne, and Him that sat upon it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away; and there was found no place for them. And I saw the dead, the great and the small, standing before the throne." Not on earth, be it remembered, for earth has fled. Man is upheld in front of that throne by the omnipotence of God, and has no rock behind which to hide himself. In that final judgment of evil no man is rewarded because of his work. There are rewards for work, but they will be distributed elsewhere. The only of that day is a name written in the Book of Life and those who possess that blessing are not here for judgment at all. Mark the clear distinction between the books by the writing contained in which the dead are judged, and the Book of Life. Names entered in the latter are found there only by virtue of the atoning blood of Jesus Christ. Then are Death, Hades, and all whose names are not written in the Book, cast into the lake of fire. That is the end, is it not? Nay, it is but the beginning.

In xx. i. we have the third event after the thousand years—a new heaven and a new earth, the former ones having fled away from the face of Him who sat upon the throne for reconstruction, not by water, as at the Flood, but by fire. When these things come about, the full purposes of God for humanity will be unfolded.

Next, we read of "the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down out of heaven from God, made ready as a bride adorned for her husband." From verses 10 to 24 we get a wonderful description of that city; and any attempt to spiritualise it is out of harmony with the whole proper prophetic treatment of the Book of Revelation. It is the city for which Abraham looked and for which we look; and it is not spiritual but material, as far as spiritualised people need material things. We may no more discuss this than the resurrected body of Jesus, which was palpable to the touch of Thomas, yet was spiritual enough to stand in the midst of Christ's people without the opening of doors. The city's dimensions work out at 1500 miles in width as well as in length, large enough to cover the whole of Europe. Making Jerusalem its centre, it would about cover the whole area promised to Abraham. I incline to the idea of a pyramidal rather than a cubiform elevation. Some regard the promise that death shall cease, as applying to the Millennium; whereas, the old prophets tell us that in that period the sinner shall be accursed and the child shall die. But in this City of God, the great ultimate place of the kingdom of the Christ, there shall be no death, pain, nor curse,

BECAUSE THERE IS NO SIN.

There will still be nations upon the new earth (v. 24). In that city, the earthly dwelling-place of a heavenly people, the old Jewish idea of Israel as bethrothed and married unto God, and the truth of the Church as the Bride of the Lamb, will each find fulfilment. Thus, our fifth point shows the kings and the nations of the earth in the light of the city, bringing into it all their glory and honour.

Now comes a verse (27) the beauty and value of which are too often obscured by hasty reading. It does teach that no unclean person, and no liar shall be able to pass into the city, but that is the smallest part of its meaning. He who worketh abomination and maketh a lie tainted Eden's brightness; and the stream of evil outworked into all human history. But shall ever assault the denizens of the fair city which lies beyond the Millennium.

On the authority of a Greek scholar of repute, we may read xxii. 2, "the leaves of the tree shall be for the health of the nations"; for, healing pre-supposes disease, while health does not. Do remember that these are but passing glimpses of the glory of a kingdom on earth, linked to the heaven that is beyond the Millennium, the great white throne, and the final casting out of evil. This is a picture of the fulness of the times when all things shall be subdued unto the sway of Jesus.

There are passages in the Epistles which can only refer to this period. Heb. ii. 6-8 contains interesting words of this kind, in the form of a quotation from one of the Psalms, where four facts concerning man are stated:—(1) "Thou madest him a little lower than the angels"; (2) "Thou crownedst him with glory and honour"; (3) "and didst set him over the works of thy hands"; (4) "Thou didst put all things in subjection under his feet." Reading further we find Paul applying the fourfold statement to Jesus Christ. "What is man?" asks the Psalmist; and, by inference, the reply affirms that there is no knowledge of man until we see Jesus. "We behold Him who hath been made a little lower than the angels," so that the first of the four prophecies have been fulfilled, "even Jesus because of the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honour." Then the second thing is fulfilled, "But now we see not yet all things subjected to Him." The prophecy of that Psalm, uttered before Christ came to earth, has been partially fulfilled. Where do we stand, upon the stream of time, in regard to these things? In the Messianic dispensation Jesus was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death. What comes next? Here and now, in this present dispensation, we see Him with and honour. What next? In the period of Millennial splendour He shall be set over the works of God's hands. When shall the fourth prediction be realised? In the time beyond the Millennium. All things will not be subjected to Him until then. There are hearts, even in the Millennial reign, disloyal, waiting only for the loosing of Satan and the gathering together unto battle of Gog and Magog; but in the new heavens and the new earth all things shall be subjected to Christ.

There are three other passages with which we are familiar in the writings of Paul, and containing words which can only have their fulfilment in the great Kingdom of which we are taking some passing glimpses, and which stretches out beyond the thousand years. First, Eph. i. 20-23, "... which He wrought in Christ, when He raised Him from the dead, and made Him to sit at his right hand in the heavenly places, far above all rule, and authority, and power, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this age but also in that which is to come; and He put all things in subjection under his feet, and gave Him to be Head over all things to the Church, which is his body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all." I submit that this has never yet been fulfilled in Jesus Christ. There is a great deal in London to-day which is not in subjection to Him; and even in the day of Millennial splendour, much upon the face of the earth will be in the same unsubdued condition.

In the same category is Philippians ii. 5-11, "Have this mind in you, which was also in Christ Jesus; who, being in the form of God, counted it not a prize to be on an equality with God, but emptied Himself, taking the form of a servant, being made in the likeness of men; and being found in fashion as a man, He humbled Himself, becoming obedient even unto death, yea, the death of the cross. Wherefore, also, God highly exalted Him, and gave unto Him the name which is above every name; that in the name of Jesus every knee shall bow, of things in heaven, and things on earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father."

The last Scripture in this connection is Col. i. 13: "Who delivered us out of the power of darkness, and translated us into the kingdom of the Son of his love."

THE ISSUES OF THAT DELIVERANCE

and translation may be traced in verses 14-20. Jesus Christ shall never be defeated. Not until evil is banished, the new heavens and earth are brought in, and the heavenly city is given to men, shall Christ's work be complete.

Then comes the time when He will hand over the kingdom to the Father. When? I do not know. Mr. Trench thinks that the period of the kingdom will be far longer than the whole stream of time, but acknowledges that nothing may be dogmatically stated on this point. Probably the glorious kingdom of Jesus Christ, wherein all things are reconciled unto the Father by Him, will extend through ages of which we can have no conception. But there is an end, concerning which revelation was made to the apostle Paul (1 Cor. xv. 24); and when Christ has abolished all rule, authority, and power, not merely these things in connection with evil, then shall the Son also Himself be subject to the Father, that God may be all in all.

God is moving on, despite our fret and worry. Yea, verily,

..through the ages one unceasing purpose runs.

And thank God it is also true that the thoughts of men are widened with the process of the suns.

Who shall tell what lies beyond the handing of the kingdom to God? Did you ever dream that there must come in the endless and illimitable time, which is not time but eternity, a moment of weariness? Nay, think also of endless space. The sensitized film reveals stars which no astronomer has examined. Reach the furthest limit thus marked, and space is still before you. God is there, as here, limitless and unexhausted; and where He is, is Love. All the things of which we have spoken are but the passing of his breath; while God and Love live on there never can come weariness to the children of his love. "And every one that hath this hope set on him purifieth himself, as He is pure."

The Sunday Closing Campaign is in full swing around the country. Last week important meetings were held in Cambridge, Liverpool Preston, Blackburn, Leeds, Hull, Sheffield, York Newcastle, Coventry, and Birmingham.

From Other Lands.

The Labour Market in America.

In 1851 the first Great Exhibition was held in Hyde Park, London. I had then an old friend who was enthusiastically confident that the exhibition would inaugurate the reign of peace among all nations, and he was vexed because I did not believe, for I had begun to read the more sure word of prophecy. The Crimean war disillusioned my friend and many others. Until then Great Britain had the ball at her feet as to manufactures and commerce, but all the nations of the European Continent, especially Germany, were there, and last, but not least, the Anglo-Saxons from America. Thus England had the privilege of giving much more than she gained. Old John taught his kinsman, young Jonathan, all he knew, and the youth, nurtured by the necessity of subduing a vast territory (and necessity is the mother of invention), improved upon the older methods of his fathers in the mother country—

Until at last the old man
Is beaten by the boy.

It really seems as though America would leave the European nations far behind, and England not least, for Germany is learning American methods and profiting by them far more than we. I remember several years ago, when in Rome, that Mr. Wall was observing the way in which German commercial travellers were laying themselves out to supply what the people wanted, and how they were assisted by their consuls in the various countries, while their English competitors were endeavouring to sell what they produced rather than what the people liked, and Her Majesty's consuls seemed to have little idea that regard for the commercial interest of their countrymen came within the scope of their obligations.

The indifference of our manufacturers to the wishes of their customers was illustrated in the case of cutlery by two incidents mentioned to me ten or fifteen years ago by an English-born Canadian outfitter. The Canadians had found out by experiment the most effective shape for the axe they required in the back-woods and for the shears which would cause the least fatigue to the hand in cutting out cloth. But the Sheffield cutlers or their workmen declined to depart from their prescriptive pattern. Therefore the Canadians went to the States for their axes and shears.

The San Francisco Examiner, in an article on "The Passing of England," quotes Mr. Alfred F. Yarrow, an English shipbuilder, to show that—

The iron and steel workers of the United States are seriously pressing those of England. As he points out, American manufacturers are shipping boiler plates to Holland, deck beams to Belgium, steel billets to England, and are even furnishing the steel rails for the Central Railway of London...The cause lies deeper, and its results will be more permanent than any that might flow from a strike, however extensive.

This encroachment upon the commercial supremacy of England is, perhaps, most clearly seen in the iron and steel industries, yet it has been going on in other branches of trade. Already this country is competing successfully with England in certain special lines, and the exports have increased nearly one-half during the last ten years... These facts prove that this country has now reached a point where it can successfully compete with the world in these lines. Its greatest success has been in the colonial possessions of England, which are supposed to give a preference to the mother country. In the manufacture of iron, steel, and cotton this country has an advantage in the abundance and cheapness of raw material, in its superior appliances and labour-saving machinery, and in the greater cheapness of its labour. It is true that the labourer in this country receives more money each day than do his competitors in Europe, but he does more work. He labours harder and more intelligently, and, therefore the output for each man employed is greater in the mills of the United States than it is in those of any other country in the world, and the labour cost of the product is less. It looks as if the time when the commercial supremacy of England will be a thing of the past is not far distant.

Nevertheless, the present condition of the labour market in the States is cause for grave anxiety. From ninety to a hundred thousand men and women are said to be out of work in New York alone; and in other cities through which we have passed numbers of men have been standing idle in the market-place because no man had hired them. It is continually being said that this is the richest and most powerful country in the world; that civilisation began in the East and has flown Westward, and culminates on the American Continent, which is the heir of the ages and the possessor of the future.

Yet there is a rising tide of discontent. Every new discovery or invention puts new power into the hands of capital and enterprise, and, for the time at least, causes unspeakable distress to those who are displaced by new machinery.

Co-operation to supersede competition is preached as the gospel of Socialism; but is not co-operation one chief cause of the present distress? For what is combination but co-operation? A number of capitalists combine, i.e., co-operate, to buy up all the factories of this or that industry in a whole city or State, and anyone who refuses to sell his patrimony is not, indeed, like Naboth, stoned to death, but his business is squeezed out of existence by a ruthless competition.

"History repeats itself." "Like father like son." Ahab still covets Naboth's vineyard, though it be only for a kitchen garden; and if Naboth will not sell, the worse for Naboth. Co-operation and competition are not evils in themselves. Either or both may be exercised beneficially or injuriously.

Whether it be by the quick sharp action of the sword, or by the dull slow oppression of wealth, fallen human nature adheres to the good old plan,

That they may take who have the power,
And they may keep who can.

The high tariff established here protects commodities for the benefit of the manufacturer; and free trade in labour secures to him the advantage of competition in that respect; so that labour is ground as between these upper and nether millstones.

The following is extracted from a manifesto, emanating from an organisation of the unemployed, which appeared in the San Francisco Chronicle a few weeks ago:—

The Mergenthaler type-setting machine has displaced 20,000 printers, the various inventions in the shoemaking trade have displaced fully 100,000, and the various devices in the laundry, cigar, canmaking, agricultural, and the hundreds of other industries, as reported by the United States Labour Commissioner, Carrol D. Wright, have displaced at least 5,000,000 mechanics, thereby making dependent upon public charities at least 25,000,000 human beings, at an average of five to a family. In the city and county of San Francisco we have at all times from 10,000 to 30,000 on the unemployed list, a third of whom are members in good standing of our own labour unions.

This appeal on behalf of the unemployed thus concludes.

We can only add these beautiful sentiments expressed by Burns:—

See yonder poor o'er laboured wight,
So abject, mean, and vile,
Who begs a brother of the earth
To give him leave to toil.
And see his lordly fellow worm
The poor petition spurn,
Unmindful tho' a weeping wife
And helpless offspring mourn.
If I'm your lordling's slave,
By nature's laws designed,
Why was an independent wish
Implanted in my mind?
If not, why am I subject to
His cruelty and scorn?
And why has man the will and power
To make his fellow mourn?

It is true that the same tendencies operate in the older countries as here, but in this new and extensive field, unhampered by ancient precedent, and where the highest position is open to all—where, to repeat an expression once used to me, every errand boy hopes to be President—the race for wealth, or influence, or power, is intensified by the possibilities of attainment, which in the European countries are so much further off as to be less worth striving for. The United States are no more than the European countries the workman's paradise. Indeed, the same causes work more effectually here than there to concentrate wealth in the hands of the few; to make the rich man richer, and, by comparison, the poor man poorer.

The Klondike Miners.—Writing from Victoria, British Columbia, Canada, Capt. A. Hamilton, late hon. sec. of the Emigration Department of the Tower Hamlets Mission, sends an earnest request for tracts to be given to Christian workers in Victoria and in Vancouver City for distribution among the miners on embarking for Klondike. He is desirous that nothing but Scriptural truth be given to these seekers after earthly wealth. Tracts or money to purchase them should be sent to the secretary, Tower Hamlets Mission, Mile End-road, London, E. Captain Hamilton states that the tracts he has been able to give away were much appreciated. The Reformed Episcopal, Wesleyan, Presbyterian, Baptist, and other churches will help to distribute, as will also the Y.M.C.A.

Breton Onion Boys.

Amongst the passengers who were recently drowned when the Channel Queen foundered off Guernsey were several lads and young men who had come under the spiritual influence of a Christian lady at Plymouth, who for several years past has carried on a most important mission amongst the onion vendors who year by year come over here from Brittany and other parts of France, remaining here from the middle of July until the end of December. The onion crops are bought up whilst growing in the fields by dealers; and as soon as they are fully ripe the onions are shipped to England, the master, or "Padron," as he is called, with a gang of men and boys, coming in the same vessel.

At Plymouth there are usually four gangs and many cargoes every year, and frequently the same men and boys come year after year to this town, so they get known, and establish more or less a connection with purchasers. The onions are strung together in a very tidy and inviting way as soon as they arrive at the warehouse or loft, and the lads, fixing as many strings as they can carry at the ends of a stout stick balanced on the shoulders, hawk the onions all over the town and inland villages from early morning until nine or ten at night. On Sunday the men do no work, but at midnight, having gone to bed at an early hour, they all get up, and are engaged in tying the onions on to the straw ropes until breakfast, and then resume their rounds.

The mission was started about ten years ago, and, like many good agencies, originated through what we sometimes erroneously call an accident, but which is God's way of indicating service for the Master. A little lad came to Mrs. Chapman's residence, The Western College, Plymouth, in great distress, having missed his father at the railway station; and as he had been ordered to Torquay he feared punishment, not having money for his ticket. Enough was given him and a hearty meal. The next week, when he returned to Plymouth, he at once came up to thank his kind friend for the timely help, and Mrs. Chapman was able to learn a little of the spiritually destitute condition of these men. This led to an invitation for him, and as many of his comrades as liked, to come up to the College every Sunday afternoon.

From that time forward a goodly number of these poor lads have assembled from three till four, and Mrs. Chapman, who has fairly mastered the Breton language, sings Sankey's hymns with them, and reads Gospel narratives, after which she has a free talk with them on God's love and Christ's salvation, to which they listen and respond at times in a most encouraging way. So thoroughly has Mrs. Chapman gained their affection and confidence, that some one of them frequently comes with any trouble he may have for advice and help. Should illness arise a visit from her is requisitioned rather than calling in the Roman Catholic priest, and they sometimes bring up their clothes to be mended.

A little incident told us is worth recording. One of the lads being ill, Mrs. Chapman read to him the "Prodigal Son"; and the father, who was listening with much attention, said abruptly, "You like confession, Missis?" A reply in the negative elicited from the man, "Nor I." "But what do you do when you sin? I go to the priest; what do you do?" On learning that she went to God, and told Him all about it, that she was sorry, and asked forgiveness and cleansing from the stain of sin, the man inquired, "And does He forgive?" "Yes, He certainly does." "Ah!" he rejoined, "that is not like as the priest says." On learning that God always says "Come to Me," the poor fellow replied, with solemn earnestness, "Then I will not go to the priest any more, but I will go to God." Mrs. Chapman is most desirous of aiding others in starting similar missions at Falmouth, Torquay, Bristol, Liverpool, and Douglas, where these onion boys and men are to be found in large numbers, and she will be pleased to correspond with any Christian friends whose hearts are stirred to care for the souls of these Roman Catholic men and boys. Gifts of Breton and French Testaments and hymn-books, or money to purchase them, will be greatly valued; these can be sent to Mrs. Chapman, Western College, Mutley, Plymouth, or to Mr. T. Kyffin Freeman, 200, Phœnix-street, St. Pancras, N.W.

Mrs. Chapman is the daughter of the once well-known missionary, Rev. Richard Knill, and the wife of Rev. Dr. Chapman, Principal of the Western College, Plymouth.

Congo-Balolo and Peruvian Missions.

THE annual meetings of these missions were held on Monday in Exeter Hall, with afternoon and evening gatherings, both very crowded. On the first occasion Mr. A. C. de Hailes and Mr. Geo. Soltau took part in prayer and reading of Scripture, and Mr. T. A. Denny presided.

After a solo by Miss Ada Rose, exhorting discouraged ones to faith in God, Dr. Harry Guinness sketched past work in Central Africa, and outlined future plans. He was glad to say that the railway connecting Stanley Pool with Matadi as a base is at length on the point of being opened, and will, doubtless, have an important bearing upon missions by enabling Christian workers to reach the interior before disease can seize upon them. The Lord's work in this land is done under great risks to health, but in the past year only two of the mission labourers for God have died. It is hoped that this year may see the opening up to the Gospel of the great Juapu river, with its many tributaries.

Messrs. Seeley and Cork, Boudot, Harris, and Jeffrey, some of the missionaries returned from and outgoing to the Congo, were introduced; and each spoke briefly and hopefully of past gracious leading and of simple trust for the future.

Pioneering work in the distant station of Bongandana, with its difficulties of climate, custom, superstition, and native depravity, was the subject of graphic treatment by Mr. A. E. Ruskin, who has been there for three years, wherein sunshine and joy have exceeded shadow and sorrow. The detailed description of how Nkuci, a cannibal town three miles away, was opened to the story of love, so opposed to slavery and bloodshed, cast an interesting light upon Divine influence, with wise and ready adaptation to native ways on the part of the pioneer. The first Gospel service in the place occupied two hours and a-half, through repeated requests to "tell us about Yesu."

It was here mentioned that the passages and outfits of missionaries from Harley House this year will involve an expenditure of £1500.

Rev. F. B. Meyer, recently returned from America, spoke in sympathetic and appreciative terms of the effective but modest and unobtrusive way in which the Harley Missionary Institute is conducted. Those responsible for the initiation of such a work, have placed the Church under great obligation; especially in view of the high, and in some cases unattainable, educational standard set up by other missionary colleges. He reminded missionaries that the Holy Ghost must energise all their work.

Tea preceded the evening meeting. Then Rev. G. D. Hooper and Mr. Geo. E. Morgan took the opening exercises. In the chair was Mr. F. A. Bevan, who rejoiced to find of late some interest aroused in long-neglected South America. The Missionary Society which bears the name of that land has recently sent forth Gospel labourers; but a man here and there is utterly inadequate to meet the needs of the millions upon that Continent.

At the invitation of Dr. Harry Guinness, the outgoing missionaries, first for the Congo and then for South America, rose in their places and were warmly received by the meeting, the first party afterwards singing an African translation of a hymn concerning "the Great Physician." Mr. William Newell, who is going to Peru, expressed faith in God with reference to what promises to be a hard field: and Mr. Ridings, who has lived for many years in South America, commended to God in prayer his outgoing servants.

Another helpful solo, "Channels Only," from Miss Rose; and Dr. Harry Guinness secured sustained interest by a description at great length of his recent missionary tour in Peru, Bolivia, and Chili. It was a striking story of unexpected departure, Divine guidance, and revelation of extensive need in the places visited. God is opening the country: the question is, are we going with Him? Can we look for the Master's "well done" unless we each strain every nerve to send to the perishing the tidings which have made us glad?

In connection with a distribution of promise slips, reference was made to the fact that £1000 was realised at a similar meeting last year. Some promises were thus received, and a collection was made.

Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas gave a charge to the outgoing workers, based upon Acts xiii. 2, 4, 9, as embracing the call, the authority, and the power for missionary labour. Rev. C. A. Fox also spoke.

Work in Yokohama.

WE have here now a very large floating population. The harbour is crowded with vessels—men-of-war and merchantmen. There is also a shifting population about town, all of whom can speak English. Indeed most of them are from English and American vessels. To reach these I have been led to publish a series of tracts, setting forth the Gospel in plain language, as such men like. Herein lies a good field for work, and I should like to extend my work in this direction. I understand printing, and if friends in England and America felt disposed to aid me in this direction I could do a large amount of good. Dr. Meacham, pastor of Union Church here, and others, approve of my object, which is to get a small press, and print my own tracts. I use my spare money in printing tracts, but the amount I pay for 500, put into paper, and having the press to work with, would produce, probably, 5000.

A large number of seamen attend our Christian Endeavour meetings, and those at Seamen's Home. Many of these seamen are Christians, and a packet of tracts given to them would be spread over a wide field. A press, with other necessaries, with freight and duty, might come to £18 or £20; but that would be a good investment for such a work.

There is promise here of harvest. The Week of Prayer, beginning the New Year, was a merging together of other prayer meetings which had been held some three weeks—every evening. There is a manifest awakening, and we feel that the time is come for special effort in Gospel services. These ports are places where man does what he pleases, and no one thinks him vile. This is a misquotation of Heber's hymn, but it is too true.—Yours very truly,

F. Staniland.

Beyrout Orphanage.

THIS thirtieth year (says the new report) of Miss Taylor's work in Beyrout is memorable for two reasons: That it has been a year in which the work has been larger than any before, with very much encouragement in it; and that during it Miss Taylor reached her seventieth birthday. There are at present in the Institution sixty-seven children, of whom six are Jewesses, twenty-four are Moslems, and thirty-seven are Druses. In the Ras school there are twenty-one Druses and twenty-eight Moslems; forty-nine in all. In Ghareefy there are twenty-five, and in Ramalleh twenty-four; a total of 165 under thorough Christian tuition. About the New Year an outbreak of smallpox occurred, and carried off one girl, while others were sick.

Miss Taylor sends the following cheering facts illustrating the work going on among the children:—"After Christmas we had a young servant of God from Hama. The birth of Christ was his subject. He was astonished at the correct answers he got. I took occasion to tell him that all present had given themselves to the Lord Jesus but three, without saying who. He said, 'I trust these three will not be left out.' One of them, a Druse boy, stood up and said, 'I gave myself to Jesus two years ago'—'ana Mesebuah,' or 'I am a Christian.' A Moslem youth who attends our meetings stood up and said, 'From this time I give myself to belong to Jesus to keep me: He will give me a heart to love Him.' Tears filled every eye. Our new Jewish girl who entered school this year was the other. She kept her seat with compressed lips. Nothing was said; prayer and praise closed our meeting.

"Some time before Christmas this girl had said SHE WOULD NEVER, NEVER BELIEVE Jesus was the Son of God. Prayer prevailed. Only imagine my surprise to see her come into my room one day last week with a face shining with brightness. She babbled out from the fulness of her heart, 'I want to tell you I do believe in the Lord Jesus. I do love Him with all my heart very much.' I could only look at the girl. I drew her to me and gave her a kiss, and said, 'Do you really believe that Jesus is the sent Son of God and the only Saviour of sinners?' She said again, 'With all my heart I love the Lord Jesus.' 'What have you asked Him?' 'I asked Him for a new heart.' I said, 'Do you know, child, you have already got it, or you would not have been able to come to me as you have done. The grace of God has so filled your heart that you could hold out no longer.' She said, 'For two weeks my heart has been burning.' I plied her with many questions. I have no doubt the child is perfectly sincere."

Details of much interest to those in close touch with the work follow, as to the home life, the duties and difficulties of the band of women workers who assist. Through the influence of a former pupil—now a widow—a new school, "only a big room with walls blackened by smoke," has been opened at Ramalleh. In a letter dated Jan. 15 last, Miss Taylor tells with thankfulness that she has been able at last to secure a good native Bible woman to devote herself entirely to visiting the people.

The work is, indeed, in many respects full of interest and promise, but, as the secretary and treasurer, Mr. W. Ferguson, Kinmundy, Mintlaw, N.B., remarks, there is great need of larger help and of many new helpers in the way of annual subscribers.

The Countess Schimmelmann.

THE great bodily fatigue endured by the Countess in proclaiming the Gospel of Christ on the Baltic coast of Germany, last autumn, necessitated a time of comparative rest in a warmer climate, under medical advice.

For the last seven weeks she has been in Italy. While avoiding large meetings, she has not been idle. The great day will show how many have been turned to Christ as a result of personal conversation with her, and of the reading of the Word of God handed to them with a few words of kindness spoken. Of the Gospels, in Italian, given by the Scripture Gift Mission, she has given away a large number, which, with one exception, have been received with marked thankfulness by all classes.

Among the working-people, the eagerness to receive, the capacity to read, and in a measure, to comprehend God's Word, far exceeds any fear of the priests. Indeed, the North Italians are not at all so priest-ridden as the Southerns are. Along all the country roads the workmen display the greatest deference and gratitude, not only on receipt of the booklets, but subsequently on every occasion of the donor passing them. An old woman, on receiving a copy of St. John's Gospel, at once began to read, and in a minute or two put her hand on her heart, and, with delight sparkling in her eyes cried out, in Italian, "That is for me."

The Countess purposes holding some meetings in a few of the large industrial centres in Germany in the beginning of April, before going to the United States.

South American Indians.

SHALL Chief Sepé, the head of the Tocantil Indians, return a second time to his distant home without the preacher that both he and his tribe long for? His annual visit to the coast is more than usually interesting this year, as he hopes to bear back in his canoe train Dr. and Mrs. Jas. A. Graham, both of them medical missionaries. Unfortunately, unless the balance of their passage and outfit expenses (£180) is provided this week, there must be another delay of twelve months before the Gospel can be presented to these aborigines. The start from Liverpool must not be delayed beyond April 10, or the Indian chief will have returned without them, as the water in the upper reaches of the Tocantins river, nearly 900 miles from Para, becomes too low in summer for even their light boats.

A miner, a son of toil, has contributed £5 from his scanty earnings; members of the Missionary Pence Association have collected £20; Dr. Graham has provided his own medical outfit; and we only make this urgent appeal through lack of time to gather in the weekly pence. The treasurer of the M.P.A. is Mr. John Jackson, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

W. Roger Jones.

Berlin.—Pastor Julius Rohrbach, writing from 28, Krumme Strasse, Charlottenburg, says:—"During the past year the work has not only been well sustained, but extended and deepened. Our Gospel services at Charlottenburg and Moabit are well attended, and spiritually blessed; at Potsdam we have had encouraging Bible-classes, and hope to open a larger hall immediately. Since last October a bookshop has been opened at Charlottenburg in connection with the work, and the open Bible in the window is a clear testimony to our Lord Jesus Christ. Deaconess work has also been commenced. I commend the work among the masses of Berlin, Charlottenburg, and Potsdam to the prayer and sympathy of readers of The Christian?"

Our Daily Homily

SUNDAY, April 3.

"Enter in by the narrow door."—Luke xiii. 24. (R.V.)

THE question which the disciples asked was for their gratification and curiosity. Men have always been curious to know what will be the numerical result of the Redeemer's work. But to such questions the Lord had no reply. He was only eager that none of those whom He loved should miss the full measure of blessedness that was within their reach; therefore He bade each be sure of entering the narrow door, so narrow that there is no room to carry through it the love of self, the greed of gain, the thirst for the applause of the world.

We may be saved from the penalty of sin by one single glance at the Saviour, who lived, and died, and lives for evermore; but we cannot be saved in the deepest meaning of the word, in the sense of being delivered from the love and power of sin, unless we are willing to enter through a door, so constructed and strait, that it seems impossible to effect an entrance. If thou art willing for this, and prepared to strive, even to the rending of thyself asunder, then thou shalt be saved from the love and tyranny of that wild dark power, which, hitherto, has always dragged thee downwards.

It is not enough to eat and drink of the blessed memorial supper, or to listen to the voice of Jesus teaching in his Church. Many may do all this, and yet never realise what it is to be included in the Kingdom of Heaven. A man may comply with all such ordinances, and yet be a worker of iniquity. Strive, agonise, strip and diet for this, as the athlete for the arena.

MONDAY, April 4.

"He cannot be my disciple."—Luke xiv. 26.

Three times Christ repeats these solemn words, and it may be that earnest men have done injury to his cause, which they desired to help, by omitting these stringent conditions in their Gospel invitations. It is quite true that whosoever will may come and take; that whosoever believeth in Him shall never perish; that the door of mercy stands wide. But it is equally true that the faith that saves must pass such tests as these; and if it doesn't, it is not of the quality which can bear the soul through the swelling billows of the river of death. These three tests may be classified thus:—

Separation. It sometimes happens in the disciple's life that Christ's work lies in one direction, whilst the blessed ties of home lie in another. Tender voices call, loving hands reach out to hold him. Here the plough is waiting in its furrow, there the hearth with its tender memory and association.

Crucifixion. Everyone has his own cross, some one thing in which the will of God crosses his will. Jesus made that cross, and bids us take it up and bear it after Himself. Yet how many evade it, flee from it, postpone it. They think they can follow Him apart from it, but it is impossible. We can only follow the Crucified when we bear each his own cross.

Renunciation. All we have must be gladly yielded when Christ asks for it. If the accumulation of a life is on one scale and Christ in the other, we must choose Christ, come what may to the rest, or we must abandon our title to discipleship.

Christ asks if we can meet these conditions, and demands that we should con them well before we take on his holy name. Better beg off now, and ask conditions of peace, than find yourself in the midst of a campaign without the ability to bring it to a successful issue.

TUESDAY, April 5.

"He would not go in."—Luke xv. 28.

The elder brother is the dark contrast which heightens the glowing picture of the repentant prodigal, as the gargoyle does the beauty of the angel faces on the cathedral font.

The prodigal is the instance in the New Testament of sins of passion — the elder brother of sins of temper. Now we Mildmay Men's Night School.

THIS interesting and useful work, in connection with the Mildmay Conference Hall, has been continued three nights a week since October. At a well-attended anniversary meeting last week, Mr. P. S. Badenoch entered fully into details respecting what has been accomplished during the twenty-eighth session. There were twenty-five classes, with an average aggregate attendance of 134 men; and the students themselves have contributed nearly £10 towards expenses.

Following the statistical statement came instances, by the same speaker, of how instruction imparted in the School has borne good fruit for time and for eternity. Two men who attended the classes thirteen years ago have risen to the positions of wholesale manufacturer of drugs and bank manager respectively. A former student was recently discovered engaged as a missionary in Peru; and another worker in China sent a guinea as a thank-offering for benefits conferred through past privileges. One of the letters received expressed appreciation of the spirit which animates the teachers in their labour of love. A large proportion of attendants at the classes this session were found to be total abstainers, hence there was not so much scope for the usual temperance effort. The prayer meeting has been maintained, but it was impossible to speak definitely as to the number of conversions.

Mrs. W. H. Dawson presented the numerous prizes and certificates, and Col. Morton, superintendent of Mildmay Institutions and Missions, called upon a former honoured holder of that office to address the men. The Hon. R. Moreton said that he had met in different parts of America men reaping the benefits of knowledge once acquired in this school. Dealing with experiences of infidel sophisms, he pointed out that the humblest believer unaccustomed to argument might overcome them in the power of a robust common-sense faith. The address laid much stress upon the duty and blessedness of decided Christian witness-bearing.

Babylonian Story of the Flood.

The recent discovery at Aboo-Hubba, near Babylon, of a fragment of another tablet referring to the Deluge, afforded special interest to the March meeting of the Victoria Institute. Mr. Theo. Pinches, the Assyriologist, in giving an interesting account of the tablet, referred, at the outset, to the fact that it is now many years since the late George Smith gave to the world a description of the Babylonian deluge tablet. As is well known, the purport of the story is in some respects similar to that of the Hebrew record.

Since George Smith's day much has been written upon the subject, but no fresh light had been thrown upon it, until the recent discovery by Father Scheil of part of a tablet at Aboo-Hubba, the Sippara (Sepharvaim) of the Bible. An examination of this shows that it was the left-hand portion of a tablet of eight columns, which contained the introduction to another version of the record of the Deluge. The fragment is interesting for many reasons, as it not only gives the name of the scribe, the date, about 2000 B.C., but it differs in some points from George Smith's tablet, such as, for instance, the mention of a swallow.

It is interesting to note that the fragment was found at a place where, tradition said, Noah buried the records. Mr. Pinches pointed out that there was evidently a common origin for both records. The date of the inscription, 2000 B.C., was by no means ancient, and if one were to judge by the language of the tablets under consideration, it was much more modern in style than that used in the Hebrew narrative, which was manifestly the most ancient in character.

Seamen who visit Leith, the seaport town of the capital of Scotland, find many friends interested in their welfare. In addition to the missionaries who visit the docks, and seek to win the sailors for Christ, there is a fine Sailors' Home, one of the most successful in the kingdom. There is also a Seamen's Friend Society, which has been visited by 31,000 seamen during the year, an increase of 1000 on the preceding year. A prayer meeting is held daily, temperance and evangelistic work carried on, and many seamen of all nations bear testimony to the benefit received.

THE LATE

Mr. John R. Fowler, of Dublin.

THE cause of Evangelical truth and Christian philanthropy in Ireland has recently suffered a serious loss by the death of Mr. John R. Fowler. For many years he has been a conspicuous figure among the laymen of Dublin in his zeal for truth and righteousness, and in his practical sympathy with every form of Christian activity.

John Richard Fowler was a younger son of Mr. Robert Fowler, D.L., of Rathmolyon, co. Meath. His grandmother was a daughter of Lord Mountjoy, who was murdered by the rebels in 1798, when bearing a flag of truce. While still an infant he lost his mother, who was a sister of the late Earl of Erne. His younger days were in part spent at the Palace, Kilkenny, with his grandfather, the Bishop of Ossory.

At this period the preaching of Rev. Peter Roe in Kilkenny had led to a revival of spiritual religion, which influenced many of the leading families of the county. And on his father marrying, as his second wife, Lady Harriet Butler, daughter of the Marquess of Ormonde, a strong religious influence was introduced into the family, under which habits of piety and reverence for the Word of God became the rule of the young man's life. When a student of Trinity College, Dublin (where he took the Arts degree), he gained a senior moderatorship, a gold medal in mathematics, and other distinctions. In those days he frequently attended Trinity Church, where he came under the powerful influence of the famous Rev. John Gregg (afterwards Bishop of Cork). The family of General Sir Duncan MacGregor, at that time Inspector-General of the Royal Irish Constabulary, attended the same church, and he then made the acquaintance of his son John MacGregor ("Rob Roy"), with whom he was afterwards closely associated in philanthropic work in London. It is impossible to estimate the influence wielded at that time by such men as Gregg, Roe, Krause, and others of kindred spirit. They were men of simple faith and burning earnestness, who had felt the power of sin and the ability of Christ to save, and they proclaimed with unfaltering voice the great salvation offered to all, through the work and merits of the Redeemer, without money and without price. Under such influence young men went forth to live and labour for others, and thus London owes to an impetus from Dublin a few of those institutions which have given a Christian tone to the Empire.

Earnest resolutions were formed at this time by Mr. Fowler for a life of devotion to God. He had thought of entering the ministry of the Church of England, but difficulties in regard to certain portions of the baptismal service held him back. He decided to go to the English Bar, and became a student of the Inner Temple. He attended with much spiritual profit St. John's Church, Bedford-row, under the ministry of Rev. Thomas Nolan, and devoted much time to work in ragged and industrial schools. He was also for some sessions an honorary secretary of the Social Science Congress. In 1850 Mr. Fowler suggested the scheme for employing the street Arabs of London as shoeblacks, which, under the able and energetic management of a committee composed of Messrs. J. MacGregor, Ware, Fordham, Snape, Kinnaird (now Lord Kinnaird), E. Reilly, and others, became remarkably successful. He took an active part in the committee of the Pure Literature Society, and in the formation of the Ragged School Union, co-operating in these organisations with the late Lord Shaftesbury. At this time his work was more philanthropic than spiritual. He was distinguished as a sportsman, skilful in the use of rod and gun, and was also an artist in water colours of no mean order, while the summer holidays found him among the Alps, ascending Mont Blanc and such peaks as were then accessible to the climber.

Thus passed several years of unceasing activity, when he was recalled to Ireland by his father's illness. He remained with him till his death in 1868. He then went to reside with his sisters at Bray, in the co. Wicklow. Withdrawn from the stirring life of the previous years, he had time for reflection. In common with many Christian people of that time, he did not realise the Christian's privilege of full assurance of salvation. His heart yearned for peace with God. He was overwhelmed with a sense of personal unworthiness, and driven to the verge of despair—so much so that his health became affected. One day a Christian lady, who is still active in the Lord's service, gave him a little tract, "Doubts Removed," by Cæsar Malan. Light and peace shone into his soul through resting on the simple Word of God: "This is the record, that God hath given unto us eternal life, and this life is in his Son." "He that believeth not God hath made him a liar." "Believing the record," as the note in his diary puts it, "against every human probability," he "let God be true and every man a liar." Ever afterwards he rejoiced in the glorious liberty of the children of God. His health immediately improved, and the records of his diary show how completely henceforth the interests of his life were changed. His marriage in 1877 to a Christian lady, Miss E. S. Law, daughter of the late Mr. Samuel Law, Kilbarrack House, Raheny, added much to the happiness and usefulness of his life by giving him a sympathetic fellow-helper.

The great mission conducted by Mr. Moody in Dublin in 1874 gave him the scope and opportunity for which his previous life had been a preparation. That mission was remarkable, not only for the good that was done directly and immediately, but for the various movements which it inspired. Into these Mr. Fowler was gradually drawn. His aptitude for business, his accuracy, and conscientiousness were recognised, and of quite a number of these movements he was appointed treasurer, and he continued to watch over their financial interests till his death. He set an example of liberality. Out of his modest fortune he gave £1000 to the Sustentation Fund of the Irish Church on its disestablishment. When the suggestion (first made by Mr. Moody) was taken up, to erect central buildings in Dublin for united Christian work, Mr. Fowler generously subscribed £1000, and until the last his heart and hand were ever open to the cry of distress and the claims of Christian enterprise.

But all this was subordinate to the higher claims of the Gospel. He was always ready, when the call came or the opportunity offered, to bear witness to his Lord and Saviour. He was one of the pioneers of open-air preaching in Ireland. Twenty-five years ago he established, amid much opposition, open-air services on the rocks at Greystones, and in the summer before he died he was not ashamed to associate himself with the little band of Christians who were accustomed to preach the Gospel before the mixed audience on the promenade at Bray. No object was nearer to his heart than the promotion of unity among God's children. He was for many years acting treasurer of the Evangelical Alliance, and took an active part in its various efforts. He was warmly interested in the Prison Gate Mission, the Irish Evangelisation Society, the Bible Society, the Bible and Colportage Society, the Open-Air Mission, the Adelaide Hospital, and other institutions. But his special interest was in the varied work of which the Christian Union Buildings are the centre—the Annual Convention, the meetings for united prayer, the evangelistic and mission services, the great work among the masses of the poor—which has done much, under the Divine blessing, to change the character of Dublin from being one of the most intolerant to being one of the most tolerant of cities.

As one who knew the value of Evangelical truth and had experienced its power, he was deeply grieved over the spread of Ritualism in the Church of England, and the attempts which were made for its introduction into the Irish Church. He took an active part in the work of the Protestant Defence Association. By his voice in the various synods, and by his pen, he endeavoured to arouse his fellow-Churchmen to the dangers which threatened. But all that he said and did was characterised by a Christian courtesy which gained for him the respect and esteem of those who most widely differed from him.

During the agitation which prevailed in Ireland some years ago he was led to identify himself with the Loyal Orange body, and was for several years Grand Master of the Dublin district. There is no doubt that, by his personal character and influence, and by the lectures which he instituted, he did much to elevate the tone and spirit of the brotherhood, by whom he was beloved and revered. He always considered that their aim should be to guard religious liberty alike for Roman Catholic and Protestant, and that to be a true Orangeman one must be a true Christian. In the midst of the many engagements of his public life he was at the same time always ready to visit the sick and the afflicted, and to carry to them the consolations of the Gospel.

A growing ripeness for glory and a manifestly close walk with God, which was apparent to those who met him, was attributed by himself to the help he had been given through the teaching of Rev. Andrew Murray. The writings also of Canon Gayer, of Newcastle, co. Wicklow, were made a great blessing to him in the closing years of his life. He felt much the sudden death of his beloved elder brother, followed as it was by the death of other dear relatives and friends, and latterly had a presentiment that his own call might not be far off. It came suddenly and unexpectedly. He was in Dublin, engaged as usual in his Master's service, on the day before he died, which was on Sunday, February 13 last. On his return home he was taken seriously ill, and medical aid was summoned. He revived a little, but he knew that the hand of death was upon him.

Perfectly calm and peaceful, he continually repeated with joy Psalm xxiii., and said, "I have perfect, perfect peace," and "I desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better." He praised God for his free grace and full pardon, rejoicing in his Saviour, and speaking frequently of the great condescension of God to creatures so unworthy and insignificant. He thanked God that he was at home, and after praying for those most dear to him—his wife, and son and daughter, he prayed that God would raise up "holy men and women" to carry on his own work, and fill the places of so many who were being called away. About two o'clock on that Sunday afternoon he fell asleep. The verse for the day in his diary was, "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thy hand: for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good" (Eccles. xi. 6).

His funeral, like that of one whom he resembled so much in spirit and in life, the late Archbishop of Dublin, Lord Plunket, was remarkable for its extent and representative character. His remains were borne by loving hands to their resting-place in the little churchyard of Enniskerry, among the romantic hills of Wicklow, "until the day break and the shadows flee away."

Gal. v. 22.

9.—TEMPERANCE (SELF-CONTROL).

If parents honestly watch themselves, they will discover often, in their own impulses and tempers, the causes of their children's failings.

To govern ourselves is the preliminary for ruling our children. Self-mastery is the goal at which training aims, and it is for parents to decide whether in after years the child shall be a slave to himself or master of himself.

A child may be a true man in self-mastery if well trained in self-control.

A very common form of want of self-control is found in hasty punishment, not for the fault of disobedience, but for an accident brought about by the fault. A precious object is lost or broken; the father or mother flies into a passion and punishes. The child suffers for what he had no intention of doing, but the disobedience, the wilful fault, is ignored.

We are too much inclined to estimate guilt by immediate consequences.

The Religious Tract Society.

THE COMING CENTENARY.

Of late years we have had a good many jubilee celebrations; we seem now to be getting in amongst centenaries. Next year will complete the first centuries of the Religious Tract Society and the Church Missionary Society. The managers of the former, taking time by the forelock, seem to have thought that the real celebration of May, 1899, would be more fruitful if they arranged a year of preparation, to be introduced by a public rehearsal. This event came off last week in the shape of great meetings at the Mansion House and at the Queen's Hall. The result fully justified the wisdom of the arrangement. To commemorate the centenary, the Society has issued an interesting and artistic brochure, giving sketches of the founding of its work, of its leading officers, and a summary of its benefactions to the public weal. The public are thus placed in possession of facts that will enable it to take a fully intelligent part in the meetings of next spring, which will round off the century of the Society's work.

The LORD MAYOR gave the extra éclat of his presence to the afternoon meeting at the Mansion House, which was crowded. Nothing could be heartier in its way than the tribute he paid to the Tract Society for its services in the production and propagation of

for the people. He referred to the near necessity of rebuilding or enlarging its headquarters, and while wishing that project every success, he hoped the Society's home would remain within the precincts of the City. At a somewhat later stage his Lordship made the pleasing announcement that of £50,000 which it is proposed to raise as a special centenary fund, £29,950 had already been given or promised, in sums of £1000 downwards.

There was a strong platform of speakers, as befitted the uncommon occasion. First of all the ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY moved a resolution expressive of thanks to God for the favour He had shown in blessing the labours of the institution, Dr. Temple expatiated impressively on the two great main channels through which God sends his messages to man—the living voice of a brother man and the printed page. Though the first can never be dispensed with, the other is and may often be used in places where a human voice cannot be heard. The Archbishop said the characteristic of the Religious Tract Society's publications that had most impressed him was a deep sense of the Divine love to men.

The resolution was seconded by another ecclesiastic, this time from the northern classic city of St. Andrew's, Dr. A. K. H. BOYD. His carefully prepared little address was a pathetic, almost a tearful expression of thanks to the Tract Society, for the sunshine which some of its earlier publications had thrown into his own boyhood life, especially on the Sabbath, the observance of which was then, according to his experience, a dismal affair. Dr. Boyd must have been singularly unfortunate as a lad; with some knowledge of Scottish Sabbath-keeping a generation back or more, the writer never heard of any Christian parent so inconsiderate as to impose on his offspring the repetition of the first and second halves of the Shorter Catechism on alternate Sundays. However, there can be no doubt that in those early days of literary famine, the books of the Tract Society met a very distinct and felt need.

The BISHOP OF LONDON, who spoke next, praised the Society for having kept pace with the growing needs of our expanding empire, and for having helped very materially to raise the tone of our serial and popular literature. Mr. ALBERT SPICER'S speech was chiefly valuable for its first-hand testimony to the splendid help which the Society renders to such organizations as the London Missionary Society. He had lately visited many of the stations of that society in different parts of the world, and could bear witness to the need for pure elevating reading and to the hearty way in which the R.T.S. lent its aid in that direction. Dr. OSWALD DYKES spoke soberly, weightily, and well, as he always does. Apart from the mere supply of sound, tested tracts (which are still in good demand), the fact was urged that all the Society's issues in books and magazines are permeated with the Christian spirit, though they may deal with subjects not strictly religious.

The large meeting at Queen's Hall in the evening was presided over by Mr. JAMES BRYCE, M.P., who chiefly referred in his address to the literary side of the Society's work. He made special and kindly allusion to that old and still fast favourite, The Leisure Hour, with its excellent companion monthly The Sunday at Home, so welcome in many cultured homes.

Able pleas for the work of the Society, and for its extension, followed from Sir Charles Elliott, ex-Lieut.-Governor of Bengal, Rev. H. Price-Hughes, and Dr. C. A. Berry. Sir Charles could speak from personal knowledge of the good that had been accomplished by the wide circulation of the Society's literature among the restless multitudes over whom we rule in our great Eastern dependency. Not only are the natives enlightened in matters good and holy, but the pure teaching gives strength and solidity to the Indian character. Mr. Hughes warmly urged an advance of the Society's work in China at the present crisis. He also had a good word to say for the often despised tract. Dr. Berry declared that the Society owed its origin to the great Evangelical revival at the close of last century. A strong now would be a renewed opportunity for the scattering of the best literature in attractive forms. The speaker was justly severe on the "decadent" writing of the day, and expressed satisfaction that now it is largely a drug in the market. Several speakers during the day pointed o that the healthful issues of the R.T.S. had done much as an antidote to the poisonous trash that has flowed out so freely from an ungodly Press.

So these preliminary gatherings passed by with a unanimous benediction on the past century's work of this agency, started in a humble fashion in 1798. The centenary fund of £50,000 is intended partly to meet the cost of better premises and partly to enlarge the scope of the work. Friends who contribute to the Society's funds may be sure that they are helping in a good and beneficent cause.

Child-life in Heathen Lands.—3.

YOU will never suppose, I am sure, that in my previous talks I have told you everything that can be related of boys and girls in countries without the Gospel. From your geography lessons at school you will have learnt many things about New Guinea, the South Sea Islands, Japan, Africa, China, besides Madagascar and India.

Ah! China; that wonderful country, with its remarkable people, and strange customs and simple ways; everybody is thinking and talking about China. Why, father looks over his newspaper at the breakfast table in the morning and tells mother the last piece of news about Russia or Germany endeavouring to seize portions of China. Of course you know where the country is? You could place your finger upon it, as you open your atlas, in a moment. There it is.

Very well! Now that you have found the country, let me tell you a little about its people, its religion, but specially its young people.

In some respects the Chinese are more highly civilised than any other people who have not yet become Christian. They are so intensely proud of their country, language, teachers, and religion, that they regard all foreigners, even the English, as uncivilised barbarians. But you would never consent to that, I know: to be considered a barbarian. Chinese men have their hair drawn back and twisted into a pig-tail, which falls down behind and sometimes nearly reaches to the ground.

What do you think Chinese mothers do to the feet of their girls? When a girl is about four or five years of age her feet are bandaged to prevent their growth. The toes are folded under the foot and bound tightly, and it is many years before the bandages are taken off—only when the girls are grown up. This makes it so difficult for Chinese ladies to walk. They are crippled for life in consequence of this custom of binding the feet. I am thankful to be able to say that many Chinese mothers are discontinuing this painful practice.

Confucius was the chief religious teacher of the great Chinese nation. He arose about four thousand years ago, and was considered to be exceedingly wise. The things he said and the lessons he taught are so valued that they form the Bible of the learned classes. The people begin to read his books when boys, and it is those who know them best, as proved in examinations, who rise to the highest positions as magistrates, rulers, and nobles. So that if you were a Chinese boy you would have to study very hard indeed if you intended to get on in life.

Although many of the lessons Confucius taught are good, he said nothing whatever about God, or loving Him as a Father, and giving Him our hearts. It was his own doctrines he preached, and a knowledge of his sayings is regarded as sufficient for a religious life.

From the first a Chinese child is taught to be afraid of the gods—to fear their anger. When he goes to a temple with his little present he is as much terrified at the being he is going to worship as he would be if he were about to face a lion. His limbs tremble, his face is white with terror, he dreads lest by some mistake or neglect he should awaken the anger of the awful being, and so bring upon himself some great evil.

How different all this is from your knowledge of God as Jesus Christ revealed Him when He said, "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." Chinese boys and girls are not taught that it is very wrong to lie, and cheat, and steal; but that there is an innumerable number of powerful and angry gods and evil spirits, whom it is their duty to keep friendly by the presents they make to the priests. Now, it is that they may learn to be truthful, and honest, and upright, and noble, and give themselves wholly to Jesus, that missionaries are sent to them.

It makes me glad to be able to tell you that in mission schools in China there are now many young people learning the very same things out of their Chinese gospels that you learn out of your New Testament. And if you love Jesus yourselves it will make you happy to know that Chinese children are beginning to see how good and true and kind Jesus is. You would like these mission scholars to be as bright and happy as English children are, would you not? Some of them have learnt to sing the hymns that you love, which have been translated for them by missionaries into their language, and they delight to read the beautiful stories of Jesus' life and work.

I am certain, too, that it will help these young people to a knowledge of Jesus Christ if you remember to pray for them. The prayers of boys and girls are quite as powerful with God as the prayers of grown-up people, if presented in faith and in the name of Christ.

The Cry of a Heathen Child.

They say there's a golden city
Beyond the evening star,
And a home so fair for children there,
Where God and his angels are;
And many shall stand in that happy land,
But it cannot be meant for me.

They say there's a loving Saviour,
Who came on the earth to die,
But in glory crowned with the angels round
How can He hear my cry?
Tho' it may be true that He listens to you,
Yet it cannot be meant for me.

But I'll never see that city,
Nor hear that Saviour's call:
So I kneel in prayer to the idols here,
And the bitter tears will fall,
For I wish I had heard his pitiful word;
Oh, I wish it were meant for me!

Our Prize Competition.

January to March.

Will parents and teachers kindly see that each of the following Rules is strictly observed, especially Nos. 7 and 10? The only help permitted is to explain the meaning of the rules or questions, if necessary.

1. Only those may enter whose names appear in the list below as having been right nine times out of twelve.
2. Competitors will be divided into Four Divisions:—
   I. Those under ten years of age.
   II. Those over ten and under thirteen.
   III. Those over thirteen and under fifte
   IV. Those over fifteen.
3. Write outside your envelope in large letters the words "Prize Competition," and the Number of the Division to which you belong; and address it to "Uncle Tom" as usual.
4. At the top of your answer paper write very clearly your Division, your Full Name and Address, and your Age last birthday.
5. Number your Answers exactly to correspond with the questions.
6. Every paper must be signed by a parent or teacher to testify that Rule 7 has been observed.
7. No Concordance and no help allowed; only the use of a Reference Bible. Competitors must not help each other.
8. The last day for answers to reach the office is Wednesday, April 13. But please send them in earlier, if possible. Extra marks will be given to those arriving on or before Thursday, April 7. The results will be announced on April 21.
9. Marks will be given for accuracy, neatness, writing, spelling, etc., the rewards being: First Prize, Second Prize, First Certificate, and Second Certificate.
10. Chapter and Verse must be given wherever possible.

Every answer will be examined separately by three persons; and no papers can be re-examined after the lists appear.

Those who cannot do all the questions set for their division must do as many as they can, and will receive marks accordingly.

Division I.

1. By whom, and to whom, were the following words spoken:—(a) Here am I, for thou didst call me? (b) The Lord hath given me my petition?
2. (a) How long did Eli judge Israel? (b) What kind of a judge was he? (c) How did he die?
3. Of whom is it said:—(a) The Lord was with him, and did let none of his words fall to the ground? (b) He behaved himself very wisely?
4. (a) Whose asses were lost? (b) Who went in search of them?
5. (a) With what did Saul arm David? (b) What did Jonathan give him?
6. Of whom was it said:—(a) He was an old man and heavy? (b) (2 Sam.) In their death they were not divided?

Division II.

1. What occurred at—(a) The Valley of Elah? (b) The Brook Besor? (c) Mount Gilboa?
2. (a) What first aroused Saul's hatred of David? (b) How did he show it? (c) How did David return good for evil? (d) What text in the New Testament tells us to do so?
3. By whom and to whom were these words spoken:—(a) Them that honour me I will honour? (b) I cannot go with these, for I have not proved them? (Give the circumstances of each.)
4. Describe the circumstances which led Samuel to say "To obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams."
5. (a) What do you know about Ahimelech? (b) Abiathar?

Division III.

1. By whom, and under what circumstances, were the following said:—(a) To obey is better than sacrifice? (b) Let no man's heart fail because of him? (c) (2 Sam.) Thy love to me was wonderful?
2. State fully what you know of—(a) Ebenezer. (b) Ramah. (c) Engedi. (d) The Hill of Hachilah. (e) Melchishua.
3. (a) Why were the people wrong in asking for a king? (b) What answer did they make to Samuel's warning?
4. Of whom was it said:—(a) Thou shalt be turned into another man? (b) Is the seer here? (c) They went on beating down one another? (Give the circumstances of each).

Division IV.

1. (a) Which verse in this book do you think describes Saul at his best? (b) Which at his worst? (c) How would you sum up his character?
2. (a) What were the two most noble features of Jonathan's friendship for David? (b) Give one verse which illustrates them both. (c) What more might he have done to prove his devotion?
3. What do you know of (a) Achish? (b) Bethshan? (c) Agag?
4. What occurred at Bozez and Seneh?
5. By whom, to whom, and under what circumstances were the following expressions used:—(a) There is no restraint to the Lord to save by many or by few? (b) Behold, I have played the fool, and have erred exceedingly?
6. Of whom was it said: (a) He is such a man of Belial that a man cannot speak to him? (b) God gave him another heart? (c) The Lord hath sought Him a man after His own heart? (Give the circumstances in each case.) The identity of (c) will be found in 1 Kings.
7. Where was Saul anointed king?

Personal.

Next week I propose giving a list of all those who have answered each Searcher correctly during the quarter.

Lillie Petter.—It is not always necessary to answer in the words of the Bible, as sometimes that would mean too much writing.

Harold Sanders.—I am glad you are joining. I remember your brother's name very well, and wish he could have continued.

Dorothy Davies.—Am pleased you enjoy your school life. It must be delightful to hunt for primroses and violets. I wish you could have gone on doing the Searcher.

Ronald Studd.—Please stamp your paper with 25 centimes instead of five, as 4d. had to be paid on your Searcher.

Marjorie Hogge.—If your answers reach me before twelve o'clock on a Monday they will be included in the first list.

Obituary.

MISS EMMA HOLMES.

The youngest daughter of Mr. William Holmes, of St. John's Wood, sister to Mrs. C. Russell Hurditch, fell asleep on March 23, age 49. Converted in the days of the memorable revival, 1859-1866, when "showers of blessing" fell on the gatherings at Stafford Rooms and the services connected therewith, her life has been devoted to caring for young children and aged poor. For many years she took charge of a very large number of infant children, first at Kilburn Hall, and subsequently at Willesden Hall, branches of the Evangelistic Mission, where she also took the charge of the mothers meetings. Her quiet, unostentatious life of service will be very gratefully remembered by many in the north-west of London.

REV. A. BRAITHWAITE, FERSFIELD, NORFOLK.

The son of the late Mr. William Braithwaite, surgeon, Plymouth, Rev. A. Braithwaite was born in 1848. After studying for the work of the ministry he was appointed curate at St. Simon's, Sheffield, the then vicar being Rev. James Battersby, now of St. James's. Subsequently he was called to labour under the revered Dr. Doudney, of Bedminster, Bristol. During the last twenty years of his life he was rector of Fersfield, near Diss, Norfolk. After a prolonged illness he has fallen asleep. I have personally known and loved the deceased during my more than seven years' ministry in Diss. He was a true believer in the Lord Jesus Christ, a staunch Protestant, a fearless preacher, and a great admirer of that prince of preachers—the late C. H. Spurgeon. Whilst some taught baptismal regeneration, he taught regeneration by the Spirit; whilst some taught salvation by works, he taught salvation by grace through faith; whilst some taught ceremonial cleansing, he delighted to proclaim cleansing from all sin by the atoning blood. The Lord raise up other Protestant champions in these Romanising days!

James Easter,
Baptist Minister.

DR. S. C. MORGAN, SWANSEA.

This honoured servant of Christ passed away on Wednesday week at Amelie les Bains. His ministerial career began in 1860, when he became curate to his father at Chepstow. In July, 1862, he married Sophia Janet, the eldest daughter of the late Dr. Charles James Blasius Williams, F.R.S. (afterwards Physician-Extraordinary to the Queen), and accepted the curacy of Newland, Gloucestershire. Afterwards he became successively incumbent of Aldershot; vicar of Christ Church, East Greenwich; Roxeth, Harrow; and Swansea. The strain of eight years' work in the large parish of Swansea was, however, telling upon him, and his wife's health appearing to suffer there he, in 1884, removed to the parish of St. Mary's, Leamington. While there his eldest son, aged twenty, was killed by a fall from his horse. His second son, Rev. C. A. Morgan, after holding two curacies, went out last October as a missionary under the China Inland Mission. He leaves, besides, three daughters and a younger son (an undergraduate in Durham University). He wrote a number of booklets on the spiritual life, also the hymn No. 394 in Mr. Sankey's "Songs and Solos":—

Come, thou weary, Jesus calls thee
To his wounded side:
"Come to Me," saith He, "and ever Safe abide."

He was for several years a missioner of the Church of England Parochial Mission Society, and during his last fifteen years a total abstainer and an earnest Gospel temperance advocate. Since an attack of influenza the health of Mrs. Morgan, who has survived him, has never been good, and she having been advised to try the climate of the South of France for this winter, he, in company with her and his youngest daughter, after passing some time at Pau, where he found work in taking services and Bible-readings, went last month to Amelie les Bains (Pyrénées Orientales). There he entered into rest.

REV. SEPTIMUS HOBBS, COMPTON VALENCE.

The honoured rector of Compton Valence passed away on the 15th inst. He had attained the age of eighty-two, surviving his wife only a few days, death in both cases arising from influenza. The touching nature of the bereavement has made a deep impression at Compton Valence and the countryside, Mr. and Mrs. Hobbs having been long held in affection. The Dorchester Chronicle says:—"The rector was well known for the staunchness of his Evangelical convictions, and the readiness and courage which he always displayed in offering resistance to the spread of Ritualism and Sacerdotalism in all their varied forms. By word and pen he rendered noble service to the maintenance of Reformation principles, and by his death a gap will be caused in the Evangelical ranks which it will be difficult indeed to fill. He was a valued supporter of the Bible Society and an active member of the National Protestant Churchmen's Union. The spread of High Church tenets of late years, he regarded with apprehension and dismay, and spared neither time nor pains in his endeavour to check the 'Romeward march of the Church of England.' For some years he was a missionary in India of the Church Missionary Society, and, returning to England in 1866, he was instituted to West Compton, which he held until 1873, when he was translated to Compton Valence."

The Y.M.C.A.

The Marseilles Y.M.C.A. has entered upon a period of fresh activity. The population of the city is 416,000, of whom 15,000 only are Protestants.

The Madras Association has held its anniversary meeting. The gross membership is now 424. The new building is making satisfactorily progress, and will be ready for occupation about the end of this year.

There are now no fewer than ninety-three associations in the Indian National Union of Y.M.C.A.'s. Madras has 424 members, Calcutta 500, and Bombay an even larger number; while exceedingly good work is being done also at Lahore, Poona, Nagpur, and other of the more important centres. The Colombo Association in Ceylon has 209 members.

The Belfast Y.M.C.A. has held its annual meeting under most encouraging auspices. During the year its new buildings in Wellington Place, Belfast, have been opened at a cost of £16,500, most of which has been subscribed by Belfast people. In the same period 100 young men have been added to the membership, and the ordinary income has been £1,600, leaving a balance of about £50 on the right side. Mr. T. H. Shellington is the president.

The Kennington Park rooms have presented an interesting appearance these last few weeks. This Association has been re-organised, and the members are now actively engaged in conducting a "Membership Campaign," with a view of bringing the advantages of the institution more prominently before the thousands of young men in the neighbourhood. The rooms are crowded every evening, and very soon the committee will have to seriously and resolutely face the question of providing increased accommodation.

The annual meeting of the Bayswater Y.M.C.A. was held on Thursday evening, in the Paddington Baths Hall, under the presidency of Mr. F. A. Bevan. The speakers were Revs. Marcus Rainsford and F. B. Meyer. A few days prievously Mr. Bevan occupied the chair at the 43rd annual meeting of the Stafford Rooms Association in the Edgware-road, where part was taken in the proceedings by Revs. Grose Hodge and B. J. Gibbon. The premises, which have been the scene of so much faithful work, have undergone extensive repair and improvement.

Theatrical Employees. — At Orange-street Chapel, Leicester-square, on Thursday last, Mr. William Forbes had as his guests to tea many girls who were the daughters of those he entertained in years past. To many theatrical employees, leading lonely and isolated lives, this kind effort is of invaluable service, accompanied as it is by gifts of flowers and texts. At the meeting on Thursday, the addresses were given by Rev. W. Harrison and Mr. Forbes.

The Evangelistic Field.

MR. W. R. LANE AT MAIDSTONE.

SAD as the condition of Maidstone appeared to the outside world during the dark days of the recent epidemic, yet to the Christian, as he beheld the whole city laying aside her pursuit of pleasure and of gain, with a deeply solemn and affected heart rising up to minister to her many sick and afflicted, he beheld a spectacle more pleasing to God than the tidal flow of business and pleasure in other towns of the land.

It was wisely conceived that these events prepared the way for a special effort to bring to minds now greatly solemnised, and ere the world would again assert its sway, the sweet message of God's saving grace. Accordingly, Mr. Lane having accepted an invitation, opened on Sunday, the 13th inst., in a crowded and crammed Corn Exchange, a Gospel campaign.

It was truly a "United Mission," all the Evangelical clergy and the ministers of the several denominations cordially uniting to support the gracious work. The vicar of the parish in which the Corn Exchange stands, Rev. Henry Rivers, opened the first meeting with prayer, Rev. George Walker, Baptist minister, following later on. From the first the meetings were crowded; a sense of God's presence was over the great congregations; the word of the evangelist, with a John Bunyan clearness, charm of speech, and persuasive resonableness, held the attention of the people perfectly, and feelingly impressed them at all times throughout the mission. We were most thankful that the Lord had sent Mr. Lane; we expected much, but enjoyed more.

The Corn Exchange was unable to contain the people who sought admission, and for the first time in the history of the town the concert hall at the back was thrown in, the preacher standing between the two halls. On Sunday, the 20th, both halls, sitting and standing room, were crowded out.

Maidstonians are notoriously difficult to move; however, the power of God was ever present, and from the third meeting inquirers arose for prayer and surrender to God. Over a hundred on the evening of the concluding meeting went into the inquiry-room, and the great joy and rich experience of many of the converts was a marked feature of the mission. The afternoon Bible-readings were largely attended, and much blessed to Christians of all denominations. Mr. Lane returns at the end of April to address the converts.

W. Woods Smyth.

TO JEWS AND GENTILES.

AN eight days' mission for Jews and Gentiles, by Rev. George Soltau, closed on Sunday last, in connection with the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, at the Central Hall, Philpot-street, E. Notwithstanding the exceptionally inclement weather that prevailed throughout the mission week the attendance of Jews each night was encouraging. Taking his subjects from the Old Testament, the evangelist reasoned with Jews and Gentiles "of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come," and not a few hardened sinners trembled. On Thursday evening the subject was "The Day of Atonement," illustrated by large pictures; and on Friday, "The Feast of the Passover," the Jews listening with rapt attention on both occasions. Indeed, their attention throughout the week was all that could be desired. In the afternoons he gave most helpful Bible readings to Christian workers, which were greatly appreciated. The closing night of the mission—Sunday last—was one long to be remembered. At the close, in response to his appeals, a number entered the inquiry-room. Several accepted Christ, four or five of these being members of the Girls' Bible-class which meets weekly at the Central Hall. Miss Ada Rose rendered splendid service by the singing of her sweet Gospel solos. The preaching of the Gospel was so powerfully convincing throughout this mission week, and the work done by the Holy Spirit so deep, that the workers at the Central Hall expect to reap further benefit. J. O.

EVANGELISTS' MOVEMENTS.

Mr. Chas. Inglis has conducted special and united services at New Brompton, Rochester, and Strood, under the auspices of the Free Church Council. At the former place, crowds attended every night, and the racy and powerful addresses of the missioner were blessed of God in leading scores to decision. All the Free Churches participated, and the quickening of life and activity has been one of the most gratifying features of the effort. Mr. Inglis came into the friendliest relations with Baptists, Congregationalists, and Methodists, and all worked together with hearty goodwill in the common enterprise. The services at Rochester were characterised by great earnestness, and the reaping was mainly among the members of Bible classes and other associations of young people. At both places the Bible-readings in the afternoons were largely attended, and proved a real means of grace. After a few days, Mr. Inglis returns for an eight days' mission in Chatham, where, as in the other places, a thorough house-to-house visitation has been carried on, and where a determined and united effort is being made to bring the Gospel home to the people.—W. H. T.

A twelve days' mission has been conducted at Spring Hill Chapel, Birmingham, by Mr. E. P. Telford, and a gracious revival has been experienced. Throughout the attendance was very large, and the Divine blessing was very manifest. At the first evening service there were many inquirers, and on the second Sunday evening the number greatly increased. Mr. Telford has won for himself a very warm place in the hearts of the Lord's people here, and many prayers will follow him for days to come. His addresses are characterised by remarkable clearness and power, and were most convincing. Some who have been in the congregation for years were led to decision, while many who are not accustomed to attend the house of God were induced to come, and were led to yield unto God.—T. E. Titmuss (Pastor).

The Weaver Bros. are holding a fifteen days' mission in Byrom Hall, Liverpool. On the opening Sunday, Mr. Bewley Weaver gave three stirring addresses, and Mr. Frank Weaver assisted by several solos. Large numbers attended the meetings during the following week, and the mission promises to be very successful.—F. G. W.

A twenty-nine days' mission has been held in Looe, Cornwall, by Mr. Sidney Vivian, of the Evangelization Society. The Spirit of God has been wonderfully manifested. Crowds of people have gathered night after night, and Christians have been greatly blessed.—F. S.

A ten days' mission has been held at Grafton-square Chapel, Clapham, S.W., by Mr. Henry Thorne. His Bible-readings in the afternoons were very instructive, and were much enjoyed. The Gospel meetings were productive of much good; many accepting Christ as their Saviour.

For the last few months Mr. R. Jones has been holding Gospel meetings in the open air and cottages in villages around Reading. The almshouses have not been forgotten, and some of the old people over eighty years of age have derived real blessing.

During the past three weeks a mission has been held in the Carrubbers Close Mission, Edinburgh, by Mr. W. D. Dunn. Two meetings were held each Sabbath, and so great was the interest manifested that an overflow meeting had to be arranged in a neighbouring church for the evening. The week night services were attended by large numbers of all classes. One cheering feature was the number of working men and mechanics present. Every meeting was fruitful in result. It was found that not a few had trusted the Saviour right away during the address; while many more found their way into the inquiry rooms anxious to know the way of salvation more fully. The interest was so manifest that at the end of the second week it was decided to go on for a third, and the special mission concluded on the 25th with a large and hearty meeting, when many testimonies were given to blessing received. There is no doubt that the special effort has been one of the best in the history of Carrubbers Close Mission.—R. C.

Much blessing has resulted from a three weeks' mission by Mr. S. McKenzie at Tillicoultry, near Stirling, N.B. The mission closed in the second week in March, but right from the beginning the power of God was manifest, and many were found in the inquiry room anxious to know the way of salvation. Quite a number of young people have decided, and many saints are praising God for the manifest tokens of his grace.

Mr. John G. Smith, of the Gordon Evangelistic Mission, Aberdeen, has conducted a series of special meetings in Kirkwall. The ministers of the various denominations in town co-operated with enthusiasm in the work of saving souls, and not a few were brought from darkness into light. Mr. Smith has been engaged for another month by two Free Church ministers in other parts of Orkney to conduct meetings.

Mr. James Neech has been holding a two weeks' mission at Earlham Hall (of North-East London Gospel Mission), and the workers have been cheered by the faithful presentation of the Gospel to deeply-interested congregations. Among the conversions happily known have been some very interesting cases, one being that of a person physically blind, and another (quite a stranger to the hall) nearly blind, through the violence of a brutal husband, now in the workhouse, reduced by drink from an honourable profession to destitution. Mr. Neech's visit will long be remembered, and many prayers will follow for his continued service.—W. C.

On Sunday last, Mr. Richard Spragg concluded a fortnight's mission at Bethany Hall, Caterham Valley. His ministry has been much blessed to the people there, and to many of the soldiers from the neighbouring depôt. He goes now to assist at Mr. Fegan's new mission-hall, in Holland-street, Southwark.—A. F.

Special meetings have been held in Lynn, Mass., by Rev. E. Payson Hammond, and a remarkable work, especially among the young, has been accomplished. Five hundred and twenty-four have been examined by those appointed for the purpose, and after a second examination by a minister have received Covenant Cards. At the first meeting over a thousand were present, and since then the churches have been well filled daily. The meetings are under the auspices of the Evangelistic Association of New England, Boston, Mass.

Mr. Charles Inglis, Chatham, to April 5.
The Weaver Bros., Wrexham, April 17-30.
Mr. Monro Collings, Fakenham, to April 11.
Mr. J. J. Sims, City Hall, Glasgow, during April.
Mr. F. C. Spurr, to Easter, Falmouth, and Truro.
Gipsy Smith, Rugby, April 3-11; Guernsey, April 16-25.
Mrs. Baeyertz, at end of April and May, in Aberdeen.
Mr. George Clarke, Holloway (Rev. J. R. Wood's), to April 3.
Mr. W. R. Lane, Sudbury (Suffolk), to April 3; Preston, April 15-22.
Mr. J. Neech, Epsom, April 3; Lincoln, April 17-May 1; Guyhirn, May 8-22.
Messrs. McRostie and Canning, Ayrshire Christian Union, April 5, Kelso, N.B.
Mr. E. P. Telford, Cross-street, Islington, N., to April 7; Gainsborough, April 10-21.
Mr. Josiah Nix, Devonport, to April 4; Old Market-square, Bristol, April 8; Nottingham, 9-11.
Sergeant Pullinger, April 10, Soldiers' Home, Winchester; April 13, The Forge, Forest Hill; April 17, Gospel Hall, Weybridge; April 24, Lyonsdowne Hall, New Barnet.

Personalia.

Miss C. M. S. Lowe, known and beloved of many for her faithful work both in India and in East London, would highly esteem in increasing weakness the prayers of the Lord's children on her behalf.

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan is, we are glad to announce, so far restored as to be able to resume his ordinary work; and, as will be seen from our report on page 12, to complete his lectures on "God's Methods with Man."

Rev. J. T. Mateer's health having been greatly re-established during his sojourn at the antipodes, he purposes returning to England, arriving in April. He may be addressed, care of Mr. Josh. Pewtress, 77, Sotheby-road, Highbury, N.

Mr. George Clarke has undertaken, in addition to his own work, the Editorship of The Home Magazine (1d. weekly. Newnes, Ltd.), in which he hopes to find an extended sphere of Christian usefulness. This will in no way interfere with his mission engagements. The new venture will make its first appearance on April 20.

Rev. F. B. Meyer was warmly welcomed at the Central Noon Meeting, Aldersgate-street, on Monday. Giving a résumé of his late tour in the United States, he dwelt with special thankfulness on the great gatherings of ministers which he had been privileged to lead in Chicago, Philadelphia, and other great cities, the results of which eternity alone would reveal in revived and reanimated service, and in an intenser consecration to the great work of winning souls to Christ.

HOME.

The voice of God has spoken to many hearts and homes in the severe gale of last week. We hear of many casualties to shipping round our coasts, and much damage inland.

As a memorial to her uncle, the late Earl of Shaftesbury, Miss Ashley, of Dorchester, has presented to the Dorchester Workhouse a new chapel for the use of the inmates.

The latest bulletins issued concerning the health of Mr. Gladstone show that he is slightly improving. In many churches and chapels prayer was offered on Sunday for his recovery.

Forty-five fishermen were drowned in the storm in the North Sea last week.—"Lifeboat Saturday" is fixed for May 14th. It is hoped the appeal will produce larger results than last year.

There does not seem much enthusiasm amongst farmers in the proposal to cultivate flax which Lord Bathurst is seeking to promote. Yet it might relieve in some degree agricultural depression.

In memory of their father, Mr. A. Oates Wilkinson, the Misses Wilkinson laid the foundation stone of the Missions to Seamen Church at Poplar. The building will be for the exclusive use of sailors of all nationalities.

The report of the Industrial Farm at Duxhurst says, "100 patients have passed through our hands. Theories have crystallised into principles, and experiments have become practical certainties."

A private Members' Bill to sanction the marriage of Nonconformists in England, Wales, and the Channel Islands in their places of worship without the compulsory attendance of the Registrar has passed second reading.

We sincerely hope that another labour war will be averted, but a deadlock is imminent between the South Wales and Monmouthshire miners and the coal owners. The "sliding scale" in relation to wages is the point of dispute.—The Midland Railway goodsmen at Leeds are also contemplating "coming out."

The missionary exhibition, opened at the Paddington Baths on Tuesday, promises to be in every way a successful function. Owing to the number of exhibits, it has been found necessary to limit them to the Church of England societies.

A satisfactory report of the recent crusade among the men of London against gambling, intemperance, and impurity has been presented to the committee. Dr. Parker advocates the formation of a league of laymen for the social and religious betterment of London.

The new annexe of the Central London Ophthalmic Hospital has been opened by the Lady Mayoress. On an average 26,000 cases have been treated annually.—The Passmore Edwards Cottage Hospital at Acton will be opened by Mrs. Creighton, who will be accompanied by her husband, the Bishop of London.

At a conference of representatives of London local authorities, at the Mansion House, a resolution was adopted in favour of the acquisition by the Government of the Crystal Palace as a permanent place of instruction and recreation. We should like to see opportunities for the sale of strong drink curtailed.

The Browning settlement at Walworth (Rev. F. H. Stead) has done excellent work amongst the poor during the last three years. Besides Gospel and temperance services for men, women, and children, the medical mission had given 2,500 free consultations and there had been an increase of 1,000 clients seeking the aid of their "poor man's lawyer."

There are over 6000 volumes in circulation by Gardners' Trust for the Blind, amongst the blind poor in London. What a blessing these books must be to these sufferers.—A gracious and unpretentious mission work is done by a Gateshead young lady, who reads to blind people and guides them to places of worship on Sundays and Wednesday nights.

Lord Wolseley declared at the Royal United Service Institution that "our Line, notwithstanding all the curious criticisms that had recently been passed upon it, formed the finest body of men representing any nation in the world."—A protest has been made by the National Liberal Reform Union against the "wild, wanton, and perilous growth of expenditure on the Army and Navy," which should be circulated widely.

The practical work of the London School Board was pleasantly recognised by Lady Reay when she distributed prizes to distinguished pupils at the annual exhibition of drawings, needlework, cookery, etc., executed at the various schools under the Board.—Sir John Lubbock's motion in the House of Commons for the assimilation of the English Education Code to the treatment of "class and special subjects," adopted in Scotland should meet with the support of both political parties.

Charitable Donations.—£20,000 has been bequeathed to trustees to found a Barker Collegiate School by the late Mr. P. Egerton Barker, of Nantwich. Other £4500 have been left to charitable purposes.—Over £7000 have been received for the Duchess of Teck Memorial.—Three further sums of £100 each to the maintenance fund of the London Hospital.—£100 from Mr. Walter Morrison, M.P., to the Irish Distressed Ladies' Fund.—£2000 to the Reedham Orphanage, subscribed at annual dinner.

FOREIGN.

An Anglo-American Chamber of Conference has been inaugurated at Brussels.

The Pennsylvanian railway station at Jersey City has been totally destroyed by fire. The damage is estimated at £4,000,000.

The frontier dispute between Chile and the Argentine Republic is likely to be settled shortly. Each country will submit a boundary line.

The school of embroidery in Athens, established for the relief of Greek refugees, has sent some of its work to Messrs. Liberty, Regent-street, where it is exhibited for sale.

The announcement will be received with much satisfaction that the French Foreign Minister has stated that England and France are on the way to an agreement.

The Soudan.—Skirmishing by the Anglo-Egyptian force has resulted in the Dervish cavalry being driven back.

Crete.—Count Goluchowski has informed the ther interested Powers that the Austrian contingent f troops will be recalled from the island about the middle of April.

Thessaly.—The peasants are gradually returning to the villages which escaped destruction, but half the province of Thessaly remains unsown, and few of the people have been able to keep their livestock.

Transvaal.—Judge Ameshoff, who has resigned his judgeship, finds it impossible to remain on the bench after the "outrage perpetrated on the sacred office of the chief justice" in the dismissal of Mr. Kotze.

America and Spain.—The anxiety and tension of last week has been eased by the well considered action of President McKinley on the report upon the Maine disaster. Spain seems wisely disposed to make suitable concessions to the claims of the U.S. on Cuban and other matters.

Uganda.—Major Macdonald says in a recent letter, "I need hardly mention that the present military operations are quite different from an ordinary campaign in Uganda, as our very existence, whether Government officials, missionaries, or traders, depends on our quelling this mutiny." The services of missionaries have had to be requisitioned.

Turkey.—Religious considerations preclude the Porte from obstructing Mohammedan privileges. France and Russia have prohibited them in view of the plague.—The Russian Government has settled the Turkish indemnity difficulty to the Sultan's satisfaction.—As a result of a recent irade 300 men, women, and children have returned to their homes in Constantinople. This bespeaks more generous treatment of these persecuted Christians.—The Young Turkey party are about to inaugurate an era of revolution in this troubled country.

The Far East.—China finds itself quite unable to resist Western aggression, and has agreed to Russia's demands, which include a lease of Port Arthur and Ta-lien-wan as an open port for twenty-five years, and certain railway concessions.—The Chinese loan has been largely over-subscribed in Germany.—In connection with the recent sacking of the American Methodist Mission, the Chinese Militia have so far prevented the execution of the sentence against the murderer.—A vote of £300,000 has been submitted to the Berlin Federal Council for Harbour Works and Fortifications at Kiao-Chau. The Russians are busy erecting buildings at Port Arthur.—The Japanese Government has devoted 193 million yen to the building of new warships between 1895 and 1905.—Developments are so rapid that the events of the next few days will be watched with much interest. British warships at Hong Kong are to steam northwards. A new Chinese treaty port will be opened at Funning-fu, in the south, about 480 miles north of Hong Kong.

Young Abstainers' Union.—The spring conference was held on Wednesday week (23rd), at Exeter Hall, and the attendance was unusually large. The chair was occupied by the president, Mr. F. F. Buxton, J.P. A paper full of useful suggestions was read by Dr. Gardener, on "How Seniors may help Juniors," and a resolution in favour of Sunday Closing was proposed by Mr. Anderson, and seconded by Mr. Simonds.

The Temperance World.

It is a significant fact that 25,000 gallons of whisky were sent from a Banff distillery to a Leith firm one day last week. The revenue will receive £15,000 for duty payable on this consignment.

Baillie Pollard stated in his evidence before the Licensing Commission, that there is a growing disregard among Edinburgh children for parental authority, and that Edinburgh has the largest proportion of juvenile drunkenness in any city in Scotland.

The coming of age of the West London Band of Hope Union was celebrated by a crowded and interesting meeting held in Chelsea Town Hall. Canon Fleming, president of the Union, occupied the chair. The twenty-first annual report, as submitted by Mr. Marston, the hon. secretary, was a record of good and successful work.

The United Kingdom Alliance writes:—"The triennial election of Boards of Guardians in London will take place on Monday, April 4th. It is indisputable that the liquor traffic is a great factor in the production of pauperism, and, therefore, no person who is engaged in the promotion of that traffic can be regarded by social reformers as a suitable member of any Board of Guardians, and any such person, whether seeking re-election, or as a new candidate, should be actively opposed. Other candidates should be asked to promote the exclusion of intoxicating liquors from the ordinary dietary of the inmates and officials of the institutions.

The third annual report of the London United Temperance Council showing that unceasing activity has marked the year. Conferences have been held in nearly every district of the Metropolis upon important questions of the day, viz., "Prohibition of the sale of drink to children" and the "Sunday Closing of Public-houses." Signatures to memorials on the first-named subject are being secured with a view to presentation to licensing justices. The applications for new licences at the licensing sessions had greatly taxed the resources of the Licence Department. It had aimed at opposing all new actions by stimulating local actions; giving advice and assistance whenever sought.

A circular, signed by Dr. Norman Kerr, states that the British Medical Association, the Society for the Study of Inebriety, and the Homes for Inebriates' Association, strongly advocate:—(1) Power to substitute curative and reformative treatment of criminal inebriate offenders for their existing ineffective imprisonment in gaol; (2) power to seclude non-criminal habitual drunkards, with due regard to the "liberty of the subject," in special curative institutions; (3) curative seclusion, at the public charge, for poor habitual drunkards; (4) appearance of an inebriate desirous of admission to, and detention in, a retreat, before one justice or other authority, instead of before two justices, as at present.

Experiments comparing the children in ten families addicted to the use of alcohol with those in ten temperate families, show the following results:—

	In Alcoholic Families.	In Temperate Families.
Children	57	61
Deformed	10	2
Idiotic	6	0
Epileptic and choreic	6	0
Unhealthy	25	3
Normal	10	50

The undoubted superiority of the lives of total abstainers over those of non-abstainers, is shown by the following figures just published by the Sceptre Life Association. Mortality experience for the year 1897:—

	Expected deaths.	Actual deaths.	Percentage.
General Section	128	85	66·41
Temperance Section	88	45	51·14

That the favourable mortality is not confined to the past year is shown by the results for the preceding thirteen years, 1884-1896.

	Expected deaths.	Actual deaths.	Percentage.
General Section	1399	1131	80·84
Temperance Section	744	432	58·05

Figures with a similar significance have been presented by the Scottish Temp. Life Assurance Co.

Dartford Town Mission.—Mr. W. Howe, of 93, Great Queen-street, New Town, has seen twenty-eight years of service as a missionary in Dartford. His late helper, Mr. R. Marchant, who took a deep interest in the spiritual and temporal condition of the poor, has been "called home," and Mrs. Eidd kindly consented to take up the work. The two cottage services, held every week, are evidently appreciated, and have proved to be the means of much blessing. House-to-house visitation has afforded real insight into the needs of soul and body; and the relief of the deserving poor accomplished by the help of the mission funds, and by gifts of coal tickets and disused clothing, has made the glad tidings of salvation all the more acceptable.

Notes and Comments

NO thoughtful man can fail to see that the Empire is just now passing through what is probably the most serious crisis since the days of Napoleon. On every side serious and important matters are pressing upon Government, any one of which may lead to an outbreak of war with more than one great European Power. Meantime, our prestige was never lower, and we are held in contempt among the Continental nations. Our Government has been worsted in Madagascar, Siam, Tunis, West and South Africa and China; our possessions in India have been devastated by famine and plague; our recent campaign on the frontier has been a serious blow to our national pride; while at home we are rent and torn by labour wars and strikes! Surely all these things are not accidental, nor are they the fault of the Government. May not the true explanation of all these troubles and loss of prestige be found in this—that God, for our national sins, is angry with us as a people?

Various correspondents attribute this to various specific evils: the idolatry of Popery, our traffic in drink here and abroad, in opium, our treatment of native races, our Sabbath desecration. Whether it be any or all of these and many other iniquities, it behoves God's children everywhere to take up the attitude of the prophets of old, and confess personal sins and those of the nation. It seems almost as if nothing short of a crushing disaster, a hostile invasion, or an awful famine through the blockade of our coasts after a signal naval defeat, will bring proud England to her knees. The Almighty can as easily cast her down as He set her up. Has the nation lost its belief in the efficacy of prayer? If so, she will soon lose her "prestige" among the nations.

Meantime our eyes look upward as we wait for the Lord from heaven.

The light of this truth falls upon the chaos and unrest of our age—arming of nations, gathering of men to certain points, mutual distrust, and strange rumours—signs that the King is at the door. Man is failing in governmental power; and the hope of the world is that Jesus will come to rule within the lines of his own royal policy. Once take firm hold of this great truth of the coming of the King, it affords a bright outlook along every avenue of life and brings gladness to the weary heart.—Rev. G. Campbell Morgan; see p. 11.

The whole nation is deeply moved by the serious and painful illness which has fallen on Mr. Gladstone. The veteran statesman's sufferings are borne with the spirit that should characterise a true Christian. We have differed fundamentally from some of his ecclesiastical leanings, but all who have followed his splendid career must allow its high stand for moral principle and disinterested regard for the well-being of the people. It is very comforting to hear that in the midst of his anguish, and in full view of the inevitable end, his frame of mind is one of "serene joy." This spectacle of Christian resignation and faith is being watched with admiration by the whole civilised world. Even the French Temps is constrained to express its feelings in such words as these :—

What a glorious close of a glorious day! Gladstone was always a fervent Christian. He believes, loves, hopes, and waits. A whole people—indeed, a world—watches with loving sympathy his last combat. How forget all that he has accomplished in his public life of sixty years? From the hearts of peoples who owe their salvation to Mr. Gladstone, or who looked to him for deliverance, now rise to Heaven with earnest prayers, hymns of gratitude. The noble statesman must find consolation in knowing that not a single former foe now withholds from him the tribute of his admiration. Hostility is transformed into affection and tender affection. He is watched with loving hearts by all he has helped in his painful ascent of the Via Dolorosa.

These sentiments will evoke a loud echo, even though the modes of expression may not please us all.

It would be an act worthy of a philanthropist for some influential advocate to intervene between the miners and their employers in connection with the threatened strike in the South Wales coal districts. A prolonged struggle is near at hand unless wise councils can be made to prevail. We dread another industrial war for the men's sake as well as for that of the country. Any block in so important an industry as that of coal-mining affects so many trades which are dependent upon the supply of fuel they can rely upon. The sliding scale is the difficulty again.

The recent debate on the Prisons Bill showed that there is ample room for reform in the treatment of all classes of criminals under detention, without falling into the extreme of making prison life too comfortable. The notion that punishment should be purely vindictive is slowly giving way to the principle that it should aim at being as far as possible remedial. That a wrong-doer should suffer is an axiom of the moral sense as well as the legal code; but that his sufferings should be such as to embitter him against society is a mere relic of barbarism, and tends to defeat the highest end of punishment. The treatment which the Bill before the House received from all parties shows that there is a deep conviction that much may yet be done, especially in the case of political prisoners, to predispose them to a law-abiding temper on their release. In this direction we are moving towards completing the work of reform initiated by John Howard long ago.

During the past few years we have several times taken the opportunity of pointing out the desirability of having some local voluntary oversight of our convict-prisons. The Bill now before Parliament proposes to assign unofficial visiting committees to them. Perhaps the law-makers may come to see that it would even pay to allow Christian men and women, always, of course, properly accredited, to visit the unhappy inmates and seek to make Christians of them. The period of shame and punishment is often, especially in first cases, the time of hope, if only there is some loving friend at hand to make the most of it.

Both in this country and in the United States a strong party has been clamouring for decided measures by their respective Governments. Lord Salisbury has been assailed because he has not stood in the way of Russia in the Far East, and President McKinley because he has not gone to war with Spain. The men in power seem to have some sense of responsibility, and we trust that this may confirm them to the end, and enable them to avert the dreadful appeal to arms. These are occasions when statesmen specially need the sympathy and prayers of the lovers of peace. We trust that the policy of both Premiers may be vindicated by results.

The "scramble for China" is proceeding apace, and this country has demanded a naval base at Wei-Hai-Wei by way of "compensation" for the encroachments of other Powers. It is a sorry spectacle from a moral point of view, and shows how far behind the standard of private morals that of international politics still lingers. There is no country in Europe that has any right to an inch of foothold in China, and yet because one Christian Power has started the partition of that land all the others cheerfully follow suit, and make "claims" of their own. Our own conduct in other parts of the earth takes away the smallest right of criticism of either Russia or Germany. It is some consolation that the Prime Minister seems firm in resisting the pressure of the Jingo party to precipitate this country into war on the question; and also that this Western aggression may end in still further opening the East to missionary enterprise.

A remarkable sermon was preached last week in Mayfair by Canon Scott-Holland. Among other things, the preacher declared that we are only saved from revolution and civil war because a certain number of the privileged classes hold to the moral law, and act justly to the "have-nots." Otherwise there could be no issue but ruin. As for the foreign outlook it is equally serious.

England was more and more implicated in the world-wide diplomacy of foreign Powers, with whose unmitigated selfishness one was astounded. They openly declared that self-interest alone dictated their policy. The outlook in Europe never presented so wholly an un-Christian spectacle since the days of Constantine. Even in mediæval days, peace, and not war, was regarded as the normal condition of men. Now nations were watching one another like wild beasts in a jungle, and Christian Europe had armed itself in defiance of everything which Christ came to teach. Blood and iron rule; huge camps and seas, crowded with horrible ships of war, met the eye at every turn. Men scrambled for land, and the question was who should be first in the race. Are we to be swept away in this Pagan scramble?

If it be, as the Canon holds, that a race of men with weaker convictions and impoverished consciences is succeeding to public office, may not this be, in some part, attributed to the blight of agnosticism which has passed over the land? Men without faith are men without strong convictions and regnant consciences. They fail at critical times, and generally have a chilling effect on the spirits of their comrades. It is easy to understand the passion of the closing words of the sermon :—

At such a time how sad if the English Church swam with the tide and amused herself by deriding the Nonconformist conscience. It might be narrow, pedantic, and limited, but at least it was a conscience. Let the Church, the natural champion of a public conscience, have one more true to nature, but not less defiant of the world and not less conscious of her responsibility to God.

If, however, the English Church obeys this call to have a conscience, it also must be prepared to meet the same epithets from outsiders—"narrow, pedantic, and limited."

The Archdeacon of Manchester will probably be severely criticised for some of his views upon "A Democratic Church in a Democratic State," as expounded by him in a powerful discourse last week. But there are few earnest students of present-day problems from the Christian standpoint who will not agree with Dr. Wilson when he says :—

It is not machinery that is wanted; it is men. If a prophetic voice could once more be heard in the Church, calling into life the real but latent religious power and enthusiasm of the people, speaking fearlessly, truthfully, "with authority, and not as the scribes"—fired with the grace of Christ, and the love of God, and the fellowship of the Spirit—then we should not find the laity hang back from their share of work. There will be interest enough when there is an intensely real thing to be interested in. It is not democratic machinery, it is prophetic men we want. And for this we must look to the Spirit of Truth.

The term "democratising the Church" will no doubt offend many, but if it means no more, in effect, than to adapt methods to the needs of men little fault can be found with it.

There is another thought in our minds when we speak of democratising the Church. We mean adapting our methods, our services, our institutions to the needs of our time in town and country. Our matins and evensong are not adapted to win souls, to evangelise, to rouse; they are a soothing, comforting, elevating influence on our regular worshippers. They are as unsuitable for the purpose of converting the careless and arresting the godless as the offer to a man drowning in the canal of some food if he will come ashore. He wants a rope, and you offer him food. Yes, we do need to democratise our Church and adapt it to the needs of our people. The Wesleyans have, in this sense, democratised their Church; they preach in mission halls; they use any and all methods; they do offer a rope. God bless them for it. I do desire that we could do the same, and help their work of evangelising the great towns.

The Archdeacon urges further the recognition that these mission services, this democratic evangelisation, is already ours, if we will but shake hands with Wesleyanism and acknowledge it as being what it is—our own evangelistic daughter. The truest democratic spirit in our own Church is ready to give an ungrudging welcome to all such work in the name of Christ, both theirs and ours. It is not true democracy to insist that every religious body shall equally devote itself to every section of the work of the Church. A true democracy will recognise differences of administration, but the same Lord. A democratic Church in a democratic State means the mutual co-operation and respect, even the federation, of all who, under various administrations, are doing the work of Christ, and stirring the religious life of the people. Democracy means union, co-operation, not competition; mutual respect, not mutual snarls.

It is for the leaders of the Church to instigate such reforms. The laity will not be slow to follow and support them.

In view of the perpetual rumours of war that keep agitating the public mind, Mr. W. Le Queux's article in The Woman at Home on "How War Affects Women" has special interest and force. The author details a long list of the inevitable sufferings that fall on the weaker sex under the terrible scourge of war. Loss of their dear ones in battle, following a long strain of uncertainty as to their fate; loss of comforts and sudden lapse into poverty and want; possible starvation, outrage, and massacre in case of invasion; these are but a few outstanding possibilities of war as regards women. These contingencies have never been brought home by experience or observation to the present generation of Englishwomen; it is well that they should be impressed upon their imagination in some other way. The cry for war would soon die out if they were realised in their true significance.

In the April issue of his paper, The Catholic, Rev. Thomas Connellan, gives particulars of another attempt upon his personal character. This time the attack has taken the form of promiscuous mud-throwing on the part of a Canon of the Romish Church at Bolton. Having nothing to fear from the most searching scrutiny of his career, Mr. Connellan promptly intimated to his traducer that unless he published a full and unequivocal apology a writ would issue. Without delay the priest withdrew all charges and insinuations, and paid the legal costs.

This is the third time Mr. Connellan has challenged the agents of Rome in public court, and on each occasion he has come off victorious. In matters of doctrine Rome is "a refuge of lies," as any honest examination of its story must prove. It is not astonishing, therefore, that some of the devotees of the corrupt system should say and write things in harmony with their corrupt creed and principles. We want more men like Mr. Connellan, who not only "gives none occasion to the enemy to blaspheme," but makes falsehood and railing recoil speedily upon the heads of those who use such weapons to the discredit of the Evangelical faith and of men who are set for its defence.

Dr. Horton's celebrated sermon on "Romanism and National Well-being," summarised some weeks ago in these columns, has roused a great deal of interest, and brought forth an answer which is at least instructive from the other side. At a recent meeting in the Vestry Hall at Hampstead, Fr. Luke Rivington, a Romanist, who is an ex-Episcopalian, stated that Under Protestantism you always get persecution. Protestantism has been the great persecutor of the human race.

He objected to Spain and Italy being called Roman Catholic countries; "their benighted condition was altogether due to the corrupting influence of Freemasonry." It is clear that in this way anything could be proved to the satisfaction of those who go to history with a biassed mind. But common-sense cannot be put aside so easily, and Fr. Rivington's remarks brought more amusement than conviction to the audience. Dr. Horton was equal to the occasion on Sunday evening last, when he delivered a masterly defence of Protestantism, which has meant so much, and has been so significant in the history of the world. This Protestantism which the Romanists despise is the secret of our liberties, which made our country great. The attempt to unprotestantise us is not only an attempt upon our spiritual liberty, but a conspiracy against our national life itself.

Meanwhile the stream of conversions from Romanism continues in France, and one of the recent converts, M. Paul Percheron, writing to the Chretien Français, gives his experience of Catholicism in these incisive words :—

I have known and borne the torments and combats which are the history of all cloistered saints. How is one to endure the arbitrary and often contradictory decisions of men who pretend to have the Divine Spirit, but whose human pettiness with all its caprices and varieties is only too visible! How can one hear, without anguish, these thousand decrees which come from sources so multiple and diverse; those of Rome with her congregations, of the Pope with his Encyclicals and decrees, the innumerable councils with their innumerable canons; those of the "holy rule," of the superior, the confessor, the director? One is to obey; salvation and perfection are in obedience. And so prescriptions rain from every quarter on one poor little human will, whose every movement and every minute are thus solicited and worked upon; pulled often, in fact, in exactly opposite ways! What conscience that has any scrupulousness or delicacy is equal to such a position?

Over against the vague generalities and warped historical judgments of the English convert to Romanism, these confessions by one who has seen that Church from the inside speak for themselves.

We commend to all who are interested in missionary labour in China the important letter from Dr. Griffith John (see p. 12); and especially the following statement :—

We need union. The Protestant Missions in China must be one. We are all standing in the presence of one common foe—a strong, watchful, and implacable foe. I refer to the Roman Catholic Church in China. The heathen in these parts have practically ceased to trouble us. The opposition now comes from the priests and proselytes of Rome. During these two years they have given us endless trouble in Central China, and such has been the experience of other missionaries in other parts of the empire. So long as the work moves on slowly, they are comparatively quiescent; but no sooner does it show signs of a strong and vigorous life than they are up in arms.

This experience is not confined even to China; missionaries in many lands tell the the same story. This adds the greater weight to Dr. John's plea :—

If we unite our forces, and hold together, we shall triumph; if we do not, we shall be beaten, and beaten ignominiously. Why should we not unite our forces, and be one? The points of difference between us are few and insignificant, whilst the points of agreement are many and vital. I would not abolish denominationalism. Let that stand. It is not uniformity we want, but unity, and we want to hit upon some plan by which our unity can be shown forth in all its strength and beauty. I wish we could have in Central China a united chapel, which would hold a congregation of from 1500 to 2000 people, and in which united meetings might be regularly held. This would be a step in the right direction.

"The Cantonments Acts" and "Health of the Troops in India" are euphemisms for a great sin, accompanied by desolation and sorrow on a large scale. Oh, the shame of it! But what of the pain and grief that lie behind the wickedness and social ruin! The story is told in the language of tears in a little book entitled The Queen's Daughters in India, by Elizabeth W. Andrew and Katharine C. Bushnell. (1s. Morgan & Scott.)

The book describes a barbarian injustice and sin in the language of human pity and righteousness; and when, at length, public opinion is harmonised with Christian principles, it will become impossible for such a condition of things to be maintained. The womanhood of India is silent under a great oppression. The authors of this book speak for the speechless, and, assuredly, they will not speak in vain.

Rev. Dr. Barrett, of Norwich, whose father, Rev. W. G. Barrett, laboured for many years among the coloured people of Jamaica, has sent us, in conjunction with Rev. W. J. Woods, a touching appeal on behalf of the native churches in that island, which they visited two years ago. These churches, founded by the London Missionary Society, had become almost self-supporting, but they have been overtaken by financial difficulties, which have placed them and their missionaries, at least for the time being, in great straits. The Baptist churches of the island are also involved in conditions of distress. Jamaica itself is a very beautiful island. Rev. J. G. Greenhough, of Leicester, who visited it a few years ago, holds the religious life of the people to be in some respects above the average religious life at home.

God's Methods with Man:

Past, Present, and Future.

By Rev. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN,
New Court Chapel, Tollington Park, N.

IX.—The Purifying Hope.

Many persons will be asking, "What is the practical value of the teaching in this whole series of addresses?" The answer will be found in 1 John ii. 28; iii. 3 (R.V.). Inspired truth is not a commodity to be stored, but a purifying and sanctifying force designed to bring men into harmony with the will of God. It is of the utmost importance that we devoutly, humbly, and yet earnestly, search out the will of God in the truth of God. John, who had such clear vision of the affinity between the Master and the believer, says that the hope of the Church is to be the reason for, and the power of, purity of individual life in its members.

This hope is a confident anticipation of good things to come, with the setting of life and purpose toward them. The return of our Lord is uniformly regarded by the apostles as the hope of the Church, though they may treat of it under different aspects, such as the reward of workers, the destruction of evil, meeting with loved ones gone before, and the inexpressible delight of the Lord's presence. For instance, in Rom. viii. 17-25, the completion of redemption is regarded as the hope of the Church. Titus ii. 11-13 is a more direct example. Heb. x. 19-23 leads me to remark that the translation in the Authorised Version, "Let us hold fast the profession of our faith," is inexplicable, when the Greek word there used is rendered hope in every other New Testament passage. Faith has been mentioned in verse 22. In its fulness we are to draw near into the Holy Place. It is the confession of our hope that we are to hold fast, and the nature of that hope is evident from v. xxv. 35-37. The coming of the Blessed One is the hope which we are to hold fast, as we come to God in fulness of faith. 1 Pet. i. 3-5 describes the hope of the Church as a salvation to be revealed when Jesus Christ Himself shall come.

Reverting to the verses with which we started, an important difference between the versions appears, inasmuch as the hope is "set on Him" (1 John iii. 3); and the pronoun should have a capital letter, for it refers to Jesus Christ as the revelation of the Father (v. 1). Then, this hope "maketh not ashamed."

luring us to destruction; but being set upon God rather than upon men and their shifting policies, it must find realisation in the coming again of Him whom the heavens have received for a season.

If it be indeed true that Jesus is coming, and if, in the wisdom of God, the date of his return has been absolutely hidden from man, how should we live as those to whom God has given that coming as the supreme and only hope of life? The question answers itself. First, this is a purifying hope, because it sets the attitude of the believer's life toward Christ. Through all the passing years I am to wait for Him, expecting that, at any moment, above the din and strife of the days, I may hear his call. Throughout these addresses I talk to Christians, taking it for granted that we are beyond the sordid view which merely minds earthly things, yet our hope may be set upon an opening for ourselves in the mission field or for the service of humanity at home. In the mind of God, however, there is but one attitude for the believer—that of the pilgrim, with loins girt and staff in hand, waiting for the break of day in the coming of the King. Do not misunderstand me. If we are truly waiting for Jesus, we shall not be careless of those for whom He died; but, as far as individual life is concerned, the Coming One should fill the heart's vision through all the days and moments.

HOW WILL THIS AFFECT OUR BEHAVIOUR?

We are to serve our generation, live in our homes, do our business, and take our recreation, in readiness for the call of the King at any moment. Somebody says, "That will make a very strained sort of life." I think not. John Wesley was once asked, "Supposing you knew Christ would come at twelve to-night—what would you do?" Said he, "I should preach this evening, retire to rest, fall fast asleep, and wait for Him to wake me." But you say to me, "Would you like Jesus to come and find you in the home, playing with your children?" Why not? If I had done nothing else all day, that would be worth doing in order to keep hold upon the hearts of my children for Christ.

When Jesus went from earth, the clouds at which his disciples gazed were riven, and an angel appeared saying, "Why stand ye looking into heaven? This Jesus...shall come in like manner"; that is, in the clouds, not merely in a spiritual sense. What were they to do? To look for Him from the midst of loyal service. Alas! that some who profess to believe in the coming of the Lord, should give up all the things which they are intended to sanctify by their presence in the world. To spend the days in star-gazing is to assume a false attitude. I am to be busy about my appointed task; to influence my day and generation as far as in me lies, by a reproduction in the power of the Spirit of the pure character of Jesus Christ; and all the while I am to have a listening ear for the Master's call, and the longing to welcome Him when He comes.

This hope also lights up circumstances. He who believes that truth, and is entrusted by God with the great responsibity of riches, uses them for the Lord who is coming. But are your days filled with stress of poverty and necessity for careful planning in regard to means? It is only till He come. If the light of Christ's coming falls upon my poverty it is easy to bear; if it falls upon friendships it shows their true character; and when it shines upon graves where our sacred dust rests, how beautiful they become. We shall meet in "the morning,"

> Some from earth, from glory some;
> Severed only till He come.

The bright rays of this truth fall, for me, upon some of the most perplexing problems of the Book of God and of the times in which we live, giving the only light I can find. In my New Testament I discover the election which is of God; and I cannot conceive how anyone can read there without doing so. I find the free-will of man and the sovereignty of God both distinctly taught. These things were long a source of perplexity to me. But the view, which I strongly hold, that Christ is coming for his Church—which body does not exhaust the area of his work upon the cross—which is an elect company out of the multitude of the saved, has solved for me a most difficult problem. I believe that "election," wherever found in the Epistles, refers not to salvation but to the Church; and I hold most tenaciously that there will be great multitudes saved by the finished work of Christ who are not members of that sacred body, the Church of the first-born.

Christ's coming throws light upon other problems in the Book, in current theological thought, and in present-day life. How can we find comfort in missionary enterprise unless we believe in Christ's coming and the more blessed dispensation which lies beyond? Let the societies, this May, add to their statistics the multiplication, within a year, of the heathen in a ratio far exceeding the additions to the Church of Jesus Christ; and the fact that the proportion of Christians to the mass of mankind is smaller to-day than it was fifty years ago. Along such a vista of missionary work God appears as being beaten out of his own world! When, however, we come to see the King doing work which is preparatory to his coming, gathering out his Church, and judging the heathen by the light they have, when the ancient people of God shall become the messengers of the King to all peoples, then have we hope for the nations of the earth and for the ages which lie ahead.

The light of this truth falls upon the chaos and unrest of our age—arming of nations, gathering of men to certain points, mutual distrust, and strange rumours—signs that the King is at the door. Man is failing in governmental power; and the hope of the world is that Jesus will come to rule within the lines of his own royal policy. Once take firm hold of this great truth of the coming of the King, it affords a of life and brings gladness to the weary heart.

Our responsibility is marked in the passage to which I have more than once referred—1 John ii., 28, "And now, my little children, abide in Him; that, if He shall be manifested, we may have boldness and not be ashamed before Him at his coming." The if casts no doubt upon his appearing, but is indicative of a coming at any time. One of two evident possibilities is that Christians may be ashamed at their Lord's coming, but in regard to the other, even the word boldness (in place of confidence, A.V.) by no means conveys the whole force of the original. The idea is that we may have the freedom of speech which comes of the perfect familiarity of friendship. May God help us so to abide in Christ that when He comes we may not feel the awkwardness which arises from the constraint of being strangers to Him, but that we may say, "This is our Master, we have known Him by faith, and now we see Him. We have poured into his listening ear the tale of our sorrows in the day of mystery and darkness, and now we may talk with Him face to face."

Mark the other possibility, "... and not be shamed from Him at his coming," for we reject the preposition before. The picture is that of persons so conscious of unreadiness that they dare not face Him. The root meaning of the word ashamed is disgraced, so that it is allowable to read "and not be disgraced from Him at his coming." I repeat, this is not addressed to the outside world but to the believer in Christ. In that verse there is a very clear division which, to my mind, answers the question whether believers may not pass through the great tribulation. Some of them will be ready to enjoy freedom of access to Christ and familiarity with Him; but the "little children" of God who have been living only in the elements of the world, will be disgraced at his appearing.

What are we to do, as Christian men and women, in the light of these two possibilities? Hear those two passages from the Epistle, as my closing words: "My little children, abide in Him"; "everyone that hath this hope set on Him purifieth himself." Those who are abiding in Christ here on earth, who purify themselves as He is pure, separated ones cut clean adrift from the ungodliness of the age, loyal of heart to the King in the days of waiting for Him—these are the men and women who shall have boldness in the day of his coming. Who shall draw the line? I do not; but, taking the words of sacred writ as they stand, I learn that some of God's own children will have boldness, while others will be disgraced at Christ's appearing. I understand, further, that the condition of boldness at his coming is, that I live in his will, in unbroken communion with Himself, separated from the world, and sanctified by his indwelling through the Holy Ghost. It is for each of us to make application of this truth in the solitude of his or her chamber. Let us depart with this solemn consideration upon our hearts, as the source of gladness—not merely as a white, purifying, searching light, but as one tinted with the roseate beams of never-dying hope.

Finland.—Rev. J. D. Kilburn writes from St Petersburg:—"I have just returned from the longest visit I have yet paid to Sordavala. It is three years since I was there last, and I am surprised and glad to see how the work is going forward. We had ten days' meetings in a large hall, and sometimes the hall was so crowded that over 200 people could not get seats. I believe I am the only Englishman who has ever preached the Gospel at Sordavala. There are three Lutheran pastors in the church there, and they are all in hearty sympathy with evangelistic work, and attended the meetings. God's Spirit seems to be working mightily in Finland, and I feel called to try and give myself still more fully to the work there, and should be very glad of prayer for guidance, and still more for God's blessing to rest on the work and workers in Finland."

From Other Lands.

Progress in China.

By Dr. GRIFFITH JOHN, Hankow.

ONCE more we are called upon in Central China to rejoice over an immense circulation of Christian literature. The circulation of the Central China Religious Tract Society in 1897, though not quite so large as that of 1896, reached the total of 1,228,647. If we add the circulation of the National Bible Society of Scotland to that of the Tract Society, we shall find that there were sent forth from Central China during the past year more than a million and a half of Scriptures and tracts. We must think of this, not only as immense in itself, but also as covering an immense area. Our Scriptures and tracts are finding their way into every part of the Empire; and they are being read by hundreds of thousands of people. How many have been influenced by them we cannot say; but that multitudes have been more or less influenced there can be no doubt whatever.

An event of deep significance occurred during the autumn examination for the M.A. degree. At Nan-chang Fu, the capital of the Kiang-si Province, one of the questions put to the students was this: "What do you know of the re-peopling of the world by Noah and his family after the flood?" The text-book recommended was the Old Testament, and at once there was a great demand for the book. A colporteur happened to be in the city at the time, and fifty copies were sold in one day. The Bible has found its way into the Imperial palace, and copies are in circulation among the higher classes in the metropolis. The examiner who put the question possessed a copy, and had been reading it. All this is new in China. It shows one thing at least, namely, that the attitude of the official class to our Christian literature is undergoing a great and vital change.

The extension of the work into Hunan during the past year is a fact full of significance. In March and April last, Mr. Sparham and myself visited Hunan. Our chief aim in going to Hunan this time was to visit some converts at Heng-chow, and, if possible, establish a missionary station in that important city. We found Heng-chow in on account of a recent visit paid to the place by Dr. Wolfe, a German traveller, and we were compelled to beat an ignominious retreat. We were attacked furiously by the mob, and actually driven away in the midst of a perfect storm of stones. We were, however, greatly encouraged by what we saw of the converts. They clung to us in the midst of the storm, and evinced the utmost courage throughout.

Having drifted down the stream about two miles, we ordered a halt for the night. Some of the candidates were with us on board at the time, and others soon followed. The question of their baptism came up, and it was soon found that it could be solved only in one way. We suggested delay. "You see," we said, "that we cannot protect you in the event of difficulties springing up. We are driven out of the place, as you see, and we are helpless to protect ourselves. What could we do for you should an attack be made on you? Had you not better wait awhile, and seriously count the cost before taking the next step?" "We have waited long," was the reply, "and cannot wait any more. We cannot allow you to return without baptising us. We are not afraid of the consequences." After some consultation with each other, we resolved to comply with their wishes. We could not but feel that it was a brave thing on their part to identify themselves with us in the circumstances in which we were then placed. The examination over, we had a service, at which Mr. Sparham and myself preached, and at the close the rite of baptism was administered to thirteen men. It was to us joy unspeakable to admit these people into our communion. We have many Hunan men in the church, baptised at Hankow and elsewhere. But these thirteen are, so far as I am aware, the first baptisms witnessed in Hunan itself.

I felt sure that most of the thirteen would stand fire well, and that the little church planted at Heng-chow on that stormy day would take root and grow. And such has been the case. Though we were driven away, our native helpers were allowed to remain, and the work has been going on steadily ever since. In May last, Mr. Peng Lan-Seng, one of our native evangelists, was sent to Heng-chow to take charge of the work there, and to propagate the Gospel in the surrounding districts. He succeeded in renting a suitable house in one of the suburbs of Heng-chow, and in getting the prefect and the two district magistrates to issue four proclamations in favour of Christianity. He has since purchased the house. Unfortunately, the magistrate could not see his way to stamp the deed without receiving special orders from the Viceroy and the Governor of Hunan. The orders, I am glad to say, have been sent, and we are every day expecting to receive the deed, duly signed and sealed. During these months Mr. Peng has been working like an apostle in Hunan. What is the PRESENT STATE OF THINGS IN HUNAN?

In connection with the London Missionary Society there is a work going on at four important cities. At Heng-chow the chapel is opened daily for public preaching, and on Sundays some forty or fifty Christians meet regularly for worship. At Heng-shan we have another very interesting group of Christians meeting regularly for worship, and so we have at Ngan-jen and Siang-tan. Siang-tan is the great mart of China. In the south of Hunan, on the Canton border, there is a work going on in connection with the American Presbyterian Mission. In the east of Hunan, on the Kiang-si border, the Inland Mission has a station. At Chang-teh Fu, in the west, the Alliance Mission has succeeded in establishing itself. And at Lin-siang, in the north, on the Hupeh border, the American Episcopal Mission has just commenced a work. Thus there are seven spots in Hunan to-day where Christian work is being carried on by Protestant missions. That anti-foreign, anti-Christian province is opening to the Gospel; I trust the day is not far distant when it will be wide open. There is also

PROGRESS IN OTHER DIRECTIONS.

The telegraph has been successfully introduced. The line from Chang-sha, the capital, to Wuchang has been completed, and Hunan is now connected with the rest of the Empire and with the whole outer world. The electric light in Chang-sha is also an accomplished fact. Thus Hunan is moving. It is not open yet, but it is opening, undoubtedly.

The remarkable increase in church membership in Hupeh is another fact of very great interest. Speaking of the London Missionary Society I can safely say that we have not had a year so prosperous since the establishment of the mission. There were baptized in connection with the London Mission, including the thirteen baptized in Hunan, 606 persons in all. In fact, last year alone gave us more than twice as many baptisms as we had during the first nine years of the work, while during the two years 1896-1897, we had nearly as many as in the first nineteen. The accessions for last year in this province in connection with all the missions must have been considerably above a thousand, probably not far from one thousand five hundred. Surely that is something to thank God for.

There has been much sowing in the province during the past thirty-six years. The reaping time is come. What we are seeing to-day shows the folly of judging of a great spiritual work such as ours is by early appearances. People want returns for their money, and quick returns, and if they do not get them at once they growl and sneer. A flippant critic, writing of the missionary work in India, not many years since, said: "A great deal is being said by the missionaries about unseen influence—leaven, seed-sowing, and what not. For myself I want crops." Now that sounds very smart. "For myself I want crops." Wonderful! I should like to know who does not want crops! We all want crops. But the husbandman sows the seed and then "waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it until he receive the early and latter rain." The husbandman wants crops, but he does not expect to sow and reap on the same day. Though there were not a single convert in China, I should still go on ploughing and sowing, for well I know that they who sow in tears shall reap in joy. But, thank God, it is not all sowing with us in Central China now. We are a goodly harvest. Still, the reaping of the present is inseparably connected with the sowing of the past, and the one is not a whit less real or less Divine than the other.

Such is the present aspect of things in Central China. In many other parts of the Empire the outlook is equally bright. We are, I verily believe, on the eve of enormous religious changes. Never in its history has so grand a prospect been opened to Christianity in China. And what do we need now? We need faith—implicit faith in God, God's will, God's purposes, God's promises, God's faithfulness. We need the faith that will dare anything and everything in obedience to Divine command.

"A WATCHFUL, IMPLACABLE FOE."

We need union. The Protestant Missions in China must be one. We want it now for a special reason. We are all standing in the presence of one common foe—a strong, watchful, and implacable foe. I refer to the Roman Catholic Church in China. The heathen in these parts have practically ceased to trouble us. The opposition now comes from the priests and proselytes of Rome. During these two years they have given us endless trouble in Central China, and such has been the experience of other missionaries in other parts of the empire. So long as the work moves on slowly, they are comparatively quiescent; but no sooner does it show signs of a strong and vigorous life than they are up in arms. If we unite our forces, and hold together, we shall triumph; if we do not, we shall be beaten, and beaten ignominiously. Why should we not unite our forces, and be one? The points of difference between us are few and insignificant, whilst the points of agreement are many and vital. I would not abolish denominationalism. Let that stand. It is not uniformity we want, but unity, and we want to hit upon some plan by which our unity can be shown forth in all its strength and beauty. I wish we could have in Ceneral China a united chapel, which would hold a congregation of from 1500 to 2000 people, and in which united meetings might be regularly held. This would be

A STEP IN THE RIGHT DIRECTION.

I have already thrown out the suggestion, and I am hoping sincerely that my brethren of every mission will take it up.

We need courage. There is at present a rush into the church, and the work is spreading. On every hand opportunities are multiplying, new difficulties are springing up, and we often feel as if the burden were too heavy for us. The missionary who would rise to the occasion in these days in China must dismiss the word impossible from his vocabulary.

In my letter last year I called the special attention of your readers to our need of a stronger and more efficient staff of native agents. This is a pressing need still, and in order to meet it we have recently been working hard on an educational scheme, which will embrace not only a high school, but also a college for the training of teachers, preachers, evangelists, and pastors. To realise this scheme, we shall want about £1500. Some weeks since a friend was visiting Hankow. He happened to hear of our scheme, and at once gave us £300 towards the purchase of land. Having the land, our initial difficulty is over. Now for the college. Are there none among your readers who would rejoice to have an opportunity of contributing towards the erection of a college in Central China that shall be the means of supplying these two provinces, Hupeh and Hunan, with an efficient staff of native workers? I feel sure that there are not a few.

Pakhoi Medical and Leper Mission.

FROM Dr. Leonard G. Hill's medical report of this Mission in South China, connected with the Church Missionary Society, we learn that the work of 1897 was of an encouraging character. There have been more patients coming to the Hospital, and consequently more have heard the preaching. Of the thirty-one baptized, thirty were or had been patients—a fact which establishes the advantage of putting into practice the command of our Lord to preach the Gospel and to heal the sick. An incredible amount of indifference exists amongst the people generally in regard to spiritual things. Their interest is undoubtedly best aroused by showing them some special attention in the time of physical suffering. In this way the people are convinced that the missionaries come out not for gain, but because they really believe what they preach.

Armenian Refugees in Persia.

MR. E. W. Brooks, hon. treasurer of the Armenian Rescue Fund, has received important letters from the American missionary who is devoting himself to the succour of the poor Armenian and Nestorian refugees in the Oroomiah district, where they number over 6000. His words show that the money sent from Great Britain has not been spent in vain.

He writes:—"The appeals the last few days have been very pitiful; the distress is great, especially in he villages, where we have settled large numbers. In one village we have settled eighty-six families; forty of these are fairly well-off, this being their second winter here, but the rest came down last year and have nothing. They conscientiously planted the seed-wheat we gave them, even when they were in great straits for their daily food. Six families are weaving woollen jackets and supporting themselves by their sale; the men are mostly away in Russia for the winter, but will return for the harvest with their earnings. Meanwhile their families are suffering terribly from cold and hunger. To these we are giving a little flour and millet. In this village we have a school of nearly eighty pupils, and they are making remarkable progress in their simple studies.

"The demands on us are so great that our account is constantly overdrawn. The Armenian weavers, to whom we have given looms and material, were in great need, but are now doing fairly well; they can sell their products, but need ready capital for buying the raw material. Grain was so high in the fall that few could lay in a sufficient supply, and now the poor people in the villages find it harder and harder to give to the many refugee beggars who are at their doors from morning till night. They do not turn away many empty, but they give to each only a very small piece of bread. There is great lack of clothing and fuel as well as of food. In the district of Tergawer there are over 2000 refugees, for whom we have done nothing this winter; they greatly need food for themselves and fodder for the oxen we gave them last year. We have promised to help them with the next receipt of funds."

Communications to Mr. Brooks should be addressed Duvals, Grays, Essex.

In Aid of Armenia.

A HELPLESS despair is settling upon the people in many parts of Armenia. A letter from the secretary of the Friends of Armenia, 47, Victoria-street, Westminster, says:—"The present condition of the poor is worse than it has been for any time during the last eighteen months; the cause is the failure of the wheat crop. Can we not by denying ourselves some wonted luxury open the door of escape by sending bread?"

During recent weeks, Rev. Krikor Behesnilian (care of Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.) has addressed many meetings in Yorkshire in aid of his evangelistic and rescue work. The places visited include Huddersfield, Halifax, Bradford, Batley, and Leeds. By means of the collections received from the churches, and through the generosity of friends in other parts of Great Britain, Mr. Behesnilian has been enabled to send further pecuniary assistance to several native churches and destitute pastors in Marash and neighbourhood, in addition to the remittance for the maintenance of the fatherless girls under his wife's care.

Mission to Mediterranean Garrisons.—Influenced by this mission, godly soldiers are now holding forth the word of life among their comrades in Britain, while others are bearing Christian testimony with the expeditionary force up the Nile. Sailors, too, visiting Gibraltar, have been won to God; and a good measure of success has attended efforts to carry the Gospel among the 8000 Spanish navvies engaged on the Government works. A day school is open in La Linea, where the Spanish colporteur, who is also a teacher, instructs the little ones, with some fruit unto God. Work in Algeciras, under the care of Mr. and Mrs. Harris, is also encouraging. The hon. treasurer and secretary, Mrs. Todd Osborne, Rysland, Newton Mearns, N.B., says, "At the end of March I hope to go forth to Gibraltar and from there to Cairo, taking with me workers to help win for Christ our soldiers in that city of wickedness."

Chamberi Evangelical Mission.

THIS work in Madrid, under Mr. Chas. E. Faithfull, makes steady progress, although Spain is spiritually "a dry thirsty land" where the baneful influences of Romanism are felt on every hand, while freedom of action is so interfered with that men of the Nicodemus stamp are not few.

The little company of worshippers in the church has increased to over one hundred, among whom there is evident appetite for the Word of God, and consequent steadfastness and growth in grace. A special answer to prayer was the acquisition of the second part of the property on which stands the building now used exclusively as a chapel, and another occupied by the infants' school. The £350 required was lent by two friends, and it is earnestly desired to speedily return the money. It is also desirable to add a storey to each of the buildings occupied by the girls' and infants' schools respectively, the sum required for such additions being £650.

The day and Sunday schools continue to be well attended; and the senior teacher in the district called Pozas says, "The Gospel has made progress not only among the children, but also in their families. This we know by conversation with some parents who not only read God's Word in their houses, but seek to follow its precepts." As strength and time have permitted, occasional visits have been made to places, outside Madrid, where there is no stated public ministry. Mr. Faithfull's address is, Paseo de Areneros, 6 prol., Madrid.

Work for French Priests.

FOR years past our readers have followed with interest the efforts made for the shelter and instruction of French priests, who, in response to the dictates of conscience, have renounced place and position in the Church of Rome. During the last three or four years the movement has grown both in volume and interest, as men of influence and power have shaken themselves from Papal bondage and come out boldly on the side of Christ and for the primitive faith. A section of the Protestant community in France, inheriting the spirit and charity of the Huguenots, has all along shown a kindly compassion for priests desirous of breathing the air of freedom, and living in the enjoyment of Christian privileges; but at length this sympathy has widened so as to express the feeling and mind of all the Evangelical Churches in France.

This fact is the latest and most interesting in connection with the Œuvre des Prêtres Convertis, which Professor L. J. Bertrand has for years been directing with so much vigour and success. The work has undergone a reorganisation by which it receives the sanction and endorsement of pastors of all Protestant denominations—Reformed and Free, Lutheran and Methodist. Quite naturally, fresh developments are now contemplated, including a refuge for priests who wish to come out from Rome, and homes in which they may be trained while their characters are studied and their capabilities ascertained.

These and other plans are being brought before friends of the work by M. Bertrand, who is again on a brief visit to Great Britain. The stories of Bourrier, Joye, Corneloup, Bonhomme, and Philippot are part of his familiar conversation; and with Appia, Hollard, Monod, Couve, Gout, Whelpton, and Reveillaud as hearty supporters, the work is assuredly in no want of responsible friends and referees. Communications to M. Bertrand may be addressed 39, Woburn-place, Russell-square, London, W.C.

Paris City Mission.—This auxiliary to other societies, and to the churches in "the gay city," issues another annual record which makes most interesting reading. The glorious work of disseminating a pure Gospel is continued in multiform ways. Very numerous visits are paid to the homes of the people, missionary brethren are constantly preaching in Gospel halls, replacing pastors in regular services, and being called upon to speak at funerals, where large numbers of Papists have heard the doctrines of evangelical faith and hope. The workers of the mission have caused wholesome and sacred literature to penetrate into thousands of abodes where moral and intellectual counter-poison is most urgently needed. The hon. sec. for England is Mr. H. E. Weylland, 14, Nicoll-road, Harlesden, N.W.

A South African Effort.

DEVOTED native workers in connection with the Free Church of Scotland Mission in Main, Tembuland, are doing much for the progress of the Gospel. Magadule, a veteran native elder at Kidston, became anxious about a most hardened heathen man. Morning by morning he aroused his wife, Mpantsi, long before daybreak that she might join in praying for this man. Then he would set out to arouse and deal personally with him about salvation. Nor was his labour in vain, for that lost sheep was found, and is now steadily going along the right way.

Rev. D. Doig Young, who is in charge of the work, reports that he has had great cause for thankfulness on account of active, prayerful sympathetic interest shown by friends in Britain, in Africa itself, and in Victoria, Australia. While the goodness of God has been seen in provision for the needs of an extensive district, yet, where there is life there is growth, and there arises fresh needs and responsibilities.

New stations are in process of being formed, necessitating new buildings and additional paid labourers. The terrible drought following rinderpest makes a dark outlook. Mr. Young says: "Already people have approached us as to how food is to be obtained. We had to say we could not tell. We had no means wherewith to help. The answer was, 'Well, you must find food for us.' 'How do you make that out?' 'You must do what your Master tells you to do. And He finds the food.'"

Port Said "Seamen's Rest."

WE arrived at Port Said on January 29 from Malta, and as soon as we could obtain leave we went to see our friends, Mr. and Mrs. Locke, at the "Rest." We found that Mr. Locke was still away recruiting his health, but we were most heartily welcomed by Mrs. Locke and Miss Rogers.

We were glad to hear that soul-saving work had been going on among the merchant seamen. Mrs. Locke invited me to visit the ships on Sundays, and to take reading to the men. Of course I was only too glad to avail myself of the opportunity of witnessing for the Master, and have gone every Sunday, unless prevented from duty on board, and then one of my comrades has gone. The reading was most eagerly looked for, cards, etc., being thrown aside for the Word of God.

In the evenings we have gone off to ships and brought the men ashore for the meeting, afterwards seeing them safely off again. There has been quite a revival among our men since, eleven souls having sought and found the Lord, and three backsliders returned to the fold; also three merchant seamen gave their hearts to God. The "Rest" has been a great blessing to our men. There we can sit down and read or write, and what is a great thing to an English bluejacket, get a good meal, but above all hear the Word of God. Mrs. Locke and Miss Rogers have endeared themselves to the hearts of all by their kind and sympathetic manner. Our prayer on leaving Port Said is that God will give them health and strength to carry on his glorious work among the seamen.—Yours in his glad service, Fred. S. Shell, A.B.

Sad News from Brazil.

A LETTER, dated Pernambuco, February 24, received by Mr. Geo. R. Witte, who has just sailed from Lisbon for Para, for his work amongst the Indians in Central Brazil, reports the assassination of one of the best Brazilian evangelists, who was a companion to Dr. Butler and to Senhor Manuel Correio Villela. He fell as a victim in the defence of Dr. Butler, in a village called San Bento. His death took place on February 5, and on the 13th a general persecution broke out against Christians who were intimate friends of mine, who had gone to preach the Gospel at Carnaric, a city likewise situated in the central portion of Pernambuco.

Going into particulars, the correspondent says: "Their home was broken into, they were beaten and wounded, and their books and other things were burned and destroyed. The brethren are now here in Pernambuco, still sick, but grateful to God for having let them escape with their lives. Their names are: Mr. and Mrs. Kingston, Francisco Bernardo de Oliveira, a Portuguese brother, and Sr. Honorio, a Brazilian."

Our Daily Homily

SUNDAY, April 10.

"Whose image and superscription hath it?"—Luke xx. 24.

OUR Lord Himself compared men to coins. He spoke of the woman who lost one piece of silver, and searched till she had found it. The analogy might be carried out in many particulars, for as the ore passes through the crucible, and many another process, before it is stamped with the image of the sovereign, so do souls experience many fiery trials ere they can receive and keep the impression of heaven's mint, which is the face of Jesus.

Whose image dost thou bear? Is there a clear cut outline of the features of Christ, so manifest that those who touch and handle you are irresistibly reminded of Him?

Whose is thy superscription? Is A.D. there? The year in which you were born into the kingdom of God, the year of our Lord, the year of your eternal life? Is "Dei gratia" there? (By the grace of God.) So that all the while those who know you magnify the exceeding riches of his love as manifested in you. Is "Christus Rex" there? (The King.) Are you absolutely Christ's—to serve and to obey? Is "Fid. Def." there? (Defender of the Faith.) Do you keep the deposit of Christ's holy Gospel, as you look to Him to keep the deposit which you have committed to Him? Is the lion on the quarterings, speaking of the strength of the lion of Judah imparted to your soul? Is the harp amongst them, indicating the subjection of every string of your life to his finger? Is the crown there, indicating how absolutely you have placed the empire of your nature upon the brow of your Lord?

MONDAY, April 11.

"Watch ye at every season, making supplication."—Luke xxi. 36 (R.V.).

Let us never release the girdle from around our loins, or throw ourselves listlessly upon the bank to drink, when the enemy may be stealing up against the wind. When we feel most disposed to sink into lethargy and false security let us dread most, lest, like the lotus eaters of the old legend, we may be indisposed for the perils and toils of the journey.

Watch ye in the season of festivity. Every home makes festival sometimes. The poorest will buy some small adornment for the bare tenement, and spread on one day the dinners of seven. Then when merry voices fill the chamber with mirth, and jokes pass, old stories are retold, quaint anecdotes circulated, remember to look frequently up into the Master's face to discover if aught has filled it with shame or regret.

Watch ye in hours of stress and anxiety. These will come between the soul and Christ, oppressing us with anxious care, leading us to think too much of the things which are seen and transient, and filling our hearts with dismay, as though the future would find us orphans and homeless because the storm had swept away some few gatherings of the earth's perishable stores. When stocks fall, business declines, competition increases—Watch!

Watch ye in seasons of tender love. We wear armour abroad, but when we come within the closed door of the home, and our hearts expand beneath the genial warmth of kindred natures, how apt we are to cry, Now, surely, we may unbend, ungird, and let nature have free course. But the Master says, Watch ye at every season.

TUESDAY, April 12.

"Simon, Simon, behold Satan has asked to have you that he might sift you as wheat; but I have prayed."—Luke xxii. 31, 32 (R.V.).

The Master apparently did not pray that temptation should be withheld. The quick eye of his affection discerned the tempter's approach. His quick ear had detected Satan's request of the Father that he might winnow the disciple as the husbandman winnows the grain. He was aware of the threats which the evil one brandished, as though he said, "Let me have the chance for one brief hour, and I will show that these men, so far from being gold, silver and precious stones, are only wood, hay, and stubble. But though He knew all this, the Master did not request that the winnowing wind should be withheld that it might not blow over the floor. Why? Because temptation is part of the present order of the world. Why it is so we cannot tell; that it is so we know assuredly. Why the Almighty permitted the evil one to intrude into Paradise, and to assail every single soul of woman born we shall probably never understand until mystery drops from our eyes in the meridian light of heaven.

Because temptation tests character and reveals us to ourselves and to one another. Was it not well that Peter should know how weak he was that he might become truly penitent and converted? Was it not befitting that Judas should be exposed before the day of Pentecost? Was it not best that the foundation stones of the Church should be well tested?

But if Satan tempts, our Advocate pleads. He anticipates the advent of temptation, and warns the soul when the hawk begins to hover. If He may not arrest temptation, He will at least secure the reinforcement of our faltering faith.

WEDNESDAY, April 13.

"Verily, I say unto thee, To-day shalt thou be with Me in Paradise."—Luke xxiii. 43.

To-day! Dost thou ask Me to remember thee at some distant moment, when the kingdom of which I am now laying the foundations shall have become the all-conquering kingdom of the world? It might be long for thee to wait for this! But thou needest not wait so long. I say unto thee that this very day, when yonder sun now scorching our heads is sinking in the west, and the shadows lie long from our crosses, and the people have gone to their homes, and the birds of the air have settled on their nests, thou shalt be with Me.

Thou shalt be with Me. Dost thou ask only to be remembered, that I should give thee the glance of a thought, that I shall recall thy voice and face for a brief moment? Thou shalt be with Me, beside Me, the one who, in my mortal anguish, trod the vale of the shadow, and who, with Me, shall tread the paths of light and glory.

In Paradise. I am here regaining Paradise. All that was lost is being recovered. Within a few hours it will be mine to give, within a few hours its key will be in my hand, within a few hours thou shalt walk with Me there in the cool of the day, and the angel that drove out Adam shall keep watch lest the serpent enter to molest.

Verily, I say unto thee. All this is fixed and certain. I say "verily" to thee because the Father hath said "verily" to Me. O, trembling soul, who hast fled for refuge, to lay on the hope set before thee, thou mayest have strong encouragement from my Word and death.

THURSDAY, April 14.

"Crucified, and the third day rise again."—Luke xxiv. 7.

These are the two poles of Christian life—Death and Resurrection. That which was true in the history of our Lord must have its counterpart in our own experiences. That Jesus died and rose again is not only the dual basis of justification, but is the dual basis of sanctification. Did He die? Then we must arm ourselves with the same mind. Perpetually leaving the things of time and sense where Christ left his grave clothes, let us press up and on in the wake of his resurrection and ascension.

It is a solemn question how far we are participating in this daily dying and daily rising. "Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed. Mortify your members which are upon the earth; seek those things which are above. If one died for all, then all died, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto Him who died for them and rose again."

It is not that the old nature dies, but that we die to it. As a matter of experience and walk, the results will be very similar from either of these ways of stating the fact. But it is truer to Scripture and experience also to speak of reckoning ourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, that is the root-principle which so often fruits in sins. Reckon that the grave of Christ lies between thee and the solicitations of the world, the flesh, and the devil. Deem thyself dead to thyself.

All this is only possible through the Holy Spirit. It is through the Spirit that we mortify the deeds of the body and live. It was through the Eternal Spirit that Jesus offered Himself to God. The law of the Spirit of Life makes us free from the law of sin and death. The pulse of the new sap forces off the dead leaves of the evergreens.

FRIDAY, April 15.

"Thou shalt see greater things than these."—John i. 50.

God's dealings with us are always on an ascending scale. If we see clearly the lowest rail in the heavenly ladder, whilst we behold, the veil of mist will part, and we shall see the next above it, and then the next, and, in due order, the next, and so the steps that slope away through darkness up to God will always be beckoning to greater and yet greater things.

Have you known Christ as the Word? He is more, both Spirit and Life.

Has He become flesh? You shall behold Him glorified with the glory He had before the worlds.

Have you known Him as Alpha, before all? He is also Omega.

Have you met John? You shall meet one so much greater that the lachet of his shoes the Baptist shall deem himself unworthy to unloose.

Do you know the baptism by water? You shall be baptized by fire.

Live up to all you know, and you shall know more. Be all you can, and you shall become more. Do all that your two talents permit, and you will find yourself ruler over four cities. Be faithful in the little, and it will grow so that He who tended a few sheep in the wilderness will feed the Israel of God.

How wonderful life is! We are like little children being led through rooms stored with the most interesting and splendid treasures of art, science, and history. And when one room has been explored God leads us to the door of the next, saying, "Ye shall see greater things than these."

SATURDAY, April 16.

"Thou hast kept the good wine."—John ii. 10.

The world gives its best first. As youth and beauty are ushered into the banqueting-room of life the world spreads the table with its best, its richest viands, its rarest, sweetest wines. The zest of enjoyment is keen in those young days, but it is soon satiated; the delicacies with which the table is spread pall, and the appetite, unduly stimulated at the first, demands coarser and more passionate delights to stimulate. At last the table is served with provision, from which, in the first days, the banqueters would have turned away disgusted.

But if you let the King lead you into his banqueting house beneath his banner of love, you will find yourself feeding on dainties which never satiate or pall, and will learn to know the length, and breadth, and depth, and height of a "love that is better than wine."

You may say this of the Word of God.—At the beginning of Christian life it is full of meaning and inspiration, but as the years pass, and by the light of our own experience we see deeper depths, and higher heights of helpful meaning, we cry to the very close of life, Thou hast kept the best until now.

You may say this of Christian love.—Let two love in Christ, and instead of their affection waning, as so often happens in the world, they will discover, as Jesus goes with them, and talks to their burning hearts that the fellowship, which began in comradeship, will end in a holy meal; truest, purest, deepest enjoyment being kept for the reunion of Paradise.

You may say it of Heaven.—Eye hath not seen, neither heart conceived the things, even now and here, that God has prepared for those that love Him. But so soon as the redeemed spirit shall awaken in the glory of God's Presence it will exclaim, "The half was never told; Thou hast kept the best until now."

"The Transfiguration."—Matt. xvii. 1-9.

Golden Text: "We behold his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father."—John i. 14.

The Transfiguration (2).

SHOULD compare the accounts of Luke and Mark. This means the divine light that was in Christ shining through the material exterior—the body was suffused with the spirit. The face of Moses shone, but this was reflected brightness; Christ made his real being visible for a time that the disciples may see him as he was.

The Witnesses (1).

Peter, James, and John—the closest friends of Christ. These three were best able to bear the revelation of Christ's personality. Only the pure in heart can see God; others would not appreciate the vision even if they could see it.

These three were to be the messengers who could tell to the world what they had seen—

Those who have a vision of Jesus are highly honoured, but they must tell it forth.

Time of Transfiguration.

While they prayed (Luke and Mark) Christ was in constant communion with his Father. It was seldom that the disciples went with Him into the secret chamber of God.

By Prayer.—(1) Our vision of Jesus in his beauty becomes clearer. He who prays most serves the best.

Compare the effect of Paul's vision of Jesus upon his whole life.

(2) We ourselves shall be transformed as we pray. They shine brightest who live in the sunlight.

Illustration.—The electric lamp gives light only when its connexion with the dynamo is complete and uninterrupted. Prayer is our connexion with the great dynamo of Almightiness.

Celestial Visitors (3).

Moses and Elias (Greek form of Elijah). Many centuries had elapsed since these men lived. All so silent and separate. A voice from the other side of the dark river to tell us that there is another side. This visitation would be remembered by the disciples after the Cross, and would be ample proof to them of the real existence of the great and good.

The Effect on the Witnesses (4).

The disciples in ecstacy. The Tabernacle or booths which they proposed to erect would be a shelter for them during the dew-distilling night.

The experience is one which every saint has felt—desire to prolong the moments of communion with Heaven.

We must not underrate or misunderstand the enthusiasm of those who have seen Jesus. The ordinary phrases and methods of life are not large enough to express their feelings: they boil over. The world may ridicule, but it is better to boil over than not to boil at all.

Hilltops of Life.

In the Bible God generally met with his people on the mountain top. Compare: Moses, Abraham's sacrifice, Mount Zion.

Away from the mist and heaviness of the valley they breathed in pure air. Teacher may compare the valley with the world and its temptations and duties; the mountain to the place of state of communion with God. God still calls us to the top of the mountain. Here: New hope, inspiration, visions of duty.

(The Testimony 5).

God bore testimony to the person and work of his Son.

The disciples were very dependent on these revelations.

They were given to them that they might hand them on to us.

The divinity of Christ's life and teaching we recognise in themselves to-day, so that there is no need for further revelation of this kind.

Return to the Valley.

It was not good that they should remain on the mountain top.

The drill ground prepares for the battle.

The Sunday worship strengthens us for the work and temptation of the week.

The Revival draws us up to a higher level and fills us with new power.

Oxford Letter.

[By Our Own Correspondent.]

An article in one of the Sunday papers, under the heading "University Gambling Dens," has caused some notice in the local papers. The writer, who purports to be giving his own "bitter experience," declares that "every night during term there are thirty or forty gambling hells, practically open to all." He gives a vivid description of one of these "hells," both in and out of college, and refers to the number of 'varsity men who end their existence in the colonies in consequence of their passion for roulette. The Oxford Times criticises the article, and while admitting the existence of "a certain amount of play," declares that the above statement of the writer is as nearly false as any statement that has a substratum of truth can possibly be. It is to be hoped that the publicity thus given to a practice that in a greater or less degree does exist may not be without good results, alike to city and 'Varsity.

On Thursday night a lecture in aid of the Society for Providing Homes for Waifs and Strays was given in the hall of the Girls' High School, Banbury-road, by the Rev. F. W. Spurling. As the lecturer showed how the children came into their hands, tracing the sad circumstances that surround so much of the child-life in England, and then spoke of the results of their new surroundings, bringing to the heart of many a little one its first consciousness of God's love, one could not but feel thankful for the above and kindred societies.

Friends of the poor parish of St. Ebbe's are glad to know that the parish room, now the centre of the Church Army work, is free from debt. On Wednesday there was a helpful gathering, presided over by the vicar, and an earnest appeal was made for sympathy with Captain Easton in his work.

The Rector of St. Peter-le-Bailey (the Hon. and Rev. W. Talbot Rice) is making himself deservedly popular by his sympathy with the work of other bodies in the city. On Wednesday he spoke at a gathering in connection with the George-street Congregational Sunday-school, and on Tuesday he opened a sale of work for Capt. A. Gibson, of the Salvation Army. This is the spirit that works for unity.

Interesting information concerning the work of the Baptist Missionary Society on the Congo was given on Sunday and Monday by Rev. J. Stephens, of the Congo Mission. The aim of the Mission is to form a chain of stations right across Africa from west to east, and twenty years ago the Baptist Society had the honour of sending out pioneer missionaries with this object. They have now forty-nine missionaries in the field, eleven native evangelists, twenty stations, 250 church members, and over 800 scholars.

The question of the housing of vagrants is assuming grave importance in Oxford. While we remember that London has its poor, our eyes must not be closed to what is going on within a stone's throw of our own houses. To those who only know the better parts of Oxford, but never enter the slums, these things cause less sympathy than the account of the suffering of people far away in the metropolis. Familiarity too often brings contempt. Instances of imposture freeze up charity. But there are other ways; and while we are glad to record a great improvement in many parts of the neighbourhood, there is much to be done in removing "rookeries," especially in the parishes of St. Thomas and St. Clement's. A gentleman known to the writer has just bought some property in a slum, and by the expenditure of some £100 has quite altered a corner of this "den." More good is done in this way than by a hundred dinners to the poor.

A Churchman's Notes.

We are glad to notice the National Protestant Church Union is protesting vigorously by means of memorials and other representations to the archbishops and bishops with reference to recent developments of Ritualism and Anglo-Romanism. It remains to be seen what effect this protest will have. Clearly, matters are hastening to a crisis.

We are all now waiting anxiously for some statement of the funds of the great societies, especially of the C.M.S. and Pastoral Aid Society. May deficits be averted, and God's cause not be set back. Meanwhile the announcements of the speakers for the May Meetings are encouraging and give promise of much valuable help and inspiration.

The announcement that a colonial bishopric has been offered to Rev. Henry Gee, Senior Tutor and Vice-Principal of St. John's Hall, Highbury, and that he has declined it, is especially noteworthy from the fact that Mr. Gee is now in charge of the College in Dr. Waller's absence for six months through illness. A declinature under these circumstances is not likely to be forgotten.

The Principal of Wycliffe Hall, Oxford (Rev. F. J. Chavasse), is heard in London all too seldom. He is giving a series of addresses every day this week at Immanuel Church, Streatham.

The death of Dr. Stokes, of Dublin, removes one of the most prominent and learned of Irish Churchmen. As Professor of Ecclesiastical History in Trinity College, Dublin, he was very popular, and his books are circulated widely.

The question of the supply of clergy is now coming to the fore, and figures clearly point to a distinct increase in the number of those ordained. Whatever may be the cause, the fact is undoubted, though, at the same time, it is not necessarily an evil omen. There is perhaps an even greater question than that of numbers, namely, quality, and as to this there needs a good deal of inquiry and thought. What is really required is a supply of men who have had a more thorough Biblical training than is implied in any present University degree. Even if this meant fewer men, it would not in the long run be a loss.

Rev. E. Grose Hodge has commenced his work at Holy Trinity, Marylebone, with tokens of definite blessing, and this important church bids fair to be a still greater witness than ever to the Gospel of the grace of God.

What a huge parish is that of Aston, Birmingham, and how heroically Canon Sutton is attacking its problems. He and seven curates, with an army of helpers, are at work; and anyone who wants to know what work in such a parish means should get Church and People for April (7, Paternoster-square; 1d.), and read the story, and then thank God.

The centenary plans of the C.M.S. are now published, and are characterised by much wisdom and Christian statesmanship. They will doubtless be read carefully by every subscriber, and receive prayerful and practical attention. The Bishop of Exeter, with characteristic optimism, appeals for a million of money as a thanksoffering, and gives himself £1000 towards this. If only men with far greater means would give proportionately the thing would soon be done.

Mr. Selwyn, of Boscombe, has returned from his winter tour in India, and has been welcomed very warmly by his attached people, who have been following him step by step with their prayers and faith. Mr. Selwyn has been and is being greatly blessed at Boscombe, and his ministry is a real power in Ritualistic Bournemouth.

The Church Times devoted its leader last week to the "Leakage of Methodism," and though its spirit was on the whole unexceptionable, it displayed a ludicrous ignorance of the true conditions of the matter. It is quite impossible for a Ritualist to enter into the conditions of the inner working of Methodism; it requires a discernment that is quite foreign to the ecclesiastical and spiritual attitude of the Church Times.

E. C.

A Pioneer in India.

The Late Rev. WILLIAM CLARKSON, L.M.S.

THIS beloved servant of Christ recently passed to his heavenly rest at Tunbridge Wells, where he had passed the closing years of his life in quiet retirement. Previous to retirement he had been pastor in various churches of the Congregational order, in all of which he was beloved as a wise teacher and faithful herald of "the truth as it is in Jesus."

It is chiefly with missionary labour in India that Mr. Clarkson's name is identified. Though his period of foreign service was a comparatively short one, and many years have since elapsed, his enthusiasm and interest in the work never abated; and, had his health permitted, he would doubtless by preference have remained in the distant field. He used to say sometimes, in answer to the question "How are you?" "If I were well I should be in India." After resigning his last home pastorate, at Croydon, in 1883, he devoted himself to the laborious work of writing books in the Gujarati language, for the spiritual upbuilding of the native Christians, thus rendering a service which was highly appreciated.

Dr. George Taylor, who is carrying on the mission founded by Mr. Clarkson (now conducted by the Irish Presbyterians), writes under date February 10 of the present year:

> There are still some in this mission field who personally remember his manifold labours of love on their behalf, and many more to whom his name has become a sacred tradition. All who knew him delight to tell of the singular power that accompanied his ministry, and I have more than once heard how strong, fierce men cowered before him as he preached to them, in their own tongue, of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come. His memory will long be held in grateful remembrance as one of the founders of the mission in Gujarat, and to the present day we are reaping the good fruits of the seed he sowed so wisely and with so bountiful a hand.

In the words of a fellow-worker, Rev. W. Beatty, "Mr. Clarkson did an enduring work in Gujarat, and laid the foundations of a church which is growing in numbers, strength, and spirituality." Perhaps the most remarkable and interesting proof of the strong attachment formed between his spiritual children and himself was furnished by the correspondence which was kept up on both sides for more than forty years. This was sustained by the younger branches of families when the parents had passed away. The last of these letters from India remains an unlocked treasure, for the hand which alone held the key had ceased from its cunning.

The commencement of Mr. Clarkson's work dates as far back as 1839. Having passed through a course of study at Western College, he was sent out by the London Missionary Society when only twenty-one years of age. His first experiences at Surat, Bombay, a city of a million inhabitants, were not encouraging. After five years' toil, following what he took to be the "finger of God," he accepted the guidance of two Hindus, who came from their village homes, 100 miles to the North, in search of the Christian teachers. They conducted him to the banks of the river Mahi, amid a numerous rural population. Here a native teacher, by name Gungaram, had been preparing the soil.

A spirit of inquiry had been awakened, and many had been reading Christian books, including tracts written by Mr. Clarkson and his colleague. In these new surroundings the missionary set to work with diligence and hope, spending whole days in tent preaching or private interviews with inquirers. In the story of these early days, related by himself in the "Missionary Encouragements," there is a glow and enthusiasm which is refreshing and stimulating to the missionary student.

In the neighbouring city of Baroda was situated the British camp. Here Mr. Clarkson frequently visited, and conducted services and Bible-classes for the officers and men. By close personal conversation he led to Christ men who became bright witnesses through many years of service. A Bible presented to their friend when he left India bears the signatures of many who valued his teaching, including that of the godly and distinguished Henry Havelock.

Amid these spiritual labours, Mr. Clarkson found time to pursue his studies in the allied languages of the country, and published a grammar for students in Gujarati, which a resident in Surat for twenty years has recently described as "the grammar of the country." He also made contributions to The Bombay Guardian on moral and social questions, and took part with Revs. Dr. Wilson, Dr. Murray Mitchell, and others in the early establishment of the Evangelical Alliance in Bombay.

From photograph by Percy S. Lankester, Tunbridge Wells.

These facts will serve to show the wide interest and sympathy of the service in which Mr. Clarkson engaged; but, all through, the end and aim of preaching the Gospel to the heathen was kept steadily in view. Trials were not wanting; and jungle fever periodically returning undermined a more than usually vigorous frame. His wife was suddenly cut off by cholera. Difficulties arose in connection with his work; disappointments sore and keen in some of these of whom he had hoped the best. None of these things, however, damped his zeal. In course of time he and his colleague had the joy of finding a growing number of sincere believers in fellowship with themselves.

In those early days, however, persecution was more virulent and bold than now. Those who confessed Christ by baptism were forbidden by their heathen neighbours to draw from the wells, or even to remain in their homes. It seemed needful to form a haven from the storm. Land was obtained from the Government, on which dwelling-houses were built. A mission-house was also erected for the missionaries near the river, a few miles distant. These together formed the centre of a community, the first of the "Christian villages" planted in that dark region. By a happy coincidence the locality of the village had from time immemorial borne the name of Kasi Vadi—"the Beautiful Garden." The name now received a fresh consecration and a new meaning.

Within its bounds a holy friendship was fostered for time and eternity. A letter, written in March, 1890, from one of the dwellers in this spot, thus addressed the beloved teacher:—

> To my kind protector, ever beloved, the kind Sahib Clarkson, we send many salutations,—As long as I live how can I forget your love—your goodness. I have been reading the books you have published; blessed are you that up till the present time, abiding at a distance from us, you have been able to fill our plate with food, and to send it all this way...

As a pastor at home, Mr. Clarkson manifested the zeal, love, and wisdom which characterised him on the mission field. His words of spiritual counsel are embalmed in many hearts. All felt that he possessed a very special gift of conveying inspiring thought and valuable instruction in the briefest sentences. To those in trouble he would often say, "Look up!" in a tone and manner which never failed to cheer and encourage. To others in perplexity, "Leave it, wait; light will come!" To others, anxious, "Rest, rest, rest in the Lord." One friend recalled how, in a brief visit of a few seconds, he said to him, with a significant clenching of his hand, "Get a firm grip of Christ," adding "I never forgot it." Playful fancy, poetic feeling, genial humour frequently lighted up his daily intercourse and conversation. He was emphatically a helper; his very presence brought calm and strength.

As a preacher he was often spoken of as one who could not but be interesting. The sum and substance of his preaching was the revealed will and love of God in Christ. There was all the more value in his grip of Christian doctrine, because he so fully enjoyed and allowed to others Christian liberty. To him the atoning work of Christ was no mere doctrine of theology. In the fountain of Christ's blood he was conscious of daily cleansing. Yet he would think most kindly of those who appeared most far from what he deemed the Truth, and most lovingly would he help any wanderer to gain the path of light and peace in which he himself walked.

Mr. Clarkson is known to many as an author, chiefly of missionary works and works bearing on the spiritual life. "India and the Gospel" and "Christ and Missions" proved an inspiration to many. Spared to see the completion of his eightieth year, he yet retained "the dew of his youth." There was the same brightness, the same interest in the welfare of others, and even the same genial humour; while amid increasing physical infirmity there was ever calm acquiescence in the Divine will and unfailing patience. He received the summons into the presence of the King on December 14, 1897, He rests from his labours, and his works do follow him.

THOUGHTS FOR EASTERTIDE.

"It is Finished."*

"AFTER this, Jesus knowing that all things were now accomplished (finished), that the Scripture might be fulfilled, saith, I thirst. Now there was set a vessel full of vinegar: and they filled a spunge with vinegar, and put it upon hyssop, and put it to his mouth. When Jesus therefore had received the vinegar, He said, It is finished" (John xix. 28-30). He had not actually passed through the gates of death, but his hand was on the goal. "The suffering of his soul was the soul of his suffering," and the suffering of his soul is past. Men have done their worst and their last. All the prophecies by which the Spirit testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ are now accomplished. The serpent hath bruised his heel. Wicked men have pierced his hands and his feet. Mysterious darkness covered Him, and Divine forsaking overshadowed his holy soul. All hath been fulfilled, down to this last particular:—"In his thirst they gave Him vinegar to drink." "When Jesus therefore had received the vinegar, He said, It is finished."

All the types of a suffering Saviour are now fulfilled in Christ. He was led as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so He opened not his mouth. Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us. All the thousands of lambs slain on Jewish altars have found their Antitype in the Lamb of God upon the Cross. As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, so hath the Son of Man been lifted up. The spiritual Rock hath been smitten by the rod of God, and it sends forth answering streams of living water.

The Ceremonial Law is at once fulfilled and abolished. No more any bloody sacrifices; no more any elaborate Jewish ritual. "Ye Levites, lay aside your sacrificial knife, and ye sons of Aaron lay aside your sacrificial robes." The veil of the temple is about to be rent in twain, and the altar shall be overthrown. For the Lamb of God is now offered once for all upon the Cross, and, as the great High Priest, arrayed in robes of holy beauty, He is about to enter into the true Holy of holies with his own blood.

The Moral law is established. Does Christ make void the law through his death? Nay, He establishes the law. The Moral law was given to man in Eden, and engraved by the finger of God, in clear lines, on his conscience. It was republished on Mount Sinai, and written on tables of stone. It is honoured and ratified by Christ upon the Cross, and it will be perpetuated in glory. Christ's work was the building of a temple. In God's Book the plan was drawn, and all the specifications written out. The Father prescribed the work: the Son undertook it. In fulfilment of his covenant-engagement, He has been building up the temple of redemption for above thirty-two years, according to the Divine plan; and now He puts on the topstone, with the shout, "It is finished."

The Atonement is complete. Christ hath obeyed the whole law as a holy man, and He hath satisfied the Father's justice in the room and stead of sinners. He hath performed all the precepts of the law, and paid the penalty of the broken law. "There is a righteousness which God's righteousness required Him to require," and Christ has furnished and finished it. This righteousness is a robe, of which Christ's passive obedience is the warp, and his active obedience the woof. It is flowered all over with the Christian graces. The finished robe is perfection, and it is now ready to be put on with a view to the marriage supper of the Lamb.

Christ's death is a historical fact. His suffering had a beginning and an end, and it occupied but a short period in history. Yet it is more than equivalent to the eternal sufferings of the lost. "By the obedience of One shall many be made righteous." But this One is God and man, a sinless Sufferer, a voluntary Sufferer, and the dignity and glory of his Person gave an infinite lustre and value to his sufferings. By his death He finished the transgression, and made an end of sins, and made reconciliation for iniquity, and brought in everlasting righteousness.

The Atonement of Christ is a broad basis, on which the holy God can meet and treat with any sinner of mankind. It is a firm foundation amid the quaking bogs and shifting sands of this world. It is open on all sides, and whosoever will may come. Come, sinner, and take your stand on the basis of this Atonement, and be accepted in Christ, "whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness: that He might be just, and the Justifier of him which believeth in Jesus."

I stand upon his merit,
I know no other stand;
Not e'en where glory dwelleth
In Immanuel's land.

Justice asks no more, and will take no less. No suffering of man needs to be added to the Atonement of Christ. Christians suffer, but their sufferings are disciplinary, not propitiatory—the chastisement of a Father, not the infliction of a Judge. And there can be no repetition of Christ's atoning sacrifice. It was a perfect satisfaction to Divine justice, and was offered once for all—never to be repeated, so that the Popish sacrifice of the Mass, as they call it, is nothing but a travesty upon Christ's only sacrifice. "It is finished."

St. Luke xxiii. 33.

O! Mountain of transcendence,
All other mounts above,
Wreathed with the golden story
Of God's redeeming love—
To thee thy lost Creation
Uplifts her tear-dimmed eyes,
Beholding her salvation,
Love's Paschal sacrifice.
Thou art a holy city
Of refuge, ever nigh,
Where dwells a heart of pity,
To whom the lost may fly.
Thou art a fount of healing,
Whence cleansing waters flow,
Reprieve eternal sealing
From guilt's relentless woe.
Here was Love's temple riven,
And from its inmost shrine,
Unto our souls is given
The living Bread and Wine.
O! Mount of holiest anguish,
High altar, Jesus trod.
May we who weep and languish
Climb thy steep steps to God.

"Him That Cometh Unto Me."

By DR. JAMES CULROSS.

IN the "Pilgrim's Progress." Bunyan describes the coming of Christian to the wicket gate. Over the gate were these words, "Knock, and it shall be opened unto you." He knocked, therefore, more than once or twice. At length there came a grave person to the gate, named Good-Will, who asked, Who is there? and whence he came? and what he would have? To which Christian answered, "Here is a poor burdened sinner. I come from the city of Destruction, but am going to Mount Zion, that I may be delivered from the wrath to come. I would therefore, sir, since I am informed that by this gate is the way thither, know if you are willing to let me in." "I am willing with all my heart," said he, and with that he opened the gate.

It is Good-Will who speaks the words: "Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out." Were He to cast out a coming sinner He would be going against his Father's will, who sent him to Jesus; and, in sending him, said in effect, "Take this sinner, and save him."

Someone says in perplexity, "But I do not know what coming is."

may help to explain. A mother goes from home one day, expecting to be absent for a few hours. She leaves her young child in the care of a neighbour or a servant. When she returns she finds the child in the nurse's arms, and says, as she stretches out her arms: "Come to me, my darling." What does she expect? that the child should leap down, and run to the mother? The child cannot walk, cannot even stand alone. But look how the child's eyes dance and how it stretches out its little hands at the mother's call, and tells out its delight. That is the child coming. That is all the mother expects. And your coming may be no more than that; may be but a child stretching forth glad hands to the Saviour; but He will take that for coming; and will in no wise cast you out.

Another is full of fears, and thinks it too good news to be true—"I am low and He is high. I am sinful and He is pure; and I fear my coming would be an act of presumption." Another parable may suggest an answer to these and such-like fears. A young boy finds himself one bitter November evening with the sleet hissing through the east wind, in the west end of a great city. He wanders about among its streets and squares disconsolate and despairing. He is penniless, homeless, friendless, and with scarcely rags enough to cover him, far less to keep him warm. He does not know where he is to sleep to-night, or where he is to get breakfast to-morrow. The signs of abundance are all around him; but he is a stranger. As he wanders, dazed and half stupefied, a Christian gentleman who lives there sees him, and steps up to him; he talks to him, as the Lord Jesus might have done, and gets his story. He is able to verify it by cross-questioning, and then says: "I shall be back in five minutes, my house is the second round that corner there. Come to me in five minutes, knock at my door, and I will be a friend to you." The boy goes accordingly. But he had no thought of a home like that. To him it looks like a palace. As he climbs the flight of steps leading to the front door his heart begins to fail him. Looking at his rags he says to himself, I am not fit to be admitted; he will turn me away. But he reflects, He saw how unfit I am to be taken in, but he bade me come; and after bidding me come he will not turn me away.

So with the sinner who comes to mercy's door and knocks there. A sense of his unworthiness weighs upon him, and his heart begins to sink. "I am low, he says, and He is high; I am vile and He is pure, and being such as I am, I cannot expect to be received. Answer unbelief. But He knows my unworthiness better than I do myself, and He that knows the very worst about me invites me to come to Him as a Saviour, and after bidding me come He will in no wise cast me out."

"I Am the Resurrection."

[Read Luke x. 38-42; John xi. 1-46, xii. 1-9.]

THE very commencement of this narrative by John arrests our notice. Luke, who writes the Gospel of the Son of Man, tells how Martha, the head of the family, received the weary Teacher into her house and ministered unto Him. But John, who views the life of Jesus on its heavenlier side, and writes the Gospel of the Son of God, does not identify the family by mention of Martha's hospitality, but of Mary's love; and (like the dying Patriarch, who, guiding his hands wittingly, placed his right hand on the head of Joseph's younger son) notes that Bethany, where Lazarus lay sick, "was the town of Mary and her sister Martha. It was the Mary which anointed the Lord with ointment and wiped his feet with her hair, whose brother Lazarus was sick."

It was not that Martha was constitutionally active and Mary constitutionally lethargic, but that Martha acts according to natural, human impulse, while Mary rests under Divine constraint. She had sat at Jesus' feet, and heard his word. It had entered into her and conformed her unto Him, so that she had the mind of Christ; and just as the Lord abode two days still in the same place where He was when He heard that Lazarus was sick, so Mary sat still in the house when she heard that He was coming to them.

Martha expresses her belief that had Jesus been there Lazarus had not died; but she had not attained to the faith implied in the words she added, "But I know that even now, whatsoever Thou wilt ask of God, God will give it Thee." With her shallow inward knowledge of Him, she shrank from the consequence of her own words when tested by the reply of Jesus, "Thy brother shall rise again." Her faith is firmly grounded on the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead, but she has not so learnt Christ as to know Him to be the Resurrection and the Life. And therefore when He says, "Believest thou this?" she falls back upon "the first principles of the doctrine of Christ," and replies, "Yea, Lord, I believe that Thou art the Christ, the Son of God, that should come into the world." A saving faith indeed, the beginning of all true Christian life and work, but a foundation requiring to be built upon; a faith to which, with all diligence, are to be added virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly-kindness, love. Martha's timid faith shrinks from the promise even when brought very nigh, and postpones its fulfilment to the last day.

Martha was not at ease with Jesus; she did not SIT under his shadow with GREAT DELIGHT; his fruit was not SWEET to her taste; she did not realise, as Mary did, "his banner over me is love." He was to her as a schoolmaster; and, like a child released from her lessons, she goes her way to Mary her sister, secretly, saying, "The Master (literally, THE TEACHER) is come, and calleth for thee."

Why should she tell her sister SECRETLY, "The Master is come, and calleth for thee"? Surely she felt dissatisfied with herself, and perhaps ashamed to find that there was a veil upon her heart which prevented a full and free interchange of thought between herself and Jesus. But she was conscious that Mary would understand Him; and there was a sympathy between her sister and the Lord which she did not enjoy, and though regretful and ashamed, it was a relief that Mary should take her place.

There are some very

by the pen of the Holy Ghost, which we do well to observe, in this wonderful sketch of the inner life. It is said that "Martha WENT and MET HIM," but that Mary "arose quickly and CAME UNTO Him." We go and meet a superior whom we respect, or a benefactor whom we love, but it is only those of the inner circle of his family, the wife, the children, the intimate friend, the disciple whose place is at his feet, who COME UNTO Him.

Mary falls down at his feet, where she so loved to be, and uses the same words as Martha had done, "Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died"—words which they had doubtless often repeated to one another, while they had waited for Him, hoping against hope as the hours of watching passed on, that He might yet come and prevent their brother's death.

In the silence that followed, while He beheld her, and the Jews who were with her, weeping, Jesus groaned in spirit and was troubled. His interview with Martha had produced no such effect. Her self assertion ("but I know that even now") must, though with infinite tenderness, be checked; and her inadequate conception of Himself be met with "I am the Resurrection and the Life." Martha had obliged Him to take the teacher's place, but Mary's tearful faith and weeping patience touched the springs of his Divine yet human sympathy; and moving onward to the place where Lazarus lay, Jesus wept.

At his command to take away the stone, the

of "Martha, the sister of him that was dead," slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken, again breaks out, and thinking of the dead Lazarus more than of the living and life-giving Christ—I am the Resurrection, and the Life—she exclaims, "Lord, by this time he stinketh, for he hath been in the grave four days." And here is to be remarked another of those expressions by which the ready writer enables us to read the hearts of those whose inner life is manifested by the inspired record of their outward acts. Martha is designated the "Sister of the dead one," intimating that her human relationship to the brother who had died, was more prominent than her relationship by faith to the "Living One." She was walking according to man, by sight and not by faith, and could only be spoken unto as unto a babe in Christ: "Said I not unto thee that IF THOU WOULDST BELIEVE thou shouldst see the glory of God?"

In contrast with this, Mary is connected not with the dead brother, but with the living Lord: "Then many of the Jews which CAME TO MARY, and had seen the things which Jesus did, believed on Him." Thus Mary unconsciously was the means of leading souls to the knowledge of "the True God and Eternal Life," while Martha, by reason of her little faith, was rather a barrier in their way. Nevertheless, the Lord "loved Martha and her sister, and Lazarus." M.

Easter Poems.

EASTERDAY.

BRIGHT Easter Day! Glad Easter Day!
Well may poor earth her flowerets gay,
Hope's lilies, as a venture spread—
The Lord is risen from the dead.

The Lord is risen! Watchword now,
Though pain may wring the aching brow,
Though courage fail and hope be fled—
The Lord is risen from the dead.

Mighty to save! He lives, he lives!
Dost faint? 'Tis then new strength He gives
For every step He bids us tread—
The Lord is risen from the dead.

He lives—thy cause, poor child, to plead
In every strait, in every need;
Mighty to save—be hushed each dread—
The Lord is risen from the dead.

Bright Easter Day! Glad Easter Day!
The door of hope on life's dark way,
Whence streams of light and love are shed—
The Lord is risen from the dead.

MARY GORGES.

THE RESURRECTION MORN.

MERRILY the birds were singing,
Turtle doves were on the wing,
Flowers bloomed, the land was ringing
With the joyous sounds of Spring,

When two women, heavy hearted,
Midst the dawning's twilight gloom,
Sought the form of one departed
Vainly, in the rocky tomb.

Why, in this the grave's dim prison
Seek the Lord of Life and Light?
"Fear thou not, for He has risen!"
Said his angel pure and bright.

Hasten, for He goes before you
To the land of Galilee,
Love, his golden banner, o'er you,
There shall ye your Saviour see.

Lo! He met them, rapturous vision;
Tears by joy are charmed away;
Oh! what glorious transition,
Calvary's night, then Easter Day.

Many a sad heart vainly seeketh
Jesus Christ, the crucified;
Listen: 'tis his angel speaketh—
He is here, thine Eastertide.

THE SAVIOUR'S TRIUMPH.

MORN of triumph! morn of gladness!
Light supernal reigns abound;
Earth puts off its veil of sadness,
Christ arises! joys abound.

Strong the bars of death had bound Him,
But each bar is broken now;
Glory's peerless beams surround Him,
Light adorns the Conqueror's brow!

Shout the triumph! Seraphs, praise Him!
Join ye ransomed, swell the song!
To your highest transports raise Him,
All to do Him honour throng.

Hail, Immanuel! Hallelujah!
Hail, thou Victor from the grave!
Hail, Immanuel! Hallelujah!
Mighty now to bless and save!

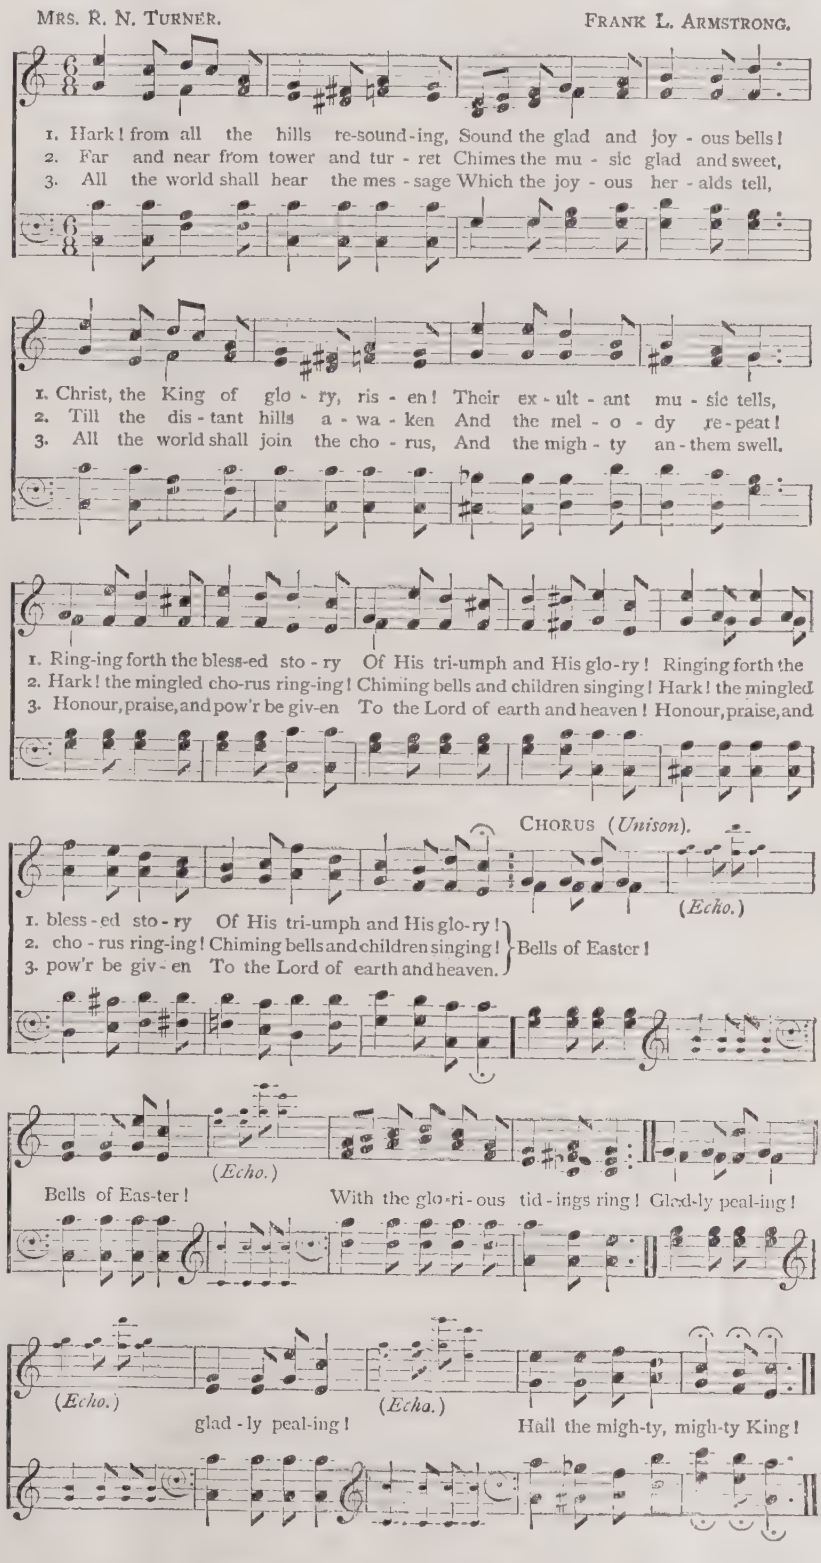
The Story of Eden.

By Dr. BALGARNIE.



IT has been spoken of as a myth, an Eastern legend, an ancient allegory, and some have gone so far as to ridicule it as a childish fable appropriate only to the nursery. Even Josephus introduces the chapter in semi-apologetic terms, and says "that Moses here begins to talk philosophically." On the other hand, it has been overlaid with theology, the centre of interest has been misplaced in the Tree of Knowledge, and the gospel of the narrative is represented as the defeat and subjugation of the Serpent. Meanwhile, it forms part of a Book that has hitherto stood the test of time, repelled the assaults of criticism, survived the sneers of the sceptical and indifferent, and is to-day more than ever venerated as "the oracles of God." The chief argument in favour of the veracity of the story of Eden is that it is true to-day.

It is in harmony with all we know of God. That He has sought man's comfort and happiness from the beginning is evident alike from the works of nature and the arrangements of Providence. He has presented us with the blessings of his goodness. The earth, as He made it, is still Eden, with its Garden in the East. There is still a way to his favour, which is life; and a way out of it, which is death. And every man or woman that comes at birth into the world is free to take the one road or the other, God being ever willing that all should come to Him and live. The God of Eden is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever.

It is in harmony with all we know of human nature. The central truth of Eden is the Fall. Without the gift of spiritual life, and the grace that accompanies it, it is impossible for mere natural manhood, even at its best, to keep the laws of the spiritual kingdom and fulfil the chief end of man. That gift of eternal life was offered to Adam and his wife in the Tree of Life in Eden, and rejected by them, and thereafter the Fall was a foregone conclusion. "He that is born of God sinneth not," but "they that are in the flesh cannot please God." The rejection of the Life-Tree was Adam's sin of sins, as it is ours to-day; without it he was powerless for good, and liable at any moment to be captured of the devil at his will. He had failed before he fell, like a student unprepared for his examination. "But sin is not imputed where there is no law." The Fall was only public conviction. The law of the Tree of Knowledge was but an instalment of the Mosaic law, appointed as a formal test of loyalty and obedience. To man spiritual it would have been easy to keep as a temperance pledge to a child of grace still; but to man carnal it was a fatal and inevitable stumbling block. Over it he fell. But it was not "eating a forbidden apple" that ruined Adam and his posterity, but the rejection of that which would have made the breaking of God's law impossible. "Ye will not come to Me that ye may have life."

The same is equally true of human nature still. It is true of the Gospel of all ages. The Gospel of the New Testament is the offer of eternal life in Christ to all the redeemed. The redemption of Christ has restored us, legally, to Adam's position before the fall. We are once more face to face with the Life-tree; we have but to take it and eat and live for ever. The Gospel of Eden is ours to-day. "Blessed are they that wash their robes that they may have the right to the Tree of Life.

Bells of Easter.

The Secret of Continuance.

"LET us not be weary in well-doing." It is hard to plough the daily furrow in the field of life. There is a dull monotony in doing nothing but "keep straight"—and we are so slow to learn the "long patience" of the husbandman who "waiteth for the precious fruit"; but it is only this onward look which will give to us the power of continuance. It is while the runner longs after the goal that his pace is steady; as soon as he ceases to "press toward the mark" his steps falter, and unable to gird up his flagging energies he falls out of the race. Then let us who have begun well, determine to "run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus"; for it is only so running that we can hope to obtain.

What would toil be without home? What would life be without heaven? The man who has no to-morrow will do a short day's work. He who works behind the hedges of his own acre will never journey with a full waggon to the market-place. Without hope of harvest no man will part with his seed corn. There is enough for to-day, is the motto of the fool.

In Christian life and service, if we are to endure it must be "as seeing Him who is invisible." Paul would never have accomplished his great work but for second sight. And unless we believe that the Spirit is effecting where our endeavours fail, we may as well give up. Oars are well when Christ is in the boat, but useless when He is away; success depends on his presence.

But oars alone can ne'er prevail
To reach the distant coast;
The breath of heaven must swell the sail,
Or all the toil is lost.

Who then shall continue? Why, those who, like Paul, have obtained help of God. Wait upon Him and your strength shall be renewed; commit your ways to Him and He shall bring them to pass; receive at his hand pureness of heart and you shall see God. The wicked flourish and are not; but the righteous shall hold on his way.

God guarantees progress and permanence to those who look to find their reward in Him; their branch shall not wither, their fruit shall remain.

Howard T. N. Ussher.

A Bhuddist Nunnery, at Wen Chow, China, has, writes Mr. Robert Grierson, been transformed into a Christian Church. Crowds of people come along each day to see the great wonder. Many of them are quite content at the change—they say it is only a symbol of what is coming! They begin to realise that Christ must change the present system of things. Yes: He must reign. What a very marked change has come over all classes of Chinese just recently—from pride and prejudice to humility and openmindedness. That is, of course, generally speaking. God's providential dealings with China are markedly moving her.

Sicily.—Signors Varnier and Scuderi are being much encouraged in their Gospel work at Messina and in other parts of the island. Of course, the priests are exasperated, and do all in their power to hamper the evangelists and intimidate the people. In a letter to Rev. J. B. Waddington, Clitheroe, they write:—"The priest at Messina recently began a series of sermons against heresy, anathematising us and all the Protestants, and calling upon the people to return to the 'Mother Church.' To the priest's surprise and rage, however, nearly all the congregation rose and left the church. This is one of the most signal triumphs of our mission." At Mandanici there is considerable awakening, and a church is greatly needed as a centre of effort. The evangelists add:—"It has pleased the Lord to bless our humble efforts. Humanly speaking, our resources are small; and that these shall fail is the hope of our enemies; but our trust is in the Lord, who will still be our help."

The College of Cherith.

By Rev. J. HERBERT BANITON, M.A.

THE Word of the Lord came unto Elijah and said, "Get thee to Cherith." This is the second time that the Word of the Lord had come to him. Its burden the first time was, "Get thee to Ahab." I doubt not that this second command was even a greater surprise to Israel's ancient prophet than the first. It called upon him to withdraw from the public life upon which he had entered, into obscurity and solitude again. But in this the wisdom of God was manifested.

Elijah had not yet completed his education in divine things, the great work of his life had not yet begun, and, as yet, he was not prepared to begin it. He had many things to learn, many to unlearn, before he could be sufficiently qualified to vindicate the cause of God upon Mount Carmel. He was not yet perfect.

So God determined that his prophet should graduate in the University of Solitude, the one which the greatest of men in all ages have had to pass through. Moses graduated in it. His Cherith was Midian. Forty years he dwelt in the stillnesses of the wilderness. Paul graduated in it. His Cherith was the Arabian desert. Three years he spent there alone with nature and nature's God. Jesus Himself graduated in it. His Cheriths were Nazareth, the wilderness of temptation, Gethsemane. In these He "grew and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom."

All great men have had their Cheriths, have graduated in the University of Solitude. They could not have been great otherwise; for only when hidden from the public eye can the soul be prepared for any noble work.

There can be no Carmel without a Cherith. In darkness the acorn germinates and shoots. We must strike roots downwards if we are to bear fruit upwards. We cannot give out unless we first take in. We must be a power if we are to exert a power. Let us who are Christians especially remember this. Do we wish to possess spiritual life within us? Then let us often retire from the busy crowd, hiding away from the eyes of men; let us seek some lonely Cherith where the world's loud voices are all hushed and God's still small voice only is heard. Let us graduate in the university where Elijah graduated—the University of Solitude.

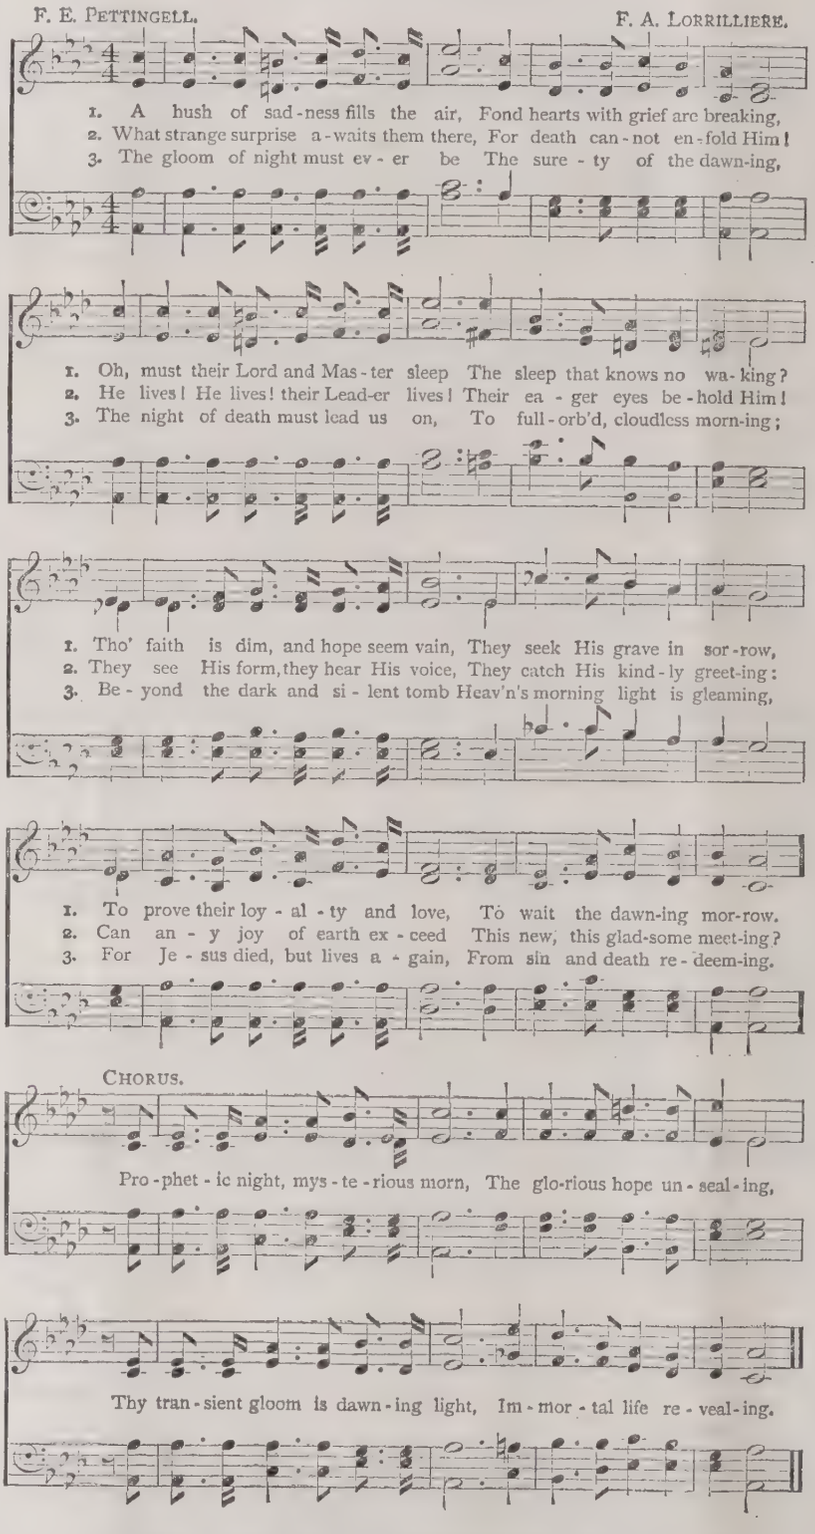
SURELY Christians in general do not associate the spiritual and the secular to the extent that ought to be done. Were the habit formed of viewing our daily work and the various objects that surround us, as Christ would regard them, were He in our place, a halo of beauty would be cast over all. To the eye of the great Teacher the birds of the air, the vine and its branches, the shepherd and his flock, and many other surrounding objects, all presented their picture lessons. These lessons are not always the most quickly apprehended by educated persons, for the heart has more to do with them than the head. Take, for example, the case of a faithful Christian servant. "I always enjoy the washing day," she one day remarked to her mistress; "because I feel as if my work resembled the Master's—that of cleansing."

Many years ago a working man, who had previously lived in almost heathenish darkness, was induced to enter a place of worship. He supposed that all who frequented such places were true Christians; and he thought, to use his own words, "that the very heavens would blush to see a creature like me enter such a place." The Gospel was soon welcomed by him as glad tidings, and ever since he has been seeking to communicate the good news to persons with whom he came in contact.

One day he entered a barber' shop to have his hair cut. Being thick and long the man handled it rather roughly.

"You must take care of my head," said he, "for all the hairs have been numbered." 'Surely you don't mean to say so," said the barber. "Yes, I certainly do," said he; "now can you guess who counted them?" The barber commenced guessing, "Wife? Sister? Sweetheart? Ah, now I think I have got it, your mother?" All his guesses being wrong, the way was open for our friend to pour into the listening ear tidings of the loving care of the heavenly Father.



The barber confessed his ignorance of Scripture, and said he was so confined with his work on a Sunday that he never entered a place of worship. They then arranged to canvass the town, and see if all the barbers would agree to close their shops on a Sunday morning. With the exception of three or four, all agreed to do so.

To reach the hearts of our fellow creatures, and awaken their interest in better things, object lessons often succeed more effectually than abstract statements of truth. Probably not one of our Saviour's numerous exhortations to his disciples to love and serve one another would come with such force to their memories and hearts as the last act of service He rendered to them in washing their feet.

STAY here and rest—
'Tis good that thou shouldst know
The peace and joy that from contentment flow.

Stay here and rest—
For in the silent hour
The heart receives from God its hidden power.

Stay here and rest—

The Bible League.—A successful series of meetings was held last week at the Assembly Rooms, Bath, the speakers being Revs. E. Brewer, Fuller Gooch, John Tuckwell (hon. secretary), and Mr. John Line (Reading). Addresses were given on the Inspiration of the Bible, and the fallacies and dangers of the Higher Criticism. Similar meetings have been held at Bournemouth and Reading. Mr. Tuckwell's lime-light lectures on "Genesis and the Babylonian Monuments," drew crowded audiences. Mr. A. H. Carter, assistant secretary, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., will correspond.

The House of Rest.—Mr. G. Soltau spoke at the House of Rest, St. John's Wood, on Friday, and gave a graphic account of the revival which passed over the Australian colonies some few years ago. The prayer-meeting which initiated the movement was convened by the late Rev. John McNeil and Rev. H. G. Macartney. The first conference resulted in yielded lives, a deeper interest in foreign missions, and numerous offers of service in the mission fields, in addition to generous gifts. Mr. Soltau gave a string of facts which were deeply interesting, and illustrated the reality and the far-reaching effect of this movement in the Australian colonies.

Home Missions.

Mr. McNeill in London.

THE MEETINGS AT STRATFORD.

Up to and including Friday last week Mr. McNeill held two meetings daily in the Conference Hall, Stratford. The afternoon gatherings grew beyond expectation for size in the midst of a working community, while at the evening meetings the spacious building has been crowded. The addresses have uniformly had lessons for professors as well as instructions for the unenlightened. On Friday evening this was strikingly the case, the text being Rev. iii. 20, "Behold I stand at the door and knock." Heart-searching words were spoken to church members living in the atmosphere of Laodicea, and a solemn impression followed the departure of the preacher to fulfil an engagement on Sunday in West London.

Resuming the mission at Stratford on Monday afternoon, Mr. McNeill had a hearty reception, residents in many towns and parishes finding their way to the Conference Hall. In the evening a crowded audience listened to rousing appeals founded on the story of the healing of Blind Bartimæus (Mark x. 46-52). At the close an endeavour was made to encourage decision on the part of those who felt their need of a Saviour, and were satisfied of the all-sufficient power and grace of Christ. During a season of prayer many held up their hands in token of their emulation of the blind man's example in calling upon Christ and committing themselves by faith into his hands.

The mission has been influential in many directions. Earnest ministers have attended, with much gratification, and they are rejoicing in results among their people and those without. In many a prayer meeting for weeks past the mission has been remembered before the Lord, and the good things which have been sought are at length being vouchsafed by the ever faithful Father of spirits. After this mission (closing Wednesday, April 6) Mr. McNeill rests for a few days.

SUNDAY IN THE WEST-END.

Mr. McNeill gave Sunday to the West-end; preaching twice to great gatherings in the new Metropolitan Theatre, Edgware-road. The building, which seats 3000, was crowded in the afternoon (save a few seats in the upper gallery); in the evening it was packed, many were standing, while numbers had to be turned from the door. The afternoon congregation seemed largely composed of church and chapel people, but in the evening a different class predominated, for the majority appeared little familiar with religious services of any kind. The Hyde Park Mission Choir lent effective aid both in leading the praise and in filling up the long waiting interval, for a number were in their seats forty minutes before the time of commencement.

Mr. McNeill made happy reference to the twenty-three years' service of his friend Mr. Cook in the music-hall, and his twenty-eight years' labours in the great London park. His theme in the afternoon was our Lord's interview with the woman at the well of Samaria; and a marvellous exposition it proved of the seeking Saviour and the poor blinded sinner. The business of the preacher, he stoutly maintained, is to take God's truth and thrust it home on his hearers, and to this end he devoted all his powers of pathos, persuasion, illustration, and even denunciation.

In the evening he used the narrative of 1 Sam. xvi., Samuel's choice of David as God's king, to the same grand end, pressing home God's Gospel call with a point and purpose which evidently touched deeply many in the audience. Indeed, in an after-meeting, held by Mr. Cook and his workers, many were found deeply convicted of sin.

Mr. McNeill seems to feel very deeply the importance and possibilities of the coming mission in the vast Agricultural Hall, Islington. This hall, which holds 10,000 people, has been taken for three weeks from the 17th inst. He called for a grand rally of Christians and Christian workers for the early morning meeting, at 8 o'clock, on Sunday, 17th, with which the mission is to commence. It is hoped that many will pray for a mighty reaping in the crowded district of Islington. The committee are anxious to form a choir of at least 500 voices to lead the singing during the Agricultural Hall Mission, commencing Sunday, April 17. Christian friends (ladies and gentlemen) willing to assist in this effort are earnestly requested to forward their names to Mr. J. H. Putterill, Hon. Secretary, Local Committee, Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

FRUIT APPEARING.

The question is asked, and sometimes in a way that suggests reason for doubts, "Are there any results?" For my own part, having heard Mr. McNeill again and again, I am confident that there must be. It is as certain as the promise of God, "It shall not return unto Me void." For the sake, however, of some of our "feeble-faiths," I ask you to publish the following testimonies which I, as one individual, have become acquainted with.

In connection with the Woolwich Mission we had a committee meeting a few days ago, and almost every member of the committee had an interesting story to tell. A Wesleyan minister was visiting one of his flock, and was informed that Mr. McNeill's visit had proved an inestimable blessing to that home. At a Mothers' Meeting, conducted by Mrs. L—, one of the members was rejoicing that her husband was now a converted man.

A teacher was introduced to me at Greenwich Station who was full of the meetings. She had never had such an experience, and she had taken a companion who was led to the Saviour and is now rejoicing in Him. On Friday last I got into the same railway compartment with Major P—, a well-known Christian worker, and he bore witness that two or three genuine cases had turned up at the Mission where he is working. While in a shop in Paternoster-row the same afternoon, a bookseller from Woolwich spoke to me about the Mission. A woman was in his shop a few days before whose husband had been converted. He attended every meeting, and the wife emphatically declared "he is a different man."

A City Missionary told us that a friend of his, a missionary in Greenwich, took five men over to the Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, who have not only professed Christ since, but have been instrumental in winning several of their companions.

These facts all came to me, unlooked for, as incidental testimonies to the blessing upon the Word from Mr. McNeill's lips. What must the harvest be?

No meetings during Easter Holidays.

Agricultural Hall, Islington, for three weeks, from Sunday, April 17, beginning with meeting for Christian workers at 8 a.m., and Gospel address at 7 p.m. Week nights, Mon., April 18 to May 6, at 8 p.m.

Rescue Home, Southsea.—This institution in Hyde Park-road is doing useful work in a variety of ways among fallen women. Gospel services are held throughout the year on Sundays and Fridays, a band of workers for midnight effort is affiliated with the London movement, and the preparation for a service of song by the inmates of the Home is an annual event which proves a source of delight to the poor girls, and a means of making the Gospel in this form familiar to them. Widespread sympathy seems to exist among all denominations throughout the town towards the Home and its blessed work of reclamation. The laundry is a branch which has afforded considerable assistance to the finances; but we are sorry to learn that the whole work is hampered by a debt of about £850. The treasurer and secretary is Mr. P. H. Goodman, The Ferns, Kingston-crescent, Portsmouth.

Proposed Mayfair Institute. — For many years past the pressing need has been felt in Mayfair of a Home, or Institute, or Club, where gentlemen's male servants and other respectable men, when out of situations, might have comfortable meals and beds, write their letters, and have a reading-room and a reliable registry office—a centre where all, both in and out of employment, could meet in comfort and pass spare time amid elevating and harmless surroundings. An effort is now being made to supply this need by an institute worked on a temperance basis. As being calculated to benefit employers as well as employed, the Institute meets with the cordial approval of Rev. Herbert Rowsell (Christ Church) and Rev. T. J. Filmer Bennett (Curzon Chapel), and many influential residents. All details may be had from the secretary of the provisional committee, Mr. Charles J. Pritchard, 2, Market-street, Mayfair, W.

Home of Rest, Littlehampton.

"How and where can Christian workers secure their much-needed rest?" This seems to have been the question that came to Rev. W. Darlow Sarjeant some ten years ago, when himself resting after an illness. And he was led to solve the problem in a peculiarly beautiful way.

How many there are, who, borne down by the strain of incessant work, or weakened by prolonged illness, are unable to obtain the rest and change so essential to them, because they cannot face the heavy expenses of a stay at the seaside. Others shrink from the isolation of "apartments," or the mixed character of boarding-house or hotel company, and long for a period of restful, helpful communion with kindred spirits.

The Littlehampton Home of Rest exactly supplies this pressing need. Situated in one of the most bracing places on the south coast, its social and spiritual atmosphere is as healthful as spiritual. "The Hillyers," as the house itself is called, is in every way an ideal residence. For the exhausted body, the weary brain, the over-strung nerve it offers just what each requires—rest.

It is more than probable that there are hundreds of people engaged in Christian work to-day who might some time ago have had to lay it down if it had not been for the timely help afforded by this Home. And it will be impossible to estimate the value it has been to those who are day by day to be found quietly working in the comparative seclusion of the home life, but who none the less need relaxation and change.

Of the spiritual work of the Home it would be impossible for anyone who has lived there for any length of time and knows its influence to speak in terms too high. It is not only the meetings that are held there, though they are in the highest degree uplifting and invigorating, but the general tone of the place which is so helpful.

Here there are thrown constantly together people representing all evangelical sections of the Christian Church, and the result is a delightful object-lesson in the possibility of a free exchange of religious views and experiences without a trace of the harmful influence of mere doctrinal debate. A spirit of real Christian love pervading the whole household is acknowledged by all who know it to be the most distinctive feature of the place. Already many thousands have visited the Home, and among them are thankfully counted many who, amid its influences, have learnt to take Christ for their full salvation, and have gone forth to do his work.

The management of the Home is in the hands of the Sisters, as Mr. and Mrs. Sarjeant are only able to pay periodical visits, owing to the pressure of their work in the city. Hundreds of young people are to-day stronger and more loyal soldiers for Christ in the busy life of London through the influence of Sister Emma and Sister Mary. For financial support Mr. Sarjeant has always "looked unto the hills," and, of course, help has always come. Many have spent long weeks of convalescence at the Home without being able to contribute anything towards its support, and many others have been welcomed on terms accommodated to their necessities.

In the winter months—and Littlehampton winters are decidedly above the average—the Home might accommodate many more. Let the friends of the Home who read this redouble their efforts to bring the efforts they have enjoyed before the notice of those who still are unaware of them. Communications should be addressed to Rev. W. Darlow Sarjeant, 59, Oxford-gardens, North Kensington, W.

Work in Soho.—For the last two years of a quarter of a century of Christian work in the heart of West London, Mr. William Harrison has been opening up anew old and historic ground. Orange-street Chapel and Newton Hall, the spot where Isaac Newton lived, are at the back of the notorious Leicester-square, and here this worker seeks to hold the fort. He is close to the barracks—hundreds of cabmen wait in the streets all around every night—men and women of immoral character flood the neighbourhood, so that there are unlimited spheres for work, but few workers. Could not Christians rally round our friend? We would specially mention that the hall is in the midst of the theatres of London, which are thronged every night. Can any workers suggest methods by which godly efforts could be brought to bear upon these haunts of vice? If so, Mr. W. Harrison would be glad to open a correspondence upon the subject. Address, 20, Merrick-square, Newington, S.E.

Children's Scripture Union.

ONE of the earliest of the "May" anniversaries is usually that of the workers among the children associated with the C.S.S.M. On Friday last meetings were held, afternoon and evening, in Exeter Hall; Rev. E. A. Stuart presiding in the afternoon.

The first speaker, Rev. W. E. Burroughs, of the C.M.S., dwelt earnestly on the value of the Bible to Christian workers. Three times in the New Testament the Bible calls itself a sword—Heb. iv. 12, 13; Eph. vi. 17; Rev. i. 16—and these passages are full of weighty import. The first deals with the effect of the Word on ourselves, as the children of God, as searching and manifesting evil within; the second shows its use in the conflict with sin; while the third is the Word written in the hand of the Living Word. On these lines Mr. Burroughs delivered an address of much practical usefulness to his hearers.

The Chairman began by calling attention to the Prince of Wales' Hospital Fund, and the stamp albums issued in connection therewith. He then gave an exposition of John xvi. 31. In the fourth Gospel our Lord deals on seven occasions with the reasons why men will not believe, and these passages suggested to Mr. Stuart many useful thoughts. After a rapid summary of the teaching of the Gospel he urged that those who deal with the children should hold before them the grand ideal—to seek to bring the little ones to life by faith in Christ, and then to kindle their love for Him who gave Himself for them.

Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor addressed himself specially to the question of the inspiration of the Bible, for it was to little purpose to labour in a Union of Bible readers unless the Bible speaks as the very Word of God Himself. This is widely admitted, and yet difficulties are felt, for it is one of the adversary's most insidious wiles to suggest doubts with regard to the authority and reliability of the Scriptures. He defined inspiration as consisting in the fact that it is God-breathed, that it is written from God's point of view, and gives his views and thoughts about things. It is God's Book pre-eminently. It begins with God, and ends with God. It is full of God right through. It deals with man, but only in his relation to God. He recommended his hearers to buy a penny New Testament, and where God is referred to make a blue mark: thus they would realise as never before how full it is of God. "Men spoke"—that is, there is a human element in the manner and style of the writers; but it was "as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." Hence the Word is infallible, and there is no appeal from it; and authoritative, for what it says must be done. "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them."

Rev. W. S. Standen spoke of the trash that is so commonly read by the young people of to-day, and emphasised the pressing need for seeking to realise the great object of the Children's Scripture Union, namely, to instruct the minds of both sexes of the young in Scripture truth and teaching, with a view not only of blessing to themselves, but also to those with whom they come into daily contact.

Rev. I. H. Hacker presided at the evening meeting, which was also well attended. Mr. R. Callender (assistant secretary) said a few words about the necessity of definiteness in the work, with reference to their belief, and teaching, and aim, and prayer. The chairman stated that he had been a humble worker in one of the villages of India for the past twenty years, and during that time he had the most constant friendship of and help from the heads of the Scripture Union at home. He proceeded to say that there had been branches of the Union formed in all the Tamil country, which comprised about twenty millions of people, and he had had the great honour and privilege of translating the Scripture Union cards into the Tamil language. He held that the Bible lay at the basis of our national greatness and well-being, and added that their work of systematising and getting the young people into the habit of daily prayer and daily Bible-reading was a work which would never perish.

Mr. Arthur Mercer (secretary South African General Mission) spoke with encouragement of the progress and influence of the work amongst the boys of our great public schools.

Mr. H. Hutchinson (organising secretary) said that a number of their members, when they had grown up, had gone out as foreign missionaries, and others were now contemplating doing so.

Mr. T. B. Bishop (hon. sec.) stated that there are now about 527,000 English members of the Union, and six or seven hundred thousand foreign members, including 12,000 in Japan. The leaflets issued by the Union have now been printed in fifty different languages. Having spoken with encouragement of the work in Yokohama and Tinnevelly, Mr. Bishop pleaded for more workers, not only on behalf of this particular effort, but to help in the work of the Children's Special Service Mission carried on in the summer around the coasts.

The Hope Mission.

SOME Doctor of Divinity, according to the papers last week, said that "the day of small halls in back streets was over." Now, this speaker, in reference to the particular work he was contemplating, may be right; but in regard to mission effort among the lowest classes he was emphatically wrong. Nothing touches these like the little hall in their own back street or alley; they will never go to the great hall in the main street, although, on the other hand, that great hall is a mighty centre for good among the more decent working-classes. The truth is, both are needed.

These words were ringing in our ears last Thursday as we turned down a side street off the Blackfriars-road and reached a new hall in Friar-street. Inside it is a neat, comfortable room to hold about 200. Below, on the ground floor, are various useful class-rooms. The Mission, started by Lady Hope, and taken over by Miss Martin, has been the means of blessing to many.

Mr. T. A. Denny, who presided, spoke in his own hearty style of the value of such work and of the glory of a life thus consecrated to God.

Madame Annie Ryall sang at intervals beautiful sacred solos, which must have stirred many hearts.

Miss Martin herself told how four years ago she was led to take up this work in Nelson-square, how it had grown—the mothers' meetings, the sewing-classes, the Sunday-school, and the mission services. Then came the need for new premises, the guiding of the Lord to this site in Friar-street, and the erection of this new hall, which furnished would cost about £1400, of which £1050 has been paid. As to the future she believed that God, who had blessed, would provide for the support of a work in a poor district overrun by High Church and Roman Catholic influences.

Rev. F. B. Meyer expressed his delight in finding himself surrounded on this occasion by friends from Regent's Park Chapel as well as Christ Church. In this work of the Hope Mission the sympathies of both congregations had been happily drawn out. He could not help recalling a certain Saturday evening, soon after his coming to Regent's Park, when Miss Martin opened her drawing-room for a meeting to consider what more could be done for working girls. He held that the present work really sprang out of that meeting. Miss Martin's own heart was touched. She went to Miss Macpherson for training in such service, and, after a visit with Miss Macpherson to America, returned to London, and took over the work which Lady Hope had originated in Nelson-square, Blackfriars. Her labours have been greatly blessed, and a delightful work has grown up around her, but a new place became a necessity. Now this beautiful hall, right among the people, has been built, and as Miss Martin has said, about £1100 has been paid off. She has not, however, stated what is the fact, that the sum thus paid is largely her own hard-earned savings of a lifetime, which she has thus wholly devoted to the Lord's work. Surely in such a case no difficulty will be raised as to the remaining £350. We rejoice to know that in launching this enterprise in the troubled waters of poor and sinful S.E. London, we are launching a bark which will carry the Gospel of grace as the one remedy for sin and woe.

Earnest and sympathetic words followed by Rev. G. Kerry, Rev. A. W. Evans, Messrs. Hughes, Benson, Joseph Merry, Pewtress, and Dannell.

Mr. Denny's offer of £10 if nine others would give a like amount was responded to by several, and nearly £70 were raised. Mr. Meyer urged that a united sale of work by ladies from Regent's Park Chapel and Christ Church should be held in the autumn to clear off the debt.

Mrs. Meredith's Prison Mission.

THE thirty-third anniversary of the Prison Mission, and the twenty-seventh of the Princess Mary Village Homes, was held on Saturday in the Conference Hall, Clapham-road.

Sir Richard Webster, who presided, remarked in his address that anyone who studies the question of crime, and the reclamation of criminals, could have but one opinion as to the noble character of such work as the Prison Mission carries out. He had had experience of a kindred work in connection with the Police-court Mission of the Church of England Temperance Society; and he thought it no exaggeration to say that if there was one moment in the life of either a man or woman when the holding out of the hand of kindness might save a soul from ruin, it was when a person comes out from prison, after having undergone a punishment for some offence against the law. It was next to impossible for an individual in such circumstances to obtain employment direct, in an ordinary shop or factory, or place of employment. One did not blame in the least ordinary business people, who could not look at this question from a philanthropic or a public point of view, for they were obliged, by the keenness of the competition surrounding every commercial undertaking of the present day, to look at it from a purely personal and business point of view.

Continuing, the right hon. speaker said that an institution, such as the Prison Mission, stepped in at the time when assistance was most needed. He was gratified to know that the laundry, conducted in connection with the mission, afforded employment in 1897 to no fewer than 218 women who had been discharged from prison. Many of these women had passed into respectable employment, and the character they had acquired at the institution had enabled them to get a fresh start in life. Referring to the Princess Mary Village Homes, Sir Richard spoke of the loss the institution had sustained by the death of the Duchess of Teck, but said he was glad to be able to announce that the Duchess of York had kindly consented to allow her name to take the place of her mother as patroness.

Lord Rookwood read the annual report of the Marble Laundry, which showed that there was a great need of help, owing to a breakdown of the machinery, which involved an outlay of several hundred pounds. This must be refunded by the help of kind friends. The immediate replacement of this machinery was compulsory, or the women would have been refused admittance, and this would have been a great evil. Mr. Southall, the secretary, having read the reports of the Prison Mission and Princess Mary Village Homes,

Sir Mark J. Stewart, Bart., delivered an address. He said that the 18,000 letters which were sent out at Christmas to the prisons all over the world, in different languages, accompanied by prayer, must have been a great power for good. Mr. W. F. A. Archibald, who followed, said that Mrs. Meredith and her workers were fighting the roaring lion and would be sure to conquer. Rev. A. W. Baldwin, who spoke from experience, as he had sent twenty-eight women from Wormwood Scrubbs to the mission in 1897, gave testimony to the grand work done by the mission.

It was a pleasure to see Mrs. Meredith once more able to attend the annual meeting, notwithstanding her advanced age (75). Many will pray that she may long be spared to carry on her good work.

Destitute Children's Dinner Society.—During the past four months our dining rooms have been able to mitigate much of the suffering arising from want of food. The number of dinners given amount to about 120,000. Ten days ago the spring seemed really at hand, and we had hoped by careful economy of our means, supplemented by help within our own body, that we might have reached Easter without any further aid from an ever-generous public; but the present bitter weather makes it impossible not to look for further aid to enable us to keep most of our rooms open two or three weeks longer. We need another £100 to keep the rooms open and £200 to clear us from debt. I venture to hope my present appeal may bring us help, and that those who are either going for a holiday or enjoying quietly the comfort of their own homes, will render us a little help for the poor children in Great London.

Bristol Medical Mission.

CASE after case might easily be mentioned illustrative of the many ways in which this mission has been useful in helping and blessing the thousands of sick and needy ones who every year receive its aid. In the daily round of the dispensary we may find a respectable old woman whose closely pinned shawl and clean apron hide deficiency of clothing, seated beside a frequenter of the common lodging-houses, or next a man whose appearance suggests recent release from gaol. Occasionally foreign faces are seen, and sometimes a Jewess brings her child for treatment. A short service begins the day's work, and those who, perhaps, never enter church or chapel sit listening earnestly to the doctor's plain Gospel address. It is, however, only part of the work to care for the sick who come to Redcross-street. Perhaps the most arduous portion of the doctor's labour is visiting on three days a week those who are too ill to come to the dispensary.

Much might be told of the influence of Scriptures attached to the bunches of flowers distributed among ailing folk. Close to the bedside of a patient dying of cancer, was found hanging the text, "Christ was wounded for our trangressions," with the "our" changed by pencil into "my." Friends who may wish for further information should communicate with Mr. C. B. Ker, 6, Royal-park, Clifton.

With the Troops Under Canvas.

THE other Sunday a party of Christian soldiers from Aldershot had a special field day at the Winchester Soldiers' Home, and, whatever may be said about armies and war, from what we saw of these men, soldiers are well worth saving. I had the privilege of leading the four meetings, and certainly the testimonies given were all to the glory of God, and showed the value of soldiers' homes.

As the troops will soon be under canvas for the summer Miss Perks is anxious to secure a tent to be near the men for their use and for meetings. At Pirbright the Guards have a Home within their own grounds, but men using it from the main camp can only come in full dress, which deters many from using the accommodation. A tent within the bounds would be really valued by the men.

A second use to which it would be put would be to accompany the troops in their autumn work which is to be carried out on Salisbury Plain. Here it would be a rallying point for the Christian men and a good centre for Gospel work.

Having been in the work so many years, Miss Perks feels more and more the need of going to the men where they are, and this can only be done by following where they go; and as the time under canvas is one of special hardship and temptation, the Word of God must be taken to them in this way or not at all.

A third use for the tent would be for the dark villages of our land, in so many of which the light that is already there is darkness itself; hence, how great is that darkness. £100 will be required to accomplish these objects. Wm. Luff.

Curragh Soldiers' Home.—The regiments on the camp, continually changing, afford good opportunities for presenting the Gospel message to the men who frequent the house for refreshment, reading, and recreation. In a work like this correspondence fills a prominent place. Soldiers eagerly look for letters when changed to other stations at home and abroad, and their replies are often a source of encouragement to the workers. One writes from Aden, "It does me good to hear from you, for it reminds me of the dear old place where you pointed me to the Saviour." Mothers' meetings are held in connection with the Home, also Sunday-school and sewing classes for the children. The hon. sec. and superintendent is Mrs. William Perry, Curragh Soldiers' Home, Lumville, co. Kildare.

Orphan Home, Bankfoot.—There are only a few who, in person, can succour orphans; but pounds and pence, or, at least, prayers and sympathy, are avenues of helpfulness open to all. Such is the conviction of Miss J. J. Morrison, who is ready and anxious to answer inquiries respecting this service for the Lord, at Bankfoot, Perthshire. Shelter and provision for friendless children, and the earnest purpose to train them in the fear of the Lord, by daily instruction in his Word—these are the objects of the work. They receive a plain education, and are taught housework and to make and mend their own clothes. Says the founder: "Although we cannot be to them all that their own mothers might be, yet by God's grace we seek to fill her place as well as may be, and to make a real home for them."

"Welcome" Mission, Portsmouth.

THIS mission is undenominational, and members of various sections of the Church of Christ are found working together in it for our Divine Lord and Master. Mr. Thomas Hogben, who has charge, says that twenty-five years' experience among men in Her Majesty's service leads him to the profound conviction that thoroughness and consistency upon God's own lines for saving men is what is needed, and that mere social efforts are as unnecessary as they are failing. To-day the physical and mental needs of the men are well cared for, they are well fed, well clad, and provided with abundance of recreation, and as young unmarried men they enjoy much to which the poor of the civilian population are strangers. The kindly help of the philanthropist is needed not by these but among the wives and families and, as thousands can bear witness, the ever-growing number of ex-service men.

That the Spirit of the Lord is among Mr. Hogben's workers is demonstrated by the fact that, during 1897, over 160 persons have from time to time professed saving faith in Jesus Christ. The principal work of the mission is done among sailors and ex-service men, although many soldiers as well as civilians attend the meetings. There is a large "Mothers' Help Society," well attended by the wives of these classes.

During a public-house crusade, two of the mission helpers found soldiers and young girls from seventeen to twenty years of age, playing cards and drinking in a back saloon of one tavern. An old soldier to whom books were offered churlishly refused them; but the timid worker, looking to Christ for courage, ventured to express the hope that the man would pass them to others. No, he didn't want them. She turned away, but was called back. "I say, missis! You have pluck to come into a place like this. What do you come for?" "Because God sent us and we love Jesus. Won't you have a little book which will tell you about Him?" The refusal was repeated, and again she turned away. But he cried out, "Here, missis! You can give me some books. It isn't for your sake I'm taking them. I've a son in foreign parts who goes about doing that sort of work, and I'm taking them for my boy's sake." Some of the workers could not but wonder whether that saved son was praying just then for his poor old sin-wrecked father.

Cardiff Sailors' Rest.

THE growth of this seaport makes increaing demands upon workers connected with the Rest in Bute-road. Opportunities for Christian service to those who "go down to the sea" are multiplying very rapidly. The comparatively new departments of French and Italian meetings have been a means of much good; and the Scandinavian work is in a most flourishing condition, the meeting-room being often crowded to excess.

An avowed infidel, who came to the Rest for the first time the night before sailing for a voyage of several months, afterwards wrote, "Your words that night made a greater impression on me than you thought, and, after leaving Cardiff, I took to drink to drown thought and feelings. At last I saw a drunkard's hell before me. In my despair, I cast myself down on bended knees before God, and wept and prayed, asking Him to accept me as I was, without one plea, and I bless his holy name He has done it. I thank you for your love to me. When I was without hope you prayed for me. You are doing a grand and noble work. Never despair of anyone since Christ has saved me. Thank the dear sister who spoke to me in the meeting, and God bless you all in your efforts to bring the lost ones to Jesus."

The hon. sec. of this good work is Miss Hollyer, 193, Newport-road, Cardiff.

Shipwrecked Mariners' Society.—In addition to numerous payments made in connection with relief to shipwrecked persons consequent on the recent severe gales, 100 guineas has been voted by this Society towards the fund being raised at St. John's, Newfoundland, in aid of the sufferers by the terrible disaster on the ice to the crew of the sealer Greenland. Bible Flower Mission.

DIVINE guidance and gracious provision have sustained this mission through another year in its blessed work of spreading the influence of God's Word through the individual visitation of hospital and infirmary patients to whom bouquets of flowers are taken, each bunch with a text of Scripture attached. The hon. sec. and superintendent, Mrs. Turton, has an office at 110, Cannon-street, E.C., where she has received many testimonies to the value of Bible words in giving "light and understanding unto the simple." Among the sick and poor, help afforded by means of the relief fund has been peculiarly acceptable, there being so much illness and distress on all sides. Spare clothing, too, has proved a great boon in many cases.

"Once again," says one of Mrs. Turton's correspondents, "I have to pen my grateful acknowledgment of the great help rendered me by the Bible Flower Mission. Into narrow streets and squalid courts, I have carried bright blossoms with their accompanying messages of hope, joy, comfort, entreaty, and exhortation. Primarily, of course, the people receive the texts for the sake of the flowers to which they are attached, but the message is always read, and I am convinced that the Word of God, quick and powerful as it is, is a far more efficient means of touching people's hearts than any earthly word can be."

East London Nursing Society.

THE annual meeting of this Society, which was founded in 1868 to nurse the sick poor of East London in their own homes by means of trained nurses, was held a few days ago at the Mansion House, the Lord Mayor, who was accompanied by the Lady Mayoress, in the chair. The report showed that during the year 5089 cases had been nursed, necessitating repeated assiduous visits, with 3507 recoveries. The committee had been able to keep up the number of their nurses.

The Chairman, in his opening remarks, said that he had a very great admiration for the work done by these trained nurses. It was his privilege a short time ago to visit Maidstone, and there he had an opportunity to see the great and good work which they did. As to the Society, it was an incalculable advantage for the poor to have such nurses at hand to carry out the doctors' orders.

Sir Dyce Duckworth said that the Society was a good thing in itself, and next the work done by it was very much needed. That might seem a platitude, but it was well for us to consider that there was need for such work, and that such a society existed to do the work. They also had knowledge that the work was well done, with no friction of any kind, which was a good record. Such an institution was one of the most civilizing influences that could be brought to bear upon the poor.

Sir W. H. Quayle Jones stated that the expenses of management compared well with the income of the Society. There was no extravagance, but its affairs were conducted with all due economy. The report having been adopted, addresses followed by Rev. G. T. Cull-Bennett, Mr. Tennant, Prebendary Harry Jones, and Rev. R. W. Harris, Rector of St. George's-in-the-East.

The Ashley Mission, founded by the late Hon. William Ashley, now carried on by the Ragged School Union, has been used for many years for the welfare of the poor and suffering of Bethnal Green. The founders, with a good many of the early co-workers, have been called to their rest; but during the last five years a daily work of an unsectarian character has been carried on among the very poorest. Both young and old are cared for, meetings of all kinds are held, and in a variety of ways much is done to benefit the people and their children. Thousands of free meals, principally dinners, have been provided for the hungry and starving; also mothers' meetings, Sunday-school, adult Gospel services, children's services, Band of Hope, sewing classes, open-air meetings, drift meetings, work among cripples. This work has been honorary; but so much activity and work among the poor has brought the mission hall into a condition which makes it absolutely necessary to spend a large amount of money for repairs and alterations, class-rooms, etc. We sorely need help, so that we may continue to carry on this work, if possible, with more energy in the future than in the past.—T. Miller, 104, Well-street, Hackney, N.E.

Among our Sick Folk.

THE closing months of last year and the early ones of this have found us busy among the sick, and so varied have been our patients and their complaints that a few sketches from what we have seen and heard will prove at least interesting, and will, we trust, lead to much earnest prayer on behalf of the sick and suffering in this East-end of London.

Mrs. C——, a bright, clean little woman, was laid aside with a severe attack of influenza, accompanied by internal inflammation. Her husband, delicate and not in regular employment, was most kind, and ready to do anything that her wants might be supplied. A week's careful nursing, good nourishment, and regulated ventilation worked a change, and now Mrs. C—— is steadily gaining strength.

Not many yards off is another home where there is a wee baby to be cared for. Baby is washed and dressed, a little cornflour made for the mother, and after a few minutes' talk about Him who is "mighty to save," we leave her happy that someone will come and look after the new treasure.

Our next visit is to one of the dear old widows, and on entering her little room we find her "tidied and nice," with a hymn-book open before her, repeating the words, "What a friend we have in Jesus." Her face tells the tale of true happiness and rest in the unchanging friendship of the Best of Friends.

Next door to her Mrs. E—— is sitting in a big arm-chair by the fire, and we are welcomed very heartily, as she tells us she had been asking the Lord to send somebody to cheer her up. Her face beams with joy as she says: "Though I can't get to the meetings, Miss, I have some good times with the Lord up here."

Mrs. M——, whom we next visit, is suffering from that almost incurable complaint, bronchitis. She was trying her best to get about and tidy her room, but was really too weak, and so was, after some persuasion, got back to bed. No one seems to care for her, but, amid all, she is glad in the fact that "He never faileth." Finding our way up many stone stairs, we arrive at No. 5, and inside, a weak, sickly little woman is sitting—the mother of seven children, the eldest fourteen. Six shillings a week has to be paid for rent, and she tells us that another little stranger is expected before long—yes, only another to be fed and clothed, another to share the two rooms. A pudding is sent her, and with it a ticket for bread—a most welcome gift with so many mouths to feed.

Up a few steps, behind a small shop, we next find our way, and this time it is to a woman who seems almost unfit to do anything but go to bed and rest. But this is easier said than done. The little girl (ten years old) must go to school and the boy, too; the father must go to work. Who is to do the duties of the home? Tears steal into her eyes as she tells us of lonely times when no one seems to understand, "but" she adds, "He knows." And that is keeping her up amid all trying circumstances. And so we might tell of one after another with whom we come in contact—some needing a helping hand, others a cheery word, some to seem to need but a word to bring them into the Kingdom, others who are outwardly interested, but whose hearts are as yet untouched.

We go to do what we can to ease the body, but we long more and more to be the chalice of God bearing the living water to these thirsty souls. We want, as Paul did of old, "to be all things to all men, that we might save some." Pray for us, for soon sower and reaper will rejoice together, and He shall come. The Nurse.

Home of Industry, 29, Bethnal Green-road, E.

Y.W. Home and Association, Leamington Spa.—A comfortable and Christian home, where counsel and sympathy are ever available, may be found at York House, Clarendon-place, by young girls employed in houses of business, as "day-workers." The home has also been used for over twenty years as a holiday resort for governesses and Christian workers needing rest and change, and as the headquarters of a trained nursing staff. The hon. sec. and treasurer, Miss Bagster, of 23, Milverton-crescent, reports that last year closed with "more inmates, nurses busy, cheer from numerous sources, letters telling of blessing received, and many indications too slight to mention yet making a sum total of divine indication, such as we had been very definitely asking for, that the Lord still has need of the work."

Invalid Children.

THE work of the Invalid Children's Aid Association is increasing very fast, many fresh cases being brought to notice every week, and often in urgent need of help, for their wants are legion. There seems no end to the surgical supports, jackets, or high boots needed for these little cripples, and ordered for them by the surgeons. The visitors are continually asking for a few weeks' fresh air in the country, or at the sea-side, with the pitiful reiteration, "The child looks so white and worn out," or the doctors will report, "This child needs absolute rest on his back for a year, and good nursing, and upon that depends the possibility of cure."

But funds are hard to raise, and much care and discretion in dealing with each case on its merits is needful. The good work goes on, and the blessing that the Association can bring to many a little one, so handicapped in the struggle for existence, is incalculable. The benefit conferred can best be appreciated by a personal visit to some of those beautifully appointed wards of nursing homes, in town or country, where our little ones lie in comfort, gathering strength.

To obtain an influence for good over the parents of the invalid children is an aim well worth striving after, and can best be attained through wise visitors. The house is more readily "tidied up," the child considered less of a burden, when the overworked mother knows that it is an object of special interest to someone in easier circumstances than herself. But much remains to be done; there are many homes untouched, and children still uncared for. Our representatives are crippled in their various districts by want of visitors, and could employ many, and this want presses more heavily every day on the Association as the number of cases reported to it increases.

Another matter which presses much on the attention of the Association is the training of boys and girls who, though not chronically crippled or deformed, are yet sufficiently recovered to attempt some light trade. This becomes a most urgent question as time goes on, many of the cases first taken up being now fit subjects for training schools. We have at present twelve under training for various trades, such as shoemaking, saddlery, die-stamping, watch and jewellery making and dress-making. Without some effort in this direction, the work of helping each invalid can hardly be considered rounded off, and the boy or girl started in life, and we gladly point to several instances in which young people are now earning their bread independently, and doing well.

We have a good work in hand; our means are, however, insufficient for all that might be accomplished, and it is by no means easy to keep pace with London's increasing needs. The secretary is Mr. H. G. Evered, 18, Buckingham-street, W.C.

M. F. E. H.

Home Teaching Society for the Blind.—The forty-second annual report states that the regular income of the society is far below the expenditure. The number of visits reported for 1897 was 36,075, with 34,882 loans of books. There was about 6,261 volumes in use, but a number of these, having been fingered for twenty years, need replacing. At the annual meeting a few days ago, the president, Viscount Midleton, said that the amount contributed was small in comparison with the work done. He was thankful to know blindness was not increasing in England. Rev. H. J. R. Marston, who is himself blind, took an optimistic view of blindness in England, and said the prospect was never so hopeful as at the present time. Bishop Barry advocated the larger distribution amongst the blind of the Scriptures, which would convey to them more of comfort than any other book.

London Street Mission.—This effort to extend Gospel influence in the neighbourhood of Dockhead has been maintained during the past year with continued tokens of God's faithfulness and blessing. The varied work which centres in Percy Mission Hall has done much for the spiritual and physical good of old and young. Special missions, Sunday evening services, open-air preaching, and numerous other evangelistic agencies, have brought many into the Saviour's fold; while several conversions have been witnessed in connection with the social gatherings for women. The secretary and manager is Mr. W. Bustin, 13, Priter-road, Bermondsey, S.E.; and he says that increased resources are absolutely necessary, because such a work is nothing if not aggressive and progressive. Much might be done which is at present impossible for want of an additional and larger sized room.

Work in Lower Edmonton.

A DEEPLY interesting work is in progress among working people in Lower Edmonton. Rev. G. E. Thorn commenced in 1891 with eighteen people and a very serious debt. He was led to consider "how the mass of non-churchgoers could be drawn in, when a suggestion was made that we should endeavour to reach the working men and women, who, to the number of between three and four thousand, leave the station by the 2d. workmen's trains to the city between four and half-past six o'clock in the morning. Accordingly one Saturday morning a handful of workers posted themselves in the darkness to catch the early departure. They had had 3000 handbills printed, announcing the Sunday services, and handed one to each man and woman as they filed into the ticket office. None of those present will ever forget the scene."

From that day the chapel was crowded, a work of grace began, a Christian Band was formed, other special effort sprung up. A new hall has been "opened free of debt, and the success has been so remarkable that we have had to secure 20ft. of land additional in order to extend it as soon as the opportunity offers. Every department in the work has increased with unabated vigour." The pastor's address is 8, Latimer-road, Lower Edmonton, N.

Cage Lane Mission, Plumstead.

ON the evening of the 31st ult. the Cage-lane Mission Hall, Lakedale-road, Plumstead, an active centre of Christian work, started many years since by Miss Kate Russell (afterwards Mrs. Anderson), by whom the work is still carried on with vigour and success, held its anniversary meeting.

Colonel W. G. Robinson, C.B., was in the chair, supported by Colonel Roberts, Major Stirling, R.H.A., Lieut.-Col. St. Quintin, Brig.-Surg. Lieut.-Col. R. Pringle, Messrs. John Wood, George Hughes, F. E. Paynter, and others. The Second Coming of our Lord was prominently brought forward by the speakers, and one of them spoke of the exceeding joy expressed at an Eastern wedding (at which he was present) by the people in the streets and windows of the city at the approach of the bridegroom as the virgins (amidst the sound of music) went forth, with their lighted lamps, to meet the bridegroom, shouting "Behold, the bridegroom cometh!"

At the close of the meeting it was announced that a balance due to the treasurer at its commencement was more than met by the collection made in the hall.

King Edward Missions.

A NOBLE and widely varied enterprise is carried on by this mission, which has been in existence for more than half-a-century. It is situated in Albert-street, Spitalfields, in the midst of a densely populated and very poor neighbourhood. Mr. Charles Montague, of 75, Bedford-street, London, E., is hon. superintendent.

The work is one of practical Christian philanthropy, and although many of its branches may seem to be purely secular, the central aim in all is the extension of God's kingdom. Surely there is the more prospect of that object being realized when it is shown that there is a human side to Christianity. In that belief, efforts are made toward the physical and mental, as well as the religious, training of the young; while in the case of those of older years the alleviation of distress and misery and care for the sick are made auxiliaries to the preaching of God's salvation.

Systematic home visitation of the people by the permanent staff is a marked feature of the mission, and the visitors are everywhere welcomed. By constant and intimate intercourse with the people relief is dispensed with promptitude, and with absolute certainty that only deserving and really necessitous cases are assisted.

The young are helped to grow and develop into what God would have them be, the sick are tended and their sufferings are relieved, the widow and the fatherless are protected, the down-trodden are raised, the aged have their declining years made brighter; while to all the Gospel is faithfully proclaimed.

The Primrose.

An Easter Message for the Children.

IF I were to ask you which is the first flower of the Spring, most of you would very likely answer, snowdrop. And in one sense snowdrop would have as good a right to the title as any.

But other little messengers of the opening year would put in their claim also. There are chickweed and coltsfoot, anemone and daffodil, sweet violet and celandine.

"Spring has come," says someone, "when you can put your foot on nine daisies."

Let people say what they like, however, I do not call it Spring until I see the Primrose. And then I want to see not one or two, or even nine, but scores and hundreds, studding every hedge-bank and wood-clearing with their dear old patches of sulphur-yellow.

And then I want something else to go with them. I want the beautiful Easter time. Primroses and Easter go together. We must think of them together. Indeed, I cannot imagine the one without the other. When I go rambling at Easter time there are only two thoughts which my mind will have anything to do with. Therefore, in the first place, however many primroses I see, all the country around me seems full of them. Now, am I not right? When you hie to the woods at Easter to gather flowers, don't you call it "primrosing"? You may pluck your anemones, or lady's smocks, or palm-blossom to go with them, but it is primroses that you search for.

So, in the next place, all the sky, and all the world, and all the big little world of my own heart is full of Easter. How gloriously the sun is shining this morning! As it kisses the pale yellow blossoms, how they, too, shine and smile, and speak to me of the Sun of Righteousness, and make me glad that the world is dark no more, but radiant with the light of Jesus, new risen from the dead. It is agreed then, I take it, that we think about primroses and about Easter at the same time.

Well, then, what does the name Primrose really mean? It is derived (as some of you boys who learn Latin probably know) from the Latin word primus, meaning first. So you see that somebody or other believed it to be the first spring flower, at any rate, or it would not have got the name. It does not follow that the person in question thought it the first flower to visit us. He might have called it Primus because it was in his mind the first in importance. How easily we can gather an Easter thought here. Speaking of Christ rising from the dead, Paul calls Him "the firstfruits of them that slept" (1 Cor. xv. 20).

But He was not actually the first who rose. He himself raised Lazarus and others from the dead, as you will remember. He is, however, rightly called the first one because, although the others were raised from the dead, it was only for a time. They all really died presently, and wait, like all the rest of the world, for the great resurrection which shall one day take place. Christ when He rose, did not die again. So the Bible says, "Christ, being raised from the dead, dieth no more."

So much for the word primrose. I do not think our flower has so many names as some others. In North Devonshire I have, however, heard that it is called "butter rose," and in Germany the "key flower." It is named "butter rose," I imagine, because of a fancied resemblance to fresh country butter, and "key flower" because it is supposed to unlock the treasures of the spring. But to my thinking we must not go so far as this. The primrose is one of the choicest treasures, but not the key. God alone holds that. And after the long winter of frost and snow, He unlocks the fields and woods with his golden key of wisdom, and there before us behold the wonderful treasures of birds and leaves and flowers!

But what shall we say of the treasures which Christ unlocked for us when He rose from the dead? Not that He unlocked the tomb itself on that first Easter morn. A mighty angel descended and rolled away the stone for Him (Matthew xxviii. 2). What He did was to unlock, for you and me, the kingdom of heaven. Turn with me to the Book of Revelation, chapter iii. 8, and read what He Himself says, "Behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it." And now the door is open, dear boys and girls, and within are treasures which will never grow old. Will you not believe Him and go in?

I come back to the Primrose for a last thought. I want you to notice its beautiful colour. There is not one single English wildflower besides this with the same radiant robe of palest yellow. There are plenty of deeper yellows, of reds, and whites, and blues, but no other yellow like this. Those little blossoms have a colour, and seem to have a meaning of their very own. They tell me, as I think nothing else in nature can, of the happy peacefulness of the sunny spring. I cannot properly explain it, but somehow or other that exquisite yellow seems to speak of joy and peace, just mingled together in one very happy little life. And oh! if I cannot explain the life of peace of the woodland primrose, how shall I explain the Easter peace of the Lord Jesus? Indeed, I cannot explain it. It is too wonderful. Just as that delicate tint on the petal of the primrose is different from any other colour you can find anywhere in any English wildflower, so the peace which Jesus gives to those who love Him is different from anything else in the world. True, the world can give you a kind of peace. A boy who has told a story and feels sure he will not be found out, may say to himself, "I needn't trouble; nobody knows; I am quite safe." But that is not the peace of Jesus. Before He was crucified He said to his disciples, "Peace I leave with you; my peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you" (John xiv. 29). Then when all the battle with sin and death was over, and the little company of disciples met their Master, the doors being shut for fear of the Jews, Jesus gave them, so to speak, a good-bye wish: He "stood in the midst, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you" (John xx. 19). And then He said it again, to make it quite clear, "Peace be unto you" (v. 21).

And now, what better wish can I offer to my little friends than this: that they may have his peace. It is such a glad peace—so worth the having. And it comes from simply trusting in Jesus. Most earnestly do I pray that as you gather the fresh, sweet primroses you may really know what it means; and, as you put the primroses in your baskets, the thought of Christ risen from the dead may indeed be in your hearts.

WEAVER BROTHERS IN LIVERPOOL.

THE Weaver Brothers concluded a fifteen-days' mission at Byrom Hall, Liverpool, on Sunday last, this being their second visit. Byrom Hall is the oldest Baptist chapel in the City of the Mersey, and seats 1,000. It is situated in one of the poorest parts of the city, and in the midst of a dense Roman Catholic population. Public-houses abound, and sin is rampant on every hand. This makes Gospel work very difficult, but nevertheless very necessary. An earnest, active church has been gathered, which seeks to spread the Gospel tidings in many and various ways.

A week of self-denial and special prayer was held previous to this special mission, and on two nights the prayer meetings were continued till twelve o'clock. All the workers were looking forward with great expectation to the visit of Messrs. Weaver. We now gratefully record God's goodness during their visit. Souls were saved on the first day and every meeting afterwards. Considering the difficulties of the district and the work in general, the results have been very cheering. As one man said, "It has moved the neighbourhood."

The addresses of Mr. Bewley Weaver contain no uncertain sound, and he does not hesitate to declare the whole counsel of God. His addresses are most convincing, and quite a number of men have yielded to the Saviour. Mr. Frank Weaver ably assisted by his sweet singing and active, useful labours in the after-meetings. Our brethren's visit will long be remembered, and many prayers follow them that continued blessing might attend their labours.

EVANGELISTS' MOVEMENTS.

Rev. Hugh C. Wallace, of Burnley, has conducted evangelistic services at Padiham. The expositions and addresses were listened to with rapt attention by large congregations. Souls were saved and saints much quickened.

A series of special services has been held in the North End and Cromwell-road Missions, Burgess Hill, by Mr. Ernest Bailey, of the Evangelization Society. The congregations were good, and much interest was manifested.

A very encouraging Gospel mission has been conducted in George's Hall, Dublin, by Mr. and Mrs. Harrison, of Liverpool; and a similar mission has been held in the Methodist Church, Ballymote, by Mr. J. J. Smith, of Manchester.

A fifteen days' mission has been held by Mr. John T. Vine at Lady Ashburton's Mission Hall, Custom House, Canning Town, E., and night after night souls have been brought to the Lord. At the closing meeting many testified to blessing received.

Mr. C. T. Studd held last week, in the Drawing-room of the Association Hall, Manchester, a special mission to men. Mr. Studd, who was welcomed by the young men as a former captain of the Cambridge eleven, spoke with great intensity of purpose. His afternoon Bible readings were well attended, and aroused great interest.

A ten days' mission has been conducted at Redditch, by Miss Gill, with very good results. The services were well attended and a very good spirit was manifested; the workers were very hearty and earnest. There was a great awakening among Christians and several decided for Christ. Two evenings were devoted to Webb Heath with cheering tokens. A. A. H.

A two weeks' mission has been held by Mr. David Haxton at the Mechiston Railway Mission, Edinburgh. The workers have been cheered by signs following the Word preached. Mr. Haxton's addresses have been clear and convincing, full of the Word of God and delivered at times with irresistible power. The number of railway men who have turned out to the meetings has been encouraging, and some have given manifest evidence of real decision for Christ.

A twelve days' mission has been conducted by Messrs. William Grove and Leonard Weaver in Folkestone-road Hall, Walthamstow, from March 20 to 30, with very marked results. Many souls have been saved, and the Christians have been greatly stirred and aroused. Mr. Weaver's singing was a great feature of the meetings. From the commencement unto the close the preaching was with power, and, beginning with the children in the Sunday school, there was a constant stream of blessing. The Gospel meetings on Sunday evenings will not be speedily forgotten, and the praise meeting on the last night was one overflowing with joy.

The Sunday services at Kilburn Hall were conducted in February by Mr. George Nokes with so much interest that he was urged to continue for March also. This he did, and Mr. Hurditch says:—"With gratitude to God we record much power and blessing in the conversion of souls. Mr. Nokes preaches in a simple style with homely illustrations, proclaiming the Gospel faithfully, and with the most intense earnestness. Amongst the working classes especially there have been signs of deep interest, as they have listened to the 'old, old story,' and we believe that some of them have been brought from the 'way of transgressors' to Him who is 'the Way, the Truth, and the Life.'"

A cheering work of grace has lately been manifested in the Far North of the British Islands, a great revival having broken out at Lerwick, in the Shetlands. So great was the interest in the proclamation of the Gospel among the islanders that on Sunday week, after the Methodist chapel at Scalloway had proved too small, and the Congregational chapel had been crowded out, permission was granted to use the Established Kirk. The population of Scalloway is eight hundred all told, and of these six hundred persons attended the service, conducted by Miss Jamieson and Miss Bairnson. All other services excepting the United Presbyterian were given up. After a most impressive service, many came out boldly on the Lord's side, and among them some of the most unlikely, former ringleaders in evil.

Mr. D. L. Moody has completed an eight days' mission in New York, and is now busy among the masses of Chicago. The New York meetings, held at the Grand Central Palace, Forty-third-street, were attended by great throngs of people, and, according to newspaper reports, deep spiritual impression was created. When the preacher called for decision large numbers responded. Mr. Moody remarked, at the close of the meetings, that seldom had he found so many inquiring the way of life and seeking for personal instruction; sometimes he would have to cut short the stream of interviews in order to gain a little rest. A collection was taken on behalf of the distressed Cubans, and contributions were also given towards the evangelist's work among prisoners. Mr. Moody has prepared, and is publishing, a book on The Ten Commandments, a copy of which he hopes to place in every prison cell in New York State.

Sergeant Pullinger, April 10, Soldiers' Home, Winchester; April 13, The Forge, Forest Hill; April 17, Gospel Hall, Weybridge; April 24, Lyonsdowne Hall, New Barnet.
Evangelisation Society.—Amongst missions shortly to be held are the following:—Glasgow, C. G. Roger; Great Assembly Hall, H. Collins; Stelling, J. H. Cooke; Pokesdown, G. Tuffin; Lays Hill, S. Vivian; Honey-lane, J. Lovell; Blackburn, J. Greenwood; Lassodie, H. Young; Old Cumnock, J. Galletly; Westbourne Park, A. Clark; Chelsea, J. H. Haynes; Forres, R. Hill; Marsh Green, J. Simmonds.

Requests for Prayer.

For a mission at Wick to be conducted by Mr. J. J. Scroggie, commencing April 10.

For a mission at Christ Church, Coventry, April 17 to 26, by Rev. W. R. Mowll.

For a mission in Johannesburg by Mr. William Hill, to commence on Easter Sunday.

For the work of the Stratford Mizpah Band in the open air, commencing on Good Friday.

Praise for many souls saved during Mr. Scroggie's missions at Kingussie and Newtonmore, N.B.

Rev. Edward White, who has been staying some weeks at Worthing, has been laid low with illness, the results of a chill. Mr. White bears the burden of years in a manner that affords great pleasure to his many friends.

Obituary.

MR. G. WILLIAM HAY.

At Dron Lodge, The Warren, Devon, in his 94th year, Mr. George William Hay, formerly of Whiterigg, Roxburghshire. He was well known and esteemed as an Elder of Presbytery at the time of the disruption and the birth of the Free Church of Scotland. For some years he was an invalid through an accident. He suffered with exceeding patience, and died, trusting in the "Blood of the Lamb," in great peace.

MR. F. CHARLES TAYLOR, BARRY DOCK.

This devoted Christian worker passed away on Tuesday week. He was known and highly respected by a wide circle of friends. As a member of the mission staff of the Gospel Tent Mission and superintendent of the Sunday-school he came into contact with large numbers of people. The immense crowds that attended his funeral and the memorial services revealed what a hold he had upon the affections of those who knew him. Strong men, women and childen appeared to be labouring under deep emotion, and the grief of the senior children was painful to behold; they knew that they had lost a true and faithful friend.

GENERAL GRAYDON, UPPER NORWOOD.

This devoted servant of Christ passed into the presence of the King in the early hours of the 1st inst., in the eighty-second year of his age. He was truly a Christian warrior, having for many years served his Queen and country in India, and devoted all the later years of his life to the service of the Lord Jesus. He was endowed with remarkably good judgment and a tender, loving spirit, and will be missed by a very wide circle of friends. For some years past he has been able to strengthen the hands of many who are "bearing the burden and heat of the day," and many a committee has found him wise in counsel and generous in support. In his own neighbourhood he will be greatly missed by rich and poor, especially the latter, who had good reason to know the warmth of his heart and the readiness of his sympathy. During his last hours he was divinely comforted and supported by the precious truths which he had so often given to others, and he knew the friends who called upon him quite to the last, though unable to speak to them. Many have been brought to the Lord through the evangelistic and other agencies he supported; indeed, the work of evangelisation had few warmer friends. J. W.

DR. SAMUEL DAVIDSON.

All theological libraries include some of the works of Dr. Samuel Davidson, who has passed away at the advanced age of ninety-one. A native of Ballymena, Ireland, he became Professor of Biblical Criticism in the Royal College, Belfast, as long ago as 1835. Associating himself with the Congregationalists, he was appointed Professor of Biblical Literature in the Lancashire Independent College at Manchester in 1842. During the next twenty years he produced many books which are still used and often quoted, the most widely known being "Sacred Hermeneutics," "Lectures on Ecclesiastical Polity," "An Introduction to the New Testament," in three volumes, and "Biblical Criticism." He also translated several works from the German. The broadness of Dr. Davidson's views on inspiration brought him into conflict with the college authorities, and he was compelled to resign his chair. During his subsequent residence in London he worked with zeal and patience, and among other important treatises published his "Canon of the Bible" in 1877; "The Doctrine of Last Things," 1883; besides translations of the New Testament from Tischendorf's text, of Gieseler's "Church History," and of Fürst's "Hebrew Lexicon." Dr. Davidson was a member of the Old Testament Revision Committee, and a contributor to Kitto's Encyclopædia and other great works of reference, as well as to periodical literature.

"Yet Will I Not Forget Thee." — We welcome a second edition of this sweet song from the pen of the late Miss Edith G. Cherry, as set to music by M. R. L., composer of "The Other Side of the Gates of Pearl." Miss Cherry is well known as the author of poems which have comforted the hearts of many of God's children in times of trouble and anxiety. The song (price 6d. net—7d. post free) is arranged as a solo, with pianoforte accompaniment, and is published by Mr. W. Slade, Hastings, St. Leonards, and Bournemouth; it may also be had of our publishers, Messrs. Morgan and Scott.

Letters to the Editor.

CHILDREN IN PRISON.

Sir,—Again I find children in prison! This time two little boys have been committed by the Justices at Kingston to take their trial at the Surrey Sessions. The children are aged eleven and twelve years respectively; one is four feet two inches and the other four feet four inches in height, and neither of them weighs five stone.

Now it does not need the wisdom of a Solomon to prove that a prison is no place for such children. Much has been wisely said and written upon the subject by men fully able to express valuable opinions, but sound opinions are of little use if they do not lead to sound action. The Prison Bill now before the House of Commons has caused public attention to be directed to this matter, of sending children to prison, and has called forth strong expressions of condemnation at the practice.

If the law did not permit the justices to deal with these two little boys, or if the law did not allow the justices to bind their parents over to bring them up when called upon, but rather compelled them to send them to prison, then the state of the law on the point would be bad, and in need of speedy alteration. Prison officials may be, and, indeed, are, very kind to children, but to a child a prison should be a place to be dreaded, and not a place with which he shall have such familiarity as must of necessity breed contempt. The very kindness shown to such juveniles is likely to give them the impression that, after all, prison life is not greatly to be dreaded.—I am, Sir, yours, etc., Wm. Wheatley, Supt.

A POINT FOR LADIES.

Dear Sir,—As the spring is coming on, and your lady readers will soon be choosing new head-gear, will you allow me to ask them again to avoid all those beautiful abominations which cost the lives of God's creatures?

Correspondence which has appeared in The Christian from time to time, has, to my certain knowledge, done much good, and it is a pleasing fact that one seldom sees birds, aigrettes, etc., on the heads of really Christian women. But the general use seems in no way diminishing, and it is most sad to see ladies in the highest circles wearing whole plumes of aigrettes. But the less the sympathy felt in high places, the more the responsibility of those who have a conscience in such matters. If your readers will not only eschew their aigrettes themselves, but speak out boldly, they may put offenders in this respect to shame; at any rate, they would have done their duty.

So much has been said and written about the sickening details of this barbarous practice, that I forbear to repeat it; but if any of your readers wish for information on the subject, they have only to send a stamped envelope to the secretary, Bird Protection Society, 326, High Holborn, W.C., and facts will be supplied.—Yours truly, L. L. A.

Anglo-Indian Temperance Association.

Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., presided on Monday at the annual meeting of this Association at the Memorial Hall, when Mr. W. S. Caine, hon. secretary, read the report, from which it appeared that the work of the Society was prospering, the sale of drink and of opium for smoking showing a decided falling off, partly in consequence of the prevailing distress, but also in a great measure through the closing of the shops for the sale of the smoking mixture, a result of the agitation promoted by the Association. They had succeeded in stopping the sale of the prepared drug, and the next step was to get the private smoking clubs shut up.

The Chairman said they had made substantial progress in the face of great difficulties and discouragements, and it was marvellous that with such a small expenditure they should have covered India with a network of temperance societies. But their great difficulty was that the large sums spent on frontier wars and similar unwise expenditure had to be raised by taxes on alcohol and opium.

A resolution was adopted rejoicing in the success of the agitation for the shutting up of the opium smoking dens, and the stopping the sale of smoking opium, and calling on the Government to take immediate steps for the closing of the clubs and private smoking saloons. In conclusion, the meeting strongly condemned the practice of sanctioning a larger number of stills and liquor shops than the farmers were able to take up, as giving an undue stimulus to the drink traffic. Among the speakers were Hon. A. M. Bose, Mr. H. Roberts, M.P., Sir.-Gen. Pringle, Rev. A. Parker, Mr. A. Schofield, Mr. R. Wright-Haig, Sir W. Wedderburn, M.P., Miss Lucy Guinness, and Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji.

The Book World.

THE REVELATION OF JESUS CHRIST.

Every fresh endeavour to unravel the mysteries of the Apocalypse is welcome, so long as the express design of the book is held in view, and the majestic visions are honestly and reverently expounded. Thus we have read Latter-Day Light on the Apocalypse, by Rev. Arthur Paul, Presbyterian minister of St. Hilda, Victoria, with genuine interest. While we do not agree with all the author's conclusions, we feel in reading that he accepts the book, according to its own claim, as intended "to show things which must shortly come to pass." The line of interpretation is, in the main, historical, but the author declines to follow slavishly any formulated system, basing his exposition on the construction of the Revelation itself, as he understands it. His reasoning is close and careful, while the principle he follows of taking many of the successive visions as confirmative and supplementary of each other—first from the earthly and external, and then from the heavenly and spiritual, point of view—is very interesting. His interpretation of the four riders of chapter vi. is singularly suggestive—perhaps, in some respects, it may be regarded as the chief feature of his book, affording, as it does, a key to the subsequent panorama. We commend the volume heartily, even while reserving our judgment on many points. (12s. Simpkin, Marshall & Co.)

WHAT IS THE CHURCH?

This question has often been asked, and it is actuating many thoughtful people to-day. The answer decides between Scripture teaching and Papal dogma, and "makes all the difference" in determining the claims of Rome and the contentions of Protestant theology. A thorough study of the subject, on soundly Evangelical lines, is The Church of Christ, by the late Rev. E. A. Litton, M.A. (5s. Nisbet & Co.) The author was a thorough theologian, and familiar with the history of the false doctrines that now go under the name of Roman Catholicism. He was at Oriel College with Newman and Manning, and when they "went over," and the Tractarian movement was at its height, he wrote this striking work. Just before his death, last year, he thoroughly revised the book, altering the arrangement and supplying deficiencies, in order that another generation might have the benefit of the facts and arguments here presented. The work is one of great value as an exposition of historical and Scriptural truth; the distinction between particular churches and the Church universal is ably maintained; and in dealing with sacramentalism, whether in legitimate or spurious Catholicism, the author inspires confidence by his learning, and evokes admiration by his uniform fairness and candour. Rev. F. J. Chavasse, M.A., Principal of Wycliffe Hall, Oxford, writes an introduction to this work, which is at once an exposure of Romish error on fundamental questions, and a statement and defence of Protestant truth.

APRIL MAGAZINES.

In The Clergyman's Magazine Rev. Dr. Moule writes on the Epistle to Philemon. There is an abundance of sermonic suggestion. (6d. Hodder & Stoughton.)

In addition to serials and other articles, The King's Own (6d. Marshall Bros.), has an account of the new Babylonian story of the Flood, by Mr. Theo. G. Pinches, the eminent Assyriologist.

"A Visit to the Orphan Working School" is the title of a sketch in The Temple Magazine, in which Mr. T. H. S. Escott writes on "Some Famous Editors." (6d. Horace Marshall & Sons.)

Students always find much to interest in The Expository Times. Preachers cannot but value the Great Text Commentary department, in which there are this month many welcome notes on John xvi. 12, 13. (6d. T. & T. Clark.)

A practical monthly is The Preacher's Magazine. The current issue contains, inter alia, a paper on Easter Day, by Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, and a goodly selection of homiletical contributions. (6d. C. H. Kelly.)

The young denominational paper, The Baptist Monthly, is likely to become popular. The latest part has, among other things, a character sketch of Dr. Clifford, and an interview with Rev. Samuel Vincent, the new President of the Baptist Union. (. A. H. Stockwell & Co.)

The April number of The Quiver contains many good things, amongst others "The Queen's Maundy Gifts" and "Romantic Stories of Bible Translators at Work," and "Humanity's Raw Material," glimpses of child-life in heathen lands. (6d. Cassell & Co.)

The Church Missionary Intelligencer is always interesting. This month there is news from many quarters. A very instructive article, having special reference to home organisation, is entitled "An English Diocese and Foreign Missions." (6d. C.M.S. House.)

There is a very readable sketch of the late Dr. Edward Parker, of Manchester, in The Baptist Magazine. (6d. Alexander & Shepheard.) Rev. Wallace Buttrick writes on "Distinctive Views of Baptists," and Dr. Culross begins a series of papers on the question, "Is Death the Extinction of Man's Being?"

Dr. A. T. Pierson continues to write on the spiritual movements of the half-century in The Missionary Review of the World. (1s. Funk & Wagnalls.) A notable paper is "The Condition of Women in India," by Rev. Edward Storrow. This well-illustrated monthly is replete with missionary news and notes.

The pages of The Animals' Friend are always instructive, and the engravings are a good feature. This monthly does noble battle against cruelty, especially when perpetrated in the name of science. In the current issue Dr. S. F. Smith tells us why he opposes vivisection, and his reasons are convincing in character and strongly stated. (2d. George Bell & Sons.)

The April issue of Dr. Barnardo's magazine Bubbles abates not a jot of its usual attractiveness. There are sixteen full-page pictures, printed in colours; and these include such popular subjects as "The Charge of the gallant Gordons and their Brave Piper at Dargai"; "London's great Fires: 1666 and 1897"; and "Wild Flowers of the Month." Rev. Theodore Wood discourses with his practised art of Natural History. (6d. Children's Book Room, 158, Aldersgate-street, E.C.)

In the Sunday Magazine Mr. Percy Bunting writes with great appreciation of the late Dr. Moulton and his services to Methodism. Rev. George Jackson considers the imperfections of human judgments. The Dean of Canterbury, writing in a series of papers on "Great Books," discourses impressively of the genius of Shakespeare as seen in his plays. Articles on "Frozen Food," "Native Industries," "Central Africa," and "Tramps" are among the varied contents of Good Words. (6d. each. Isbister & Co.)

In the Young Man (3d.) Dr. Horton reads a timely homily on "The Mania for Muscularity," that is sapping the moral fibre of so many of the rising generation. Among the other articles is an interview with Mr. Henry Russell, the well-known songwriter of an earlier day. In the Young Woman (3d.) the very interesting prize query is propounded and answered, "Should brides promise to obey?" Strangely enough, nearly all the answers are in the affirmative, but we look upon the following sentence from one reply as the best contribution to the subject: "Let husband and wife take for their example Him 'who pleased not Himself,' and endeavour in all things, even in trifles, to please Him; then there will be no need for one to exact obedience from the other." In the Home Messenger (1d.) Louis Wain has a very humorous picture page, representing a "Kitten's Punch and Judy." (H. Marshall & Sons.)

Bristol and its industries are sketched in The Leisure Hour both by pen and pencil—the writer being W. J. Gordon and the artist Joseph Pennell. There is an excellent and well-illustrated article in the same number on "Church and Mission Work in Australia," by C. H. Irwin. The attractions of The Girls' Own Paper are almost too numerous to specify; one article that calls for careful attention is on "How to Take Care of Your Sight." Mrs. Mayo contributes an able "appreciation" of the late Christina Rossetti. The Boy's Own Paper, among other attractions, has papers on electrical machines, also on photography, entomology, and angling. Among the many good things in The Sunday at Home, mention may be made of a reproduction, with descriptive letter-press, of Raphael's famous cartoons, the series of seven. Rev. H. J. Piggott, of Rome, writes on Mazzini and the young Italy, and there is a sketch of women's work in connection with the Canning Town Settlement. (6d. each. Religious Tract Society.)

A pathetic story of child-life, quaintly bound, is provided in Molly and I. (1s. Partridge & Co.) It is well written and healthful in tone.

The issue of an eighth edition of Diabetes, Enuresis, and other diseases of a similar nature, by Dr. William Abbotts, gives occasion to call attention to a work characterised by simplicity of description and considerable scientific precision. (2s. 6d. The Savoy Press, 115, Strand, W.C.)

The United Temperance Council issue an excellent monthly, The United Temperance Gazette. (Ideal Publishing Co.) The volume for 1897 (2s.) forms an admirable repertoire of temperance material and information. It is well illustrated and very readable.

Lincoln Cathedral, by Canon Venables, and Peterborough Cathedral, by Dean Ingram (1s. net each. Isbister & Co.) are attractive additions to the Cathedral Series. It is hardly possible to over-praise the artistic work of the illustrations, or the historic interest of the letterpress.

A succinct addition to the ever-growing literature on the Holy Ghost is The Spirit of Power in Life, Work, and Worship. By Rev. W. Talbot Hindley, M.A., vicar of St. John's Meads, Eastbourne. (6d. "Home Words" Office.) The treatment is simple and the arrangement helpful.

A booklet of verse, with the title "Rejoice in the Lord Alway," is calculated to minister refreshment to many. The song is of wild flowers and Gospel truths and scenes; and there are lines in memory of the Canterbury Martyrs, and of Latimer, Ridley, and Bradford. (1s. 6d. Operative Jewish Converts' Institution, Palestine House, Bodney-road, N.E.)

The Christian Ideal. By J. Guinness Rogers, D.D. (1s. James Bowden.) In this short but pregnant "study for the times" Dr. Guinness Rogers sets forth in glowing yet balanced language the essential elements of the true Christian, as viewed from both negative and positive points of view. He concludes that the ideal life is the wholly surrendered life.

The third annual volume of Trusting and Toiling, like its predecessors, is replete with intelligence of missionary effort on behalf of Israel, especially in connection with the Mildmay Mission to the Jews. In some degree also the pages are devoted to articles calculated to excite interest in Israel and to promote prayer and work for their salvation. (2s. 6d. W. McCluer, Central Hall, Philpot-street, E.)

While remembered by many works, the late Dr. Samuel Cox is by no means forgotten as a preacher to young people. By his volume, The Bird's Nest, and Other Sermons, he still addresses children of all ages. Being expository in character, and full of instruction, these discourses will be welcome in the preacher's study as well as in the family circle. (3s. 6d. T. Fisher Unwin.)

Mr. Charles Hastings Collette is a doughty champion of the Protestant cause, and many will be glad to read his latest work, "How Can I find God's One True Church?" The pages are a reply to a Roman Catholic tract of the same title; and they contain facts and arguments calculated to render important service to those who are engaged in the controversy with Romish error. (Women's Protestant Union, Plaw Hatch, East Grinstead.)

The longing which possesses many minds for knowledge of the unseen will doubtless provide a public for A Dream of Paradise, a poem of eight cantos. By Robert Thompson. (3s. 6d. E. Stock.) So far as we have read the author seems to avoid the speculative and to adhere to Scriptural hints as to the state of the glorified saints. Still, however, the question will arise how far it is profitable even to attempt to peer into that which God has left unrevealed.

Dr. Joseph Parker's recent address at a meeting in the Guildhall on "Regenerated London" is published as a pamphlet by Mr. James Bowden. (3d.) Dr. Parker pleads eloquently and powerfully for the formation of a "Layman's League" for the spiritual renewal of our great city. The scheme is a grandly desirable and no impossible one; the difficulty will be in enrolling a sufficient number of whole-souled, self-sacrificing Christian men to carry it out. Let all who desire inspiration on the point read the doctor's pamphlet.

The vigorous style in which Mr. Champness is wont to address his readers secures for his works a warm welcome. The Grindstone, by Rev. Thomas Champness (1s. 6d. "Joyful News" Depôt, 152, Fleet-street, E.C., and Rochdale), contains talks to young preachers marked by all his characteristic point and fervour. Well were it if all young preachers and even some no longer young laid to heart these earnest exhortations. From the same depôt comes Our National Sin, by H. T. Smart, and John the Baptist among the Methodists, in two parts (1½d., post free), the former dealing with the drink evil and the latter with the need of "a vision," emphasising our need of the power of the Holy Spirit.

From The Religious Tract Society.—Pilate's Gift, and Other Sermons, by E. A. Chadwick, D.D., Bishop of Derry. (5s.) The Service of the Mass in the Greek and Roman Churches, by C. H. H. Wright, D.D. (1). Buds and Blossoms, by the Author of "Probable Sons." (1s. 6d.) The Story of the Religious Tract Society: A Souvenir.

The Y.M.C.A.

The North-eastern District Conference will be held at Morpeth on Easter Monday.

The Mayor of Honiton, Mr. D. W. Buchanan, has been elected president of the local association for the ensuing year.

Mr. F. W. Lawrence, president, welcomed the members of the Beckenham Association at a social reception on March 29, when a new secretary of the association was appointed.

At a public gathering under the auspices of the Ambleside Association Mr. John Fleming, president, was in the chair; and brief addresses were given by the travelling secretary and by Mr. F. Wilson, of Kendal.

The annual public meeting of the Oakenshaw (co. Durham) Association was presided over by Mr. Joseph Lingford, J.P., Bishop Auckland, and addresses were delivered by Mr. W. M. Hudson, South Shields, Mr. C. Thompson, and Mr. W. C. Pike, Sunderland.

An interesting gathering in connection with the Deptford Yard Institute (Sir James Laing's), Sunderland, was held under the presidency of Mr. Hugh Laing. A short address was given by Mr. J. C. Moor. An excellent work for young men has been done by Miss Newman in the district.

The work of the Kennington Y.M.C.A. has been placed upon a greatly improved footing. On Wednesday evening a successful public meeting was held in connection with the association, when addresses were given by Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., Dr. Harry Guinness, and Mr. W. Hind Smith.

The new buildings of the Pietermaritzburg Y.M.C.A. have been publicly opened by his Excellency the Governor of Natal. The Hon. Henry Bale, Q.C., the Mayor, the Hon. J. L. Hulett, Col. Owen Hay (Commander of the Forces), and other gentlemen of influence took part in the proceedings.

The Glasgow Association has a membership of 8000, or one to every 100 of the population. The association seeks to establish a Young Men's Sabbath morning meeting in the various churches; there are now 230 such meetings in Glasgow. There are a great many young men not connected with any church, and by becoming associated with such meetings it is found to be a stepping-stone to church connection.

The monthly meetings of the National Executive of Young Men's Christian Associations were held at Exeter Hall on Friday, the 1st inst. In the morning a special committee was occupied with the consideration of the question of the inner spiritual life and tone of the associations—formulating for discussion at the half-yearly meeting of the full council at Nottingham in June a number of important suggestions having relation to the deepening of the spiritual life of, and the promotion of the missionary spirit amongst, Y.M.C.A. members throughout the Union. In the afternoon the executive extended a cordial welcome to the president, Sir George Williams, upon his return in excellent health from South Devon, where he has spent the winter; and to Lord Kinnaird, who has recently returned from a tour in India, and who gave a brief and interesting account of his impressions as to the value of the work being done by the associations among young men in that country.

Irish Notes.

Rev. David Purvis, of Gourock Free Church, Scotland, has accepted a call to Elmwood, Belfast, which has been so long without a pastor.

The annual meetings on behalf of the Methodist Missionary Society have been in progress in Ireland during the past fortnight, and during that time nearly every portion of the country was visited. Much enthusiastic preparation was made for the anniversaries.

Under the will of Mr. Jno. Brooke, Q.C., and his sister, Miss Brooke, of Brookhill, co. Derry, nearly £40,000 goes to charitable institutions in Dublin, while the Presbyterian Church gets £2300, and the Lifeboat Institution and Shipwrecked Mariners' Society are left £1600. A large sum is also left to charities in Londonderry.

The Protestant Orphan Society for Down and Connor has had during the past year, with a single exception, the largest income it has ever had, and it is considering the practicability of raising the amount paid per child to mothers from £4 to £5 a year. The number of children on its roll at the close of the year was 738, against 714 the previous year.

The mission to the adult deaf and dumb in Cork is doing a useful work. The missionary, Mr. McCormick, visits once or twice a year nearly every deaf and dumb person who is a Protestant south of Dublin, and thus helps not only to instruct but to comfort and cheer these silent and lonely ones, to whom too much sympathy has not been extended in the past.

Scottish Notes.

St. Mary's Free Church (Rev. Robert Howie), Govan, Glasgow, has a membership of 1233 on roll and 1630 scholars in Sunday school.

The chairman and the majority of members of the board of the Great North of Scotland Railway have refused consent to run Sunday trains.

The Christian Workers' Training Institute, under the auspices of the U.P. Church Presbytery, Edinburgh, has just closed its second session.

Rev. Dr. Watson, Free Church, Largs, has just celebrated his jubilee. He has been thirty-four years minister of this congregation, and he is much esteemed, and has done good work.

Dr. Hastings, Kinneff, editor of Expository Times, has received a call to Wilson Free Church, Dundee. The U.P. Church of Scotland is this year able to mark a great increase on the grand total of her contributions over any year in her history. The total income was £398,314 3s. 1d., an increase over last year of £40,078.

The Spring Conference of the Scottish section of the British Women's Temperance Association was held at Aberdeen on March 30. There was a large attendance of delegates from all parts of Scotland. Interesting details were given as to the work of the Society, thirteen new branches having been formed in Scotland during the past year.

The annual meeting of the First Free Church, Blairgowrie, was held on the evening of Thursday, March 24; Rev. William Muir in the chair. Among the speakers were Rev. William Todd and Mr. James Guthrie. The reports for the year showed a great deal of successful home mission, temperance, and other work done during the year. The membership is now 759, the highest point reached for twenty years.

The Lanarkshire Christian Union is now in the sixteenth year of its existence. The influence of its work has been felt far and wide, and a much needed sphere of testimony for Christ occupied. In addition to conferences and conventions, evangelistic work has been carried on steadily by the five evangelists employed by the union, and much blessing has resulted from their labours. During the summer much of this work is carried on in tents. The approximate attendance at the Gospel meetings was 108,000.

The half-yearly communion sermon, instituted by the late Mr. John Hope, W.S., for the purpose of promoting the use of unfermented wine at the Lord's Table, was held in Queen-street Hall, Edinburgh, on the morning of Sabbath, April 3. There was a crowded attendance, every seat in the large hall being filled. The ministers were accompanied to the platform by over fifty elders from the Evangelical churches. The service was conducted by Revs. Gordon B. Watt, Established Church, Kilmarnock; Henry Fergusson, Broxburn U.P. Church; and G. W. Taylor, of Free Caslops.

A Raffle for Souls!

Yesterday, in a Roman Catholic church in Mexico, I read the following notice: "Raffle for Souls.—At the last raffle for souls the following numbers obtained the prize, and the lucky holders may be assured that their loved ones are for ever released from the flames of Purgatory: Ticket 841.—The soul of the lawyer, James Vasquey, is released from Purgatory, and ushered into heavenly joys. Ticket 41.—The soul of Madame Calderon is made happy for ever. Ticket 762.—The soul of the aged widow, Francisca de Parras, is for ever released from the flames of Purgatory.

"Another raffle for souls will be held at this same blessed Church of the Redeemer on January 1, at which four bleeding and tortured souls will be released from Purgatory, according to the four highest tickets in this most holy lottery. Tickets, one dollar. To be had of the father-in-charge. Will you, for the poor sum of one dollar, leave your loved ones to burn in Purgatory for ages?" (Rev. F. S. Barton, of Mexico, in Christian Endeavour World.)

Among the Churches

Church of England.

Rev. J. Meklen has been appointed vicar of St. James', Wolverhampton.

Rev. F. H. Bolingbroke has been instituted to the vicarage of St. Jude's, Gray's-inn-road.

A mission chapel is to be erected for the Hunsonby and Winskill townships of the parish of Penrith.

Rev. J. T. Lang, formerly of St. Benet's, Cambridge, has been appointed vicar of Christ Church, Finchley.

Rev. Horace Pattison, curate of St. John's, Hoxton, has been appointed curate-in-charge of the parish of Shincliffe, Durham.

A new church is proposed for St. James', Muswell-hill. A new church is also to be built at the corner of Jeffrey's-road, Clapham-road.

Bishop Fisher, late of Southampton, has been instituted to the united rectories of Burgh St. Margaret-w.-St. Mary and Billockby, Norfolk.

The annual "quiet day" of the lay helpers of the London Diocese was held on Saturday last in the crypt chapel of St. Paul's Cathedral.

At a meeting of the London Women's Union, a branch of the Church of England Temperance Society, Mrs. Creighton said that she saw more evidence of permanence in much of the work of temperance reformers than was the case some years ago. Women's work amongst women promises to reap large harvests of good.

The annual meeting of the Inns of Court Mission was held last week in Lincoln's Inn Hall, under the presidency of the Lord Chancellor, who said he was glad that the work had had the assistance of some of Her Majesty's judges, and notably of Mr. Justice Wills. Lord Cross commented on the fact that already, after a few months' work, over 200 men and boys working in and about Covent Garden Market were connected with the Mission. The Solicitor-General thought the members of the Bar could, if they would, assist very materially in improving the monotonous lives of their poorer brethren in the neighbourhood. Mr. Justice Wills spoke of the pleasure he had derived from personal contact with the work, and Prebendary Richards bore testimony to the value set upon it by the clergy of that very thickly-peopled district of London. The Warden, Rev. H. G. D. Latham, gave some account of the Mission.

Congregational.

Albion Church, Southampton, reports 424 members.

The centenary of Woodford Chapel has been celebrated.

Rev. W. J. Betts, of Wycliffe, Bristol, has accepted the pastorate at Totnes.

Mr. J. H. Harlen commenced his ministry at Bedford-street Chapel, N.W., on Sunday.

Mr. Harry Rose, evangelist, Brighton, has had a unanimous invitation to Ashling, Chichester.

Rev. J. H. Jowett, after a three weeks' rest, has resumed his work at Carr's-lane Chapel, Birmingham.

The second International Council of the Congregational Churches will be held at Boston in September, 1899.

Rev. John D. Jones, B.D., of Newland, Lincoln, has accepted a call to Richmond Hill Chapel, Bournemouth.

The Welsh Congregational Union will hold its annual meetings this year at the Memorial Hall, instead of one of the large towns of the Principality.

Dr. Joseph Parker, of the City Temple, has been presented with an address by the general body of Dissenting ministers on the attainment of his jubilee of ministerial service.

The work at Dawes-road Chapel, Fulham, is reported as full of encouragement. There are now 405 members, of whom 59 have been admitted during the past year, making 284 new members during the present pastorate, which commenced in 1894. In the Sunday-school are 721 scholars. The P.S.A. has an attendance ranging from 700 to 1100.

Last week completed a series of twenty-six weekly concerts provided for homeless men at Medland Hall, under the auspices of the London Union. These have been attended by over 10,000 men, all of whom were supplied with half-a-pound of bread each, and, to the extent of 300 men per night, with sleeping accommodation. Medland Hall is now being enlarged at a cost of over £2000, and in a short time the additional space will allow of 450 men being admitted every night.

Baptist.

Rev. S. Lindsay, Burray, Orkney, has accepted a call to Coatbridge, N.B.

Rev. T. House has accepted the pastorate at Stockton-road, Sunderland.

Rev. T. H. Sparham has resigned the pastorate at Great Ellingham, Attleborough.

A new chapel is to be erected at Maesteg, while a new chapel at Corris, Merioneth, will be opened in July.

Rev. W. Burnett has resigned the pastorate at Coseley, and will close his ministry there at the end of June.

Rev. W. Mursell, late of Blackburn, was inducted on the 27th, to the charge of the Coats Memorial Church, Paisley.

Rev. W. H. Rose, for eleven years pastor of Providence Chapel, Reading, has accepted the pastorate at Carmel, Woolwich.

On March 31, at Trinity Chapel, Hackney, Rev. J. Gritton, D.D., bade farewell to the church, after a pastorate of four and a-half years.

Mr. Joseph Mayhew, after preaching January and February at Shalom, The Oval, Hackney, has accepted an invitation to the pastorate.

Rev. G. H. James, who after a ministry extending over seventeen years has relinquished the pastorate at Woodborough-road, Nottingham, took leave of the congregation on Tuesday week.

The pastor of Hendon Baptist Church, Rev. S. A. McCracken, had the great pleasure of receiving twenty-two new members into fellowship last Sunday evening. The majority of these were brought to the Lord during the recent mission conducted by Mr. E. P. Telford.

The men's Bible-class at Highgate-road Chapel, N.W., grows steadily, and is full of profound encouragement. A new hall has been erected, at a cost of £400, at the rear of Grove End Lodge, Highgate-road, for the use of the class. The Bible-class numbers nearly 100, and is largely composed of men employed at the large railway works in the vicinity.

The work at Dalston Junction is going on well. The pastor reports a membership of 630, of whom ninety-three have been received during last year. The total amount raised for all purposes is £1552. The Christian Endeavour Society has a membership of 132 for the seniors and fifty-two for the juniors; nineteen of the members have joined the church during the year. The Sunday-school has 700 scholars with fifty-one teachers, and has contributed £45 towards foreign missions.

This is the fiftieth year of the existence of Bloomsbury Chapel. It was erected in December, 1848, by Sir Morton Peto; the first Nonconformist chapel in London to be erected in a prominent position on a leading thoroughfare. The celebration of its jubilee will therefore be regarded with general and sympathetic interest. It has been decided to thoroughly modernise the building by reseating it, installing the electric light, providing new heating and ventilating arrangements, etc. The work will be carried out in October and November, during which time services will be held at Exeter Hall. On Tuesday, June 21, which will be termed thanksgiving day, the pastor will be in the vestry from 8 a.m. to 9 p.m. to receive gifts.

Methodist.

An interesting mission has been held at Tow Law.

Rev. W. H. G. Shapcott, of Brampton, has resigned his position as a Primitive Methodist minister, and has entered the Church of England.

Whiteinch Mission, Glasgow, is one of the most successful of Primitive Home Missions, and has cost the missionary funds very little, having supported its minister from the beginning.

New chapels have been or are about to be built in Ombersley-road, a crowded district in Birmingham, West Hartlepool; Fulwich-road, Dartford; Aberavon; Castleford-road, Nottingham; Ladypit, Leeds.

Rev. W. L. Watkinson, president of the Wesleyan Conference, was the special preacher on Monday at the ceremony of opening a new Wesleyan chapel at Beeston Hill, Leeds. The building, which has been erected at a cost of £1400, provides accommodation for 250 persons.

Rev. Thomas Waugh, Connectional evangelist, has conducted a special mission at Harpurhey Wesleyan Chapel. Services for women on Sunday afternoons were addressed by Sister Annette, of the Manchester and Salford Mission, and by Miss Webb, of the Star Missionary Home.

A series of midnight meetings have been held during the past week at the Central Hall of the Manchester Mission, addresses, with lantern views, being given by Rev. S. F. Collier. The mission bands have paraded the streets before each service, and workers have been stationed at various points to invite hearers.

The annual meeting of the Wesleyan Education Committee took place in Wesley's Chapel, City-road, last week. The chair was occupied by Mr. Howarth Barnes, editor of The Schoolmistress. The secretary (Dr. Waller) presented the most satisfactory report he had had the pleasure of submitting during the sixteen years he had been secretary. He described the Voluntary Schools Act as the most important educational event during the year.

The anniversary of the Surrey Chapel Central Mission was celebrated on Tuesday week by a series of successful meetings. In the afternoon Mrs. Stewart, of Blackheath, presided over a sisters' meeting, which has special reference to the work of Sister Annie, whose labours among the poor of the neighbourhood have been greatly blessed during the past four years. Sister Annie gave a thrilling report of her work in the district, and sketched a few of the 1606 cases that have been visited during the past year. A great thanksgiving meeting was held, and a goodly array of ministers as well as a large congregation gathered to congratulate Rev. J. Tolefree Parr and his people on the accomplishment of the debt reduction scheme.

A public meeting to inaugurate the erection of the Wesleyan Central Hall in South London for evangelistic purposes was held at Exeter Hall on Tuesday week. Rev. Dr. Pope presided. Rev. H. T. Meakin said that the site secured by the South London Mission for the central hall, at a cost of £8000, was situated in the Bermondsey New-road, at the junction of the Tower Bridge and two other important roads. The large hall, which would be octagonal in form, would seat upwards of 2000 persons. Rev. Dr. Pope said that they were making great demands upon their people. At Bolton they were spending £25,000 on a central hall, and one gentleman had promised £5000. At Edinburgh they had paid, or had to pay, £20,000 for a site, and were going to expend another £10,000. At Leeds, Oxford-place Chapel was being altered at an estimated cost of £20,000.

Presbyterian.

Rev. W. A. Galt, late of Walsall, has been inducted at Ilford.

Rev. Wm. Marwick has sailed for West Africa to labour at Old Calabar.

Rev. John Sloan has been ordained at Kingston-on-Thames in succession to Rev. W. D. Wright.

Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, of Notting-hill, has been invited to succeed Rev. Robert Taylor as convener of the Jewish Mission.

It is stated that the mission station at Rampore Bauleah, the only post occupied by the English Presbyterians in India, is to be handed over to the C.M.S.

Rev. Alexander Connell has taken the place of the late Mr. Hugh Matheson as convener of the Foreign Missions Committee, and it is proposed to ask the Synod to release Mr. Connell for eight months from his pastorate at Regent-square in order that he may visit the Society's stations in the mission field.

Professor Iverach, of the Free Church College, Aberdeen, has been appointed to the newly-founded Deems Lectureship of Philosophy in the University of New York. The subject of Professor Iverach's lecture is "Theism in the light of present science and philosophy," and the course will consist of six addresses.

The position of the Sustentation Fund in connection with the Presbyterian Church of England came under review last week at the meetings of the synodical committees, and satisfactory returns were received. The year ended with a credit balance of £1092. Of the 311 congregations in the Church, only 41 are non-contributing. Of those which contribute, 137 gave last year £5792, 34 were simply self-sustaining, while 93 were recipients of aid. The grants averaged £62 9s. 7d. to each church.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

GOOD FRIDAY and Easter Day are over, but the influence and grace of the events of which they have again reminded us ought to abide with us for ever. Jesus "tasted death for every man," therefore the love of Jesus should constrain us to live for the salvation of men, "despairing of no man." When Jesus rose again He said that all power had been given to Him in heaven and earth; "go ye, therefore, and make disciples of all nations." The work is not too great, because "the power" is with us "always." We may well shrink if we lean on our own strength, but the work is the Lord's. Easter memories, Easter power and glory and life call us to a new consecration for the good of all mankind. If, when Advent comes, we may pray — "Our Father...thy kingdom come," at Easter we may say, in a glad faith which recognises in the Resurrection the earnest of the ingathering of the people—"Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory."

"Passion week is always a quiet one in racing circles."—[Daily Paper.] Is there any unconscious irony in this extract from the racing programme of this week? It would be interesting to follow this lingering relic of conformity to the suggestions of the Church calendar to its source. That our professional gamblers and book-makers are deterred from indulging in their favourite sport by the memory of the great event which gives the season its religious significance is not very likely. But many pseudo-religious customs remain long after their spiritual meaning has vanished; and in this pause in the excitements of the racing-field we have an instance of a tendency that runs through the whole of social life. Outward forms often survive the higher realities that gave them being. Let every man examine himself lest he fall into this snare, for it is one that besets other than racing circles.

The labour trouble in South Wales is assuming alarming proportions. A hundred thousand men on strike is a serious threatening of many associated industries.

Thousands of men in steel and plate works, who have no sort of quarrel with their employers, are thrown idle, and there is already ground for fear that some foreign markets will be permanently lost if the quarrel continues. Meantime, the men have met and formulated their demands, and these are being considered by the coal-owners.

We trust that some compromise will be possible. On both sides there is need of remembering how each party is dependent upon the other. There is no remedy for these continuous misunderstandings between capital and labour except the application of the principle of Christ.

There is very much to be admired in the statesmanlike treatment by the American President of the difficult diplomatic relations of America with Spain in connection with the liberation of Cuba. It is mainly owing to his calm consideration of the whole question that war has not been entered upon already. He does not mean to be driven to a declaration of hostilities by an irresponsible war-party. He told the representatives of the European Powers that the policy adopted by the Government of the United States was pacific, and that it would be unswervingly pursued.

It is significant (says The Times) that contemporaneously with this striking reassurance...the New York Chamber of Commerce...should have passed a resolution in support of the President's policy, protesting its attachment to peace, but avowing that, should war be unavoidable, its burdens will be met without shrinking by the commercial and industrial classes.

The disciples of Christ will not fail to pray, in view of the strained relations between these two nations, "Give peace in our time, O Lord!"

A heartrending account appeared in the Daily Chronicle of misery, destitution, and hunger in Cuba. Unless something is done, and done effectively at once, there will be no inhabitants left. The state of the whole island cries aloud for redress. Only its independence under an immediate humane régime can save from death the starving people who remain.

The misery and destruction make one fear that action is too late—that Cuba will simply be an unpeopled, ravished desert for a new race to reopen and civilise. Where in August I saw towns with 4000 reconcentrados, now there are not 500 left, and the residue cannot last many weeks...At every settlement dead bodies lay awaiting interment; in the huts skin-clothed skeletons—hideous mockeries of childhood—lie on the muddy ground, their abdomens distended, feet swelled, and hair gone, while a few stronger women and children supplicate for alms that are so seldom forthcoming.

The pen-pictures are sickening and awful beyond all imagination. To this state the people have been reduced, while professedly Christian nations have been hesitating whether or not the freedom of the people shall be settled by an appeal to the arbitrament of war. Justice must speedily be done to this grievously wronged island. Christianity pleads for humanity's sake that the distressed people be saved by some means, but by peaceful measures if possible.

The offer made by the Pope to mediate between Spain and the States was taken as an opportunity by some of our daily newspapers of "booming" that functionary as though something very wonderful had been done. This has become a regular thing recently. No chance is lost to increase his prestige in this country, or to magnify his "world-wide influence," etc., and this in papers that circulate predominantly among Protestants and Nonconformists. Is it not time that some protest were lodged against this sort of thing? Every lover of peace and concord would be grateful to the Pope or to anyone else if he succeeded in averting the horrors of war between two nations. That is no reason why a mere offer to mediate, which was promptly rejected by one of the parties, should be made an excuse for indirectly extolling the Papacy in the person of its first official.

When considering Russia's advance in the Far East the importance of the clerical deputation of Nestorian Christians to the Holy Synod at St. Petersburg is apparent. It appears that this church has sent three representatives from Urumiah (Persia), headed by the bishop of the neighbouring diocese of Suppurgan. The definite intention was to bring about a union with the Russian Orthodox Establishment. The delegates represent 65,000 Nestorian Christians, 15,000 of whom have signed the appeal for union. The grandeur of the Russian service in the cathedral on the first Sunday in April filled them with feelings of ecstatic devotion. When they appeared before the Russian hierarchy and Holy Synod, the Nestorian bishop signed the necessary document and the Synod unanimously resolved to "receive the Syro-Chaldean flock into the fold of the Russian Church." Had this been a union of Evangelical churches we could have rejoiced with unfeigned joy. But the simplicity which is in Jesus Christ is lost in the elaborate ritual and sacraments of the Russian Church and her priestly assumptions.

Do English Christians realise that of the 214,000,000 Mohammedans in the world more than one-fourth are British subjects in India? The district under the care of the Bishop of Lucknow contains six millions, and yet he has to say that the Church he represents has no missionary in the N.W. Provinces and Oudh who can be said to have made the conversion of the followers of Islam his particular aim. In response to an appeal from the Bishop it has been decided to set apart, at as early a date as possible, Rev. A. E. Johnston, of Benares, to begin the work. Mr. Johnston, who is connected with the C.M.S., is believed to possess many of the qualifications requisite for the work, and would be prepared to devote himself to it. Mrs. Johnston is a daughter of the late Mr. Sherring, L.M.S. missionary at Benares. An earnest appeal is made for other helpers to accompany them. "One man does not make a strong mission."

Let no one speak of being "too nervous" to do anything for Jesus Christ. Inability to speak or to do anything in public is one thing, but it is another to be without power to serve in any way. Mrs. Sharman, of Sheffield, mother of Rev. J. Sharman, of the L.M.S., Madagascar, was both nervous and delicate, and yet, practically, she did the work of a city missionary. By individual talks, and house-to-house visits, by the inauguration of Bible-classes and religious services at hours and places convenient for them, she was able to do a great work for policemen, railway-men, and other men of a similar grade, hundreds of whom she won for Christ. She recently died, and her remains were carried to the grave by two policemen, two railway men, two post-office employés, a tram-man, and a cabman. Nor is hers a solitary instance of naturally nervous workers being greatly used of God in special spheres of service.

The Vicar of Eccles, Hon. and Rev. A. T. Lyttelton, has raised the question, "Who should be considered members of the Church of England?" in a way that should command the sympathy of all Churchmen. The old test of baptism does not satisfy him, as it cannot satisfy anyone who is not a blind sacerdotalist, and he inclines to confirmation as the true test. His discussion of the matter, however, shows that there is no logical halting-ground between the sacerdotalists and those who would make Church membership entirely dependent on personal religious experience and self-surrender to the claims of Christ as Saviour and Lord. Any middle course results in confusion of thought, and in practical denial of the conditions of discipleship everywhere insisted on in the New Testament. A spiritual kingdom must have spiritual tests, and the Church of England must not be regarded as the exclusive synonym for the Church of Christ.

Dr. Parker, at a recent recognition service, spoke strongly against the "disastrous opinion that has been prevailing recently among congregations that no minister should be elected who is over forty." That this is a growing tendency among vacant churches is unquestionable, and it is militating greatly against the welfare of both ministers and congregations. There are some callings more efficiently served by young men than by the middle-aged. The ministry is surely not one of them, but one that needs large knowledge both of men and of the truth to be preached. It will be a good thing for the country if the fashion for young men in the pulpit is kept within due bounds, and a welcome given to men of mature years and ripe experience of the deep things of God as teachers and pastors of the flock.

The "genius of the English people for self-abasement" has been indulging itself unduly in several directions recently in the religious world, and discussions of the "leakage" from Methodism, and the "drift from chapel to church" fill the columns of several of our religious papers. Anything that tends to awaken the public mind to the perils of sacerdotalism on the one side, and of worldliness on the other, must, of course, be a good thing, but in the other scale should be placed the movements going on in the opposite direction. Much of what is called Methodist "leakage" means the enrichment of other churches, and the stream that flows from "chapel to church" is largely compensated by the numbers who join the Nonconformist bodies because they are disgusted by the ritualistic tendencies of the Anglican Church. When the latter balance is struck, we believe that the result will not be found so unfavourable to the Evangelical bodies as many seem to think.

As to the remedies suggested for the leakage from "Chapel" to "Church," there are some that do not appeal very strongly to truly Evangelical minds. The notion of endeavouring to stem the tide by attempting to satisfy the "æsthetic tastes" of those who crave for a more elaborate form of service does not appeal to the highest motive in religion. The strength of the Nonconformist churches has always lain in the directness and simplicity of their methods; and an attempt to introduce the liturgical and formal elements in worship is not likely to produce the highest results. The true remedy for all kinds of leakage is greater reality in the spirit, not increased elaboration in the form, of worship. The church that is characterised by earnestness, and activity, and spirituality is the church that must succeed in the end.

Principal Rainy, in an address on "The Ministry," delivered at the close of the session of New College, Edinburgh, named two qualities as being necessary to ensure success—sincerity and disinterestedness. The terms are happy because not hackneyed. Sincerity —"we believe, and therefore speak"—"as of sincerity, as of God, in the sight of God, speak we in Christ." Disinterestedness—"the love of Christ constraineth us." If these two qualities exist, their influence and effect will pervade every sermon and all work, as also their absence will be perceptible in everything done, though none may quite know what is lacking.

A third point urged was the cultivation of a sound judgment in dealing with the dispositions, difficulties, and tempers of the minds with whom a minister has to deal. During college days theological students have mainly to relate their minds to the world of thought as regards certain great subjects of study. Afterwards they have to bring to bear on life the results of their training; in other words, to do good. The speaker acknowledged that there had not hitherto been a sufficiently close connection between the theoretical and practical parts of the work of preparation for the ministry. It will tend to remove some lingering prejudices against college life when this is more fully realised and acted upon.

It appears that some anxiety is felt in America as to the effect of the Epworth League upon young persons connected with the Methodist Church. There is danger of its falling into worldly ways of doing its work. It is described by one correspondent of Zion's Herald as an organisation independent of the Church, as absorbing interest and energy that would otherwise go to the Church, and as detracting from the Sunday night audience. The most excellently conceived institution will get out of its course unless humility and watchfulness are ever at the helm. A good servant, it may become a bad master to the Church, which is equally true of Christian Endeavour, literary, mutual improvement, and other young people's societies. So far as Sunday night is concerned we should suppose that members of the League are engaged in practical work, in which case the "detracting" may prove an aggregate gain.

Valuable testimony of the helpfulness of the Bible Reading Association was given at the annual gathering last week of the I.B.R.A. by Mr. Albert Spicer, M.P., who acknowledged the great assistance it had given him as the superintendent of a Sunday-school, and also as the conductor of family worship at home. Said he—

> It is no easy task in these days to keep up family worship regularly, making it interesting and helpful; but this society gave a new point to it, by suggesting a topic for each week, and by giving a few thoughts for meditation morning by morning.

He specially recommended it to busy gentlemen occupying similar positions to his own. It is often thought that public men do not need any spiritual help; but they unquestionably need more and not less opportunity of getting fresh strength to meet the temptations to which they are exposed. There is an endeavour to bring up the membership of this society to a million by the annual meeting of 1901.

Mr. Andrew Lang has joined in the cry that is growing general and loud against some of the vagaries of the Higher Critics. In a striking article in Longman's Magazine on the Polychrome Bible, in which the alleged various strata of authorship are printed in colours, he throws down the challenge boldly:—

> If the people, or anyone, think that the riddle of Bible criticism is mastered, I congratulate it or him on inexperience of misfortune. It has been my lot lately to read a good deal of Biblical criticism, made in Germany. The method is simple and Teutonic. You have a theory, you accept the evidence of the sacred writers as far as it suits your theory, and when it does not suit you say that the inconvenient passage is an interpolation. It must be, for, if not, what becomes of your theory? So you print the inconvenient passage in green, I suppose, or what not, and then the people know all about it.

Mr. Lang speaks, professedly, not as an Orientalist, but as a man of letters who knows much about the conditions of authorship; and his opinions have all the more weight since he has no conservative "bias" against the findings of the critics. The article is pungent and full of interest.

Professor David, of the University, Sydney accompanied by his wife, recently went on a scientific expedition to the Ellice Group, South Pacific. Important as may have been the scientific observations and discoveries of the learned professor, those made by his wife of missionaries and their ways have also a distinct value. She found defects, but judging of the work by general results, she says that these are > undoubtedly good beyond the wildest expectations of the most fervent mission worker.

Morally and spiritually the native teacher "have worked miracles." She did not find that missionaries and their wives "are greater humbugs than the rest of us," but she did find that they are hospitable, kind-hearted, and honest in their work. The only luxuriousness is the good meal that the missionary's wife provides for rare visitors.

> The fashionable novelists who write up the islands have to make a story that will take the public, and the public that doesn't subscribe to missionary societies likes to be justified in its doings.

A correspondent whose letter will be found on p. 15 notes the absence at "Convention" gatherings of any condemnation of the drink traffic. An answer will at once be given that "such occasions are not temperance meetings," which is true. Yet there is force in the question—If other sins and evil habits are freely named and condemned in no measured terms, why should indulgence in "the drunkard's drink" be allowed to pass unchallenged?

We know of a prominent clergyman, zealous of good works, who prides himself upon his ability to steer the middle course. He brought up his children likewise, even to the ridiculing and tempting of their young friends who were abstainers. Result—his two sons have become victims to the awful craving. Will not their blood be upon their father's head? Verily, there is room for our correspondent's protest.

When some Collects from the Western rite, but not for the most part in the Prayer Book, had been said, and the officiant had divested himself of his cope, the office of the Veneration of the Cross commenced. The priest removed the cross from the altar, and unveiled the crucifix—the wood of the lower part of the cross had not been covered—saying, as he removed each portion of the veil, "Behold the wood of the Cross," to which the response was "Let us adore it." He then placed it on one of the steps of the altar. He then came down to the end of the chancel, knelt down, went up to the topmost step, and then knelt down again to kiss the crucifix. The vicar, who was not robed, did likewise, and was followed by the choristers. Then the men of the congregation approached, and kissed the sacred figure.

Such is the description given in the Daily News of a scene that occurred on Good Friday at St. Cuthbert's, Kensington. There can be no doubt of the degrading and superstitious nature of much of the high ritualism that is going on in our midst.

Not only in London is the condition of shop-assistants in large mercantile houses receiving attention from philanthropic persons, but in Manchester the hardships from which women suffer who are employed in this manner is under urgent consideration. This will surely lead to some measures of relief being granted. The Manchester and Salford Branch of the National Women Workers' Association is taking the matter up warmly. Dr. Sinclair, who is deeply interested in the movement, has declared, from his own medical experience, that merely from standing, and from no other cause whatever, the suffering caused to women shop-assistants is appalling.

It seems to us that so grave a question, necessarily affecting future generations, requires only to be stated to receive the attention from Christian employers that the matter demands. The health of their assistants is of considerable importance to the energetic and successful discharge of daily duty.

The decision of the judges in the case of the Queen v. Humphrey illustrates the uncertainty and confusion of the law relating to betting. Our readers will remember how, in the Kempton Park case, the Court of Appeal decided that the defendants could not be restrained from allowing a man to make bets professionally on their racecourse, because he had no "exclusive user" of any particular spot, so that his standing-ground could not be legally called a "place." Now that decision has been practically reversed in the case of a man who was in the habit of standing for the same purpose under a private archway leading to a mill, where he had no "user" at all. This conflict between the courts spells legal chaos, and the Chief Justice only spoke commonsense when he expressed a strong opinion that the uncertainty of the law should be cleared up by Parliament. Is there, however, any practical hope, in the present unhealthy state of the public mind on the whole subject of gambling, of Parliament taking up the question? We fear not, till some apostle of righteousness has quickened the national conscience, and forced the hand of the Legislature.

One of the chief features in our present unsatisfactory condition of public morals is the Press; and one of the chief aims of reformers should be its purification. The publisher's trade must not be made subsidiary to sport, betting, and gambling. Many who have an interest in great papers have at the same time an interest in questions of purity and righteousness. They will presently have to choose, and the sooner the better, between an evil Press and these questions. They cannot expect to have a pure electorate, which will support measures for the good of the people at home and for right relations with other nations, while the people's minds are stimulated by sensation and fed on garbage. Many reforms are in danger because the Press is often found pandering to the worst passions of readers; and yet the editors and owners of some papers are troubled because high national affairs excite so little interest. An intelligent and moral people will never fail to be interested in intellectual and moral subjects.

The wide diffusion of ex-soldiers among the respectable industrial classes has a very distinct bearing on the vexed question of the State regulation of vice in India. A large proportion of our soldiers spend some years in that country, and the demoralising effect of these regulations is not likely to be erased from their lives on their retirement from the Service. In the long run this must tend to lower the standard of national purity. These secondary effects of immorality in the Army are among the strongest arguments for absolute repression of the evils in question.

Colonel J. C. Robinson writes a most sensible letter to the Westminster Gazette on the improvement of the soldiers' condition, in which he contends that, instead of the present system, which sinks all individuality and reduces the man to a machine, there should be a system which will give scope and incentive to industry and self-help. The average British soldier should be instructed to "make himself a useful citizen as well as a fighting machine." The Colonel would grant coffee, reading, and playrooms, he would encourage gardening and every healthy recreation, but he would clear the canteen out of every barrack. In his opinion it is no use preaching thrift to a young man who has the canteen so convenient for swallowing up his pay when he gets it. The changes he purposes would be detrimental to a few contractors, but he believes the country would gain enormously by such reforms.

"A grave scandal," says the daily Press, "has just been brought to light in connection with the Corporation of the City of London." A special committee appointed some weeks ago to inquire into alleged cases of bribery have found the charges to be of so serious a nature that ten officers have been suspended. On every hand, in connection with almost every trade and profession, complaints are made of the systematic bribery which goes on. This must have a most corrupting influence on young men, and deadens the consciences of many men in middle life. Happily, all do not succumb to it, but it makes honest trade most difficult, for bribing is not trading, and good men need great faith in God to do the right and stand against it.

The troubles of South Africa arising from the rinderpest seem to be preparing the way for the kingdom of God; several places are sending for evangelists, and Christians "are beginning, of their own impulse, to publish the Gospel up and down the country." One of these evangelists says that almost his whole tribe is converted—men, women, and children. The truth will make its way, though outward circumstances are contrary, and some it will turn into actual helps to the Gospel of God.

Who Lives Here?

By Dr. T. L. CUYLER.

LOVE is the crown-jewel of the Christian graces. But to love truly and devoutly is to go out of self. When a penitent soul bows before the Cross, and becomes so pervaded and filled with the mighty love of his Redeemer that he cannot but give himself up to Jesus, that is self crucified. From that hour Jesus owns him and controls him. The self-life has given way; the Christ-life has begun. Thenceforward it becomes his joy to please, to serve, and, if need be, to suffer for his Master. Then he can say with the great apostle, "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me."

This is a famous paradox, and the explanation of it is that the new spiritual life does not spring out of self or tend towards self. The believer's life springs out of Christ, and tends toward Christ. This new life is not a natural principle. It is imparted by the Lord Jesus, who does not merely enkindle a new life within, but He Himself becomes that inner life!

When Elisha once miraculously restored a dead boy by stretching his own body over the corpse of the child, the boy was resuscitated by a temporary contact with the stronger life of God's prophet, and there it ended. But the Lord Jesus not only communicates the renewing, vitalising power in the process of conversion; He remains in that soul, and continues to be its actual life. By this we mean that the Spirit of the living Christ is in actual contact with the true believer's soul. Do you say that this is mystical and supernatural? So it is, and I rejoice that it is so. I rejoice that my eternal salvation does not hang on the spider's web of my own weakness; but that the Son of God, by a supernatural process, has the chief office to perform in that salvation. I rejoice that when the self-life is crucified, Jesus Christ enters into this poor, unworthy heart of mine and offers to abide there. Then, on the we may be lifted into the higher, purer, stronger, holier life in Christ Jesus.

When Paul declared, "I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me," he meant that the old, rebellious Saul of Tarsus had been left by the roadside near Damascus, and since that time there had been a new man called Paul who had been going about preaching, establishing churches, and writing inspired epistles to those churches. In this new man Jesus dwelt, speaking through Paul's lips, and working miracles of healing at Lystra and elsewhere through Paul's hands. The old, wretched, bigoted self-life was gone, and Christ Jesus lived again on earth in the person of his courageous and consecrated apostle. It is still a blessed truth that Christ lives and moves about, and does ten thousand noble and loving deeds in the persons of faithful Christians. Christ dwells in us, brethren, "except we be reprobate." Christ was in Robert Murray McCheyne when he wrote, "Oh, how sweet it is to work all day for God, and then to lie down under his smiles—to be kept in perfect peace, happy to be kept in perfect peace, happy to be one with Christ." The Lord Jesus was with Captain Hedley Vicars when he exclaimed, "In Jesus I find all I want of happiness, and as month after month rolls by He is becoming more and more lovely in my eyes, and more and more precious to my soul." Such lives and deeds are what my beloved friend, Charles L. Brace, aptly called "Gesta Christi"—the deeds of Christ.

But someone may inquire, "Does not this doctrine of dying unto self, and having a Christ-life within us, encourage the idea of sinless perfection?" By no means, neither in theory nor in practice. It was not the theory of the great apostle For in this same verse Paul says, "The life which I now live in the flesh I live in faith of the Son of God. He confesses that this high spiritual life is spent under earthly conditions with many sad infirmities within and sharp temptations surrounding him. That old abominable self-life kept starting out of its grave and asserting its right to live, and it had to be crucified again and again! "So fight I," exclaims Paul, "as not beating the air, but I buffet my body and bring it into bondage, lest after that I have preached to others I myself should be rejected" (R.V.). If Jesus lived in Paul, so did Paul live in a frail animal body and sin-poisoned world, and Jesus never lifted Paul out of the sphere of temptation and conflict. A tremendous lesson of constant dependence upon Christ was taught to Paul, and it is taught to you and me every day. I have often attended the funeral (as I supposed) of some besetting sin, but lo! in a few days the wretched thing was on its feet again, tempting and tormenting me as wickedly as ever. And the best evidence that there was a genuine Christ-life within me, was that I did not surrender out and out to the besetting sin, but waged battle with it in the name of my Master. If Jesus Christ had not lived in the soul of Paul, he would have gone down at the first assault of Satan; and if Jesus had not dwelt in his blood-redeemed Church, it would have been

WRECKED EIGHTEEN CENTURIES AGO.

The ceaseless conflict in this world, good friends, is for the occupancy and ownership of our hearts. The accursed spirit of self in a hundred forms strives to expel Christ and usurp the throne. Our only hope of obtaining peace of mind, spiritual power, joy and victory, is in letting Jesus Christ have his home in our innermost souls. Christ comes to us with the blessed offer, "Open unto Me, and I will make My abode with you." If the Master is there, all is well. Is He in your soul? The searching Spirit knocks at the door of every human heart, and the test-question is,

WHO LIVES HERE?

The Spoiled Dinner.

It was Monday morning, and Mr. Taylor, a town missionary in B——, was paying the first visit of the week at the house of Mrs. Clayton. This was an official arrangement, for the lady was an influential member of his committee, with time to devote to consultation over his most perplexing cases, and in Mrs. Clayton's quiet room, where wealth and culture stood as handmaids in the presence of the King, Mr. Taylor had found some of his greatest difficulties smoothed by her strong faith and substantial help.

To-day they had discussed business details and had knelt in prayer for blessing on the work; the gifts for some of his neediest cases, of which the missionary was her almoner, had been received, and he was leaving the room, when Mrs. Clayton recalled him—"One moment more, Mr. Taylor; I had nearly forgotten a little matter I wished to name to you. I have one charity that I am specially anxious to administer well, because it is rather more valuable than the rest. I have for some years allowed £1 a month to six carefully selected cases of respectable poverty, and, where possible, of sincere Christianity—persons who have seen better days, and have never paraded their need. On Saturday I heard of the death of one of these protégés, so I have a vacancy and thought you might help me. Do you know anyone suitable? Or if it were a nice old couple, whom you could confidently recommend, I should prefer that."

"Five shillings a week," Mr. Taylor said, "that would be wealth to some of my poor people; but just now I do not think of any who quite meet all the conditions. There are the Stantons," he added, musingly, "they would be the very people, only they are not poor enough! I do not know their source of income," he went on, "but it must be a fairly substantial one, they are so eminently respectable, and the brightest Christians I know. It is one of my treats to go and sit in their cosy room when I am weary and dispirited with my work—just like a BREEZE FROM THE DELECTABLE MOUNTAINS."

"You make me wish to know them," said Mrs. Clayton; we all need that kind of air sometimes. If you will give me their address I will find them out some day, but they are evidently not the people for my present purpose. Well, you may perhaps think of someone in the course of the next day or two. I should like it to be amongst your poor friends if possible. Good morning."

And Mr. Taylor took his departure, indulging, as he walked along, in a most comfortable habit of soul that had often been of marvellous service in his work. He turned, simply and believingly, to the Friend whom he knew to be "with him alway," and asked Him to guide in a matter which might so bless some tried and suffering saint.

He visited many homes that morning, some poor enough indeed, but not respectable; many where the elements of comfort were present in ample work and good wages, but neutralised by thriftlessness, and, alas! too often by sin; but in none did he find a suitable case for Mrs. Clayton's charity. And all through his morning round his thoughts turned, with steady and unaccountable persistency, to the little home of the Stantons, and their bright, cheery faces haunted him as in a vision. "What can it mean?" he wondered; "can one of them be ill? I am going in quite another direction this afternoon, or I would have dropped in and inquired."

His afternoon work was mapped out in his usual methodical way, but he went in to his mid-day meal with a perplexed face. "Has there been any message from the Stantons?" he asked of his wife, rather eagerly. "No, but you are wanted to go to Howard-street; there's a message from No. 15—a child ill, I think," Mrs. Taylor said.

"Why, that is only two doors from the Stantons', just at the opposite end of the town from where I intended to be this afternoon; so I will look in on them at the same time and satisfy myself. I can't but think there is some trouble there."

He had a sympathetic listener in his good wife, who knew the old couple well and quite shared in his admiration of them; but, of course, she could throw no light on his

FEELINGS OF PERPLEXITY.

An hour afterwards he knocked at the door of No. 17, Howard-street, a two-roomed flat on the sunny side of the street, and it was opened by an ideal old woman, who dropped an old-fashioned curtsey at the sight of her visitor. "Why, Mr. Taylor, who would have thought of seeing you here to-day? My husband and I were reckoning that you would not be coming our way for a week at least; but come in do, you're kindly welcome."

She led the way into the spotlessly clean room, where the sunshine, which was just then dancing into every corner, could find no speck nor stain on the carefully kept furniture. The old man was sitting by a tiny fire, looking more feeble than usual and not nearly so cheerful, and Mr. Taylor's sharpened vision noticed how threadbare his clothes were, and how they hung more loosely than was their wont on his shrunken limbs.

There were no complaints in reply to Mr. Taylor's inquiries concerning his health; he was "fairly well," he said, but somehow there was not the usual flow of pleasant joyous talk, and the missionary, to overcome the feeling of depression, proposed reading a chapter in their well-worn Bible, and turned to Romans viii. The old woman sat near her husband, and they both followed the beautiful words with an expression of devout reverence until the 28th verse was reached, and then William Stanton suddenly leaned forward and laid his hand on the reader's knee.

"Excuse me, sir, but I can't help interrupting you—isn't it desperate hard to think that's always true?" Mr. Taylor looked in surprise at the fine old face which was working with emotion, but before he could speak the trembling voice continued—"It seems such a little thing to be so troubled about, and I'm real 'shamed to let it get such a hold of me, for after all it's only that to-day. Nay, Betty, don't shake your head, honey, it will be a relief to me to tell Mr. Taylor all about it."

"You see, sir," he continued, "it's this way. When I got past work, I sunk my savings in an annuity, but it was so small that my wife and I have a hard struggle to live on it. We've known better days, and have our little bits of things that we could never make up our minds to part with. We've never wanted anyone to know how pinched we were, and my old girl isn't over well pleased, I am afraid, at my telling you now, but it's a relief. If it hadn't been for the food we could have managed first-rate, but that's been the difficulty; it isn't once in many weeks that we taste butcher's meat, and tea and bread aren't very satisfying. But it's my birthday to-day, and Betty had set her heart on our having a good dinner, and she got a few potatoes and a bit of dripping, and she does know how to cook when she has got the stuff, does Betty! She had mashed the potatoes and seasoned them, and they were frying over the fire, and I was watching them while she set the table, and they were getting quite brown and smelling so tasty, and just as she was crossing the kitchen to lift the pan from the fire, came down the chimney and spoiled it all!"

A GREAT CLOUD OF SOOT

Poor old Willy paused at this tragic point in his narrative, and looked piteously at his listeners. "Now, sir, I do want you to understand that it's not the loss of the dinner that troubles me so much, but the terrible doubt of our Father's love. Can you think it looks like his caring for us to let this happen?"

"Yes, dear friend, I can indeed!" exclaimed the missionary, whose eyes were brimming with thankful tears, "and so will you when you hear what I have to tell. You will understand that the soot which has tried your faith so much was only the black plumage on God's raven of deliverance."

. . . . . .

It was characteristic of human nature, however sanctified, that amidst the overwhelming gratitude with which the dear old couple listened to Mr. Taylor's story there mingled in Willy's mind a masculine note of triumph over Betty, that he had been in the right in divulging that home secret after all! A Study in Prayer.

DR. A. T. PIERSON writes from Brooklyn, N.Y.:—I have recently met with a prayer of Fénélon, Archbishop of Cambray, which I regard as about as high an example of prayer as I have ever found out of the Word of God:—

O Lord, I know not what I should ask of Thee. Thou only knowest what I want, and Thou lovest me, if I am thy friend, more than I can love myself. O Lord, give to me, thy child, what is proper, whatsoever it be. I dare not ask either crosses or comforts. I only present myself before Thee. I open my heart to Thee. Behold my wants, of which I am ignorant, but do Thou behold and do according to thy mercy. Smite or heal, depress or raise me up. I adore all thy purposes without knowing them. I am silent. I offer myself in sacrifice. I abandon myself to Thee. I have no more any desire but to accomplish thy will. Lord, teach me to pray. I beseech Thee, dwell Thou Thyself in me by thy Holy Spirit. Amen.

Apropos of the above, I have a letter from my son-in-law, Rev. Fred. S. Curtis, of Yamaguchi, Japan, which, though not meant for the public eye, is both an illustration and confirmation of the spirit manifested in Fénélon's prayer. Mr. Curtis writes under date of January 14, 1898:—

A year ago, when in America, on my furlough, I was at my lowest ebb, physically and nervously. Just about this time the doctor told me that I ought to prolong my furlough beyond the spring. I could not then even write a letter, however short, without serious results. How greatly has God blessed me with restored health! I seem as well and strong now as I have ever been. No head trouble, or other nervous disorder to speak of.

Just about a year ago, God's word came home to me in such power along the lines of his gracious promises to heal and to strengthen: "I will strengthen thee." "In quietness and confidence shall be your strength." "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew"—literally, go from "strength to strength," i.e., have continually new supplies of energy—"I am the Lord who healeth all thy diseases." "Ye have need of patience, that, having done the will of God, ye may receive the promise,' "The God of all grace, after that ye have suffered awhile, shall Himself restore (margin), stablish, settle you." Such were the daily and repeated messages given to me at that time, and I was given faith to accept. I felt fully assured that God was going to heal me in his good time, after I had learned my lesson of patient waiting; and I do now set my seal thereto, that God is true."

Anchored.

"And let there be no moaning of the bar when I put out to sea."—Lord Tennyson.

No "bar" for us to cross, no darkening sea,
No unknown land to find, no mystery.
Safe in the harbour, anchorage secure,
We wait, our perils past, our voyage o'er.

Through many a storm, through many a gloomy night,
Our vessel has been steered into the light.
Battered, and worn by many a tempest past,
We leave it soon for home and peace at last.

Here in the restful calm of sin forgiven,
Billows behind; before, the shores of Heaven,
Our Pilot known and loved for many a day,
We ride at anchor through the brief delay.

No "bar" for us to cross, no night, no sea;
Our night is past, and past all mystery.
For day has dawned and soon our feet will press
The shores of life, the land of blessedness!

American Notes.

RIVERSIDE, CALIFORNIA.

WE have just spent three beautiful days at Riverside, the chief town of the same named county. It lies forty-five miles from the Pacific Ocean and sixty east of Los Angeles. It is a city of orange farms, territorially the largest after Philadelphia, covering an area of fifty-six miles with a population of only 8000. The quantity and quality of its orange and lemon crops have a world-wide reputation.

This lovely spot seems to combine all features and attractions of scenery and flora. From under a palm-tree the traveller gazes on snow-capped mountain-peaks. The air is pure and dry and laden with the sweet fragrance of semi-tropic vegetation. Even the moral atmosphere, as Judge Crowe pleasantly remarked, is purer here than in other places; for Riverside is a prohibition town.

The occasion of our visit was a Y.M.C.A. Convention. Much hospitality was shown to all the delegates. Before leaving, with Mr. Mason, of the Pacific Union Mission, we were taken for a delightful drive by Mr. Toogood, who came to Riverside in 1871, being the second pioneer family in the place. He told us that the basis of its growth and rapidly increasing wealth was in the magnificent irrigation system which had been laid out by the pioneers.

For hours we drove through this immense garden, and the eye could not get tired of seeing. Fruit-bearing orange trees, bending under their burden, almonds and peaches blooming as if thrown into the grove for variety's sake, extend all along the Magnolia avenue. Magnolia, gravilleas, the high eucalyptus, and the graceful pepper tree, with its clusters of red berries, overshadow the way and bend down to the silver streamlets which refresh the soil and cool the air. One of the most interesting parts of the drive was through a tract of 3000 acres in course of development on the most approved methods by a syndicate of Englishmen. Then the shadows of the night began to sink, and after our laps had been filled with the golden fruit, we said regretfully good-bye to Mr. Toogood and to

> The land where the lemon-trees bloom,
> Where the gold-orange grows in the deep thicket's gloom,
> Where a wind ever soft from the blue heavens blows,
> And the groves are of laurel and myrtle and rose.

POINTS ABOUT YOUNG MEN.

It has been a great pleasure to attend the annual Y.M.C.A. Convention of California, held at Riverside, Feb. 23-28. About eighty delegates were present from this State, including Mr. C. B. Willis, the general secretary of the Y.M.C.A., of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, who ranks among the first secretaries of the country, and had been selected by the International Committee to represent them here. The music of the Convention was in his charge. He is a plain-spoken and harmonious man, but of a deeply earnest Christian spirit.

The keynote of the Convention was struck in the preliminary quiet hour by Mr. Ball, secretary of the Los Angeles branch, on Wednesday afternoon, when only half the number of delegates had arrived. It was "love to God and to one another." This was strengthened by a reminiscence from Mr. Mason, superintendent of the Pacific Union Mission, of the visit to Los Angeles of Tamil David, that much blessed, lowly minded servant of God.

In the evening addresses of welcome were given in the Presbyterian Church by Judge Crowe, of Riverside, and a minister of the town, and after these had been suitably acknowledged, the speech of the evening was delivered by Rev. Hugh K. Walker, D.D., of Los Angeles, on

"YOUNG MANHOOD: CARE AND CULTURE."

He laid much emphasis on the abundantly established claim of the Y.M.C.A. to the cordial support of all evangelical churches.

It was an institution second to none in preparing the rising generation for a true manhood. In the face of difficulties and discouraging oppositions these institutions are taking ground in America. The Y.M.C.A. has led the way for the Christian Endeavour Society, the Epworth League, the Baptist Young People's Union, the Students' Volunteer Movement, etc. The speaker owed much to the beneficent influence it had exercised over himself. There he had spoken the first time for his Master, and begun to be a preacher of the Gospel.

Physical and intellectual, but, above all, spiritual development, is necessary to true manhood. Only in the school of Jesus Christ does he learn to assume the responsibilities of later years, and to say, "Here am I, send me." Ladies were urged to take interest in young men. Mothers and sisters are deeply interested for the sake of their sons and brothers, in the Y.M.C.A. What they accord to those of others will be accorded to their own. Many a one has been saved from ruin by sympathy, practical in its expression. Invite the lonely one to your home, let him feel that you care for his cares and troubles, and his heart will respond, making it easy to influence him for his good. Social gatherings require more thought and wisdom, more heart and brain, to render them entertaining, without the conventional card-playing, wine-drinking, and dancing.

WHAT YOUNG MEN HAVE DONE IN THE WORLD.

Napoleon had conquered Italy before he was twenty-five. Alexander at the same age wept because there were no more worlds to conquer. Raphael, the greatest painter that ever lived, died at thirty-six. So did Byron. Luther had made Protestantism the religion of the German Empire before he was thirty. Melanchthon wrote his defence of Luther when not yet nineteen, and at twenty-one he was the principal of his University. It was by the young men of the princes of the provinces that God delivered the great army of Benhadad into the hands of the seven thousand of Israel in the days of Ahab. (1 Kings xx.)

Dr. Locke on the following evening added John the Baptist and the Lord Jesus, whose ministry was fulfilled at thirty-three.

There are plenty who are eager to care for young men—Satan, the saloon-keeper, and evil men and women of every sort. The young man, on the other hand, who is nurtured and cultured in the ways of God is always ready to take up the responsibilities which accrue to him. The future is with the young, and the Young Men's Christian Association has been raised up by God, not to take the place of the parents in the training of their sons, but to care for them when they enter the great world of business and of work.

DR. FROST'S BIBLE READINGS.

One of the most important features of the Convention was a series of three Bible readings on the First Epistle of John, by Rev. Dr. Frost, of San Bernardino, a devout and scholarly man, mighty in the Scriptures. He is a noble looking personage, reminding one of the late Dr. Brookes, of St. Louis. He would be an acquisition to the platform of the Mildmay Conference or Keswick Convention, and I hope I may yet see him there. The newspaper reporter said, "The subject of the first Epistle was announced to be Christian Assurance, and anyone who has heard the Doctor give one of his famous readings will know how difficult it is to convey any conception of the grandeur of it."

Mr. Grove F. Ekins, Sacramento, a boyish-looking young man, read an excellent paper on "Boys."

In order to attract young boys to, and keep them interested in, the Y.M.C.A., four things are necessary:—1. Love for boys, the future men.

2. Just enough organisation to make them feel their responsibility.

3. Discipline that teaches obedience.

4. Christian workers who have graduated from the junior into the men's department, as such have more sympathy with, and consequently more ascendency over, the juniors.

The question of Bible study among the boys of the Association was discussed, and it was urged that a special meeting be held to instruct the boys in the knowledge of the Bible.

Mr. McCoy, from San Francisco, in speaking on "Spiritual Results of Educational Work," said that the great aim of the training carried on in the Y.M.C.A. is religion. All departments are made tributary to spiritual influence, and every branch of education tends to Christian development. Religion being the axis of a man's character, education is not considered complete without the knowledge of the Book of books. Efficient Bible-study—Bible-classes incorporated in the study—should be made of the greatest importance in every Y.M.C.A.

Mr. C. B. Willis, of Milwaukee, Wis., gave an address on

THE RELIGIOUS LIFE OF THE ASSOCIATION.

The Young Men's Christian Association was conceived in a prayer-meeting, and ever since the religious department has had a permanent place in the Association. The College department, the railroad department, the German department, the reading-room, the physical work, the educational work, the boys' work—all these have developed in the past few years. In all this development has been kept uppermost the thought, How to help spiritually those who are touched by these various phases of the work. Some of the agencies suggested were as follows:—The Sunday afternoon Gospel meeting for men only, the Bible-class, the gaol and hospital work, the personal hand-to-hand work of the Christian fellows.

Why the afternoon meeting should be for men only was thoroughly discussed, the principal reason being that young men will attend meetings for men only who would not come to union meetings.

Some of the plans used to bring young men to the Sunday afternoon meetings were suggested as follows: Get the best leader possible for each meeting; personal invitation on the street; street Gospel singing; placard invitations; personal invitation through the mail; remember especially the associate member of the Association.

The Congregational Church was crowded on Thursday evening. After a song service led by Mr. Willis, Dr. Charles Edward Locke, of San Francisco, delivered an eloquent and inspiring address on

"YOUNG MEN AND THEIR VALUE TO SOCIETY."

Dr. Locke has a powerful voice and a natural gift of oratory. He moved his audience alternately to laughter and tears, and stirred their enthusiasm by his passionate appeals. He said that the young man, in order to be of value to society, must have the following qualities:—First—He must be generous.

Second—He must bring things to pass; he must "get there."

Third—He must believe something; must be a man of conviction. Better be called a crank than to be the supple tool for demagogues, political, philosophical, or ecclesiastical.

Fourth—He must have courage. It is one thing to know what to do and another thing to go forward and do it. A man stands among his fellows for what he has the courage to do.

Fifth—He must have culture; not education simply, for men may be educated and not cultured. Arnold says that culture is securing for ourselves the best thoughts of those who have preceded us.

Sixth—And last of all he must be spiritual, must be religious; not long-faced and sad, but glowing bright like an electric light. There is just one thing to do in this world, and that is to be good.

The delegates were invited to lunch each day by the ladies of the various churches.

On Sunday the services at the churches were committed to the delegates, who also conducted enthusiastic meetings out of doors.

We observed with pleasure in the Y.M.C.A.'s which we visited, the portrait of our venerable friend Sir George Williams, the founder of the Association, and we doubt not that in many, if not in all Y.M.C.A.'s, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from Manitoba to the Gulf of Mexico, his kindly face looks down upon the young men who are rising up to take up the threads which he and the men of his generation are laying down.

Bulgaria. — Pastor Tonjoroff writes from Philippopolis:—"I am much encouraged in work among the Bulgarians. Several Gospel tracts I have translated have found appreciation among the people. Some young Turks gather at times on the quiet hillside to hear in peace the Word of God. There are at these several inquirers—some very influential people. The other day as I was distributing some papers in one of the most crowded streets all the men of the surrounding shops flocked to listen to the words of life, and expressed freely their dissatisfaction with their spiritual condition. Some of them are afraid to attend our Protestant services, but will come when the services at the hillside begin."

Mr. Baron in Egypt.

ACCOMPANIED by Pastor Gordon, of Budapest, Rev. David Baron has visited several centres of Jewish population in Egypt, and at last advices had his face turned towards Palestine. On his way to Marseilles to take ship to Alexandria, he spent two or three days in Paris, when the Zola trial was in progress, and "Down with the Jews" was a general and popular cry. He writes to us:—"In this anti-Jewish movement in France, as elsewhere, you can see the hand of the living God, who is again bringing the Jewish question to the fore, and agitating the nations with it in order to its final solution. One man in Paris, with whom we had a long conversation, and who was returning to Russia, said, 'We used to think Russia bad, and we looked to France as a land of liberty, which set the example of the emancipation of the Jews to the other nations; but now we have heard that even here we can find no refuge. There is greater hatred of the Jews now in France than even in Russia.' The agitation for the revision of the Dreyfus trial gave us the opportunity to speak to quite a number of the scattered nation of the in condemning that Just One, and of warning them that not until that wrong judgment is repented of and they hail Christ as their Messiah and Redeemer will they find rest."

Proceeding to describe his experiences in Egypt, Mr. Baron writes: "In Alexandria we enjoyed happy fellowship in the Lord with a number of brethren and sisters, who are labouring there among the different nationalities. There are between 8000 and 10,000 Jews in the city, and our attention was for the most part devoted to the Ashkenazim, or German-speaking section, who have found a refuge here from the various countries of Europe. In their shops and in the streets we had attentive little audiences, of tens and twenties, who eagerly listened to our words, and disputed with us in reference to Christ. We also had an interesting meeting in the school of the Church of Scotland, kindly placed at our disposal by Rev. L. M. Taylor, the head of the mission to Israel connected with that Church. About 150 were present, who listened to earnest Gospel addresses and stayed to ask questions at the end.

"In Cairo we spent a very busy week of missionary labour. We were accompanied there by Mr. A. Kestin, of the Church of Scotland Mission, who kindly acted as our guide. Here, too, we met Messrs. Goodman and Blum, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, who had been distributing New Testaments. In Cairo there are between 12,000 and 13,000 Jews, apart from about 800 families of Karaim, who form by themselves. Here, too, we were surrounded almost daily by little crowds of Jews in their own quarter, who were eager to listen and dispute, and we had the assurance that the seed we were permitted to sow broadcast was not in vain. By the kindness of Dr. Harvey, and the other brethren of the American Mission, we were able also to hold two meetings in their fine building in the Esbekieh.

"The second of these meetings was a rather remarkable one, and reminded us of similar scenes as described in the Acts of the Apostles. There were seventy Jews present, and Mr. Gordon and myself took for our subject the latter part of Ezekiel xxxvi., which formed the Haphtorah (or prophetic portion) read in all the Jewish synagogues on the preceding day. Speaking on verse 18, where the prophet says that God's fury was poured on Israel 'for the blood that they had shed on the land, and for the idols wherewith they had polluted it,' I pointed out that the climax of guilt implied in these words was reached when the blood of the Righteous One—the true Messiah—was shed in Jerusalem, and that God's fury must rest on us, till we find atonement in that very blood. No sooner did I utter these words, when two or three who had evidently come for the purpose of disturbing, jumped to their feet in a great passion, crying, 'Brethren, can you listen any more to such words? Come, let us all leave the hall.'

"A number got up to follow them, while the rest broke up in groups noisily disputing and gesticulating among themselves. When they calmed down somewhat, I told them they might go, or shut their ears, but the truth would continue to witness against them; and as for us, we cannot do otherwise than speak the Word of God. They all sat down again, and I finished my address. When Mr. Gordon spoke there was again interruption and noisy discussion among themselves, but we felt that good was accomplished. Afterwards till late at night some leading Jews kept visiting us at the hotel, and we were enabled to point them faithfully to Christ, and to put New Testaments and other mission literature in their hands."

Peru and Ecuador.

WRITING from Lima, Mr. C. H. Bright says:—"We seem as far off as ever from legal liberty of worship, yet we are tolerated. Very naturally we are attacked in pulpit and in press, and there is, of course, the continual passive persecution in various forms. We have lately opened a new meeting-place in a part of the city separated from the rest by the river Rimac. It is thickly populated, and we have prayed about it for four years. At once we commenced to get hold of new souls, but the neighbours are scandalised by the proximity of 'heretics,' and the landlord has notified us to move, fearing some judgment will fall on the house!

"In our chief meeting-place we are entirely unmolested. We have five meetings weekly, always in perfect peace. We believe in just preaching Christ, and do not indulge in diatribes against the priests. If controversial subjects are ever touched upon, as occasionally they have to be, we have learned how to do it in a way calculated to convince without needlessly wounding. Thus doing, we have had blessing from the commencement; hundreds have heard the Gospel, and and received into church fellowship. These are natives, Peruvians and Ecuatorians. Our two chief native helpers, who give all their time to the work, are Ecuatorians. One of these, a woman, returned to her native land and prepared the way for us. By distributing papers and by earnest private conversations she awakened many to a serious interest, and gathered quite a roomful of people.

"A few weeks ago I and my wife made a visit there, and for three weeks we preached and sang the Gospel to an audience of thirty to sixty people. There is a joy unspeakable in thus preaching the Gospel to people who have never heard it before. To them it is not the 'old, old story,' but is the newest thing out. And thus they regard it—and here lies one of our chief difficulties. Some are inclined to accept it as part of the 'progress' which has lately dawned upon those countries in the shape of electric light, tramcars, telephones, etc., and think that all we desire is that they nod their assent to the doctrines we preach.

"The priests of Guayaquil did us the honour to attack us (myself and this Ecuatorian lady) in a pamphlet of forty-eight pages, and also kept up a in the daily organ. However, souls were blessed, and one native volunteered to contribute towards maintaining the meeting-room. Since we left this has been done, and Mr. Strain, of the Gospel Union Mission, keeps up the meetings. A woman in Guayaquil, who had bought a Bible from our helper, demanded her money back. She declared that the Bible must be a falsified one, for there was nothing in it about worshipping the Virgin! This little incident shows how utter is the ignorance of the Bible in these lands, and the great hold that superstition has on them. Here, in Lima, the true nature of our teaching is getting known. Yesterday morning two priests, passing by the window of our meeting-room, were heard to say: 'This is where the Protestants meet.' 'Yes, the devils!' 'No, the true'——, the wind carried the rest away as they passed on."

In other communications Mr. Bright says that at length civil marriage has been legalised in Peru. This removes a great obstacle to open confession on the part of converts. More workers are urgently needed in this important field. Communications regarding Mr. Bright's work may be addressed to Mr. A. Evans, Hillsleigh Grange, Brimscombe, Glos.

Helping the African.

NEARLY two years ago we informed our readers of a movement initiated by Christian friends in America in the formation of a Philo-African League to help in diffusing Gospel light through the Dark Continent. A moving spirit in the League was Mr. Heli Chatelain, who read a paper on the subject, it may be remembered, at the Mildmay Evangelical Alliance Conference in 1896. Mr. Chatelain writes to us from South-Western Central Africa on January 18, stating that the project of two years ago is now beginning to be realised.

The first party of the Philo-African League, consisting of Mr. and Mrs. Frank T. Lea, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. C. Bell, Dr. C. H. Wintsch, and Mr. Chatelain himself, sailed from New York on July 23, 1897, and landed at Benguela, in Portuguese West Africa (Province of Angola), on September 18. There they were detained five weeks by Custom-house red tape and the lack of carriers for the interior. At length a wagon was secured, and the party started for the interior on Oct. 23. The wagon was pulled by twenty-two oxen, and they travelled in company with six other Boer wagons. After three weeks' journey over rough roads, through tracts of rich and beautiful, but uninhabited, country, at an altitude of about 5000 feet, they reached the first abode of man, in the small settlement of Senhor Theodoro da Cruz, the commandante of the military division of Hanha. On Dec. 14 they ceased being pilgrims, and pitched their tents in the valley of the small Cucala river, some forty miles west of Caconda, where they are now laying the FOUNDATIONS OF THEIR FIRST STATION.

As to the vicissitudes and prospects of the work, Mr. Chatelain writes:—

"It being our avowed purpose to work, by peaceful means, for the removal of slavery, and the restriction of the rum traffic, we cannot expect cordial sympathy or co-operation from the people around us, all of whom consider these curses as necessary evils, and depend largely on them for their sustenance. We had begun to get some free native labourers who were content to work for cloth, when suddenly a war broke out and scattered our native helpers. Not only this, but it dispersed the tribe among whom we had come to labour, destroyed their towns and fields, and leaves us practically in a desert. It will probably take a month before the natives return to build new towns. We are left without supplies of food until the natives return, and we are still ignorant as to the extent to which the gardens around us are destroyed. If the natives should seek to avenge themselves on us inoffensive white people, living in open tents and without means of escape, there is no police or soldiery to protect us against their assaults, and we must fall martyrs to the principles of peace, liberty, sobriety, and justice, which we represent in this dark land. We are powerless indeed, but in God we trust, and also hope to have the prayerful and practical support of God's people in Great Britain and America.

"The population of the district of Caconda consists of three principal classes, speaking different languages, all of which I am happy to have mastered enough to be able to get on without an interpreter. The most numerous class is that of black natives who speak the U-mbundu, an important Bantu language, already illustrated by grammars and religious books of the American missionaries of Bailundo, and those of the Romish Mission of Caconda. The second class is that of the white and Protestant Boers from the Transvaal, who speak Cape-Dutch, and understand more or less Portuguese and U-mbundu. The third class is that of the Portuguese officials and traders, to whom may be added some semi-civilised natives who have learnt to speak and write broken Portuguese. May the missionary spirit which has begun to manifest itself among the Boers in South Africa, largely through the influence of Rev. Andrew Murray, reach the Boers of Angola, and ultimately make them a blessing to the natives who now dread them more than some of our ancestors ever dreaded Attila and his Huns.

"Dr. Geo. H. Dowkontt, son of Dr. Geo. D. Dowkontt, is our office secretary in New York, and will gladly supply further information. The address of The Philo-African League is 'United Charities Building, New York.'"

AFTERMATH OF THE FAMINE.

THE terrible famine is gone, but many yet struggle with dire poverty. Since September last, I have been either in person or by my helpers gathering orphans in these parts. We have buried over 150 we could not save, and have now 300 in hand, with the prospect of more day by day up to the end of the month.

The famine was an awful visitation to India. It has given one more opportunity to see the contrast between the best of heathenism and Islamism on the one hand, and Christ's religion on the other.

I do not know of any effort worthy the name on the part of either Hindoo or Mohammedan to save orphans or widows.

But the Christians of India have stretched forth in the name of Christ a kindly hand, and have rescued over 10,000 orphans. There is no such record in mission history in India. Most of the courageous work, too, has been done in faith in the Master's word. Out of this great famine shall come salvation unto multiplied thousands through the orphans we are rescuing. Bespeak the sympathy and prayers of God's people for us. My orphan colony soon goes to Jagdalpur, Bastor State, 216 miles south by coast road. My headquarters are Yellandu, Nizam's Dominions. C. B. Ward.

Mrs. C. P. Bruère, of the Methodist Episcopal Mission, Poona, writes: "Though last year had heavy responsibilities, to the praise of God I record that there has been no lack. The spiritual progress of the children has been most encouraging, a goodly number of them having accepted the Saviour; and changed lives give proof of change of heart. The older ones recently had the privilege of attending a ten days' camp meeting, which was very helpful to them. We look to God to work in them by his Spirit, that their lives may be lived for Him.

The three lady workers kindly provided us by the Z. B. M. were truly sent of God for such a time as this, and have rendered valuable service. There have been many difficulties in the work, owing to the prevailing plague, but we have only praise to offer for all the goodness of the Lord during this trying year. The prospect for the support of the orphans at the beginning of this year are the same as at the beginning of last year—no money in hand, but we have the unchangeable promises."

INDIA'S SPIRITUAL FAMINE.

In response to an appeal in our pages a year ago, under this title, a number of friends came forward to support eight village Gospel teachers in the district around Aligarh. During the year these have been the means of doing a most valuable work. It is hoped that these friends will continue their support. In addition to these eight there are six others supported by the missionaries at Aligarh.

The district has been greatly enlarged since last year, there being now about 2,000,000 people within its bounds. There are at least 4000 Christians, for many of whom there is no spiritual supervision. We must provide pastor-teachers as fast as possible for them. In order to do so our custom is to call in promising young Christian men and their wives, train them for the work, and send them out again among the villages. But we need funds for their support. Five pounds yearly will also answer for man and wife. We want to put ten young men and their wives under training at once.

A NOTE OF THANKS.

Allow me to thank the unknown friend who has been sending us The Christian for several years back. We have not the least idea who the sender is; but it may be a satisfaction to the latter to learn how much we appreciate and value the gift.

Such papers as The Christian, containing, as they do, short, readable accounts of God's work at home, are most interesting and inspiring to us missionaries away in the foreign field. But they have an even higher value—at least to us in the Annfield Mission. The stories of conversions and revivals of religion, and the stirring of godless neighbourhoods by the preaching of the Gospel and the power of the Holy Ghost, supply the most excellent illustrations of that Divine grace which is so much needed by us missionaries out in the mission field.

Again and again, in our Mission church, and in our weekly village prayer-meetings, our native Christians have listened with the deepest interest to the accounts of the wonderful works of God published in The Christian, which we have translated to them in their own tongue. They have supplied them with new subjects for prayer, and led them to ask for and expect similar outpourings to those at home.

Would the sender kindly remember that our address now is not "Meerut"—which we left some years ago—but as it appears at the end of this letter?—Yours faithfully, Thos. Carmichael.

A Missionary's Escape.

SINCE the death of Captain Allen Gardiner and his companions in 1851, no more remarkable event has occurred in connection with the South American Missionary Society than the almost miraculous escape and preservation of Mr. W. Barbrooke Grubb from a sudden or lingering death, which occurred just at Christmas, in the far distant region of the Paraguayan Chaco, where seven missionaries of this Society are living amidst thousands of savage Indians, "enduring hardness" as well as perils as "good soldiers of Jesus Christ."

An Indian, called Poet, very intelligent, and to whom special kindness had been shown, was suspected and accused of dishonesty. He denied the charge, and appealed for proof to his own tribe. Mr. Grubb set out for their "toldo" with him. They had to walk many miles, and as they were passing through a wood Poet lingered a little behind and shot an arrow at Mr. Grubb, which wounded him in the back and severely injured a rib and part of the lung. Poet then fled with the stores and left Mr. Grubb to die. With great difficulty the latter was able to crawl slowly along to the bank of the river, where he was recognised by a passing Indian and carried to a toldo near at hand, where he was kindly cared for during the next three or four days, while a messenger was sent a hundred miles to the mission station to bring help. This arrived as speedily as possible, and not too soon, as Mr. Grubb would have sunk from weakness; but Mr. Graham, our medical missionary, and his helpers brought their wounded chief home by easy stages on horseback, and found at every toldo good Indian Samaritans ready to help the Indians' friend. Mr. Grubb is recovering that health and strength which he has for seven years expended in the cause of Christ and his Gospel, not only without stint, but with the most exemplary self-abnegation and devotion.

The criminal was tried by the combined tribes, found guilty, and put to death.

"The Christian" in Argentina.

ALLOW me to thank, through the medium of your valued paper, the kind friends who send me The Christian, and to assure them that it is greatly appreciated by me and by those to whom I send it after reading.

I always look with special interest on the efforts made to combat Romanism and Ritualism. We here are in the midst of a corrupted form—if it is possible to be corrupted—of Roman Catholicism, and can see the system without the superficial gloss that helps to make it passable with certain people at home. Then the Ritualism—a poor attempt to imitate the larger system—appears to be worse than Romanism — unsatisfactory to the soul in its results, dishonouring to Christ, robbing Him of his own glory, usurping his authority, leading souls from light to darkness, from liberty to bondage.

I rejoice greatly that you are continually speaking of Romanism, and pray that you will not leave a stone unturned, but put your readers in mind of its presence, power, errors, subtlety, what it will do for man—keep him in darkness, and what it will not do for him—it will not give him the pure and simple message of the Gospel, uncorrupted, and without much that is sure to shut out the light.

Your paper has quite a circle of readers with me. It is sent to different persons here, some nearly 200 miles away, and I am sure does untold good.

Letters to the Editor.

"THE NIGHT WATCH."

Dear Sir,—The correspondence on the subject of prayer during sleepless hours has greatly interested me. As I have found in a happy experience the great value of spending some time during the night in prayer, I can only heartily recommend it to others.

The hours when one cannot rest, and when sleep will not come, however apparently needed, may well be occupied in drawing near in the spirit to the One who can and does afford the sweetest rest in fellowship with Him; and often, I think, the early hours of the morning may be better spent in prayer and intercession than in sleep, which is not seldom more protracted than health requires.

It has been to me a real privilege to pray thus at night, and many a sweet and precious experience has followed; such as the removal of burdens that have weighed on the mind during the day; the preparation for service to follow; the healing of body as well as of mind; and effectual intercession for others.

Stapleford, Nottingham. J. H.

Dear Sir,—Having suffered much, I should like to help those who need rest by sleep. I have often sought and obtained sleep from Him who bids us "Ask and ye shall receive." God also allows us to use means to that end. A cup of milk or cocoa with bread or biscuit has invariably produced sleep and rest. With what thanks I rise refreshed, and remember the Giver of all good gifts! "In everything give thanks." M. J. H.

Miss Robinson, formerly of the Portsmouth Soldiers' Institute, sends from her diary the following "cure for restlessness at night," which was given to her thirty years ago by an aged Quaker lady. It is for the use of God's children only, and to be learned by heart, and repeated slowly and thoughtfully when required:—

When, courting slumber,
The hours I number,
And sad thoughts cumber
My weary mind;
The thought will cheer me,
That Thou art near me,
Whose ear to hear me
Is well inclined.

My soul Thou keepest
Who never sleepest,
'Mid gloom the deepest
There's light above:
Thine eyes behold me,
Thine arms enfold me,
Thy Word has told me
That "God is Love."

CHRISTIANS AND DRINK.

Dear Sir,—Recently, I attended a convention for the promotion of Practical Holiness, and very inspiring and refreshing the addresses were. Most of those present must, I think, have felt an uplifting influence, and an increased desire to live more separate from sin and more close to God for fellowship and for service.

But while confession of sin was made, and rightly so, a marked feature of those gatherings, I heard no mention whatever of the crying sin of our country which calls for vengeance from heaven, and for which the Christian Church, alas, is largely responsible—namely, intemperance. At such meetings this subject is always conspicuous by its absence. Other sins, and details of worldly conformity, are mentioned without any reserve, yet the awful curse of drunkenness, from which so few families are wholly free, is passed over in absolute silence.

It cannot be that the good men whose voices we hear on "Convention" platforms—many of them earnest temperance advocates—are insensible of the fearful responsibility of the Christian Church in this matter. If all Christians in England renounced in themselves and discouraged in others the use of intoxicating drink the country would be comparatively sober in twelve months.

The words of the venerable Neal Dow were absolutely true: "When the Christian Church says to the liquor traffic 'Go,' then it will go." Why does she not say it, at least in gatherings where she professes to forsake sin and to seek "practical holiness"? Why such silence? Is everybody afraid to speak out?

At the close of the convention two most interesting missionary meetings were held, but it struck me as very *un*practical holiness to leave altogether out of consideration the fact that if we do nothing to discountenance the practice of sending drink to native races, we are verily guilty of the dreadful havoc wrought amongst them, havoc that no missionary can remedy. At present Christian England is a by-word on heathen shores for her drunkenness, and it has been calmly computed that for every native in India who adopts our faith a hundred adopt our practice; and that for every convert to Christianity we must reckon one hundred drunkards! And no wonder, if, for every missionary, 3000 gallons of rum are sent out from England!

It is high time, surely, that Christians who profess so solemnly that their "all is on the altar" should consider whether the drunkard's drink is not among those things they are willing to give up for Christ's sake.—I am, yours truly, Lucy Taylor.

Our Daily Homily

SUNDAY, April 17.

"A man can receive nothing, except it have been given him from heaven."—John iii. 27 (R.V.)

After six months of marvellous ministry, in which the Baptist had seen the whole land at his feet, had gathered a band of disciples, and had introduced the Messiah to the Jewish people, he found the crowds dwindling. His disciples viewed with feelings of chagrin the transference of popular interest from their master to Him of whom he had borne witness. Our text was his reply.

What John the Baptist meant by it. He realised that the crowds, the hushed attention, the swift response, the power of speech, the message, the deep repentance, the office of morning star heralding the Dayspring from on high, had been the gift of God. He had nothing which he had not received; he would have received nothing, except God had given it to him. Whether these things went or came was a matter altogether beyond his control. His part was to receive and use what God gave, and then return to Him, at his bidding, the saved talent. This forbade alike pride and despondency.

What we may learn by it. Humility and peace. Humility. Is this the time of your prosperity? Crowds wait on your words, mighty movements circle around you, glorious results follow on your plans! Do not be puffed up. Boast not yourself. "Who maketh thee to differ, and what hast thou that thou didst not receive? But if thou didst receive it, why dost thou glory, as if thou hadst not received it?" Peace. If it is not due to your lethargy or sloth that the crowds have ebbed away, and that the tide of conversions has dropt below its former level, be at peace. These are things which the Holy Spirit worketh, dividing to each one severally as He will. You may even languish like John in prison, but God will maintain your cause behind your back (Matt. xi. 7).

MONDAY, April 18.

"If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith to thee, Give Me to drink; thou wouldest have asked of Him, and He would have given thee living water."—John iv. 10.

There are wonderful contrasts here! He who gives rest sits weary on the well-head; He who was the Jews' Messiah utters his deepest lessons to a woman of Samaria. He that gives living water asks for water from the dark, cool depths that lay beneath them.

God's best things are gifts. Light, air, natural beauty, elasticity of the spirits, the sense of vigorous health, human love, and, above all, his only begotten and beloved Son. Among all other gifts is there one to be compared to this? The living waters of eternal life, which Jesus opens up in our hearts, is an altogether unspeakable bestowment. Nothing can purchase it. It must be received as a gift, or not at all.

God's gifts must be asked for. "Thou wouldest have asked, and He would have given." This is the law of Heaven. Prayer is a necessary link between the Divine hand that gives and the human heart that receives. We have not, because we ask not. There is nothing in our Lord's words of the dreamy and languid pietism which refuses to ask because it will not dictate to the perfect wisdom of God.

If we had fuller knowledge we should pray more. "If thou knewest . . thou wouldest ask." If thou knewest who He is that stands besides thee in thy hours of private prayer—if thou knewest all the possibilities of the life of prayer—if thou knewest what gains would accrue to thee, and the deliverances that might accrue to thee, on thy knees thou wouldest give thyself to prayer, as though thou hadst nothing else to do in the world.

TUESDAY, April 19.

"The Father loveth the Son, and showeth Him all things: .....and greater works than these will He show Him."—John v. 20 (R.V.).

The Father loved Thee, my Lord, not only because Thou wert his Son, dwelling in his bosom, but because Thou wert his obedient servant. It is thus that Thou spakest of Thyself, "Therefore doth my Father love Me, because I lay down my life; this commandment have I received of my Father." And I would inherit a similar love, not only the love of my adoption, but of service; for again thou saidst, "If a man love Me, he will keep my word, and my Father will love him."

And the Father was ever showing Thee what He was doing in the unseen and eternal depths. Indeed, it seemeth that Thou wert more occupied in beholding the things which were unseen than those which were seen. Thou didst nothing that was not in the pattern shown Thee on the mount of fellowship, but whatever was wrought there Thou didst here. Teach me to live like this!

Thy Father led Thee to even greater works. First the daughter of Jairus, then Lazarus; first the Sermon on the Mount, then the prophecies of the closing days; first the Mountain of Transfiguration, then of Ascension. So would I be led forward, from Cana to Calvary, from Bethlehem to Bethany, from Jerusalem to the uttermost part of the world. Ever greater things, because with profounder humility and deeper insight into the meaning of thy death. Deeper and therefore higher; lower, and therefore further; nearer Thy cross, and therefore reaching to all men.

WEDNESDAY, April 20.

"For Him the Father, even God, hath sealed."—John vi. 27 (R.V.).

The seal is the mark of authentication. The Book of Esther often refers to the importance of the royal seal as giving validity and authenticity to documents to which it was appended. So at the waters of Jordan God authenticated our Lord, first by the voice that spake from heaven, and secondly by the holy anointing that came upon his head, setting Him apart for holy service. What the Father did for his Son, He does for his sons.

The conditions of sealing. In the case of our Lord there was entire subjection to the Father's will, although it involved his leaving the blessed home of Nazareth and identifying Himself with the sins and sorrows of men, through baptism in waters where they had confessed their sins. We, too, must be prepared to obey utterly. We may not shrink, nor hold our lives dear to ourselves, nor refrain from helping men to the price of blood.

The agent of sealing. The Spirit descended and abode upon Him; He was filled with the Spirit, and returned in his power to Galilee. We, too, are sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise, who stamps us with the die of our Saviour's image and superscription. Simultaneously with his gracious work upon us, we may detect his loving voice within us, witnessing that we are children of God.

The effect of sealing. Secrecy, safety, and assurance. Secrecy, Song of Sol. iv. 12. Safety, Matt. xxvii. 65, 66. Assurance, Rom. viii. 15, 16, 17. There is also a daily assimilation, though we wist it not, to the glorious likeness of our Lord, so that those who see us bear witness that his name is on us.

THURSDAY, April 21.

"The Spirit was not yet given; because Jesus was not yet glorified."—John vii. 39 (R.V.).

Calvary must precede the Ascension, and both must come before Pentecost. The glorified Lord was the text on which the Spirit was to discourse, and the text must be complete before the sermon can commence. Moreover, it was only when our Lord had ascended to the right hand of the Father that He could receive or transmit the Divine Comforter. He must be by the right hand of God exalted, before He could ask for and receive and shed forth the Holy Spirit of Promise. The one Paraclete must be withdrawn into the glory, ere the other could take up his work.

But there is a deep inner lesson for us all in these words. We sometimes wonder why we have not received the Spirit, and why our lives are not channels through which He pours in mighty rivers to make desert hearts and lives blossom and sing. How gladly would we part with all beside, if we might be conscious that not tiny streamlets, not one river of holy influence merely, but that rivers were issuing from us as the waters from the threshold of the temple! Yet it is not so. And if not, why not?

Is not the reason to be sought in our neglect to glorify Christ? We have never yet abandoned ourselves to Him, content to live the branch-life, with no other aim than to realise the one purpose of his most blessed life, the glorifying of the Father. We have never seriously made it our life-purpose to glorify the Lord Jesus. There has been no triumphal entry into our hearts, no enthronisation, no challenge to the gates of our soul that they should lift themselves up to admit the King of Glory. The Spirit will be given when Christ is glorified.

FRIDAY, April 22.

"If ye abide in my word."—John viii. 31 (R.V.).

This is the germ-thought, afterwards wrought out and developed more perfectly in chapter xv. We should not lose much, if anything, by setting aside all other words, and giving ourselves up to the indwelling of the words of Christ. They are a sunny atmosphere in which the soul ripens to maturity; a land that floweth with milk and honey. Three effects follow:—

1. We shall be approved as Christ's disciples. "Then are ye truly my disciples." Of some the Master asks, "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things that I say?" And He drives these from Him saying, "I never knew you." His words are the supreme test, the fire which detects the ore, the winnowing-fan that finds out the wheat.

2. We shall know the truth. God teaches us differently from men. They deal in peradventures and surmises; He with certainties—"Ye shall know the truth." They talk about the truth; He gives us the thing itself, and we know because we possess. They deal with circumstances and externals, He with the heart and root of matters. They give to the mind and soul, He to the spirit. We know the truth, because "the Truth" is in us, and we are in the truth.

3. We shall be free. "The truth shall make you free." Just as we are free from the terrors which belief in witchcraft and ghosts was wont to breed, because we know that the spirits of the dead do not haunt dark and dangerous places; so, as Jesus teaches us the truth about God, and the future, and the forgiveness of sins, and the broken power of Satan, and the impotence of death, we are delivered from the bondage of fear, and walk with God in perfect peace.

SATURDAY, April 23.

"We must work the works of Him that sent Me."—John ix. 4 (R.V.).

Is not this exceedingly tender and beautiful? The Lord does not hesitate in describing Himself as specially designated to do a certain work. In every part of this Gospel He describes Himself as the sent One; but He graciously conjoins his disciples and friends in it, saying, We must work. It is as though He said, "I have a designated work which must needs be done; but I cannot do it alone. We must do it, you and I, together.

Fellowship with God the Father is the law of all industry. Every crop that goldens in the summer wind is due to the summons of the God of Nature and the husbandman. Come and let us work together, thou and I. Every achievement in factory or mill of textile fabrics is due to the combination of the Divine laws and the human agency. We must work, is God's constant appeal.

Fellowship with the Son is the law of the kingdom. We have been called into the fellowship or partnership of the Son of God. He does not say Go, but Come; not Do this, but Let us do it. He has set his heart on the glory of the Father, and He calls us to co-operate with Him in bringing back men to God.

Fellowship with the Holy Spirit is the law of all successful service. The closing words of the benediction that refer to the communion of the Holy Spirit are specially significant. For that word might be rendered partnership. "We are witnesses, and so is also the Holy Ghost." The Spirit and the Bride say, Come. As Peter began to speak the Holy Ghost fell. Oh, for pure hands and a clean heart that we may be worthy of this Divine confederacy.

The late Jerry McAuley,

OF WATER-STREET MISSION, NEW YORK.

THE unique glory of the Christian Gospel is its adequacy to the hardest and, seemingly, most hopeless cases. Whether it be the man living among the tombs, with a legion of devils keeping his spirit fast bound, or whether it be the cultured persecutor of the Church—when Christ meets him as Saviour, the devils fear and fly, or the haughty Pharisee becomes a penitent disciple. Of the former class of cases the subject of this short sketch was a splendid example of Christ's power to redeem from the lowest depths. The name of JERRY MCAULEY has been a household word in the mouths of many Christian workers on both sides of the Atlantic for the last quarter of a century. The story of his conversion, and of his subsequent service for his fallen fellows, has often been related, but it will bear retelling. No worker among the "submerged" can ever give way to despair who has once heard of what Jerry was saved from, and what he was enabled to do.

Space would fail us in giving a detailed narrative of Jerry's redemption; let the following suffice, from the pen of one who has for the past twelve years superintended the famous Water-street Mission in New York, which Jerry was instrumental in founding. Mr. S. H. Hadley, the writer, is himself a trophy of Divine grace, saved through the agency of Jerry's mission. He says:—

Jerry was "imported" to the States from Ireland when ten years old, and was brought up by his grandmother. He became a thief, and was sent to the prison of Sing Sing when nineteen years old, for fifteen years and six months. It was while there that he heard the soul-stirring words of "Awful" Gardner, a noted prize-fighter who had been converted and was going about wherever he could get anybody to listen, telling people the wonders of Jesus' dying love to sinners. Jerry was pricked to the heart, and after going to his cell began to hunt through and read, as best he could, an old Bible he found in the ventilator of his cell, which up to this time had never been touched. He was deeply convicted of sin, and towards nightfall began to pray. For hours he remained on his knees in prayer. Suddenly the glory of God seemed to shine into his dark heart, and he jumped and shouted until it awoke the keepers, who came to see what had happened.

At once he began to do mission work among his fellow-prisoners, and a great revival broke out. He was pardoned when about half his sentence had expired. When he got back to the city he went to lodge over a beer saloon, and soon became a worse drunkard than ever, and a noted criminal in lower New York. The missionaries sent down there found Jerry, and through their labours he was reclaimed and brought back to God. He fell five times during the first year of his new start, but was persuaded by friends to give up tobacco, and never fell afterwards. Four years after, in 1872, he was enabled to start the Water-street Mission. It was started in a very humble way, but a line of work and style of work was marked out then which has never been departed from since. There never has been much teaching, and no exhortation at all, except when some stranger comes in who has nothing else to give; but the Word is read by some redeemed man, and in the simplest way he gives his ideas of the meaning and applies it to his own life and experience. Personal testimony has been the greatest power for awakening sinners and creating a hope that they too can be saved.

Jerry's wife was soundly saved about the same time as himself, and they entered on a new and blessed partnership in rescue work. In that "down town" part of New York City the fields were truly white unto harvest, and many sheaves were garnered for God from among the slaves of drink, vice, and crime. Of course there were big difficulties, but God raised up faithful friends and generous helpers, and the work progressed. After some ten years' plodding and successful labour in Water-street, Jerry McAuley and his wife moved to another centre of work at Cremorne Mission, and there the husband toiled and testified till the Master took him home in October, 1884. His devoted wife continued the management of the work at Cremorne Mission till about five years ago, when her health utterly failed. Later she married again, but still takes a very lively and practical interest in the rescue work to which she gave the best years of her life.

After the removal of Mr. and Mrs. McAuley from Water-street the work there was superintended for a time by Mr. J. F. Shorey, well known to many London friends as an active Christian worker. He was succeeded in the management of the mission by Mr. S. H. Hadley, who is still the life and soul of it; while the Cremorne Mission is now conducted by a devoted Christian couple, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Ballou. The twenty-fifth anniversary of the Water-street work was recently held in New York, when the well-to-do crowds assembled afternoon and evening in Carnegie Hall heard some thrilling testimonies from men redeemed by the instrumentality of the work. Not the least interesting was the experience of Mr. S. H. Hadley, who thus described his conversion:—

I am a typical representative of rescue mission work myself. You should have seen me fifteen years ago, when I went into the Cremorne Mission. I was just out of the lock-up and on the verge of delirium tremens. I heard Jerry McAuley say that night that he had once been a drinking man like myself, but had been saved. When Jerry called on those who wanted to be saved to raise their hands mine was the first up, though I'd rather have gone out on the street and fought a dozen men than do it. Jerry made us all walk to where he stood, and then he prayed. "Dear Jesus, pity these poor fellows," he said. "They're in a hole; help them out." Then Mrs. Jerry turned in and said, "Lord, you saved me; do the same for these poor fellows," and from that moment I felt I was saved.

Here is another testimony given at the same meeting:—

Rube Johnson, who was introduced as the "biggest bilk that ever walked the streets," told his story as follows:—"I am seventy-eight years of age. As a boy I learned to drink. At thirty I was a drunkard; at fifty I was a sot. Nine times I went to an inebriate home after I was fifty years of age, and struggled, but failed to accomplish anything. I was on the verge of delirium tremens for the third time, when I staggered into the McAuley Mission. There I found Jesus Christ. I saw men there who had been like me; they had reformed and were holding their heads up. I resolved that I could do it if they could, and from that day to this I have not tasted or desired to taste liquor."

The Water-street Mission, since its formation twenty-five years ago, has virtually been the parent of many similar efforts for the reclamation of lost sunken men and women; and that not only in New York City but in other great cities in the States. Those who have been saved at Water-street, or have been awakened to a sense of their Christian stewardship by seeing some of the marvels of that work, have put their hands to the Gospel plough in other hard fields, to the glory of God in the salvation of many who seemed to be led captive by the devil at his will. What romances of redemption might be told of all these various endeavours! The sum total of them can never be reckoned up on earth, but they are preserved in the heavenly archives, and one day the scroll may be displayed to the wondering host of the redeemed.

Another extract we must make from Mr. Hadley's narrative of the past twenty-five years' work at Water-street. It describes the principle that actuates the workers, and it is so remarkable that it seems to us to deserve to be engraved in letters of gold, for the guidance of rescue workers everywhere:—

Our sovereign remedy is Divine love, born in us from the great heart of our dear Redeemer. When the convict who has served his time in Sing Sing prepares to face the world again, that world which can be counted on to do its utmost towards driving him back to the penitentiary, he is usually advised of the thorny path ahead of him, and the last sentence of advice is: "You had better go to the McAuley Mission." As the convict has often heard of it before, if he proposes to reform, he makes his way down here. Here he is sheltered, fed, clothed if need be, and put to work at something. He is asked no questions; no promises are exacted; he has no rules to observe except the one rule of order. He is not lectured on his past; he is not exhorted to lead a better life in the future. He is loved, treated kindly, and joins in prayers night and morning, and attends the meetings; although it is essentially a religious institution, religion is not forced upon him; he is left to himself without constraint of any kind. He is neither watched nor suspected. He is treated as a brother. He is puzzled, and does not know what to make of it. He meets with unvarying kindness on every hand.

Sometimes he steals whatever he can lay his hands on and clears out. Sooner or later he is driven back again by hunger, as the only place where he can find food or shelter. On his return he is met with the same welcome, the same kindness. There is no word of reproof or scolding. Again and again he may show the cloven foot, but in the end he finds that in the Missions founded by Jerry McAuley there is a stock of love and patience not to be exhausted; that here, if not elsewhere, the spirit of the Founder of Christianity lives, and moves, and endures. No wonder that in the end the tough heart of the criminal is finally broken, and he becomes a practical, earnest Christian man, working powerfully and effectively among his former associates to bring them to Christ. The most welcome to Water-street are those who are utterly wrecked; those with whom every effort at reclamation has failed; refuse outcast humanity, male and female; when these are finally converted the power they manifest on the lives of others is marvellous.

The ordinary methods are of no use down here. The work of saving the drunkard is not a duty; it is a passion, thank God. The writer has been down in Water-street among these poor, lost souls for nearly twelve years, and can say that he has never known a man to leave the life of sin and woe unless he was touched by some spark from the heavenly throne, through some living, loving heart, itself redeemed by the precious blood of Christ.

"Buried in the Country."—I.

"POOR thing! What will you do right away in the depth of the country; buried in that tiny village, and with all your energy and love of hard work, too! I call it a perfect sin and waste of power to go there when you might have ample scope for work in London"!

So they talked, one after another of my kind friends, piling up the agonies of country life to such an extent that the picture, I own, grew many shades darker in my own mind. And yet in my inmost heart I knew they were somehow all wrong, I knew that if God sent us to live in such a quiet, out-of-the-way nook, there was no waste in his economy, and that if we were willing, there must be plenty of work; so I determined there and then, as I talked to these Job's comforters, to try and prove to them they were wrong. Whether time has convinced them of this I know not, but perhaps some of my attempts, when "buried in the country," to work as much and as usefully as in a town slum may interest and help those whose lot is cast in similar places "far from the madding crowd."

To start with, I felt assured that it was God's will we should live in this sleepy village of 500 or so inhabitants. Circumstances connected with my brother's work rendered our stay there a necessity. If I had not had this conviction I think I should have hesitated to throw up a settled career of mission work in a poor part of London; but the way was so clearly shown as to our dwelling-place that there was nought to do but follow it. Personally, I greatly preferred town to country life, and I confess my heart rather misgave me when one bleak autumn afternoon we found ourselves located in N——, a village neither beautiful nor interesting, and with absolutely no society, so our friends declared. The parish was not a scattered one; it was worked, or rather not worked, by an old clergyman, who was a scholar rather than a pastor in parochiâ.

"You can do what you like in the way of visiting, and classes and meetings," the good man said to me at our first interview; "but I warn you," he continued, "you will find the people extremely unresponsive. They are apathetic and sleepy, and I have really given up trying to start things. They won't come." This was not encouraging, and rather a damper, so I returned home, I am ashamed to say, a trifle down-hearted. But that evening my brother came to the rescue, and we had a long and serious talk, the upshot of it all being that, as we had both been sent here by Him whom we were trying to serve, He must have work ready for us to do, and we might claim his guidance. We first of all determined on setting apart half an hour daily to pray together for the parish and for any particular cases we might come across in it. "Are not two prayers a perfect strength?" says Rossetti. Better, we had the "If two of you shall be agreed" to go upon, and we both felt that if we were to make any headway in helping others prayer would have to be at the root of all. As time went on, my brother and I kept written lists in our rooms of persons we specially wished to pray for, and against each name was a blank space wherein to record the answers vouchsafed to us.

Next, we determined on a visitation of every house in the locality to take some measure of the materials before us. That, as my brother's duties took up the greater part of the day, fell chiefly to my lot, at any rate in the first instance. I had always rather shrunk from "visiting" the poor, and especially when I had no definite reason to plead as an excuse for the call. So that now my proposed plan of visits had to be carefully thought out and prayed over before it was undertaken. Visiting seemed to me then, and indeed does now, one of the hardest duties of a parochial helper—infinitely harder than the giving of addresses or taking meetings where a number are concerned. It is comparatively easy to splash water over a lot of buckets and fill some, but more is accomplished if each bucket is separately filled, and the "individuality," if I may use the term, of the bucket considered.

And experience had already taught me that individualism in work is the mightiest factor of success, and one which we, who dwell in towns where large classes and overflow meetings are the usual order of things, are perhaps a trifle apt to overlook. But if dealing with souls separately accomplishes more, it certainly needs a greater amount of tact and wisdom, and the being "all things to all men." One has to feel one's way with the individual, never losing sight of the main purpose and object of the visit, viz., to give spiritual help. One has to act cautiously as the special character before one demands, using peculiarities and idiosyncrasies as helps, not hindrances, and as lines on which work may be best done.

One other point my brother and I settled in our minds, and then our paper constitution was complete. That was that we must seek to get a class or something of the sort for all the members of the village community. And especially I felt it would be needful to provide some club or meeting for the women. In country places it has always seemed to me that helps and amusements for the women are not sufficiently provided. As a rule they have a harder time of it than their husbands. The latter very often can go to the parochial institute; indeed, there was one which had grown rusty in our village; and after their day's work the men find enough amusement in lounging about, smoking their pipes, and gossiping with their brother men. But the women, the poor mothers with large families, have to be always "on" and up and doing, and can't soothe their nerves by a smoke or a game of billiards or bowls. And so I determined that while we would try and get something to interest the men and the lads and lasses and children, the women certainly should not be left out in the cold. How we managed must be left for another time.

The Jews' Wailing-Place, Jerusalem.

"There the Jews of all ages, and both sexes, from all parts of the earth, raise their wail over their beloved but now degraded city. They sit on the ground, covering themselves from head to foot with sackcloth, some in silence, many of them crying out in the touching language of Scripture—How long, O Lord, wilt Thou be angry for ever?" (See Ashworth's "Walks in Canaan.") Talmage, in his description of this pathetic scene, says that some of the mourners chant as a refrain—"We sit in solitude and mourn."

See where the Jews, with dismal wailings, mourn
Their city's fate, afflicted and forlorn;
Her glory is departed! What remains
But tells the story of a land in chains!

Bereft of every joy that life endears,
These sons of sorrow seek relief in tears:
Against that sacred wall those lips are pressed
That have not yet the crime of crimes confessed.

Here God's own people weep their country's fall,
That glorious Fane was once their all in all!
Now Moslem rulers every vestige claim,
While Israel's sons submit with tears of shame.

"How long, O Lord! how long," they vainly cry,
"Mourn we in solitude, and prostrate lie?
Thy Temple is destroyed, thy priests are gone,
With all that once in regal splendour shone.

"Within her courts, that praises filled of yore,
The psaltery and harp are heard no more:
The glorious worship of the years gone by Hath ceased, and strangers ask the reason why.*

"No blood of victims from thine altar flows,
No sheaf of first fruits here a welcome knows,
No trumpet call we hear, no festive song,
But mournful cry, How long, O Lord, how long?"

O brothers, sisters, weeping thus in vain,
Will ye your Saviour's mercy yet disdain?
Confess your sins, your Saviour too confess,
And crown Him King, "the Lord, your Righteousness."

Then, as the veil falls from those glistening eyes,
How gladly shall ye hear that voice, "Arise!
Yea, with the world as witness, rise and shine!"
For lo! on Salem's walls a light divine,

That tells of reconciliation freely made,
As Israel hath the voice of Heaven obeyed;
Then shall she rise, in sevenfold beauty clad,
And Heaven shall smile, and Israel's heart be glad!

A LESSON ON FORGIVENESS.—Matt. xviii. 21-35.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Forgive, and ye shall be forgiven." —Luke vi. 37.

DURING the latter part of his ministry Christ teaches many practical lessons. Here He teaches forgiveness. To forgive a wrong done means to give up the right to any revenge or compensation. A wrong done, whether to God or man, means a debt incurred. Forgive—give up the right of demanding payment of the debt.

GOD AND FORGIVENESS.

We rise or fall with the God we worship. Many heathen nations know no such thing as forgiveness, because they worship gods who are revengeful. Every sin committed against the god must be atoned for by some act of self-punishment.

Compare the Romish doctrine of penances.

By the fact that God forgives our responsibility is greatly increased. We should be imitators of God as loving children.

EXTENT OF FORGIVENESS (22).

The "seventy times seven" means that there is no limit to the demand made upon us for forgiveness. God forgives the thousandth transgression as readily as the first. "Though your sins be as scarlet," etc. "Him that cometh (though he be the vilest wretch), I will in no wise cast out." So we owe to Christ the loving heart that will be ever ready to forgive.

THE PARABLE.

This duty is enforced by Christ in a parable. We are forgiven, therefore we should forgive. The story may be divided into three sections.

I. The King and his minister (23-27). He owed about four million pounds; he could not pay, and in accord with custom was to be sold with his family to realise the amount. His prayer for mercy is answered. His lord forgave the debt. (See note at head of the lesson.)

II. The Minister and servant (27-30). The latter owes a little over £1. He cannot pay. His prayer for mercy unheard. Roughly treated. Imprisoned for the debt.

III. The King repents (31-34). Hearing of the minister's hard treatment of his servant, the king sends him to jail, and he is tortured there until his friends will find the four millions to release him.

FELLOW-SERVANTS.

Those on an equality with us—our fellow-men. We must forgive these their transgressions against us.

Teachers should illustrate by means of the small sins that children commit against each other—hard names, tale-bearing, etc. It is difficult to forgive, but we have no right to expect God's forgiveness if we do not forgive.

CONDITION OF FORGIVENESS.

Repentance. God is always willing to forgive, but his mercy does not become operative for us until we repent and ask for it. My enemy may not desire my pardon. It is not my duty to try to force it upon him, for he would not appreciate it. It would be casting pearls before swine. My duty is to have a spirit ready to forgive as soon as there are signs of repentance. "If we confess our sins He is faithful and just to forgive."

THE LORD'S PRAYER.

"Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive them that trespass against us." We make ourselves an example to God. God does not refuse his forgiveness as a punishment for our hard-heartedness, but because we can only appreciate his forgiveness in so far as we are prepared to forgive those who have wronged us.

MAY WE FIGHT AGAINST THOSE WHO OFFEND US?

Yes; in so far as we are fighting for the good of someone else, and not for our own sakes. Needful to teach transgressors a lesson, but in order that the lesson may benefit them they must feel that we are not gratifying any spirit of revenge, but thinking only of the good of others.

ILLUSTRATION.—(1) Punishment meted out by the judge in a court of law.

(2) A boy punishes a bully in defence of a weaker schoolfellow.

(3) Fighting against all wrongdoers for Christ's sake, and that means also for the wrongdoer's sake, to bring him into the right way.

Christ and Childhood.

I.

THE INFANCY OF JESUS.

NOTHING in our Lord's life is more beautiful than his ministry to the children, except it be the story of his own birth and childhood as told to us by Luke and Matthew.

The Emperor Augustus being at peace with the whole world, he sent forth a decree that all his subjects should be registered and taxed. In obedience to this order every family in Palestine went up to their native place to be numbered and pay their due. Hence Joseph and Mary came up from Nazareth to Bethlehem. It was probably late in the day when they arrived at the inn, or khan, to find the place full with the many strangers who were travelling for the same purpose. They had, therefore, to seek shelter for the night in the grotto or stables, where they put up the ass on which Mary rode, and here, among the cattle resting and feeding, the Holy Babe was born.

But away in the still fields, beneath the starry sky, the quiet sheep are browsing on the thin grass, or lying on the yet warm earth. The wind sighs over the scanty herbage; here and there a solitary figure rises above the peaceful flock, or the form of a Syrian peasant may be seen, outlined against the clear night horizon, by the flickering light of the watch fires, for the shepherds who guard the sheep are not sleeping, but abiding in the field, faithfully keeping watch over their flocks by night. To these men in their humble service "the angel of the Lord came down" and told them of the Saviour's birth, and how they might find the Babe. Then came the heavenly host praising God and singing the first Christian and Christmas hymn. When the angels were gone and the glorious light had vanished, the shepherds went, and found all that the angels had told them was true, and they saw Mary and Joseph with the young Child lying in a manger, and knew Him to be "Christ the Lord," and returned praising and glorifying God.

As in the darkest hour in midnight the new day is born, so came the Gospel of old to the shepherds, and thus the Light of Life first visited the earth. So God sent the good tidings of his best gift to the night watchers. Thus of great joy in the most unlooked-for places, to the most unlikely people, at the most unexpected time; but always first to those most prepared and humble does the blessing come.

Christ's coming was not first declared in the Temple, nor in Jerusalem, not first to the priests and rulers, but to the faithful and lowly shepherds, watching and waiting through the night, came both the message and vision of the Saviour of the world. Jesus came into the world's darkness to be the true and only light, bringing peace and joy to all, and still He comes as the Light of Life for each child, as "the true Light, which lighteth every one coming into the world" of sin and darkness.

When the Holy Child was eight days old the name Jesus was given Him, and the Jewish rite of circumcision was fulfilled.

Thirty-two days later Jesus was taken to Jerusalem by Mary and Joseph, and presented to the Lord in the Temple according to the law, when an offering was given. Because the family was poor, a sacrifice of two young pigeons was made instead of a richer gift. To this service of dedication came a very good old man named Simeon, who, seeing the Holy Child, knew Him to be the Messiah. He took the babe in his arms, and blessed God with words that have since become a precious Psalm of Praise. While Mary and Joseph were wondering at this, there came also a very old prophetess called Anna, who served God night and day with fasting and prayer. She likewise gave thanks for the child Jesus unto the Lord.

Round the infancy of Christ gathered the praises of heaven and earth. He was cradled in the songs of angels and of saints. Happy indeed were Mary and Joseph with this solemn joy in their hearts; but

THEIR GLADNESS WAS NOT TO LAST LONG.

The parents of Jesus returned to Bethlehem from Jerusalem, a distance of about five miles, where they lived in a house or lodging of their own. One day they were surprised by the visit of some strange travellers, who were Gentiles, and had come from the far East. They were "wise men" from Persia, called Magi, worshippers of light and fire. Having seen some bright object in the heavens at night, and heard of the promise of the Messiah King, probably connecting this strange light with the prophecy of "the star of Jacob," they came westward to learn more about it. When these wise men (probably rich princes) arrived at Jerusalem, they went to Herod and eagerly inquired, "Where is He that is born king of the Jews?" Herod, in great alarm at hearing about another king born to the Jews, called the scribes together to answer the question. They replied that according to the prophet Micah He was to be born "in Bethlehem of Judea." Thither went these pilgrims with their caravan of camels and asses, and as they journeyed they saw again the beautiful star that finally rested over the place where Jesus was. Then they were filled with great gladness. They entered the house, and seeing Mary and the young child, they fell down and worshipped Him, and left their gifts and treasures with Him, and departed to their own country by another way.

Herod was disappointed that he was not told where this new pretender to the throne was to be found, so to make sure that he would not live he sent a secret order to kill all the children under two in Bethlehem. Before the cruel order was executed, an angel told Joseph in a dream to take away Mary and Jesus. Joseph rose up at once in the night and obeyed the voice, and fled into Egypt. Thus Herod did not destroy the life of the young King.

We learn how heaven and earth bore witness to the coming of the Saviour, which is Christ the Lord. All types of men gathered round his cradle as they did around his cross; and as at his birth the Magi from the East owned Him "King of the Jews," so did the Roman Governor from the West at his death declare, "This is Jesus, the King of the Jews." All that Jesus was at his birth He was through life, and all that He was at death He had been from his earliest breath. "The same yesterday, to-day, and for ever"—"Lord of lords, King of kings."

ANSWERS TO LAST WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (117).

1. "The other disciple" (generally supposed to be John). (John xx. 4.)
2. Mary Magdalene and the other Mary. (Matt. xxviii. 1.) The women. (Luke xxiv. 1.)
3. Those written by Moses and the prophets. (Luke xxiv. 27.)
4. The two disciples on the way to Emmaus. (Luke xxiv. 13.)
5. Mary Magdalene to the two angels. (Luke xx. 13.)
6. "Peace be unto you." (John xx. 19.) His peace.
7. Thomas was not with the disciples when Jesus came, and did not believe it was the Lord, but eight days after Jesus appeared again and said to Thomas, "Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side; and be not faithless, but believing. And Thomas said unto Him, my Lord and my God." (John xx. 24-29.)
8. Many were pricked in their heart. Then they that gladly received Peter's word were baptised. And all that believed were together and had all things common; and sold their possessions and goods and parted them to all men, as every man had need. And they continuing daily with one accord in the Temple and breaking bread from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart. Praising God and having favour with all the people. And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved. (Acts ii. 37-47.)
9. Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptising them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Teaching them to observe whatsoever I have commanded you. (Matt. xxviii. 19-20.)

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 118).

A familar hymn begins:—

1. Safe in the arms of Jesus,
Safe on his gentle breast.

Find a verse in Isaiah (35 to 45) which exactly justifies and describes this.

2. Jesus, refuge of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly.

Find a verse in the Psalms (one at least) and a verse in Hebrews which speaks of this refuge.

3. There is a fountain filled with blood
Drawn from Immanuel's veins,
And sinners plunged beneath that flood
Lose all their guilty stains.

Find a verse in Zechariah which speaks of such a fountain; and another verse in the Epistle of John which speaks of the cleansing blood of Jesus.

4. Not all the blood of beasts
On Jewish altars slain,
Could give the guilty conscience peace,
Or wash away the stain.

What verses in Hebrews ix. and x. exactly correspond with this?

[Children under TEN do No. 1; those under THIRTEEN any two.]

Personal.

Owing to the Easter holidays there will be no first list of No. 117; all names will be included in next week's list.

Many thanks to kind friends for the large box of blotters. I am sending them on for the soldiers. Also for a box of flowers for the sick children.

Machinery.

For we are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works.—Eph. ii. 10.

DO you like to watch the engines on the railroad, or the machinery in a workshop? I feel sure that all the boys do, at any rate, and that they would like to have the handling of some of those engines by-and-by when they grow older. I saw some very interesting machinery the other day, and thought that I would like to tell you how it made me think of the text which stands at the head of my paper. This machinery was in a large boot and shoe factory, and as I went the round of the rooms I thought how like that factory was to the world in which we live, and how much we who live in it are like the machines. Let us see what made me think so!

1. First of all, the power which works the machine is quite distinct from the machine itself. I saw some machines in that factory standing quiet and idle. There was no whirring of wheels in them; there was no work being done by them. Why? The machines were in perfect order; there was nothing wrong with them, but there was no power to work them.

Now the power which makes our bodies work is quite distinct from our bodies themselves. That wonderful power which makes our brains think, and our tongues speak, and our hands move, we call life. A dead body may be perfect in all its parts, but it cannot do anything, because the power which we call life is not there. From whence does this power come? When we were going through the factory we stopped to look in at the engine-room. There was the powerful engine which supplied all the machines with their power to work. If that had stopped, all the machines in the factory would have stopped too. The power which makes us able to work, the power which we call life, all comes from one place—all life comes from God!

The second thing that I noticed was this:—

2. Nearly all the machines differ from one another—some were made to do one part of the work, and some to do another. Some were very complicated—made up of a number of different pieces—and some were quite simple. Some were made to do the rough work and some to do the fine, some for cutting, some for stitching, some for button-holing, some for polishing. Each was fitted for its own work, and no machinery could do any but its own work properly. And we are just like machines in this respect. Each has his own work to do in the world, and no one else can do it for us. God has sent us into this world, and has given us something to do for Him. It is of no use for us to try to do other people's work; we must do our own, and do it as well as we can. Some of us are strong, and fitted to do the rough work of the world; and some are delicate, and can only do the quieter work. Some men go out into the world and make great names for themselves, and are spoken of as heroes; some stay at home, and do just the little bits of work that fall to them in their homes. In the eye of the manufacturer the polishing machine is just as useful as those which do the cutting-out and the stitching; and in the sight of God the boys and girls who do the tiny bits of work are just as important as those who do the great things. That is rather comforting, is it not? For we do not all get the chance of doing anything grand, such as leading a forlorn hope or rescuing someone out of a burning house, do we?

3. Thirdly, I noticed that the machines need to be kept quite clean and free from rust. If they were allowed to get rusty, they could not do their work properly. We need to keep ourselves in good health, or we cannot do the work which God wants us to do. Perfect cleanliness and regular exercise and wholesome food are necessary for the health of the body; pure and true thoughts and good books are needful for the health of the mind, and, above all, we need to keep our souls free from the rust of sin.

4. The machines are made to do good, useful work. Sometimes machines get out of order, and then instead of doing good works they do bad ones. I have a sewing machine which sometimes goes wrong. Instead of making nice, even stitches, it makes a loose tangle of cotton at the back of the material, and then the work has all to be unpicked and done over again. That is not the sort of work for which the machine was made (created). And sometimes we get a bit out of order, don't we? And instead of doing kind acts and saying pleasant words we become cross and selfish and perverse. But that is not the sort of work that God meant us to do. He created us for good works, and what a pity it is when we do wicked works instead.

5. Then the machines need someone to control and guide them.

Power might be present to make the machines go, the wheels might be turning round with a great deal of noise, but there would be no good work done if there were not someone there to manage them.

That is rather like some people in this world. They make a lot of noise, but they don't do much, because there is no one ruling and guiding their lives. And the one who is at the machine must understand it thoroughly or the work will not get done properly. So we need to give ourselves and our lives over to someone who knows all about us and can guide our lives rightly. Jesus Christ knows all about us. He understands us better even than we understand ourselves, and He can so rule our lives that we shall be able to do the work that God sent us into the world to do.

6. Lastly, I noticed that the machines are nearly all stamped with their maker's name. They showed to whom they belonged. God made us. Is his name written on our foreheads? Do we show by our actions and behaviour that we belong to Him? Let us give ourselves into his keeping, and ask Him to make us able to do the work that He has given, skilfully and thoroughly. Grace Winter.

SCRIPTURE UNION ANNIVERSARY MEETINGS.

Central Hall, Bolton, April 25 (7.30); Y.M.C.A., Liverpool, April 26 (4 and 7.30); Strangeways Hall, Manchester, April 28 (3 and 6.30). Mr. Hutchinson and others will speak.

Redhill Christian Convention.

THE eighth Redhill Convention was held last week at the Town Hall. The services were very well attended; the different speakers delivered their messages with much spiritual power; and the favourable weather enabled the people to attend with comfort. The arrangements were as usual, a prayer meeting at 8 a.m., lasting till 8.45, at a hall near by, and regular meetings at 11 a.m., 3 p.m., and 7.30 p.m. The Convention had been preceded by weekly prayer meetings, and the Lord was graciously pleased to answer prayer by showers of blessing at the Convention. Whatever doubts there may have been as to the composition of the attendance, all must have been set at rest by the closing meeting on the Friday night, when the great body of people rose to their feet in testimony that they had given themselves over unreservedly to the Lord Jesus as his willing servants.

The Convention, which was presided over by Mr. Robert Wilson, of Keswick, was opened by an earnest, loving address from Rev. H. Brass, the vicar of the parish, on Isaiah vi. 1 to 8, showing the marvellous change that came over the prophet after he had seen the Lord, when his uncleanness was revealed to him, and how the Lord fitted him, and made him willing to do his service. This was applied practically to those present. Rev. E. W. Moore, who followed, took as his subject, "Grieve not the Holy Spirit" (Eph. iv. 20), and pointed out (1) the great privilege, "the sealing"; (2) the great prospect, "the day of redemption"; (3) the great peril, "grieving the Holy Spirit." He also pointed out the of the Spirit, the conviction and the sealing, illustrated in Eph. i. 13, 14, and showed the necessity, the process, and the outcome of the sealing. After dwelling on the prospect of the Lord's coming, he spoke very solemnly on the awful peril of grieving the Holy Spirit.

On Tuesday morning Mr. Moore conducted the Bible reading, and took as his subject "The Manufacture of Missionaries," illustrated by Elisha in 2 Kings ii., "Ask what I shall do for thee before I be taken away from thee," and dividing his subject into three portions, the blessing asked, the condition, and the result. The next speaker, in the afternoon, was Rev. H. C. Sturdy, of Dorking, who took as his subject, "Christian Unity, from the Lord's Prayer," John xvii., 21, etc. The Lord Jesus contemplates his family to the end of the ages, and prays, first for their preservation, second for their sanctification, third for their unification, fourth for their glorification. "All one in Christ Jesus" is the Keswick motto; it is unity, not uniformity, that we want, one flock not one outward enclosure, one spiritual union under one spiritual Head, one in fellowship, like the spiritual temple of which the Lord Jesus is the chief corner stone, and to do this we have to endeavour to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.

Mr. Sturdy was followed by Rev. R. Middleton, of Norwich, on "Deliverance, following Surrender." Mr. Middleton took as his keynote Ps. lxviii. 6, and pointed out that Christians do not really believe that "moment by moment they are kept in his love," but rather that they are kept by their struggles and by their resolutions. He showed the marvellous deliverance of the Israelites at the Red Sea when surrounded by their enemies, and confronted by the sea, they had come to an end of themselves, and boldly trusted themselves to the Lord, with the result that they marched across the sea on dry land, so we must give up ourselves, our wills, our all, if we are going to follow Him and receive his full blessing.

In the evening Rev. J. Brash, taking the Church of Ephesus (Rev. ii.) as his subject, pointed out the good features in that church. He then showed the great blot, "thou hast left thy first love," and made a solemn appeal to the backsliders present to return to their first love, turning not only from sin, but returning to the Lord. Rev. R. Middleton followed with "No room for Jesus." 1, No room in the inn; 2, No room in his own city (Luke iv.); 3, No room in everyday life when He rebuked sin (Luke viii. 37); 4, No room for Jesus amid sectarian differences (Luke ix. 52, 53); 5, No room for Jesus among the professional theologians (Luke x. 1). No room for Jesus on earth, so they suspended Him on a cross between heaven and earth; but there is room for Jesus still in the heart of the believer, and he concluded with a solemn appeal, Is there any room in your heart for Jesus?

Wednesday morning saw the Convention attending service at St. Matthew's Church, when Rev. Dr. Townsend preached on the Lord Jesus leading us in triumph. This was followed by the administration of the Lord's Supper to all who loved the Lord Jesus in sincerity, and embraced members of many branches of the Church of Christ. The afternoon of Wednesday was devoted to two addresses by Rev. Dr. Townsend and Mr. Middleton on the Second Coming of the Lord; and in the evening a missionary meeting was held, when the speakers were Rev. H. Bowman, of Bombay, and Mr. Hayes, of the Congo Balolo Mission. Both these servants of the Lord showed what refined heathenism in India and brutal cannibalism in Africa are, and they gave telling illustrations bearing on these points, appealing to the audience not to allow these heathens to go down to the grave Christless, but to obey the last command of the Lord Jesus to disciple all the nations. The meeting closed with a few earnest words from Rev. Musgrave Brown.

Thursday morning was devoted to a Bible-reading by Rev. Musgrave Brown on "Life more abundant" (John x. 10). He sketched the life of the natural man from babyhood to manhood, and then contrasted it with that of the spiritual man. First life, then growth in its different stages up to the full stature of manhood. And we must be born again, we must be educated, grow in grace, and in the knowledge and love of the Lord Jesus, go through the spiritual three R's as well as the educational three R's; grow from babes in Christ unto a perfect (complete) man.

In the afternoon Revs. John Brash and Frank S. Webster gave the addresses; the former on "All things are yours," and the latter on "Turn us again, O Lord." In the evening Mr. Brash spoke again on "That I may know Him" (Phil. iii. 10). The knowledge of Christ must be the knowledge of a living Saviour, as well as of a Saviour who died for the world. "A living Lamb, as it had been slain. This knowledge brings full salvation." Again, we may know Christ as the power for service. What was the result of the baptism of the Spirit, which Paul received three days after conversion? "The love of Christ constraineth us." The result was love—a spontaneous, forgiving, unquenchable love that constrains us to serve our Master. On one condition will the Holy Spirit so possess you as to give you a clear bright vision and knowledge of Christ. "I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus, my Lord." Mr. Webster followed with a powerful address on the words, "I have given into thine hand Jericho" (Josh. vi. 2). The Israelites had just made a fresh start, a new covenant, when the frowning walls of Jericho appeared before them. What could they do? What could God do? He made them a present of Jericho. If you want to get the victory over your Jericho, you must take the victory as a gift from Jesus Christ before you start. There are difficulties in but worse difficulties in the unconsecrated life. (Heb. ii. 2, 9, 30). "By faith they crossed the Red Sea" (then comes an interval of forty years); "By faith the walls of Jericho fell." In that interval there were difficulties and victories, but they were difficulties outside God's will for his people. Run away from the one difficulty of Jericho, which you know will face you if you step out into full consecration, and you meet ten other difficulties. The way of transgressors is hard, but the way of worldly Christians is harder still. Face your Jericho and it will be given you. How was the victory obtained? (1) By a new view of Jesus (Josh. v. 13, 14, 15); (2) By a complete surrender of self; (3) By the obedience of faith. If we have to walk round our Jericho thirteen times the victory is promised and is sure.

Friday morning began with an address by Rev. W. W. Martin at the early prayer meeting, on "At the feet of Jesus."

Two addresses were given at the subsequent meeting, the first on "The Words of God and the Works of Jesus," by Mr. Musgrave Brown, and the second on "The Law of the Spirit of Life," by Rev. F. B. Meyer. In the afternoon Mr. Meyer gave an address on "The Relation between the Holy Spirit and the Church." He went through the life of Jesus, showing how Jesus was born of the Spirit, but stirred not a step to preach the Gospel till He received the anointing. Then "Jesus returned in the power of the Spirit," and said, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me." Then Jesus cast out devils in the Spirit, spoke in the Spirit, died in the Spirit, and rose in the power of the Spirit. (Matt. xii. 28; Luke iv. 18; Heb. ix. 14; Rom. i. 4). The Spirit prepared the body of Christ—the resurrection body—as He had prepared the natural body, and is preparing the spiritual body—the Church, the Bride. The Church is the body of the Holy Spirit, who dwells there, as Jesus in the body born of Mary.

In the evening the meeting was divided into three sections. (a) An address by Mr. Brash, "Behold I stand at the door and knock," showing the close union that Jesus wanted to come into with us, the close fellowship and intercourse He desired to have. (b) A praise meeting, when members testified of blessing received by quoting a single verse of Scripture. (c) A consecration meeting, when Mr. Musgrave Brown closed the Convention with an address on the wonderful doxology, "Now unto Him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us, unto Him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus, throughout all ages, world without end." Mr. McNeill in London.

THE AGRICULTURAL HALL MISSION.

THIS mission for North London begins on Sunday next, and will continue for three weeks, embracing four Sundays. An interesting feature of the opening day will be the early gathering for Christian workers, of whom it is hoped there will be a large muster. The meeting will be from eight to nine a.m. on Sunday morning. Those who recollect the great and inspiring occasions of a similar kind twenty-three years ago, when Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey were with us, will wish that Mr. McNeill may have an equally good send-off next Sunday morning in his Islington work.

Mr. McNeill expects to preach also at Highbury Park Presbyterian Church at 11 a.m., and the first Gospel meeting in the Agricultural Hall will be at 7 p.m. The evening meetings throughout next week will be at 7.30 p.m., the evangelist's address commencing about eight.

Next Saturday afternoon, at 4.30, there will be a meeting of stewards in the hall, and a final rehearsal of the choir at 7 p.m. Any friends wishing to help in these capacities should apply for tickets for these meetings to Mr. J. H. Putterill, Exeter Hall, Strand.

Home Missions.

S. A. Social Work.

SPEAKING at a meeting in the Mansion House, on behalf of the social work of the Salvation Army, Mrs. Bramwell Booth said that the 14,000 officers in charge of the work all over the world must be regarded as a vast network of experts; the buildings and money would alike be valueless without the true workers. The magnitude which these social operations have attained may be seen in the following figures:—

	At Home.	Abroad.	Total.
Number of institutions ..	136	255	391
Number of officers.....	700	793	1493
Number of submerged dealt with daily at shelters	4238	4904	9142

Homes for women	—	—	71
Accommodation of same..	—	—	1550

"The Rescue Homes in Great Britain alone passed through last year 1633 cases; seventy per cent. of those passing through are permanently rescued. Of £136,660 expended in the year, the people who are benefited themselves produce, by their labour and payments, about £123,000. These figures are important because they show that here is an agency which is helping the people without pauperising them. We do not inquire into his character or his creed, or require him to go to church or to join the Salvation Army as a condition of receiving our help. We are for giving every man a chance on the one condition—that he is willing to work!

"Now, the particular branch with which we are concerned to-day is the ex-prisoner. The position of the discharged criminal is a very difficult one. He seldom has any friends who are not accomplices in crime. He has no character. It is very difficult—to put it mildly—for him to obtain employment, he is often under police supervision—and properly so.

"Despair reigns in many of the prisoners. From my personal knowledge of discharged women-prisoners I am convinced that in the case of women, the depression and remorse, especially in the case of those who are conscious of their guilt, and have fallen from better circumstances, remorse and grief combine to lead many of them into actual despair—the condition in which they become the prey of all that degenerates and destroys that which is good in the human soul. Especially is this the case with persons undergoing long sentences, and when such persons are discharged they are often totally unfit to again face the battle of temptation and earn their own livelihood.

"Our work directly for ex-criminals is a comparatively small section of our social operations as a whole. It is, of course, smaller still in comparison with the need. It is a work proverbially full of difficulties, but we have done something, and we have now fifteen Prisoners' Homes in various parts of the world, containing about five hundred ex-prisoners. We are working in about thirty prisons. In our London Home we have at the present moment about eighty-eight. Of the men who come under our care fully half are rescued permanently. The work among women criminals has also been most satisfactory as far as it goes—seventy-five per cent. started satisfactorily.

"It is to continue this good work that I ask help. These sufferers are not hopeless. They are bad, they are drunken, they are, I know, a great evil to the nation; but there is hope for them. They are sinking in the sea of vice and misery, and if only we will hope for them they will begin to hope for themselves. 'All my hopes were dead,' said a poor fellow to my husband a while ago, 'I buried them when my wife died for want of bread, which I could not earn, but the Salvation Army has brought them to life again.'"

Amongst the speakers at the Mansion House meeting were Mr. Herbert Gladstone, M.P. (who presided, and warmly supported the work), Sir Walter Besant, Sir Algernon West, Colonel Sir Howard Vincent, Messrs. T. A. Denny and W. Johnston, M.P.

Manchester Waifs.

THE Manchester and Salford Boys' and Girls' Refuges and Homes report a wide range of child-saving effort. By means of nineteen various branches, which meet the need of almost every description of child destitution, a total number of 2572 children have been dealt with during the year. 540 boys and girls applied for admission to the homes, and of these 286 were received, and all but 83 provided for one way or another.

The new report shows that 405 are now in the Homes being cared for and taught useful industries. The Central Refuge is described as full, busy and fruitful in good. The Working Lads' Home and Institute, the Brigade Boys' Home, and the Emigration Training Home have also pursued their course of quiet usefulness throughout the year, and interesting details are given in the new report.

The Open Day and Night Shelter has been an active centre of work among children of all ages throughout the year, receiving 416 young people between the ages of one and eighteen years under its sheltering roof, seventy-five of them being girls between the ages of twelve and eighteen years; no less than 102 of these, or one-fourth of the whole, being brought in by the police and others, between the hours of 10 o'clock at night and 4 o'clock in the morning. The immense value of this branch lies in the fact that it is an immediate rescue home for those, and specially elder girls, who from various causes find themselves friendless, destitute, and in grave moral danger on the streets. To have in the centre of a great city a well appointed house, with doors open day and night for the reception of such, is a fact of the highest importance, and cannot be too widely known.

The Cheetham Hill group of homes, in George-street, Cheetham Hill, are an interesting and important division of the work. They are ten in number, and comprise six orphan homes, for fatherless and motherless children, boys and girls. The Rosen Hallas Girls' Training Home and Laundry, which has been very full throughout the year, receives destitute girls, and also those in grave moral danger, and gives them an excellent training in all household duties and laundry work, thus fitting them for domestic service either at home or abroad. The Bethesda Home for Cripples and Incurables has proved a great blessing to the thirty-one afflicted children who have dwelt under its roof. The Home for Neglected Motherless Children has now completed its first year, and fully justifies its existence. Those who know the wretched surroundings from which came the noisy, happy throng who now fill this home can alone realise the blessing, physically and morally, which the change has wrought for them. It has dealt with thirty-one during the year.

Among the remaining branches are the Seaside Home at Lytham, the Summer Camp at Birkdale, Southport, The Messenger Brigade, The Day Nursery, the Police Court Mission to Lads, and the Prison Gate Mission, which has been carried on actively throughout the year, every morning at seven o'clock finding the workers at the gate; 6492 men and boys, and 3163 women and girls, or a total number of 9655 discharged prisoners, came to the mission-hall close to the prison gate.

This great work needs generous sympathy. The secretary is Mr. Leonard K. Shaw, The Refuges, Strangeways, Manchester.

The Welcome Home, Canning Town.—The monthly muster of the "Christian Lifeboat Crew" took place on Tuesday week. The place was full. Miss Child announced the text for the month from Isa. xli. 13, "For I the Lord thy God will hold thy right hand, saying unto thee, Fear not; I will help thee." After a few appropriate remarks, Mr. William Luff gave a short address, dwelling on God holding us with his right hand, and not we holding his hand. Mr. Adam Podin, a missionary from Russia, gave a remarkable account of his work in that country. He was brought to God in Miss Child's Home when he was a sailor, and was led to go forward as a missionary shortly afterwards to Russia. He had to go from village to village to escape the police, but God had used him in the salvation of many souls. His wife also spoke.

Slum Work in Glasgow.

THE Glasgow Lodging-house Gospel Union reports a wide circle of earnest effort to reach the lowest and most hopeless of our fellows. The work includes many branches and engages the interest of many workers. The lodging-house work in various low houses for men and women has during the year been conducted with vigour. The attendance of the inmates has been good, and the preaching of the Gospel attentively listened to. Recently, one of the workers was spoken to by a man on the top of a tramway car. The man told him that through his own sin he was forced to live in a lodging-house. While there he attended the meetings in the Home, and was led to trust in Christ as his Saviour. He left the lodging-house nearly a year ago, and is now leading a better life.

The open-air and indoor evangelistic operations have also been greatly blessed. About 500 tracts have been distributed weekly throughout the district and in the lodging-houses, and those "messengers" have been blessed by God in bringing light to many who were in darkness, and comfort to those who were in sorrow.

RESCUE WORK.

One of the grand features of the society's operations is the systematic endeavour to reach and rescue the poor outcasts of the streets. A lady missionary is constantly at work. Speaking of her experiences she says: "Through the guidance and blessing of God, we have been used to lead not a few to a better life, and to Him we render all the praise and glory. Our first case was a very sad and heartrending one. A young girl of sixteen years of age, whose mother was dead, had a drunken father who sent her to the streets for money. She had to undergo an operation in one of our hospitals in order to save her life. We took her to the hospital, visited her there, and when better sent her to a home in Greenock.

"The question we are often asked is this: 'Is it possible that these women who have sunk so low can ever again live a better life?' While we don't for a moment seek to minimise the difficulties and the great effort it takes to break away from the habits of this life when once formed, yet we rejoice that we have proved that to the uttermost all who come to Him. A young woman, who was the daughter of Christian parents, who lived in a suburb of the city, was found in a lodging-house. She had been led by a companion into drink, and soon into deeper sin, and was then living in the place where we found her. She was led to put her trust in the Saviour. We took her home to her parents, who received her with great joy. She is now in a good situation in the south of Scotland, and doing well, both temporally and spiritually, as the following extract from her letters will show. 'I am glad that I ever decided to cast off Satan, and live a new life in Christ Jesus. I feel quite happy, and have a peace within myself which passeth all understanding. I feel I am getting stronger every day. I believe that Christ gives me strength to resist temptation.'

"On one occasion, while holding an open-air meeting on a Thursday evening, a gentleman who had been in the city on business on coming forward to the meeting recognised his long-lost daughter standing in the ring. Words would fail to describe the meeting of the poor girl and her father, who gladly received her, and freely forgave the past." The secretary of this Gospel Union is Mr. Robert Pollock, 110, Barrack-street, Glasgow.

The Young Abstainers' Union, which has seventy-four branches, with 5740 members, gives in its new report strong reasons why such an organisation should exist for the sake of the young people of the upper and middle classes. Dr. Norman Kerr is quoted thus:—"I am amazed to hear that anyone thinks that the 'upper classes' do not need total abstinence. My observation as a physician has shown me that neither education nor wealth is a barrier against inebriety...The worlds of wealth and fashion are the very worlds into which the light of temperance truth has only slightly penetrated...I don't hesitate to state that there is a large area of secret drinking among these classes, which, if known, would appal the stoutest hearts in Christendom...Hence the enormous value of the work of the Y.A.U." A large amount of earnest work is described in the report, which may be had of the Secretary, 18, Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

Mrs. Spurgeon's Book-Fund.

MANY look year by year for Mrs. Spurgeon's annual on "The Book Fund and its Work"—it is always fresh, tender, and charming. This year it opens with a little parable on "frame-making" as illustrating the importance of the vital message of the Gospel. Says the writer:—"Many a minister, who has hitherto been blindly groping round and round, in a maze of doubt and false doctrine, has felt the scales fall from his eyes on reading Mr. Spurgeon's simple and honest utterances. Again and again am I told by those who have received books through the Fund, 'You will never know, till you get to Heaven, what good you have been enabled to do.'"

Then the volumes given are utterly unattainable by these poor ministers—whose poverty is so great that they are quite unable to provide it for themselves, because of the lowness of their stipends. "On my desk, at this moment, there is a letter in which the preacher who has been helped says:—'The Lord Himself reward you! You bless many poor pastors through your valuable books. It would be impossible for me to buy them. My dear wife's head often how to make out food and clothing! But the Lord does provide in some way.' During the last two-and-twenty years the number of volumes sent out has been very large (207,659); but it represents a supply quite inadequate to the constantly-increasing demands of poor ministers. Whether a pastor be illiterate or learned, books are an absolute necessity to him."

A young clergyman in Wales, acknowledging a grant, gives a fair description of the power and upon the mind. "I assure you," he says, "that I will read the volumes carefully and prayerfully, and I earnestly hope that, by so doing, I may be the means of rescuing many from their evil ways. I had heard so much about your beloved husband's 'Lectures to Students' that, directly I received them, I sat down and read one of them right off. It most deeply impressed me by its teachings and warnings; I find in it instructions which every Christian minister ought to study."

A minister writes: "To your desires and prayers I heartily say, 'Amen,' and I do assure you that I shall very earnestly and prayerfully seek to grasp the truths and principles set forth in these volumes; and then, in the name and power of my Master, I will strive and work to implant them in the hearts of others."

A LONDON CLERGYMAN

writes:—"Your kindness completely overwhelms me. When I got your very kind letter of about ten days ago, I was feeling very much depressed; I was almost in the same circumstances as one of old when he cried, 'Hath God forgotten to be gracious?' Hence your letter was really God's message of hope to one of his needy ones. It rebuked my faithlessness, and reminded me that the battle is the Lord's, and therefore He will not fail to equip his servants for his work. Since receiving your most generous parcel, I have been spending every moment I could spare in reading the pamphlets and periodicals sent with the books, for I wanted to feed on these myself before giving them away."

Unhappily the income for the year shows a decline—yet it is needed more than ever. The communications thus opened up with poor ministers and clergymen have led to sad disclosures, awakening an earnest desire to help in other ways.

"My poor pastors," says Mrs. Spurgeon, "still claim large and constant consideration at my hands. The poverty of most of them is but slightly ameliorated; and others, from various reasons and causes, appear to be falling into the same old which have engulfed so vast a host before them. The fact has to be faced that some of our poorly-paid country pastors cannot exist unless outside help is obtainable. It is useless to argue over the matter, and it does not mend the evil by a single stitch, to blame them or find fault with their people. There is nothing to be done but to help them over the stiles when they come to them. I used to fret myself over plans for their betterment, and worry about the future of some of the neediest; and once I remember indulging in a grand and sanguine dream of establishing a Sustentation Fund for their permanent benefit after the fashion of the Free Church of Scotland; but all my castles in the air toppled over: so, for years, I have quietly done my best for them, without so much trouble of mind, being generously helped to this point by a few friends who know the value of the Pastors' Aid Fund to a needy minister almost at his wit's end."

Communications as to the Fund should be made to Mrs. Spurgeon, Westwood, Beulah-hill, Upper Norwood, S.E.

Ragged Boys in Dublin.

THE Ragged Boys' Home, Grand Canal-street, Dublin, has for forty years been a refuge for many hundreds of destitute lads, who are now filling respectable positions in various parts of the world.

We are always glad to hear of the success and welfare of old boys. During the year we had encouraging letters from some of them, and visits from others who had come back to Dublin. One was from Australia. He was admitted to the Home in 1885, and remained for about four years. When ready to leave he was placed in a large business house in the city, emigrated after a few years, and lived in Australia till the summer of this year (1897). On returning to Dublin his first care was to visit the old home, and no one who saw this smart, well-dressed young man could avoid feeling thankful for the existence of the Boys' Home. One, a sailor in the Royal Navy, wrote from Sheerness. His letter is full of grateful acknowledgments for benefits received in the home, and praise to God for his early conversion.

Thirty-four boys were admitted during the year. Many were placed out in various ways (after training), and now there are eighty-two boys left in the home. Details of this good work may be had of the secretary, Miss D. Staples, 23, Upper Merrion Street, Dublin.

N.-E. Norfolk Bible Mission.—Since the commencement of the year an additional effort has been made to get at the people in the isolated villages of this district, taking Bibles and general Gospel literature which secures for the evangelist a ready entrance, and gives him an opportunity of dealing personally with souls. Much good has been done. Many villages are in a sad condition, spiritually, and the prayers of all who know or who are interested in the district are asked for blessing. Particulars of the mission may be obtained from Mr. Woolley, Tower House, Mundesley.

Dr. Stephenson's Homes.—The proposals of Rev. Dr. Stephenson to provide for the Nonconformist children of Christian parentage who drift into the workhouses is being received with increasing favour throughout the country. Within the past week Mr. Horace B. Marshall, of the firm of Marshall and Sons, publishers, Fleet-street, has offered to build one of the 120 additional homes which it is proposed to erect. The cost will be £500. The Streatham Methodists have guaranteed its maintenance for three years when it receives its complement of children, so as not to throw any additional expense on the general treasurers of the Children's Home and Orphanage.

Welcome Mission, Harrow Green.—The annual meeting was recently held in the new hall. Mr. H. E. Lester, J.P., presided, and said he had for a long time been deeply interested in the work which was being conducted by the ladies and gentlemen who sacrificed themselves for the sake of the poor of Harrow Green. The freehold had been purchased and the new hall erected and furnished. He hoped that within the next year it would be possible to get the debt of £400 wiped off. Rev. G. H. Sandwell congratulated the workers of the "Welcome" upon having such a beautiful hall in which to conduct their work. What rejoiced him most was the fact that a place had been turned to such good account which had been given over to such demoralising purposes as the liquor traffic. It was very cheering to know that such a change had come over a building. Rev. John Bradford spoke of the unchanging character of the Gospel. During the evening prizes for regular attendance and good behaviour were distributed, and not the least interesting item of the programme was the presentation to Mr. F. T. Watt, the superintendent of the mission, of a handsome solid walnut secretaire, as a token of the love and esteem of the committee and the large staff of workers at the "Welcome."

Obituary.

MR. JOHN ADLEY, SOUTH TOTTENHAM.

The subject of these parting lines fell asleep peacefully a few days ago at Tottenham. He was assessor of the Deanery of Enfield, and an active member of the Lecturers' Bureau. His lectures on "The Catacombs of Rome" were enjoyed by members of Y.M.C.A.'s and other audiences. He was a large-hearted and cheerful servant of the Lord, devoted to the enterprise of interesting the public in the works of the Almighty, and in the evidences of the Christian faith.

MR. R. K. MATHEWSON, BELFAST.

Widespread regret is felt at the death of Mr. R. K. Mathewson, of Belfast, who has just passed away in his eighty-second year. He was a native of Newton Stewart, and was brother-in-law of the late Sir William Ewart, Bart. In early life he gave himself wholly to the Lord, and for many years was a devoted and successful Christian worker. He was an earnest Methodist class leader, and a prominent member of Carlisle Memorial Church. Every work which had for its object the glory of God, and the increase of Christ's kingdom among men, had his generous and sympathetic support. He filled many important positions in the Methodist church, and his holy, spotless life was not only a rebuke to the careless and lukewarm, but was a benediction to the whole community. He died suddenly from failure of the heart's action, but his end was peace.

MRS. S. G. GRIFFITH.

Many will hear with sorrow of the death of the wife of Dr. S. G. Griffith. A daughter of the late George Yeates Hunter, long a prominent figure in Margate and the Isle of Thanet, Caroline Griffith was for years well known by mission workers in London. She died at the age of 69, on March 21, at 36, Upper Bedford-place, W.C. One who knew her for many years writes: "I first made her acquaintance at Margate, when I was a boy and she a young woman, and even then I was struck with her set purpose in life to serve her Master; and faithfully has she kept that resolve. She has left us an example which we may all envy, but few of us may hope to attain. In all my experience I never knew a woman of a nobler and more generous character."

Mrs. Griffith lived as much for others as for herself. About 27 years ago she began the "Coleman-street Ward 'City Mothers.'" By degrees the numbers so increased that at one time they numbered between 300 and 400. A Bible woman was kept entirely to look after the work, and others gave some help. This undertaking has been during the last quarter of a century thoroughly well organised. Her unflagging industry up to a quite recent date, and her natural genius, contributed to accomplish this, under the Divine blessing. She adopted a system of pensions for old women over 60, who were either past work or only able to do a little; from 1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d. or 3s. a week is given to those poor women who from any source have nearly enough to live upon; that is, they are able to keep out of the workhouse with the additional help of from 1s. 6d. to 3s. a week. Again, the Bible woman was entrusted with a small sum weekly to enable deserving mothers to tide over a passing difficulty. A register of such cases, with detailed reports, was carefully kept. All the rest of the work was conducted on the usual plan of mothers' meetings.

Working as she did in the Golden-lane district, Mrs. Griffith used at times to stand on the same platform with the late good Earl of Shaftesbury. At her funeral, some thirty or forty of the City Mothers made their way to Highgate Cemetery. Mrs. Griffith is survived by her husband, and a son, Rev. Vere Griffith.

The Spurgeon Orphanage has secured a freehold property at Cliftonville, Margate, for a proposed seaside home. An appeal is now being issued for funds to make necessary alterations and provide furnishing.

Boys' Brigade.—It is not generally known that the Boys' Brigades, both in England and Ireland, support a number of cots in connection with foreign missionary hospitals. Out of the total of £66 raised last year, the Irish companies contributed £19. The Irish companies are sending out this year more than money. Two old officers have given themselves to the missionary cause.

The Evangelistic Field.

MR. LANE IN SUFFOLK.

A VERY encouraging mission, conducted by Mr. W. R. Lane, has been held in Sudbury, Suffolk. The Free Churches had previously united in prayer for some time in view of the mission, and a true spirit of unity and of earnestness was at work among the pastors and their people. Their combined labours and prayers have been abundantly rewarded in the large and memorable blessings which God has graciously sent through his servant.

As is well known, with a right masculine grip of thought Mr. Lane presents the Gospel message with strength and tenderness. He is in no sense a sensationalist. He seldom plays upon the feelings of his audience, and never "harrows" them. His appeals are directed to the intellect, the conscience, and the will. His addresses are thoroughly Scriptural and convincing, while the order in which they are delivered is calculated to deepen the interest and to multiply results up to the end of the mission. The account of his conversion showed that Mr. Lane in his methods of work uses to the full what had been of help to himself at his conversion and confession of Christ. On the second Sunday afternoon he delivered to a large meeting of men a memorable message on purity. We thank God for the help of a man so true and thorough and earnest in his work.

The results of the mission have exceeded our highest anticipations. The churches have been stirred up to new zeal; 250 came forward to the inquirers' room; while many more have been convicted who, we believe, are ready to "step over the line." We praise God for what He has wrought for us, and are glad to feel that other places where Mr. Lane is shortly expected may confidently anticipate large blessings through his ministry.

Robert Jones, Baptist Minister.

MR. CHARLES INGLIS AT CHATHAM.

THE Lord's people in this town are filled with praise to Him for all they have seen in the United Mission, just concluded, under the auspices of the Free Church Council.

We had heard how Mr. Inglis was being used in the neighbouring towns of New Brompton and Rochester, and our hearts were filled with great expectations, which have been abundantly realised.

The churches have been crowded with people listening to the solemn searching addresses on sin and its awful consequences; and the inquiry-room has been filled with all classes seeking and finding the Saviour.

The afternoon Bible readings have proved to be a time of great spiritual blessing to hundreds of Christians of all denominations.

The last Sunday of the mission will long be remembered as one of the crowning days of blessing. Many were broken down under a sense of sin, and the names of about 120 were taken of those who had professed to trust the Saviour.

On Monday week Mr. Inglis gave his lecture, "Round the World in eighty minutes," to a crowded audience, showing us some of the places he had visited, and the different nationalities he had preached to. The prayers of hundreds will follow him in his work on both sides of the Atlantic.

EVANGELISTS' MOVEMENTS.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has been conducting a ten days' mission at Hope Congregational Chapel, Salford, of which Rev. J. Neil is pastor.

Mr. Binnie has concluded an interesting series of meetings in Holm, Orkney. The meetings were well attended by all denominations, and many testified to blessing received.

Successful evangelistic services have been held in the Methodist church, Wexford, by Rev. W. R. Budd, of Londonderry; similar services have been held in the parish church, Naas, by Rev. Canon Robinson, and in the parish church, Nenagh, by Rev. Dr. Latham, of Wexford.

Mr. James Eyres has lately been holding missions in Preston, South Wales, Cumberland, and Bolton, which have been attended by large crowds of people, and with much blessing. The various churches and localities have been stirred, and many instances of conversion are recorded.

A nine days' mission has been conducted by Mr. H. Wilfred Scriven, at East Molesley. Many have been led to Christ, and God's people greatly helped. The pastor, Rev. G. F. Hughes, feels much encouraged.

A series of evangelistic services has been held by Rev. W. H. Taylor at Beaumaris. The Gospel addresses were most stirring. There was a good attendance at each meeting, and the preacher was given the greatest attention. The interest was kept up to the end of the meetings, for Wednesday evening's audience was the largest. There is no doubt that Mr. Taylor's visit to Beaumaris will result in much good. People from the various Welsh churches of the town came to these services.

Dr. Munhall and Prof. Burch have had a stirring mission in Seattle, Washington Territory. The local Times says: "While the tocsin of political war has been occupying the attention of the city, in most quarters, the emissaries of the 'Peace on earth and goodwill to men' have been prosecuting a most momentous campaign against the cohorts of sin from the battlements of the city churches. Many recruits have been won over from the ranks of the enemy, and brave and eloquent generals have held out and planted the olive-branch of peace where rancour before had held possession of the souls of men and women."

A rousing mission was lately held by Mr. and Mrs. George C. Needham in the thriving town of Sunbury, Pa. A local editor says: "It is remarkable what good can be accomplished by one man in a community, when that man is endowed with the Spirit of God, and he goes forth to smite the devil in his strongholds. Mr. Needham does not treat his audiences to fine theological discourses that are beyond the average listener, that would go in one ear and out the other of the average person, but he preaches the Word of God that reaches the hearts and consciences of everybody. Such were the discourses we listened to. Such are the discourses that are calculated to move hearts to repentance. At the close of each address, numbers stood up seeking prayer on their behalf. It is believed that many were led to accept the Saviour."

A remarkably interesting account is given in The Free Church of Scotland Monthly of the work of the evangelists of the Home Mission Committee during the past six months. Mr. Binnie has been greatly blessed at some fishing stations, also in East Blantyre, Dunkeld, Pitlochry, Dalmellington, Bowden, and Yarrow. Mr. Stevens has been well employed at Port William, Lassodie, and Lochgelly. Mr. Wallace's labours in Aberdeen and various towns and villages in Kirkcudbright and Lockerbie have also resulted in a marked awakening. Similarly, the work of Mr. Pratt in Glasgow and various parts of Lanarkshire, Renfrew, and Ayr have been followed by much blessing. Messrs. Paterson and McIntyre, in Hamilton and Linlithgow, have also done good service. All these evangelists speak of encouragement in their work, their meetings being generally well attended and in some cases crowded.

Sunday Closing.—In view of the vigorous campaign now being promoted throughout the country in support of Sunday Closing legislation, and specially in relation to the Irish Sunday and Saturday Early Closing Bill (which is down for second reading in the House of Commons on Wednesday, May 4), a petition to Parliament, in support of this Bill, has been placed for signature in the Book Saloon of the National Temperance Publication Depôt, 33, Paternoster Row. Friends of the Sunday Closing movement are invited to call in and sign the petition.

Christian Endeavour.

CONVENTION OF LONDON SOCIETIES.

SOME thousands of young people, many of whom came from branches upwards of seventy miles from Charing Cross, attended the third annual convention of London Christian Endeavour Societies at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Friday. The morning session comprised a service of prayer and praise conducted by Rev. C. Ingrem (Wimbledon), followed by a "Junior Rally," arranged and directed by Rev. Carey Bonner (Southampton).

In the afternoon the chair was taken by the retiring president, Rev. J. G. Train. The first address dwelt on the Society in relation to the Sunday-school. Mr. J. R. Fleming, president of the North Staffs Union, pointed out that there are twenty-five millions in the Sunday-schools of the world, and they are the raw material for Christian work. The Sunday-school is the source of the Church's wealth, activity, and vitality, and it possesses the key of all social problems. To soberise England we must begin with the children, and to banish pauperism and crime we must also begin at the root of the evil. To the children we must look to build up the moral supremacy of the nation.

Rev. A. J. Palmer spoke of "Evangelistic Effort" in connection with the Society. The members are the watchtowers of the Church, the half-way house to the church and the schools within the Church. Loyalty to the great principles of evangelistic faith lies at the foundation of all true inspiration and Christian effort. The Bible is the one text-book for faith and conduct. Modern unbelief can only be met by an unreserved consecration and the recognition of individual responsibility.

Rev. James Mursell (Clapton) gave an address on "Amusements," which he considered the crux of the religious life of to-day. We must all have recreation, but it must be rational and free from baneful effects, or it will be a curse and not a blessing. Endeavourers are not anti-human or prig manufacturers, but pleasures must be of the right sort in the right place. There are sports that kill; he classed the theatre and dancing as among the amusements to be avoided. All appetites must be controlled, and that for pleasure must be strictly limited if we would live healthy lives and attain lofty ideals.

After a model business meeting, Rev. W. Justin Evans presided over a "Free Parliament." At the evening session Rev. J. Tolefree Parr, the new president, took the chair. Rev. B. J. Gibbon discoursed on "The Practical Results of True Consecration," and Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor on "The Culture of the Devout Life." A consecration service at the close was conducted by Rev. W. Knight Chaplin.

BRIEF NOTES.

The Tenth Legion now numbers over 7500. This Tenth Legion is an enrolment of Endeavourers who make it a practice to give to God's work one-tenth of their income.

The Leeds and District Union now embraces forty-five societies, with a membership of 3000. The annual meeting held on Saturday week gave evidence of very earnest work.

The Endeavour movement is finding its way among our sailors. Rev. Edwin R. Barrett, of Liverpool, chairman of the British National Council, says that 118 "floating societies" have thus been formed. In the Liverpool branch thirty-eight seamen have been registered as active members.

The Paris Christian Endeavour Union celebrated its formation by special services for the salvation of souls. Three thousand invitation cards were printed and sent to every English-speaking resident in Paris whose name and address could be secured. A deep spiritual power was felt in each meeting, and genuine blessing resulted.

Dr. W. F. McCauley, of Toledo, O., says well: "C. E." does not mean "Cheap Entertainments." The society does not exist to perpetuate erroneous methods in raising funds for the work of the Lord. Nor does it mean "Costly Extravagance." We are not to revel in luxury while the world is dying for Gospel. But it does mean "Careful Economy," by which we are to obtain funds with which to support the work at home and abroad.

Endeavour societies can get a hint from the noble work done by Mr. Moody when he was a young man and soon after he joined the church. He took a pew for his own, and went to work to fill it with people, whom he invited, and obtained for regular attendants on the services. When this was accomplished he took another pew, and so he continued as long as there was an empty pew in the entire church. Why cannot C.E. societies do just this thing?

HOME.

New lifeboats have been sent to the Irvine and Plymouth stations by the National Lifeboat Institution.

The new park at Forest Hill, in which Mr. Horniman's museum of curios is to be erected, was opened to the public on Good Friday.

A memorial has just been presented to the London University expressing regret at the exclusion of mental and moral science from the list of subjects for the science degree.

It can hardly be questioned, after recent disclosures before the Money-lending Commission, that "usury leads to crime," and should be regulated by Act of Parliament.—An Anti-Usury League is about to be formed.

Progress has been made for the preservation of certain open spaces in London and suburbs by the Metropolitan Public Gardens Association. These "lungs" of the great city are ornamental as well as essential to its physical health.—A scheme is proposed for the enlargement of the Bethnal Green Free Library. The total number of registered readers is 50,487, and since the opening of the library 800,000 persons have been benefited.—We are pleased to learn that through the efforts of the Early Closing Association the number of retail drapers who closed their premises for the Easter holidays from Thursday to Tuesday is 194. Last year the number was only 115. A release such as this will revive the jaded energies of a great company of assistants.

Ireland.—To alleviate the distress in Ireland—Mayo, Galway, and Clare—the Dublin Local Government Board are about to make a free grant of between 500 and 600 tons of seed potatoes to suffering families. There should be no delay in this appropriate help.—It was stated before the Liquor Commission that in Tralee (Ireland) public-houses were far too numerous—one to every eighty persons—many of them very insanitary and addicted to harmful adulteration. A popular veto measure would soon remedy this grievous state of things.

The Coal Strike.—At a meeting of the South Wales Coal Owners' Association the action of the Sliding Scale Committee was approved, and plenary powers granted for further negotiations. Coal from the Birmingham district is being bought in large quantities for South Wales.—The Welsh coal strike has affected the price of coal at Singapore, and it is feared that the market in the north may fall into the hands of Japan.—Through their new leader, Mr. Williams, the South Wales miners demand a rise in wages of 10 per cent., a fresh sliding scale, and a minimum wage. There are 100,000 men on strike. The outlook is by no means reassuring.—The men are practically unanimous in supporting the demands formulated by the Cardiff conference. The masters are determined not to accede to these demands, but would probably grant an increase of wage.

Charitable Gifts.—A gentleman who does not wish his name disclosed has handed to the Chairman of the Blackburn Infirmary Board railway stock of the value of £11,000 for the endowment fund, and £2000 as a donation towards the Victoria wing of the Infirmary.—100 guineas from the Shipwrecked Fishermen and Mariners' Society to the fund being raised at St. John's, Newfoundland, in aid of the sufferers from the recent ice disaster.—20 guineas from the Skinners' Company to the British Home for Incurables.—£1100 from a meeting in the Mansion House for the Social work of the Salvation Army.—Notwithstanding recent considerable donations to the London Hospital, the chairman states that the institution is in serious financial difficulties.—For the treatment of imbeciles and epileptics an estate in the neighbourhood of Chorley, near Manchester, has been purchased, under the authority of the Local Government Board, for £19,000.

FOREIGN.

From Paris comes the report that the Niger negotiations are practically completed.

More anti-Jewish demonstrations have been made at Algiers, the mob being dispersed by mounted police.

Arrangements are complete for the International Congress of Hygiene which is about to be held at Madrid.

The Austro-Hungarian navy is to be increased. A special credit of 55,000,000 fl. will be demanded from the Parliamentary delegates.

Her Majesty's Government are much gratified with the offer of the Government of Natal to supply annually, free of cost, 12,000 tons of coal to warships coaling at Durban.

The Indian frontier campaign seems at an end. The Tirah force is now reduced to three brigades under the command of General Symons.

On an appeal to the Czar concerning the high taxes on the Sailors' Home at Odessa, His Majesty has declared that the Home being a benevolent institution it is to remain free from taxation.

The practice in France and other countries of representing Bible scenes on the stage in Passion Week is much to be deplored. The most sacred things of God and Christ are thus openly profaned.

A terrible disaster has occurred in the American State of Ohio. A "levee" has broken, and through an opening 20ft. wide the river poured, sweeping away everything in its path. Steamers are on their way with relief.

A clerical deputation of Syro-Chaldeans, belonging to the Nestorian Church in Persia, has gone to St. Petersburg from Urumiah, headed by the Bishop of Suppergan, in order to accomplish a union with the Russian Orthodox Establishment.

The Liverpool Chamber of Commerce has asked Mr. Chamberlain to repeal the obnoxious hut tax in Sierra Leone.—In the Canadian House of Commons the Finance Minister, among Budget proposals, announced a preferential tariff in West Indian sugar.

In the elections to the Folkething in Denmark the Radicals have been victorious, defeating the Conservative and Moderate parties.—Federation meetings are being held in Victoria (Australia) for the discussion of the Commonwealth Bill. The South Australian Government intends to urge its acceptance.

The Soudan.—A cavalry reconnaissance of Mahmud's position has ended in a sharp skirmish, resulting in the loss of sixteen men killed and wounded.—On two occasions Colonel Parsons has sent successful expeditions at Kassala against the dervishes. We heartily wish this precarious undertaking were at an end.—A brilliant victory has been won by Sir Herbert Kitchener's force. The dervishes are in full flight, and their leader, Mahmud, is a prisoner.

Crete.—The Porte still refuses to accept a foreign Governor of the island.—At a recent market near Candia Christians and Mohammedans met in friendly intercourse for the first time for months, and promised to live more peaceably.—Another account says Turkey has asked the powers that autonomy may be speedily established.—The Russian Embassy has again demanded from the Porte the appointment of Prince George as Governor. The King of Greece has stated that the matter is practically settled.

Turkey and Bulgaria.—In the Bulgarian Press loud complaints are made of the movements of Turkish troops towards the Bulgarian frontier. The danger of fresh complications on the Balkan Peninsula is increasing.—We sincerely trust that the report from Rome that the Armenian Patriarchate at Constantinople fears more massacres will shortly be perpetrated in Armenia is without foundation.—From Givas, in Anatolia, comes the statement that several Armenian girls have been converted to Islamism by intimidation.

America and Spain.—President McKinley's message to Congress has decidedly a warlike tone. He leaves, however, the final decision to Congress.—A joint note of the Great Powers has been presented to President McKinley, expressing the hope that an arrangement may yet be made between America and Spain to prevent war.—The Queen Regent of Spain has proclaimed a suspension of hostilities in Cuba. This armistice the President wishes to have a fair trial. Spain, therefore, has still a chance of settling the question without American intervention.

Greece.—The decisive action of the King in bringing the Session of the Chamber to an end has given general satisfaction.—In the celebration of Greek independence there is a singular contrast between the prevailing tranquillity and the turbulent demonstrations of last year. Expressions of gratitude to the protecting Powers are numerous in the public Press.—It is officially announced at Athens that the evacuation of Thessaly will begin April 15. That day is the exact anniversary of the eve of the war.—In spite of relief committees, children of the Thessalian refugees in Athens die at the rate on an average of four a day.

The Far East.—The Tsung-li-Yamên officially announces the opening to trade of three ports, Funing, on the Sam Sa inlet, Yo-chau, at the head of the Tung-ting Lake, and Chinwang, on the Gulf of Leas-tong.—The Japanese Cabinet have decided to remain passive in the present crisis.—The concession of Wei-Hai-Wei to Great Britain has come as a complete surprise to the Germans.—China has agreed to the French demands: Non-alienation of Kwan-tung, Kwang-si, and Yun-nan; construction of a railway to Yun-nan-fu; the lease of a coaling station, and the appointment of a Frenchman as Director of the Imperial Post.—Some Russian papers are angry at the British acquisition of Wei-Hai-Wei.—Public opinion in Japan is friendly towards this country and raises no general opposition to the cession of Wei-Hai-Wei.—A much better feeling is being expressed toward England by the German Press, some journals advocating that the two countries "should draw closer together."—Wu-sung has been voluntarily declared by China a treaty port. She has given England formal notice that she desires a revision of the tariff.

The Y.M.C.A.

The Wakefield Association has a membership of 400, and continues to do good work in the town. The annual meeting lately held was an occasion of much interest.

Mr. C. T. Studd has concluded a week's mission for men at the Manchester Association. The room was filled nightly with young men, who listened earnestly to the Gospel message faithfully delivered, and lasting benefits will result.

In June last the City of Dublin Young Men's Christian Association entered their new premises, 43, Upper Sackville-street. The success which has already attended this forward movement has far exceeded the most sanguine expectations of the promoters. The membership has increased and the work grown. During the past year over £3000 has been subscribed, but the committee urgently require £1500 to meet the balance of the sum expended in purchasing, re-modelling, and furnishing the entire premises, and would earnestly appeal for assistance in this effort to prevent what has hindered the welfare of many institutions—the burden of ever-increasing interest on debt—and thereby free the general secretary and committee from the anxiety which such a debt always brings, and thus enable them to devote more of their time and energy to the work of promoting the spiritual work of the association, and the welfare of the youth of this large and important city. Mr. W. A. Boyd, General Secretary, Y.M.C.A., 43, Upper Sackville-street, Dublin, will afford every information.

The Y.W.C.A.

New premises in connection with the Dumbarton Association have lately been opened by Lord Overtoun. The building is the gift of Lady Overtoun, and has cost £3500. The membership is over 500, and the association has received many gifts from friends interested in the work, which is in a very satisfactory condition.

A largely attended "missionary tea" was held on March 29, in the Glasgow East End Y.W.C.A. Institute, arranged by the secretary, Miss R. E. Hanna, to stir up interest in mission work in China. The proceeds went to the China Inland Mission. Mrs. W.M. Oatts presided, and after giving a short opening address, introduced two China Inland missionaries, Mrs. Talbot and Miss B. Leggat, who were listened to with earnest attention.

The annual meeting of the Fulham Branch was held in the Town Hall, Fulham, on March 24, Mr. R. Bannister in the chair. The speakers were Revs. Aylmer Rouse and H. J. Shirley and Mr. George Clarke. Revs. S. Marriott and J. Garden, and Mr. F. C. Wood (Y.M.C.A.) also took part. The hall was well filled. The gratifying fact that came out in the chairman's statement that this branch has been able by an extra effort this year in their sale of needlework to give £21 as a Jubilee gift to missionary work, besides a subscription of £4 to The Zenana Society, and £2 to The China Inland Mission.

Kilburn Hall.—The usual Bank Holiday meetings at this hall were marked by power and enthusiasm, while the attendances were large. Among the speakers were Messrs. C. Russell Hurditch, P. Mallinson, L. Weaver, and Ned Wright; Pastors Vanstone and Edgerton.

East-End Sailors.—On Monday an entertainment was given to about 200 sailors at the Strangers' Rest, 163, St. George-street, Ratcliff-highway. A bountiful tea was provided, after which the sailors were drafted into different rooms, according to their nationalities, when lady and gentlemen visitors preached the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Several sailors gave an account of their conversion, and the good which they had derived from attending the Strangers' Rest.

Hebrew Christian Testimony to Israel.—We recently called attention to the purpose to enlarge the accommodation in East London for the work carried on by Revs. D. Baron and C. A. Schönberger. Already £3000 has been received in aid of the undertaking, but this, it is found, will not go beyond covering the preliminary expenses purchasing the site, and settling matters of compensation. The address of the Mission Hall is, 114 Whitechapel-road, E.

East End Theatricals.

ON Good Friday, for the 19th time, Sir George and Lady Williams invited the employees of the various East-end and other theatres to a social gathering at Shoreditch Town Hall. Between 700 and 800 responded, the arrangements being made on behalf of the committee of the special religious services by Mr. H. Ehrlich, City Missionary, for thirty years manager of the Pavilion Theatre services, Whitechapel, and W. Goodenough, missionary to the theatre employees.

Rev. J. Louis Bailey, New Tabernacle, Old-street, in an earnest address, urged the audience to "Look up and not down," to look without and not within, and to look forward and not backward. Rev. W. G. Morcom, M.A., vicar of St. Michael's and All Angels, Hackney, spoke on Sowing and Reaping. Miss Dashwood, Mr. J. H. Lydall, Mr. T. C. Chadwick, and Captain Lowe also gave earnest evangelistic addresses. Rev. T. C. Udall followed with words on the generous kindness of Sir George and Lady Williams in providing the entertainment.

The committee of the Religious Tract Society provided a volume for each of the guests, and the "Bible Flower Mission" sent bouquets with suitable texts. Mr. Ehrlich expressed a hope that Sir George and Lady Williams might be spared to see the majority (21st anniversary) of the gathering. The meeting was enlivened by singing, led by the choir of the Shoreditch Town Hall services.

Personalia.

Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, of Norwich, has been nominated as secretary of the Baptist Union, in succession to Dr. Booth.

Dr. Juan B. Cabrera, Bishop of the Spanish Reformed Church, will be in London shortly, and will speak at the meetings of the Spanish and Portuguese Church Aid Society on May 12.

Dr. Baedeker has once more returned home from his journeyings in Germany, Denmark, Sweden, Finland, and N. and S. Russia. He hopes now to have a time of repose at home.

Mr. Percy Alden, of Mansfield House, Canning Town, has broken down. He left this week on a tour round the world, and it is hoped that the long holiday will completely restore him to health.

Mr. James Glaisher, F.R.S., the celebrated meteorologist, has entered on his ninetieth year. For the last eighteen years Mr. Glashier has been chairman of the executive committee of the Palestine Exploration Fund, and he seldom fails to appear at the fortnightly meetings.

Mr. Ira D. Sankey has been visiting Rome on his way home from the East. At the invitation of Rev. Dr. J. Gordon Gray he gave, in the Scotch Church, an hour of sacred song and story. Notwithstanding the Easter attractions, the place was crowded. He also spoke to the M. E. Theological Students (Italian).

Rev. John McNeill.—It will interest the friends of this evangelist in all parts of the world to know that in the course of the approaching summer a marriage has been arranged to take place between him and Miss Miller, daughter of Mr. Robert James Miller, manager of the National Bank, Charing Cross.

Miss Annie Taylor, writing from Yatung, says she has a school of eight children, whom she teaches to sing and instructs in Christian truth. These duties being added to medical work and attention to her store, leave Miss Taylor but little leisure. She is much stronger for her recent visit to England, and says: "I can work all day now, whereas before I got tired early in the afternoon." Miss Taylor adds: "I have not time to be lonely; but I do appreciate letters, although I have not much time to answer them."

Bishop J. M. Thoburn was to sail from Bombay for England on March 26, intending to be absent from his post four or five months. He has received many invitations to visit England during the past twenty years from friends representing almost every missionary society in the United Kingdom, but up to the present has never been able to do so, except in the course of a hurried journey to India. Bishop Thoburn is well-known throughout the Christian world as an authority on missions, and as a lecturer of rare ability. His address while in England will be 7, Waterloo-place, S.W.

Mount Carmel.—Mr. D. C. Joseph writes with regard to the tyranny against missions to the Jews of the Rabbis and the Turkish officials: "The prayers of God's children have been answered, and the mission which was closed for one day is again open. Our iron building has been given up to us, and the plot of land has been legally transferred, and we purpose opening on Easter Monday."

Irish Notes.

A list of twenty-eight children has just been taken under the care of the Protestant Orphan Society for Antrim and Down.

The receipts of the Palestine Exhibition, held recently in Dublin in aid of the Jews' Society, were about £1400, and exceeded the expectations of the promoters.

The reports received from the various Methodist congregations in Belfast are of a very gratifying character, and show a net increase in membership for the year of over 200.

The Qua Iboe Mission, West Africa, of which Mr. and Mrs. Bill, of Belfast, were the founders, is prospering. The membership increased last year at a greater rate than in any former year, and 152 persons were baptized in about nine months.

It is proposed to hold an Irish Church Conference in Dublin in 1899, under the presidency of the Archbishop of Dublin. Similar conferences have been held in Armagh and Cork, but never hitherto in the metropolis, and they have always proved helpful and stimulating.

Addressing the students in the Assembly's College, Belfast, at the close of the session Professor Leitch, D.D., Moderator of the General Assembly, said that the progress of archæological discovery was tending to discredit the theory of the higher critics, and that as our knowledge of ancient literature and history increases we shall reject the fantastic theories as to the composition of the Old Testament which in many places are so much in vogue.

In the report of the Representative Body of the Church of Ireland, laid before the General Synod, for the year 1897, a considerable increase in the amount of voluntary contributions was reported, the total income of the church from all sources being £566,572, and after meeting all expenditure this left a balance of £144,937 to be added to the capital. The total assets on December 31 were £7,975,976 8s. 7d., being an increase of over £28,000 as compared with the previous year.

Scottish Notes.

Friends of temperance in Scotland are jubilant over the fact that the Duke of Fife is refusing to grant sites for distilleries on his estates.

Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell have been addressing meetings in different towns in Scotland on the question of State-regulated vice in India.

The Glasgow Houses of Shelter for females are doing splendid service in helping back to an honest, respectable life women who have fallen through drink or crime. There are at present 120 inmates.

At the recent annual meeting of the Glasgow Soldiers' Home, Maryhill, much thankfulness was expressed at the good influences brought to bear on those frequenting it. An appeal was made for the wiping out of a debt of £1000 on the building.

A temperance convention lasting for a week has been held in Dundee. Delegates were present from all parts of the country, and the temperance question in all its aspects was fully and earnestly discussed. Many leading men took part in the meetings, which were large and enthusiastic.

Free St. Matthew's Church, Glasgow, of which Dr. Stalker is pastor, had an encouraging annual meeting last week. It was stated that the erection of a mission church in the Springbank district, for which about £8000 has been subscribed by the congregation, is making good progress. Dr. Stalker said he wished his church to stand for brotherliness, for character, and for public usefulness.

The North British Daily Mail states that the restoration of the Martyr's Stone, which had lain for many years outside Glasgow Cathedral, has now been completed, and it has been placed in the Lauder Crypt within the building. The work was carried on under the supervision of Dr. James Kerr, of Glasgow. The old inscription has been clearly brought out, consisting of the names of the nine martyrs "who suffered at the Cross of Glasgow for their testimony to the Covenant and work of reformation, because they durst not own the authority of their tyrants, destroying the same, betwixt 1666 and 1688." Then follow a dozen lines of rhyme, concluding with the threat:—

They'll know at Resurrection day
To murder saints was no sweet play.

The seventh annual meeting of the Home of Rest for the Aged, at Dalkeith, was lately held in the Royal Hotel, Edinburgh, Gen. Hoggan presiding. A letter of apology was read from Mrs. Pearson, the lady superintendent of the Home, that she was unable to be present through indisposition, and stating that since the Home had been removed to Dalkeith, the health of the old people had been much better. The Chairman spoke of the prosperous state of the institution. A beautiful Home, he said, had been provided at Dalkeith, and it was very desirable that the Home should be permanently established. Addresses were given by Rev. William Grant and Bailie Sloan.

The Book World.

AN UNCOMMON BOOK.

The Rev. Annabel Lee. By Robert Buchanan. (6s. C. Arthur Pearson.) These are days of "uncommon" books; this is one of the uncommonest. The device of the author is to introduce the reader to an imaginary state of existence on earth two centuries hence, in which the Religion of Humanity reigns supreme, when pain and sickness have been banished by universal obedience to Nature's laws and the duty of man to his neighbour, when by the law of elimination (beautiful euphemism!) the weakly and unfit are forbidden to live; and society flows on—an unruffled stream of purity and happiness. And what then? Why, it all begins to pall. Men get tired of an existence which at its best ends with death and is void of hope beyond the grave. Mothers yearn to see their "eliminated" babes again; and doubts arise as to the righteousness of building up an ideal community upon a holocaust of countless "unfit" and weakly victims. Then Annabel Lee, Woman-Preacher, begins her work, having studied the sacred writings of discarded Christianity, to which had been attributed all the ills that flesh is heir to! The hearts of many respond to her call to prayer; the natural feelings after God break through "the veneer of a high civilisation."

> Something was lacking. Despite all the delights and allurements of nature, all the charming discoveries of Science for the increase of human enjoyment, all the glories of Art, all the freedom and variety of human intercourse, a certain vague monotony characterised the movements of civilisation. Men tired of pleasures easily sought and won. Since the lottery of life contained all prizes and no blanks, they missed the fever of striving, the delights of expectation. And the world lacked Mystery. In the days long past, with all their darkness and suffering, there had been compensations. In the great battle for existence, character had grown infinitely varied; and even the martyrdom of fine souls had offered to the draff of men glorious examples of self-sacrifice and devotion. In the blackest hours of despair, moreover, the gates of heaven had been still left open, giving glimpses of other worlds and higher hopes and fears.

Frankly, when we had read the first hundred pages of this book we asked impatiently, "Why was it written?" and wondered what useful purpose it could possibly perform. Then impatience gave place to interest, and that in turn to admiration of the skill with which the author unfolds his plan, which is thus described:—

> To show that if all religions were destroyed and perfect material prosperity arrived at, humanity would reach not perfection but stagnation.

The moral of the work accords with our own view that man at his best, without God, can never reach the high ideal to which alone God in Christ can raise him. He must be born anew ere he can see the Kingdom of God.

Of course, it is a fanciful production, and will not appeal to the devout believer whose heart is already fixed on the eternal verities. It would be waste of time for such to read it. But to materialistic minds it may prove a stepping-stone to faith. The story closes with a striking and powerful poem, of which two stanzas are here given:—

Speak now, O conquering Death,
Must we believe thy breath
Comforteth only through annihilation?
Must we believe that He
Who sendeth Sleep and thee
Can blight the harvest of his own creation?
That all thy plan, my God, is but to make
Bubbles of air and clay, then watch them break—
To spin a thread that snaps as Thou dost weave it?
That these fair works of thine
Are not, like Thee, divine?
God of the Quick and Dead, must we believe it?

* * * *

Shall we believe indeed
The last, sad, sunless creed,
Held by a world grown grey in dark endeavour,
That Thou, too, art a Dream,
A fantasy, a gleam
Flash'd from despairing eyes that close for ever?
That what thro' countless worlds hath quickened
Can in itself be dead—yea, less than dead—
Too void, too null, to bless the soul or grieve it?
Shall the black graveyard clod
Fall even on Thee, O God?
Maker of Worlds and Graves, we'll not believe it!

Messrs. Cassell's serial, The Queen's Empire, continues to be one of great attractiveness. The current Part XII. (6d.) gives a second selection of "Homes of the Queen's Subjects," a wonderful budget of suggestive information in pictorial form. Every picture tells its story, whether of ultra-refinement, of toiling pioneer work, or of low civilization and ignorance with handicraft. From the same publishers we have Part VII. of Sacred Art (6d.), giving pictures by eminent modern painters illustrating scenes in Bible story. This part closes the Old Testament series with a representation of the Fall of Nineveh, and begins the New Testament series with Holman Hunt's "Nazareth," and other pictures dealing with the birth of our Lord.

Among the Churches

Church of England.

The new church of St. Michael, Southfields, Wandsworth, will be consecrated on Saturday, the 30th inst.

Rev. W. F. Wilkinson, rector of Bringhurst-cum-Great Easton, has been appointed to the honorary canonry of Peterborough Cathedral.

The trustees offered St. Matthias', Plymouth, to Rev. William Bertram Russell Caley, of Watton, Norfolk, by whom it has been accepted.

Rev. E. Grose Hodge, in issuing the report of Holy Trinity, Marylebone, shows the various parochial organisations to be doing good and active work.

Rev. R. C. Joynt, Vicar of Christ Church, Gipsy Hill, sets an excellent example as regards running into debt in parochial matters, in announcing to his people that when the new organ is erected it will not be played until its full cost is in the treasurer's hand in money or in promises.

The case as to the "Stations of the Cross" erected in St. Mark's, Marylebone, by the vicar, has been again before the London Consistory Court. Dr. Tristram, Chancellor, ordered the removal of the illegal "ornaments" and discontinuance of the objectionable performances, giving the churchwarden power to act should the vicar still decline to comply with the order.

The annual meeting of the Manchester and Salford Church Rescue and Preventive Society was held on Thursday, the Lord Mayor presiding. The report showed that the work is progressing "quietly and steadily." From March 1, 1897, to February 28, 1898, the cases passed through the shelter numbered 108. Satisfactory accounts had been received of girls who were placed in homes or elsewhere at the beginning of the year. Some of those rescued by the Society two, three, and four years ago were known to be going on satisfactorily.

The annual report of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts has been issued. It shows that the gross receipts for the year 1897 amounted to £317,512, a larger total than in any previous year. It says that from the year 1701 to the present time the planting of the Church in the colonies has been the prominent work of the society. The number of ordained missionaries, including 12 bishops, on the following list is 744—that is to say, in Asia, 249; in Africa, 171; in Australia and the Pacific, 29; in North America, 209; in the West Indies, 48; and 38 chaplains in Europe. Of these 127 are natives labouring in Asia, and 47 in Africa.

Congregational.

Mr. A. E. Taylor has accepted a call to Upper Mill, Oldham.

Rev. John Thomas has entered on his new charge at Dursley.

After four months' illness, Rev. W. J. Peyling Wright has resumed his work at Chorley.

Rev. J. McMillan, of Barrow, has commenced his ministry at Newton Heath, Manchester.

The recognition services at Craven-hill, on the induction of Dr. Meserve, have been marked by much enthusiasm and great hopefulness.

Rev. F. Hirst, of Hull, has accepted an invitation to Harley-street, Bow, the scene of the labours of the late Rev. W. Evans Hurndall in East London.

The Medland Hall authorities report that in contrast to the expensive administration of our casual-ward system (6½d. to 8½d. per man per night), the cost at Medland Hall is only 1½d., including rent, wages, food, etc. Men are not detained to do a hard and often impossible labour task. They are free to leave at any time after midnight in search of work, and, if unsuccessful, can return at 6 p.m. The average for 1897 was less than nine nights per man.

The work under the care of Rev. Eynon Davies at Beckenham is reported as full of interest and bright with promise. The past year had been marked by progress all along the line: the additions to the membership of the church, to say nothing of the increase of seat-holders, was very encouraging, so much so that they rejoiced in a time of unexampled prosperity, and had ample reasons for buoyant hopefulness as they faced the future. The secretary of the church stated that during Mr. Davies's pastorate of eighteen months the membership of the church had been more than doubled. The church guild, commenced in the autumn, now numbers upwards of 200 members. The Sunday-school and adult Bible-classes reported substantial progress.

Baptist.

Rev. G. Buckley has accepted the pastorate at Longford, near Coventry.

Rev. David Kerr has resigned the pastorate at Leslie, and is about to sail for the United States.

Rev. R. Martin, late of Midland College, has commenced his work at Conisboro', Sheffield. A new chapel is to be built.

Rev. Thomas Chapman, of Midland College, has arrived at Johannesburg, South Africa, where he has accepted a pastorate.

Ebenezer Chapel, Margate, has sustained a heavy loss in the sudden death of Mr. F. Grose, one of the deacons and church secretary.

The work at St. George's-street, Macclesfield, is reported as full of encouragement, and in especial the Bible classes both for young men and young women.

At the recent annual meeting of the Westbury-street Church, Thornaby-on-Tees (Pastor A. E. Calver), it was stated that the past year had been one of considerable prosperity.

Pastor W. Jenkins, who has had charge of the mission churches at Buckley and Nantmawr, has accepted a call to Farnworth, and will commence his ministry there on the first Sunday in June.

The Welsh Forward Movement has during the past year received £900 towards the fund. Mr. Daniel Thomas, of Porthcawl, has erected two chapels at his own cost, and presented them to the committee, one at Llanharran and the other at Cadoxton Moors.

Good anniversary services were held on Sunday at Oswestry, the preacher being Rev. Frank Smythe. On Monday a meeting was held. A statement was made by the pastor, Rev. Malcolm M. Thomson, who said that during the two years of his pastorate forty-five members had been added by baptism, besides those received by letter of transfer. The debt of the church has during the same period been reduced by nearly £300. Addresses were also delivered by Revs. J. J. Poynter and Frank Smythe.

Particulars have now been received of the death of Rev. A. B. Wilkinson, which we announced a few weeks ago. It was while engaged in a preaching tour with Rev. G. S. Wilkins among the wild Khonds, he was attacked with small-pox. After attending him for four or five days Mr. Wilkins took him to Russell Khonda, where he died on Feb. 22. "He was marvellously cheerful throughout the whole of his illness. He frequently sang snatches of hymns, particularly the one 'Come to the Saviour, make no delay.' Just before he passed peacefully away he said to his nurse, 'Safe, safe, eternally safe.'" Mr. Wilkinson went out to India about eight years ago with Rev. A. Long to Khondistan on independent lines, but with his colleague joined the staff of the Baptist Mission in 1893. He had considerable linguistic ability, having given to the Khonds a translation of the Gospel in their own tongue.

Methodist.

A twelve days' mission at Hucknall Torkard has been followed by much blessing.

At Heaton-road, Newcastle, a four weeks' mission has been held by Rev. A. Walliker, with many tokens of conviction.

New chapels are being erected in Tregony (Cornwall), Normanton, Cambleshirth, London-road, Croydon, and Skidby, Beverley.

A mission at Gilkes-street, Middlesboro', has been accompanied by many professed conversions, including a number of young men.

The Wesleyans in Norwich have a jubilee scheme in hand for the extension of the work in the city. Already £400 have been raised, including £100 from the men's Bible class.

The missionary tour of Rev. F. J. Dymond, China missionary, has been remarkably successful. The meetings have been large, the collections liberal, and the spirit enthusiastic.

At St. James's Hall on Sunday week more than one hundred new members were publicly received. Of these ninety-two were actually present, and received the right hand of fellowship in the presence of the church.

Dr. Swallow and the United Methodist missionary secretary, Rev. H. T. Chapman, have been visiting the Cornish circuits in the interests of missions. Successful services and meetings have been held at Helston, New Quay, and other places.

Rev. H. J. Piggott, the missionary who has worked in Italy for thirty-seven years, admits that for the moment there is a recrudescence of Papal activity which presents a powerful and ubiquitous obstacle to the work of evangelisation. Mr. Piggott, however, cherishes the conviction that this very revival is working towards results of unspeakable advantage to Protestantism.

Work and Workers states that Methodists in France are few in number and for the most part poor. They realise, however, the sacredness of their trust as witnesses to the power of the Protestant Christian religion. The most prominent of the recently converted priests, the Abbé Bourrier, states that he heard the Gospel for the first time about twelve years ago, in the Wesleyan chapel in the Rue Roquépine, Paris. He then purchased in the small book-room the Bible which, through the Spirit of God, enlightened his mind. He has now taken a pastorate near Paris, and is seeking to establish a temporary home for priests who are longing to be delivered from the Papal thraldom.

Presbyterian.

New chapels are being erected in Newport (Mon.) and Abertillery.

By a special effort a heavy debt has been cleared off Hope Chapel, Merthyr Tydvil.

Revs. Maurice Griffiths and T. C. Jones have been appointed to visit the Welsh churches in the United States.

It is intended that the Synod evangelists be appointed for the present year to labour in connection with the Birmingham Presbytery. The Synod will be asked to again appoint six evangelists. Six ministers will also be appointed for deputation work in aid of foreign missions, to stimulate a forward movement for the purpose of putting the fund on a sound financial basis.

Fallen Asleep.

At Omeath, co. Louth, Rev. H. Vereker, who died, singular to say, on the very day he had long fixed in expectation of the Lord's second coming.—At Moy, Mary Reid, a devoted Christian worker in connection with the Methodist Church, in her ninety-third year.—At Knock, near Belfast, Mr. Hugh Galway, an earnest class leader.—At Miltown Malbay, co. Clare, Mr. Samuel Ball.—At "Solsgirth," Highgate, Rev. William Stainer, L.H.D., acting chaplain, St. Saviour's Church for the Deaf and Dumb, Oxford-street, aged seventy.—At Edinburgh, on 1st inst., Mr. Richard Hart, a faithful and much-used worker in connection with the Brigade Home for Destitute Lads.—On the 30th ult., Mr. W. C. S. Hunter, head master, Castle Hill Public School, Edinburgh, son of the late minister Frederick-street Church, Aberdeen, one who did good educational and social work among poor children.—At Edinburgh, Mr. A. B. Smith, LL.D., treasurer Scottish Reformation Society, Edinburgh, a good man, and an earnest Christian worker.

Applicants for Tracts.—S. Whitehead, 48, Charlotte-street, Milton, near Sittingbourne, Kent; A. Tippet, care of Mr. Hayler, Farncombe, Godalming, Surrey; W. Lawrie, 84, Larkhall-lane, Clapham, London, S.W.; A. P. Walker, 13, Astey's-row, Essex-road, Islington, N.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

AN extremely interesting account of Gospel revival in different parts of Scotland, written by Rev. William Ross, of Cowcaddens, Glasgow, comes to hand too late for insertion this week. We hope to find space for it in our next issue.

The ever present (and in these days increasing) importance of effective Sunday-school teaching leads us to ask the special attention of all engaged or interested in that work to Mr. Morgan's NOTES FROM THE PACIFIC COAST (p. 13), in which the subject is considered in the light of some interesting methods adopted in Los Angeles.

Ignored, criticised, accepted, are said to be the three stages that any live movement of reform or revival passes through. The Student Movement has reached the second—young men are sure to make mistakes now and then—but its leaders are men consumed with a passion for souls at home and abroad, and as such we wish them godspeed. The Conference at Birmingham last week, designed to bring theological students into line with the aggressive purposes of the movement, gave cause for much encouragement. Nearly 200 delegates were sent by fifty-one colleges in the United Kingdom, of which forty-one are exclusively for students of theology. This augurs well for future work and thought.

The unfortunate industrial struggle in Wales is once more bringing the ethics of labour and trade before us. While political economy would solve all things by the law of supply and demand, it is becoming increasingly clear that morals cannot be overlooked ; righteousness, and even kindness and self-sacrifice, count for something, and will have to count for much before we can hope to solve our difficulties, and avoid these recurring strifes. To think only or chiefly of how much each class can get out of the other is to turn trade and manufacture into civil war. How much do I owe my brother? is a more important question than How much does my brother owe me?

It is a great satisfaction to notice that Canon Knox Little's recent denunciation of evening Communions in Manchester was not allowed to pass without a strong protest at the local Easter Vestry. Surely on such a subject the servant is not wiser than his Lord.

Whatever may be thought of the methods pursued by Mr. Kensit in order to draw public attention to the Ritualistic extremes now indulged in by Anglican sacerdotalists, there can be no doubt of the gravity of the state of things he complains of, and the need of strenuous protest against it in the name of the law. Canon Fleming, speaking for the moderate party in the Church, puts the blame not on the disturbers but on those introducing "novelties" into the service. We hear that Lord Grimthorpe intends calling the attention of the House of Lords to the ritual usages now so widely in vogue. There has been a conspiracy of silence too long over the matter, and it is high time the rights of the case were threshed out openly.

A French gentleman, a Roman Catholic, who had been present at a Ritualistic church in London, said to the lady whose guest he was, and whom we know, "We are Catholic in my country, but we do not go as far as you do." This is the impression also made upon the mind of a special correspondent of the Daily Chronicle, who is writing on "Mass, or Communion Service?" He has been an Anglican and is now a Roman Catholic, and his testimony is that were it not for the use of the English language in the churches he has visited you might think you were witnessing Mass in a Romish church. The change from former days he thus describes :—

> The Communion Service, as it used generally to be conducted in the Church of England until a comparatively few years ago, was a service of prayer and praise, accompanied by a commemorative communion, and only those who were going to communicate remained to the end of the service. But in the churches of which I am now speaking the main object of the service seems to be that of offering a sacrifice, and everything is done to give that impression; there are often no communicants at all, or only one or two out of a large congregation.

After describing some services he saw, he says, "All these ceremonies were precisely those which might be seen at any Roman high Mass, with the exception of one or two minor details."

The Church of England is committed by history and formularies to the position of the Reformers of the sixteenth century, else why was there any need of protest and change? It is valuable to have the present Bishop of London's recent testimony to the substantial oneness of Evangelical Churchmen of to-day and the Reformers who drew up the Prayer Book. Historically and doctrinally Evangelicals are the lineal descendants of Cranmer and Ridley, who compiled the present formularies. One thing concerns peace-loving and loyal Evangelicals, and that is the inaction of the bishops with reference to Ritualism, as compared with their frequent alacrity in dealing with an Evangelical who wishes to emphasise fundamental unity and Christian love by preaching in a Nonconformist pulpit. This difference of attitude is a mystery, though it shows that bishops have power if they will only use it.

Sunday desecration seems to be increasing to an alarming extent, and is sure to have a deteriorating influence upon the people. The Bishop of Oxford says of Maidenhead that "the most embarrassing difficulty" that afflicts it is the Sunday work caused by the boating and cycling amusements of the London people.

> With the difficulty of Sunday profanation (declared his lordship) is bound up what has hitherto proved an insuperable practical hindrance, the impossibility of getting hold of the people who cause the profanation, the impossibility of getting them within reach of advice or remonstrance, or of supplying on the spot a sensational antidote to their sensational dissipation. We cannot set clergymen or Scripture readers to preach to people who are going by on bicycles or in boats.

The distinctive attitude of Roman Catholicism towards the Sunday—the division of the day into separate portions, one sacred, for worship, the other secular, for amusement—has hitherto not had much influence on English custom. Just now, however, we are face to face with an insidious beginning in that direction. A certain Roman Catholic cricket club has arranged for the playing of a series of Sunday cricket matches with public schools under Catholic management, and the secretary has informed a Press representative that they hope to carry this system further. It is stated that it has long been the custom in these colleges and schools to indulge in Sunday games, but from deference to general English opinion they have kept their games among themselves. Now, however, a campaign to break down this social "prejudice" is about to be initiated, and these are the first steps.

If this attempt to desecrate the Lord's day is now to be defeated, it must be by awakening to its dangers, and facing it with vigorous opposition. The Protestant Sunday is too precious a heritage to be frittered away by our young people, even in healthy amusement and recreation. Catholicism could scarcely strike a more deadly blow at the national well-being than by thus filching away the sacred day of rest from the English people, whose highest interests are bound up with the retention of the day for purposes of spiritual worship and work. It is the duty of all who have these interests at heart to set their faces like flint against transforming the day of rest and prayer into one of sports and pastimes.

Bishop Taylor Smith has received a warm welcome, on his arrival at Sierra Leone, from his clergy and laity. His episcopate begins under the happiest auspices, and his personal character, combined with wide experience of the diocese, will doubtless be greatly used of God.

Great preparations are being made to ensure the success of the World's Third Sunday-school Convention, which is to be held in London in July. Delegates from all parts of the world are expected to attend, and there will be, among other gatherings, a monster Sunday-school demonstration at the Crystal Palace. The morning sessions will be devoted to reports by delegates from Australia, New Zealand, Japan and China, Canada, U.S.A., and different parts of Great Britain and Ireland, and to the study and discussion of teacher-training and class instruction. Much interest is being taken in the Convention, and already some hundreds of delegates have booked passages from America. Such a world-wide gathering ought to create an epoch in the perfecting of Sunday-school methods.

An interesting correspondence is going on in the Independent on, "Why Young Men do not Go to Church." On the whole, the most satisfactory answer to the question, while at the same time the saddest, is that young men go wrong in their lives, and do not wish to go to church. Moral failure, coupled with moral embarrassment, explains a good deal more than dull preaching, a bald service, doctrines that outrage common-sense, want of a kind reception, and similar objections that we hear.

Mr. Clement Scott's "retractation" of his recent charges against the morality of the stage suggests two reflections. The apology is as follows:—

Referring to the interview held with me and published in Great Thoughts in the December of last year, I desire to express my regret to the ladies of the theatrical profession, and to the theatrical profession at large, for having given utterance to words which I now realise must have inflicted infinite pain upon many good women, whom I not only respect, but whose claims to the good opinion of all I fully and frankly avow. I desire to withdraw such statements as I then made. In my excuse I suggest that the words which were published, and which have evidently given such offence, were spoken by me at a moment of great personal strain, when my surroundings were such as to prevent my clearly appreciating the distress they were likely to cause.

First, it is to be carefully noted that the regret expressed does not include any retractation of the charges themselves, but only of their utterance. Mr. Scott simply says he is sorry he gave his opinions utterance. In the second place, it is difficult to understand the character of the "great personal strain" which forms the "excuse" for preferring such grave accusations. If they are true, then the facts ought to be known; if false, no amount of "strain" could justify the preference of such a shameful slander. But the facts elicited from other correspondents of equal standing more than justified the position Mr. Scott then took up.

Rev. T. W. Sharpe, H.M. Senior Chief Inspector of Schools, is retiring from his work, after spending forty years in it, and has given The Daily News some information of great value. In 1857 there were between 3000 and 4000 teachers in the whole of England and Scotland; now there are 60,000. The teaching staff consisted chiefly of child labour, the monitorial system; now that is altered. One great fault of the Board schools is lack of cohesion, except where there may be a cricket or swimming club.

Our system in the Board schools is too much that of mere class teaching where the master is supreme, and where the boys themselves have no responsibility cast upon them. One great fault is the lack of playgrounds; they have only play-yards. This results in a total absence of unity and esprit de corps. The bigger classes are not self-reliant enough; they are over-taught, everything is over-explained, nothing is left to their imagination, nothing for them to worry out for themselves. In short, they do not learn the most important lesson of all—how to think. Still, taken as a whole, the moral habits formed in these schools are very valuable to them in after life — punctuality, truthfulness, obedience, cleanliness.

The pupil teachers have some solidarity, and are carefully looked after by a society which has their special interests at heart. Other and great changes we may be sure will come in time; the great thing is to see that the schools are not captured in the interests of denominationalism.

The troubles in Uganda have raised a question as to whether missionaries are justified in taking sides in a struggle as combatants. There will probably always be a difference of judgment, but a fighting missionary certainly appears to be a contradiction. On the whole, we believe that the feeling among missionaries themselves would be opposed to it. Some of the brightest victories of the Gospel have been won by its ambassadors going among hostile tribes altogether defenceless. In Patagonia the successful missionaries were those who committed themselves absolutely to the keeping of God, and the humanity (or inhumanity) of the people to whom they went. Bishop Steere has expressed himself thus:—

All ideas of war and fighting must be wholly alien to the purpose of the true missionary. If we find war going on, we have an equal message for both sides...If danger arises, it is a duty and not a disgrace to withdraw. And here one must distinguish between danger from the people one is among and danger from their enemies. In the first place we ought either to withdraw or to endure martyrdom. In the second place, one is at liberty to withdraw, or one may take the chances of war as a non-combatant. No Christian is bound, and a Christian clergyman ought under no circumstances, to engage as a combatant in war.

The good work done by the Industrial Missions Aid Society is well attested by the account of its proceedings given in the Industrial Missionary Record. The need for such work is felt in every missionary centre where converts are liable to lose caste and employment by their acceptance of Christianity. By their means it is possible to minimise the hardship imposed upon them, and to start them at once in occupations by which they are able to earn their living, and so be free from the worst anxieties of their position. The excellent results, commercial as well as spiritual, of the Basel Mission in India are encouraging in the extreme, and in time, doubtless, there will be a wide extension of this movement in the great centres of population in India, China, and elsewhere. The aim is everywhere to make these industrial missions self-supporting, as is the case already in the above instance.

The battle of Atbara was a victory for temperance principles as well as for the English arms. At the commencement of the advance the Sirdar, Sir Herbert Kitchener, sent back all the beer ordered to the front, and ascertaining afterwards that some spirit had been smuggled into camp, he called all the men together, and in their presence poured the liquor on the sands. As a result of this policy and the excellent discipline maintained in camp, the health and condition of the army was superb, and even the wounded are earning their reward in rapid recovery from their wounds. Little has been said about this in the newspaper reports, but Lady Elizabeth Biddulph has given prominence to it in a timely address at the annual meeting of the Society for the Study of Inebriety. As the Daily News says in commenting on these facts, "the publicans must feel but slight interest in this war."

It is in the last degree saddening to think of this unhappy, misguided rabble, marching with songs and prayers and mutual exhortations to certain annihilation. Many of them are in no way anxious to fight, but do so merely because they must. To these the issue means death in any event. If they refuse to fight, they would be killed by the Emira; if they fight, as they will do, they must be killed by our terrible fire. The thought of this coming inevitable slaughter of driven men is horrible in the extreme; yet it is an imperative necessity.

The one bright side of this saddening picture is the fact that the battle has probably broken for ever the tyranny of the Khalifa, whose sixteen years of rule, according to a careful estimate, have cost the ruthless waste and destruction of 75 per cent. of the entire population. The actual figures will never be known, but there can be no doubt that they run into millions. It is to be hoped that the war will issue in a great saving of life in the future, and that civilisation and enlightenment will take the place of the horrors of cruelty and shame that have marked the last twenty years in this benighted region. If anything can justify this war, it is certainly not the avenging of Gordon's death, who would have been horrified at such an idea, but the ending of the reign of terror which he vainly gave his life to terminate.

One very important question arises as to the result of British victories in the Soudan. We are extending the power and rule of the Khedive of Egypt, who is a Mohammedan. A writer in the Guardian reminds us that it cannot be too clearly recognised that Islam, the hereditary foe of Europe, is contending for every inch of Africa with European Powers; with the English in Nyassaland, Uganda, on the Niger, and in the Soudan; with the Belgians on the Upper Congo; with the French in Senegal and the Western Soudan; and that, in their ineradicable hatred of the European, and in their determination to rule the negro in their own way, the Arabs form a vast confederacy; and that, if they are strengthened anywhere, they are strengthened all over the Continent. And if the Khalifa's rule is overthrown at Omdurman no doubt trade will flow back into its old routes, and the Pagan tribes of the Nile Valley, the Shillooks, Nubas, and those of Darfur and Kordofan, all who have survived the desolating tyranny of the Baggara, will be subjected to Mohammedanism, which will come upon them decked out with all the advantages of European organisation.

These considerations may well rouse us as a professedly Christian nation to ask what we propose to do in the way of Christianising Egypt. There are 650,000 Copts, professedly Christian. Can they not be reached, and transformed into an active force for the spread of the truth? May not Khartoum become a Christian centre? It would be a shocking satire if, on Good Friday, British arms established Mohammedanism in East Africa!

The story of the late riots in Bombay provoked severe remarks on what appeared to be unwise administration in the plague-stricken city. There is, however, another aspect of the sad incident. Doctors, nurses, and medical staff risked life in dealing with the evil, and in their united efforts combined efficiency of service with the utmost regard for native susceptibilities. Fanatical rage and murder were the ungrateful response of the caste-bound population. What might have happened, but for the possibility of restoring law and order? This is a pertinent question propounded by an esteemed correspondent, who is not alone in pleading for generous consideration for the soldiery to whom such a difficult task was committed.

Proceeding to put in a good word for the Army, our correspondent says:—

As we recognise that law and order could only be restored by the assertion of strong, well-organised force in its support, can we regret that the soldiery were available for use? All the wise planning, all the self-sacrificing devotion, might have gone for nothing—nay, much worse than nothing—but for the strong arm to enforce the good and to stem the mad current of evil. There is police work to be done among nations; there is police work to be done, alas! in Bombay, which to be effectual must be done, not by the man with the truncheon, but by the man, after the Bible pattern, who in order to deter from evil-doing wields the sword, and in that capacity, and girt with that sword, is a "minister of God."

We have nothing to say against such work as is here ascribed to British forces in India. An all-round view of such acts must largely disarm censure, if not evoke sincere sympathy. In the suppression of fanatical risings the man of war is lost in the agent of Christian philanthropy.

An Art in Soul Winning.*

By Rev. F. B. MEYER.

THE essential matter at the outset is purity of motive, that we desire man's salvation for the glory of our Master, upon which point we must focus our efforts, getting into line with it as God's great purpose for the present Dispensation. The maintenance of theological, intellectual, or popular position is of less importance than to obey God's command to Abraham "Walk before Me," doing it in sincerity and whole-heartedness. Never forget that a second need is the co-operation of the Holy Spirit, while a third condition consists in

A WISE USE OF THE WORD OF GOD.

It is said that a young prince of Spain was smitten in early life by small-pox, and was so horribly disfigured that his parents insisted he should never be shown a mirror. He thus lived in ignorance of his own poor contorted visage, being cruelly led to think he was the fairest of the fair. One day, in a fit of spite, a companion put a looking-glass at the end of a passage down which the prince was to come. Passing along, very self-satisfied, the royal son was arrested by this hideous reflection and cried, "Who is that? Surely it cannot be I!" The story well illustrates the necessity for us to set before men God's standard, by holding up before them

THE GLASS OF THE DIVINE LAW.

Then it will not be necessary for you to continually plead with men to "Come to Jesus"; for finding out their need they will come to you crying, "What must I do to be saved?"

You remember, too, that when Richard Cœur de Lion was imprisoned in an Austrian prison, which was unknown to his own people, the Court minstrel discovered his whereabouts by singing beneath the walls of such buildings up and down the land songs known only to the king and himself; and Richard, hearing these ballads, repeated them note by note from his cell. So, if you preach the truth as it is in Christ, the conscience of man will respond to the voice of God which brings conviction to the soul.

USE THE POWER OF SURPRISE.

I once spent an afternoon with Mr. C. H. Spurgeon. Beyond his garden was a fair view of the Surrey hills. As we walked beneath the shadow of a close box-hedge, we came upon a cleavage therein, through which there suddenly broke upon us a wide view of the distant landscape. The opening had been made of set purpose, the great preacher using it to teach his students the necessity of not reserving spiritual application till the end of a sermon, but of bringing the hearer suddenly face to face with the claims of Christ and of eternity. The fact that, as a boy, I always read the story in tracts given me and missed the last page has been a useful memory to me as a writer. Unconverted men will thoroughly enjoy two-thirds of your sermon when there is nothing in it to prick them; and when towards the end things get troublesome they will put up their umbrellas and drip your application down somebody else's neck. Dealing with souls is like angling: sometimes "playing" a strong fish; at others, hiding your purpose, but with sudden jerk bringing the hook to bear that the capture may be landed.

Let none regard you as a mere professional talker. While nothing can be said against read sermons when they are of such a kind as Jonathan Edwards' memorable one, yet get away sometimes from manuscript or other fetters, and appeal to the heart in your brother man. Do not go after men by worldly methods, but cultivate fellowship with Christ, who says, "Come after Me, and I will make you fishers of men." I came the other day upon a saw-pit, and knew there was one working below in harmony with the man above whose movements I could see. So let your life always be a confederacy with the unseen Christ—co-workers together with Him.

Following Christ in his example, you will preferably deal with men individually rather than in masses. The Gospels are full of examples of the Master's wonderful tact in such cases. There was a very hard infidel shoemaker, whose daughter attended Edward Irving's church in Glasgow, and the minister determined to "stalk him down." One day Irving, whose father had been a tanner, dropped in upon the man, and knowing, from early associations, all about his subject began to talk with him about leather. The man became interested, argued with his visitor, and by no means allowed him to have his own way. After a bit the preacher left, saying nothing for that time about religion; but eventually the man came to the service. When asked how he found his way there, he remarked, "Ah, he's a guid mon that; he ken's a fine bit o' leather!" One man like that "tough customer" won for God might have in him the making of a grand modern apostle.

Get to understand men's standpoint, or what interests them, for such things afford fine avenues to the heart. Read up a bit before you visit. Never make a mistake when you talk to a man about his trade. Mr. Spurgeon used to say, "When talking to fishermen keep clear of the sea." Talk about something in which they cannot catch you tripping, or they may think you are quite as poor an authority in spiritual things as you are found to be in material ones.

Use tact, common sense. Let men see you sit by them; let them look at you. Do not confine to the pulpit your efforts for winning souls; get into touch with men as men. Let them grip you by the hand, respect you, understand your motives, love you. It is through the Son of Man that men come to God; it is through sons of men that others come to the Son of Man Himself. Thus may God baptize us, by the Holy Ghost, into the power and art of winning souls.

* Addressed to theological students, assembled last week, in Birmingham.

The "Polychrome" Critics.

In vain with coloured pen ye write
And mar the sacred page,
And with Teutonic help incite
A petty war to wage.

For while with sacred history
Your playful fancies stray,
And in the distant prophecies
Your senses lose their way,

The tablet and corroded stones
Restore their ancient trust,
At last disclosed by faithful earth
Long hidden in the dust.

While curious critics, deep in lore,
In solemn conclave sit,
And, by the midnight oil, applaud
The ponderous Teuton's wit,

The Jews, uprising, see the dawn
Shine on Jerusalem;
The writings that are hid to you
Are light and life to them.

The critic's art was tried in vain
In Babylonia's land;
When once the writing on the wall
Was traced by mystic hand.

Untutored faith and untaught art
Approached, and looked, and read:
The Spirit fills the humble heart
That bows th' inquiring head.

An Ecumenical Missionary Conference is to be held in 1900 in New York, for ten days, at the end of April. Its object is "to sum up the progress of foreign missionary work during the century, and to set in clear order the present state of this work in the varied fields occupied by the churches of Protestant Christendom." Every Evangelical Protestant foreign missionary organisation in the world, so far as is known, has been invited to be present.

Sacking of an American Mission in China.—A telegram from Shanghai speaks of the recent sacking of the American Methodist Medical Mission at Kiang Peh, a suburb of Chung King. Militia are now at that place in large force, and refuse to allow the execution of the death warrant against the murderer of one of the native medical assistants. The foreign consuls have called upon the Taotai to disperse the militia, execute the murderer, arrest the leaders of the rioters, pay 500 taels compensation for damage to property, allow the mission to reoccupy its premises, and finally to protect members of the mission.

"As I have loved you."

By Dr. JAMES CULROSS.

WHEN we read these words we at once think of the cross. He loved us, we say, and gave Himself for us. But the cross would not occur to the disciples. Jesus had not yet reached the cross, and though He had so often and so plainly foretold it, they could not believe it possible. What the disciples could think of was the previous intercourse they had enjoyed with Jesus—He as the Lord, they as his followers. He had found in them much imperfection, much waywardness, much narrow-mindedness, much slowness and dulness of heart, much forgetfulness, many small jealousies and small ambitions. But they had never seen in Him anything like personal irritation or hardness toward them, or looking Himself up from them, or wounded selfishness or impatience; on the contrary, He had been tender-hearted, gentle and forbearing, delicate in his consideration, patient and magnanimous, stooping to the lowliest acts for their help, bearing their burdens, giving them light as they were able to bear it, always seeking to establish their life in God.

A good deal that passes for love among men is

NOT LOVE AT ALL, BUT SELFISHNESS.

We care for those who are useful to us, for those who are agreeable, for those who fall in with our humours, for those who bring us gifts or do us honour. But love is not merely a higher thing, it is a thing of a different order. Love is free from self-seeking. It does not shrink from self-sacrifice on behalf of its object. It does not shrink from pushing its object into pain. All love's longings, all love's endeavours, tend toward the holiness of the beloved object.

Love is steadfast and enduring. Love never faileth. Constancy is the crowning quality of love. That is its mark, the inimitable mint-stamp of heaven set upon it. It does not change with changing fortunes; it does not grow old with time. "I will never leave thee, I will never forsake thee"; that is what makes love love indeed. And that was the characteristic of Christ's love to his disciples. It had been constant. His feet were already dipping in the sea of sufferings through which He was about to pass. But many waters could not quench his love, nor could the floods drown it. Herein is the commendation of Christ's love: it has

THE SEED OF IMMORTALITY IN IT.

Human love often waxes cold; whispering tongues poison and kill it at the root; it finds flaws in its object, and is disappointed; it meets ingratitude, and is wearied out; it decays through absence and distance; it breaks down under the burdens that are laid upon it; the world frowns and it falls off from our side; a wind comes from the wilderness and blows it out. But his love abides, unchanging, ever enduring, imperishable, immortal, the one thing that lasts amid life's changes and desolations. When all other confidences are uprooted, and we look around us, and a feeling of desolation creeps over the heart, as if no one knows us, his face is unchanged, He loveth at all times. "The mountains may depart and the hills be removed, but My kindness—the loving-kindness from the days of old, the everlasting kindness—shall not depart from thee, nor the covenant of My peace be removed."

I remember an incident by which this truth was verified to me long ago. Wandering, in company with a young man of my own age, along the banks of a broad, deep river, one lovely summer evening, we talked of many things. The waving cornfields were taking on a golden tinge, great old trees lined the river banks, while blue hills rose in the distance, and the calm of heaven fell upon us. Before parting we sat down on an old wall, and my friend sang in a rich, mellow voice a hymn that I had never heard before; but that has got printed on memory for ever. We shook hands and parted, and the first thing I heard in the morning was that my friend had died in the night; and so the hymn with its music became mine for life. It was this:

One is kind above all others,
Oh, how He loves;
His is love beyond a brother's,
Oh, how He loves!

Earthly friends may pain and grieve us,
One day kind, the next day leave us,
But this Friend will ne'er deceive us,
Oh, how He loves!

Theological Students in Conference.

[By Our Own Representative.]

THE world-wide and growing movement among young men which makes for spiritual devotion, Christian union, and missionary progress had striking manifestation, so far as British organisations are concerned, in last week's Conference at Birmingham. It was attended by theological students from all parts of the United Kingdom, including representatives from fifty-one University and other colleges in our country. Enthusiasm and fervour marked the gatherings to a degree which affords much ground of hope that, with God's blessing, lasting results may be seen in the broadening and deepening of the work undertaken by the Student Volunteer Missionary Union and the British College Christian Union, two bodies which united in the promotion of this Conference.

The Conference laid stress in many ways upon the largely unsatisfied claims of the heathen world upon the Church of God, in view of Christ's great commission for the preaching of his Gospel to every creature. Many of those present at the meetings are already pledged to take up work for God abroad. A remarkable feature of the Conference consisted in what was called a "Missionary Exhibit" in the large hall of the Y.M.C.A., whereby the comparatively small progress made in the evangelisation of the world was forcibly brought home to the mind through the eye by means of diagrams on the walls giving various proportional aspects of the great question.

About 220 delegates were present throughout the sittings, and the part which some of these young men took in the proceedings was happily supplemented by words of wise counsel and instruction from older brethren of experience in the work and cares of the Christian ministry. A spirit of welcome was very manifest in Christian circles of the city; and the local Press gave considerable space to daily reports of the gatherings. With two or three exceptions, which we shall duly indicate, all the meetings were held in the Masonic Hall, and prominent over the platform here was the motto of the S.V.M.U., "The evangelisation of the world in this generation." Delegates arrived on Tuesday, and reported themselves at the Y.M.C.A., where they were received by Messrs. D. M. Thornton, Tissington Tatlow, and other Conference officials, and by the hon. local secretary, Mr. H. Whitwell.

WELCOMING THE DELEGATES.

At a largely-attended gathering on the Tuesday evening the Rector of Birmingham, Rev. A. J. Robinson, presided, and, in the name of the city, heartily welcomed the students. The Bishop of Ripon, announced to speak during the Conference, was unavoidably prevented from attending. Rev. F. L. Wiseman, president of the district Free Church Council, joined in the welcome. The Conference, he said, might well feel at home in a city with which great and good men like the late Rev. Dr. Dale, known throughout the country, had been associated. He trusted that the next few days might be epoch-making in the history of the Christian Church. Rev. J. R. Evans followed the same line on behalf of Welsh Christians in Birmingham, and pointed out how largely the colleges of the Principality have responded to this movement. Mr. D. M. Thornton said theological students had long been waiting for such an opportunity as the presence Conference afforded. Men of our colleges would, in the future, have considerable influence upon the world; and if there is to be any closer drawing together between them as members of Christ seeking the extension of his kingdom, such gatherings as these are indispensable.

On Wednesday morning the first gathering was largely devoted to prayer, with some helpful words from Rev. Canon Sutton, based upon Titus ii. 15. This was immediately followed by a Delegates' meeting for considering

"THE CALL TO THE MINISTRY."

The first address was by Rev. J. Kelman (Edinburgh), who declared that where art and eloquence take the place of the true ministerial function of interpretation the pulpit at once loses its power. He drew a vivid contrast between the prophet who goes forth with strong compulsion to speak in God's name things concerning which he dare not keep silence, and the poor clerical hack who merely talks because the Sunday has come round. There is no more miserable man upon God's earth than the latter. The difference is just that between the call of God and its absence.

Rev. W. E. Burroughs (C.M.S.) dealt with the sphere in which the call is to be exercised, deprecating any practical distinction between home and foreign work. God has one Church, in one world, with the one work of winning men to the Saviour. It is only exceptional men, however, who can be called to the neglected and vast work of God in distant lands, therefore there is no need to fear depletion of the home ministry from such a cause. At the same time, it is all the more desirable that strong men should come forward for the foreign sphere.

The afternoon was devoted to consideration of "The Perils of the Ministry," with an opening address by Rev. F. Baylis (C.M.S.) upon the dangers of professionalism. There was the risk of using language too high for the comprehension of the people; but still greater was the danger of using words which go beyond spiritual experiences. Appeals were too frequently used without effort to make clear their practical equivalents in heart and life, leading to bitter disappointment when supposed conversions are tested. The constant repetitions involved in public ministrations must not be allowed to degenerate into formalism. Other great temptations of the ministry to be guarded against are—busy occupation without real effort, and an assumption of solemnity which, with some, covers many deficiencies. Perhaps, however, the opposite tendency to perpetual jesting is the more to be feared.

PERSONAL HOLINESS.

Rev. F. B. Meyer dwelt upon the need for personal holiness, especially in the light of Paul's words, so often echoed by ministerial experience, concerning his anxiety not to become a castaway or (as the Revised Version renders it) rejected. The Divine hand sometimes lays aside instruments which become unfit for its gracious purposes, just as we ourselves cease to use superseded appliances. Let not our words go in front of our acts, nor our acts in front of our words. A minister's teaching must correspond exactly with his walk; a pure, childlike, and loving nature are essential to clear apprehension of the truth. Power in prayer depend upon truth and purity in the life. The man who is truly holy will not talk about himself in that respect; for Moses, after his descent from the Mount, where he had talked with God, wist not that his face shone. Many have been turned from holiness by so-called holy people. Holiness means wholeness, and is by no means opposed to manliness; for redemption was never meant to undo the work of creation. Neither is it a thing of paroxysms and agonising crises, for it begins with the spirit and not with the body. A truly holy man is one delivered from the power of sin and self, and made a fit channel of Divine grace and influence. If we avoid formalism in our work, seeking to be natural before men and sincere toward God, we shall be blameless before Him, though we be far from faultless.

The evening meeting was held at the Town Hall, where Rev. F. B. Meyer gave an opening address upon "Soul-Winning," notes of which appeared on another page.

Mr. J. R. Mott (general secretary of the World's Students' Christian Federation) spoke on the mission of the ministry in relation to

THE NON-CHRISTIAN WORLD.

He said the students now believe in the missionary movement as they never did before. Less than ten years ago there were not fifty classes of students in Christendom making a systematic and progressive study of missions, but now there are more than four hundred such classes in Christian countries. The students are taking a very positive attitude on the question of missionary enterprise. As they study God's purpose they find that world-wide missions constitute the business of the Church and not a mere incident, that the only sufficient reason for the existence of the Church is that the world may know of the life, the death, and the resurrection of Jesus Christ and the significance of these great facts. Taking a wide view of the good work done in the mission fields in various parts of the world, he saw great necessity for more labourers, because there are one thousand millions of people at present in the world whom the knowledge of Jesus Christ as revealed in God's Word has not yet reached. This is the great and important reason which is influencing the students of the theological colleges to devote themselves to the work of the mission field. A great responsibility rests upon all Christian nations, inasmuch as there is an enormous need of more workers for foreign missions; it is also necessary that a much greater amount of financial support should be given to the missionary societies, if they are effectually to extend their spheres of usefulness.

At the prayer meeting on Thursday morning Rev. J. H. Jowett offered some suitable thoughts upon the worship of God, in connection with Psa. xcvi. 4-7. The great elements of worship, according to the Psalmist, are: God's greatness, to make us reverent; his honour, to make our worship true; and his majesty, to make our homage calm. These things being observed, we shall not only offer unto the Lord our strength, which we so rarely offer Him, but every part of a sanctified and consecrated being.

The topic under consideration at the immediately ensuing morning session was

"THE POWER OF THE HOLY GHOST."

Rev. W. E. Burroughs opened the subject with an address on the power of the Holy Ghost in the formation of character. He exhorted the students to keep before them the solemn responsibility attaching to them, as to all men, in virtue of the influence they must each exercise on the conduct and character of others, and to remember that there was only one model upon which they must found their ideals. Let them beware of the temptation to form their character on human models, and to appear like some one or other among their fellows. When God makes a man He destroys the mould; and every one must be true to himself, for he cannot successfully imitate another. The great outstanding feature in Christ, the Divine model, is singleness of aim; and he (the speaker) would beseech them to pray that their characters might be built upon that model, so that wherever they went they might leave behind them not the mark of human imperfection, but an impress of Christ.

Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor (Notting Hill) then spoke upon the power of the Holy Ghost in the preacher as an indispensable qualification for service. Though God may endue unsanctified men with power to do special work, yet in ordinary circumstances holiness is essential to power for service. Therefore behind service lies character, and that character should always issue in service. But personal holiness, although an indispensable, is not a sufficient qualification for the teacher's work. The Holy Spirit must bestow an additional gift upon the man's soul. The power of the Holy Ghost fitting a man for service gives him a new boldness in proclaiming the truth. What is most needed in the world is witness for the faith. To become such a witness much courage is needed; for though men are not now sent to the physical rack in this country, yet they are tortured in a way almost as cruel. Pressure is applied by congregations to induce a man to lower the standard of preaching; and if the preacher is to be bold and unflinching in testimony, it can only be in the power of the Spirit. Our ministry must be free from selfish considerations of personal eminence or obscurity. The will must be absolutely surrendered to the higher will in faith and truthfulness in the power of God to use us for his service.

Three Unspeakable Things.

1. The Unspeakable Gift (2 Cor. ix. 15).
   You cannot measure it (Eph. iii. 18).
   You cannot understand it (Rom. xi. 33).
   But you can receive it (John i. 12).

2. Unspeakable Words (2 Cor. xii. 4).
   You cannot utter the language of heaven.
   We must have a changed body (1 Cor. xv. 51).
   Babel was confusion of language (Gen. xi. 9).
   At Pentecost language was restored (Acts ii. 6).
   When Christ reigns there will be one language (Zep. iii. 9).

3. The Unspeakable Joy (1 Pet. i. 8).
   You cannot express fully the joy of the glory.
   It is the joy of the King (Ps. xxi. 1).
   His joy is expressed in singing (Zeph. iii. 17).
   Our joy is in Him (Rom. v. 11).

Let us shout for joy (Ps. cxxxii. 9).

"Songs of gladness—never sadness,
Sing the ransomed ones of heaven;
Anthems swelling, ever telling
Of the joy of saints forgiven."

From Other Lands.

Notes from the Pacific Coast.

WE have been for two months in the luxurious climate of

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

We drive through miles of golden-fruited Gardens of the Hesperides. Roses of all varieties and colours blossom abundantly; the yellow poppy of California blooms all the year round. "Here everlasting spring abides, and never withering flowers." I should feel inclined to say that here spring and autumn shake hands with each other.

You would think that no one would remain in the cold North-West while they could find space for a homestead in this Paradise restored. But there are wonderful compensations in human life. In the long bleak winter of Manitoba people enjoyed the climate and said that they had never been so well before; while many in California become weary of the monotony of seasons and of a temperature which does not call out the energies or exercise the faculties as do the colder regions. Like Chicago, California has been chiefly developed by settlers from the Eastern States. Had the Pilgrim Fathers landed on the Southern Pacific instead of on the North Atlantic Coast, the result would have been different. The softer climate would not have developed the same sturdy type of manhood as was produced on the stern and rockbound coast of New England, where

> The ocean eagle soared
> From her nest by the white waves' foam,
> And the rocking pines of the forest roared;
> This was their welcome home.

It must have been observed by every one who has the art of seeing that the Salvation Army, wherever it has gone, has given opportunity for the talent, genius in thousands of men and women, chiefly young, most of whom would otherwise have left no visible footprint on the sands of time. It is remarkable that numbers who, to use an expressive Americanism, would not have amounted to a row of pins have become capable, reliable helps, and from helps have become governors in that world-wide organisation. Similarly, while in the older countries the faculties of young men and women are smothered in the crowd, stifled by caste, strangled by precedent, in the States and in our colonies there is room to breathe and act, there are expansive possibilities which incite to enterprise and adventure, and which echo the primeval command, "Replenish the earth and subdue it." The typical American is the product of the opportunities and possibilities afforded in these large new countries to the crowded and crowded-out populations of the old.

THE GENERAL TONE OF SOCIETY

is of the world worldly; the churches are generally more manifestly and obtrusively worldly than at home. Yet we meet with some of the most devoted and consecrated Christians, exhibiting an old-time simplicity and piety which is cheering and refreshing in the midst of the thirst for excitement and sensationalism in business and politics.

I met at Peniel Hall Mr. George Coffey, a Christian brother from New South Wales, where he had been connected with a movement kindred to that of the West London Mission. He said he had never met, in any part of the world where he had been, so many consecrated Christian workers as in Southern California. He knew no better work in Los Angeles than that of Mr. George Studd and Mr. and Mrs. Ferguson at Peniel Hall, with its daily prayer meeting at noon and nightly evangelistic meeting. I would not, however, confine this remark to that hall or to that town.

There is there a Presbyterian minister, Rev. Hugh K. Walker, D.D., whom I mentioned in my last, who is redeeming the time—buying up the opportunity afforded him of preaching the Gospel faithfully to a wealthy congregation. He is able, strong, and young, and this is a country for young men.

Dr. Read, for many years minister of the First Baptist Church, a learned Evangelical man of the old school, has been obliged to retire on account of age and failing health. His successor, Rev. Joseph Smale, a young man, has been and is being remarkably used of God. He came from Mr. Spurgeon's Pastors' College. In 1892 he was pastor of the Park-road Baptist Chapel, Ryde, I.W. On coming to America a few years ago he exercised his ministry at Prescott, Arizona. There his wife died, and shortly afterwards a remarkable revival was experienced, which continues to the present time. Last year he resolved to return home, and, wishing to see the Pacific Coast before he went, he came to Los Angeles on his way. He was asked to supply the pulpit a few times in consequence of the illness of Dr. Read. The invitation was repeated again and again, God evidently being with his young servant, and at last he was offered, and accepted, the pastorate. During the last eight months seventy or more have been added to the church. We were present a few week ago when a whole family of five were baptised, besides others, and received into fellowship. All the members seem imbued with the pastor's evangelistic spirit, and ready to speak to anxious souls, to visit, or to do any other work required of them.

The lady in charge of the primary class of

is a model teacher. Her husband told me that for five-and-twenty years neither of them had been late or absent from their place in the Sunday-school (of which he had been until recently the superintendent). The children, 140 in number, were arranged as to age—the lowest row four, the highest twelve. Their attention was actively engaged and kept on the qui vive from beginning to end. One idea was just dropped into their minds at a time. The lesson was illustrated by a drawing upon the black-board, at which the lady was expert. The collecting-box was not passed round, but the children marched singing round form by form, deposited their cents, and returned singing to their places in perfect order—this itself an education. It reminded me of Miss Carruthers' highly successful kindergarten schools at Pisa, which the Romanists have vainly endeavoured to supplant. I thought how much more thoroughly and effectually one qualified teacher could manage and instruct 144 children of all ages, than a dozen ordinary Sunday-school teachers, without method or discipline, and themselves uninstructed in the art of teaching, could control or teach a dozen classes of a dozen children each.

A writer in the Ladies' Home Journal, which has an enormous circulation in the States, denounces the present S. S. procedure as a decreasing benefit and an increasing failure, to remove which all male teachers should be done away with; no young woman engaged in business during the week should be asked or allowed to use the day provided by the all-wise Creator for rest and recuperation in the exhausting effort to impart instruction in the Sunday-school, necessitating a preparation which, to be efficient, would require every leisure hour during the week. Men of all sorts and conditions and all women earning their bread being thus excluded, the writer insists that Sunday-school teaching must be devolved upon educated and cultivated women of leisure who, it is said, are to be found in abundance ready to undertake the work.

I am not prepared to endorse these views without considerable qualification and modification; but would it not be possible, and is it not necessary, that every Sunday-school superintendent should be familiarised with the kindergarten system, or with some other method of imparting instruction, so as to be able to select suitable teachers, and to give them the benefit of his own experience? Conversion and spirituality, love of children and wisdom to win their souls, are the primary requisites; then power to preserve imparting instruction is an essential addition to the equipment of a teacher. An hour a day for three months devoted to the study of such a system would make an amazingly beneficial change in the capabilities of superintendents and teachers, and an astonishing improvement in the success and usefulness of the average Sunday-school.

Breton Onion Boys.—Writing from Western College, Plymouth, Mrs. Chapman acknowledges the help of friends in her work among the onion boys visiting Plymouth, especially mentioning anonymous gifts from Edinburgh and Colchester. Remarking that the onion boys visit annually many seaports and other towns in Great Britain and Ireland, Mrs. Chapman deplores that no general effort is made for their enlightenment and comfort while in the midst of Protestant strangers. She urges Christians acquainted with the French language to take an interest in these simple visitors to our coasts.

An L.M.S. Tour.

AFTER a tour extending over about fifteen months, Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, foreign secretary of the London Missionary Society, has returned to his work in Blomfield-street, E.C. In the course of his travels he visited New Guinea and the South Sea Islands in company with Mr. William Crosfield, of Liverpool, and Madagascar with Mr. Evan Spicer, winding up with a journey through Bechuanaland and Matabeleland.

Mr. Thompson found New Guinea benefiting greatly from the vigorous administration of Sir William Macgregor, whose term of office expires this year. Mission work is making steady and satisfactory progress, and an industrial mission has been proposed in order to fit the people for the new conditions that may be in store for them. The natives are more inclined to industry than those of South Africa.

In Samoa, where three-fourths of the population are connected with this Society's missions, Mr. Thompson had interviews with a number of chiefs, and he thinks the majority would welcome the establishment of British rule. In the Cook Islands, which are under a British protectorate in connection with New Zealand, the people show remarkable signs of progress. On Rarotonga, for instance, there is a sewing machine in every household, and nearly every family has an American buggy and a pony or two. The natives on all the islands of this group are very eager for education. The people have been, at least nominally, Christian for years, and nearly all are Protestants.

As to Madagascar, Mr. Thompson confirms the report that the policy of the French Government towards the Society has entirely changed. There have been manifestations of friendliness in practical ways, and the officers in control of outlying stations are beginning to understand that the Society has absolutely no national aims. Several of the French officers are learning English—a language which General Gallieni both reads and speaks easily, and this will conduce to the better understanding which is so much desired. While not excluding teaching in Malagasy, the Government insists that half the instruction shall be given in French; and as the Society's elementary schools have all been handed over to the Paris Society or Evangelical Missions there is no difficulty in carrying out this order.

In Bechuanaland Mr. Thompson found a great upheaval of native life. Owing to the rinderpest and loss of harvests, most of the people had been reduced to beggary—though good news of late rains has recently been received. The calamities of the country may, however, prove blessings in disguise, for they are compelling hundreds of young men to seek work, principally in the Transvaal or at Kimberley. Another result which may ultimately prove a benefit to the people is that the smaller chiefs are able to assert a growing independence. Mr. Thompson considers the work as more hopeful than ever in Matabeleland. There is a great eagerness among the natives for education, and neither the Chartered Company nor the farmers are likely to stand in the way of educational work.

Encouragement in Algeria.

Writing with reference to the work at Djemâa Sahridj, Miss Smith says that some of the comrades are getting situations with Christian residents, thus making room for others on the mission station. The new mission-hall is finished, though not quite paid for. It is called "Akham Tezallith," the House of Prayer.

Miss Smith adds:—"Now that the fine weather is setting in, we are visiting the surrounding villages. Some of the lads who remain with us are finding strength to testify to Jesus as their Saviour. Our women's class is large and very encouraging. The little girls who come to us are learning well. We are especially praying for the mothers of the converts, whom we visit frequently."

The Bible in Korea and Japan.—At the monthly meeting, a few days ago, of the Western Board of Directors of the National Bible Society of Scotland, it was reported that the Executive Bible Committee of Missionaries in Korea hope to complete the issue of the Revised New Testament in the course of the present year. The United Bible Societies' Committee of Japan issued last year 2557 Bibles, 12,222 Testaments, and 43,034 portions. The Geneva Society reported sales on behalf of the Bible Society during the past winter, by sixty-one colporteurs and others, of 19,229 Scriptures.

Deacon Abraham and the Nestorians.

IN a letter dated March 9, 1898, Deacon Abraham says: "We are very busy with our work for orphans, the work that the good Lord ordered me to undertake now eighteen years ago, the fruit of our visit to England 1875 to 1876. In his help I have carried on the work in the midst of many troubles, needs, and scarcity, and have only been absent two years, in 1884 and 1885, when I paid another visit to England for the sake of the work. In what the Lord has done for us we are satisfied and thankful. I have learned that the trials have been used for us, and can testify that I have seen the Lord's presence more in our darkest days. When friends have been absent the Lord has been near. He has helped us to help many poor destitute children. About 300 young men and women have gone out from our Orphanage; many are doing good in the world for God, themselves, and others.

"I believe that in England you have realised that work for the children and destitute is a very heavy one, but still a very sweet one. At present we have from fifty to sixty, and we are a company of seventy souls, including teachers. We have daily prayers in the orphanage. With our we number often 100 souls and more in the morning service. Some days ago eleven of our children partook of the Lord's Supper for the first time. Our orphans are mostly poor Kurdistan mountain people, and when they come here hardly know a word of prayer. They learn how to pray and read, and how glad they are when they possess a New Testament! On each Sunday morning we mention in the service the names of friends; and we believe the Lord hears our poor prayers. We trust our English friends also remember us in their prayers. The Orphanage has been established by their means. We hope that new and old friends will come forward, helping us to fight the Lord's battles.

"Our Nestorian country people are poor and under oppression. Many travel, in great danger, to Russia, as a rule to work for their families, and return in the autumn. Thus many pass their lives in going and coming on foot. The journey from here to Tiflis takes twenty days. Our people are not accustomed to help such work as ours; some think we are rich, and that all I wish for comes from England. We have no rich and philanthropic people to help us. Especially for the last three or four years our people in Kurdistan have been their homes have been desolated, they have fled from their native land and beautiful places, and have made Oroomiah their place of refuge. While some years ago many of them were well off, with fields, cattle, sheep, etc., now they are covered with rags, wandering from village to village to obtain a piece of bread—walking in the snow with bleeding feet!

"Many are starving, dying from hunger and cold. They do burn our hearts. Considerable relief was sent to them last year from England, but this year very little has come. They are so many that often when we wish to help one we cannot do it, for the others press on us. Our Orphanage yard has not been empty from them through all the winter. Sometimes from 100 to 200 or more gather round us; it is not easy to shut our doors and gates. We have a stable for buffaloes which is very warm in winter, and when we permit the refugees to enter this for the night they take it as a grand treat. We are obliged to give each a loaf of bread. Six weeks ago we served out the last relief, and though they come to us now they have to return empty.

I OFTEN HIDE MYSELF

from them; after looking at them in that wretched state, it seems they must die. There is no other place where they can obtain relief. There are 100 destitute and orphan children which we are not able to take. We do not despair that the Lord will still help us to help them.

"It is very hard to deal with these poor people, and difficult to read and preach to them. It is very sweet when I can help them. I hold prayer with them, and, oh, how attentive they are, how they listen to the Word of God! No doubt, many have been brought near to the faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. I used to go to the villages around for preaching, but this winter I have not been able, for these poor refugees surround me when I go. £1 will keep a family of ten souls, not to die, with dry bread, and £6 will keep an orphan in our school for a year. I feel it my duty to inform Christian friends of the state of our people especially."

The treasurer of the work in Great Britain is Mr. H. Tasker, Brookside, Andover, Hants.

The Figueras Mission.

IN the latest "Letter from Spain" the following extract from a Spanish evangelist's journal is given as showing that Rome's hatred to the Gospel is unchanged:—

"The priests have cursed me from their altars, the result of which was soon manifested. As the workmen were unloading my furniture, which had arrived from Figueras, the curiosity of the neighbours was awakened, and they asked the men who I was. One of them, in the simplicity of his heart, replied that I was one of the Figueras evangelists. Such is the fanaticism in this city that the information was at once conveyed to the dean of the Cathedral and the rector of the parish. In a few days both these dignitaries presented themselves in my landlord's house, to inquire if he knew who we were. He answered in the affirmative, adding that whilst we paid the rent and behaved respectably it would not be right to turn us out. The gentlemen were far from satisfied with this reply, and afterwards sent a message to the landlord saying that if he retained us he would repent it; also that he would do well to remember that he had a flourishing business to lose, which, unless he carried out their wish, would soon become paralysed, and he a ruined man. And so it came to pass. My poor landlord soon found that his customers fell off, and he knows well the source of the evil. In consequence of his loss of trade he has been obliged to sell his house. The new owner is a strong Carlist, and his son is a priest, so, of course, he gave us notice to quit."

Still good seed continues to be sown in remote districts and in dark cities; and many evidences are forthcoming that this work is telling. Numbers of the young converts have to suffer the loss of all things, but their patient endurance has been the means of touching others.

The medical mission branch has also been much owned of God. Spaniards are very responsive to kindness, and the most fanatical Romanist yields to the potent touch of practical sympathy.

Both help and helpers are much needed by Pastor and Mrs. Lopez-Rodriguez, whose address is Figueras, Gerona, Spain.

Among Unevangelised Africans.

AN arduous and eventful journey has been completed by Messrs. Campbell and George from Swena, Garenganze country, to Kavungu, Lovale country, through an unevangelised region. As illustrating the way the Gospel was spread among these ignorant Central Africans, we quote the following from a description given in Echoes of Service:—

"The message of mercy was sounded out in passing the villages, and also to the caravan in the evening. The great Lufira plains were covered with tender grass and alive with game, so the men were supplied with meat. The people around Mountain View, near the old Garenganze capital, listened to the story that they had doubtless heard in earlier days during Msidi's reign. One village had been deserted, the soldiers of the State having plundered it; they have a worse name and are more dreaded than Msidi's hordes. Further on the Sanga people gave a respectful hearing. Two Zeke chiefs in Sanga-land, Nkuva and Meutaka, were passed, and also many villages and peopled caves, with no one to tell of Him who is mighty to save. Three years ago Mr. Campbell had passed this way, but knew not the language, and was glad now to be able to pay some old debts. A Sanga chief, Lumbwe, has two large caves, into which his frightened people ran helter-skelter, with mats, pots, and babies, though they had been apprised of the coming of the caravan. As soon as Mr. Campbell was recognised they emerged again. The caves were inspected, and the people listened well to the Gospel. More caves were passed further on, and at one place there was a blind chief, Mwerwa, who gave the travellers a warm reception."

Another Priest Speaks.

STILL another French priest has spoken for spiritual freedom, and acted accordingly. This time it is M. l'Abbé Bourdery, curé of Marolles, in the diocese of Beauvais; and, like others who have come into Gospel light, he has written a letter to his Bishop, renouncing the errors of the Roman Church and giving up his charge.

After remarking that he entered the priesthood under a sincere sense of vocation, and in the belief that Roman Catholicism was the religion of Christ, he writes: "After a long and serious study of the dogmas and institutions of the Church, I have been compelled to recognise that I was no longer a Catholic, and that I was no longer able to remain a priest."

Abbé Bourdery, in formally retiring from his charge, remarks that his entire sacerdotal life has been spent in spreading and developing a Christian feeling and consciousness in the souls of the people; and he adds that it is in order to continue this work that he is separating from a Church which though Catholic is not Christian. He continues: "May the Son of God, who has revealed Himself to my heart, so eager for truth and life, deign to console those whom I leave. Later on they will understand to what serious convictions I have now rendered obedience."

The ex-priest refers to the oppressive rule of the Church of Rome, contrasting its social organisation with Christian liberty. He concludes: "May the Son of God comfort me, and be my help! The separation which I now effect has not been unattended with a sad breaking of ties and painful sacrifices. But duty belongs to man, the future to God. Since I have loyally and simply done my duty, I have confidence in God, who is Master of the future."

It is said that M. Bourdery belongs to a family that is intensely loyal to the Romish Church. This has made his bold act specially difficult. The Christianisme, which gives his letter, thinks that the ex-priest intends to study with a view to the Evangelical ministry.

Marseilles Sailors' Home and Institute.

THE result of our past year's work has been very encouraging, and we were able to help 517 seamen with food and lodging, most of whom were destitute or discharged from hospital. A gift of £50 from a friend enabled us to extend our operations by the opening of a reading-room and five new bedrooms for officers, with one large room which serves as a sick bay. Already five poor fellows have been inmates, while four still occupy beds, and are under the doctor's care. We are praying for guidance as to the wisdom of opening a small hospital for our poor seamen, as it is badly needed—already four doctors have offered their services gratuitously.

This winter we have been very much encouraged by the increased numbers attending our meetings. The Gospel meetings are made attractive with Sankey's hymns, accompanied by a flute, organ, and violin. The reading-rooms have been well used, and the literature in bags and the libraries in boxes have been much appreciated. The ships and hospitals have been regularly visited, and many have been the tokens for good that we have observed. (Capt.) A. Walker, C.A.

Palestine.—In a graphic account of travel in the Holy Land, which Dr. Smith, of Edinburgh, contributed to the Scotsman, he says:—"The prevailing impression regarding Palestine, that it is a bare, poverty-stricken land, is far from correct. It is true that there are wide tracts of limestone hills, which seem to us very sterile. But by a system of terracing even they may be made to bear a rich harvest of vines, olives, and figs. As we travel north the valleys become richer and richer; and then there are the great plains of Sharon, Esdraelon, and the Jordan valley, not to speak of the Haman district, which, even with the primitive modes of tillage employed, yield abundant harvests, and which cultivated according to modern ideas could support a population many times larger than that which for centuries has possessed the land. Palestine has a future before it, and we devoutly hope that, by a system of railways and in other ways, encouragement may be given to national enterprise."

Our Daily Homily

SUNDAY, April 24.

"John did no miracle, but all things whatsoever John spake of this Man were true; and many believed on Him there."—John x. 41-42.

THIS is full of rare interest and beauty. John the Baptist had been dead some two years at least, and the memory of good men is apt quickly to pass from the minds of their contemporaries, especially when they are eclipsed by some greater successor. Who thinks of the morning star when the sun has risen! But as the crowds came back again on the spot so closely identified with Christ's forerunner he was recalled to mind, and they used of him the words ascribed to them in our text.

Your life may be without miracle.—It may pass on with nothing to distinguish it above the lives of myriads around. There is no sensation-making note in your voice, no extraordinary intellectual calibre in your mind, no aptitude for wielding vast influence over the crowds. The years pass on with even monotony. The dead levels of your life are not broken by a single mountain, or even hill.

But mind you speak true words of Jesus Christ.—Point to Him and say, Behold the Lamb of God. Say of Him, This is He that baptizeth with the Holy Ghost. Announce Him as the Bridegroom, and be content to be the Bridegroom's friend. Say that He has his winnowing-fan and axe in hand. Be careless what men think of your accent, your gestures, your way of stating the truth, but go on bearing witness to what you have known, tasted, and handled of the Word of Life.

After your death, your words may come to mind again, and be the means of bringing souls to the Lamb of God.

MONDAY, April 25.

"Jesus saith unto her, Said I not unto thee, that, if thou believedst thou shouldest see the glory of God?"—John xi. 40 (R.V.).

Yes, we shall see the glory of God. We shall see the graves give up their dead, not only at the last day, but now. Thousands around us are dead in trespasses and sins, in which they walk according to the course of this world. Alas! more than this, they stink in the putridity of their lives and speech. Around their graves gather their friends and relatives, bathed in tears, but unable so arrest the progress of decay. But if we will believe we shall see the glory of God.

But how shall we believe for this? It seems easy for some to believe. The Marys who sit at the Lord's feet, feeding on his words, find the life and light of faith in his beloved presence. But others, like Martha, are distracted with so many things that faith seems impossible. And this is the very point where this story is so abundantly helpful. Jesus must have the co-operation and sympathy of someone's faith, before this miracle could be wrought—and these He found, not in Mary, as we might have expected, but in Martha, the harassed housewife.

In educating Martha to this stupendous act of faith, (1) the Lord gave her a distinct promise: "Thy brother shall rise again." (2) He drew her attention from his words to Himself, who lay beneath and behind them: "I am the Resurrection and the Life." (3) He forced her to confess her faith. To express it would confirm and increase it: "Believest thou this?" (4) He compelled her to act on the faith He had created, by allowing the bystanders to remove the stone. She believed, and in her faith gave the Lord the pivot on which his leverage might rest.

TUESDAY, April 26.

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except a grain of wheat fall into the earth and die, it abideth by itself alone; but if it die, it beareth much fruit."—John xii. 24 (R.V.).

The East came to the cradle, the West to the Cross. Sunrise becomes the Orient, sunset the Occident wave. These were not Hellenist Jews, but pure-blooded Greeks, whose life and philosophy were in the present, in as much joy as nature, art, and amusement could yield. It was startling to be met with the grave announcement of death. But how wise to send them to read that earliest Divine book of nature. Hear the parable of the corn of wheat.

Its loveliness.—Before sowing it is by itself alone. It lies on the barn floor, beside myriads more, but there is no vital contact between it and them. They are just so many isolated units: as foreign to each other as stars are, between which millions of dividing miles intervene. So if you save your life, nurse it in selfishness, dread and avoid all that savours of self-denial and self-giving, you will be utterly and drearily lonely.

The falling into the ground to die.—The seed-germ cannot bury itself, but it can choose burial. It can be willing for the husbandman to cast it from its warm hiding-place into the cold, dark earth. We may hate our life in this world; we may follow our Saviour; we may place ourselves absolutely at God's disposal for the salvation of others.

The fruit-bearing.—Presently the rootlet shoots downward, the tiny frond upwards, and, almost without knowing it, the stalk begins to blossom and bear fruit, which with every sowing reduplicates itself. Such may your life become if you will let God have his way.

WEDNESDAY, April 27.

"Whither I go, thou canst not follow Me now; but thou shalt follow Me afterwards.... Why cannot I follow Thee now?"—John xiii. 36, 37.

Heaven desired.—We often say it. When the pressure of life seems unbearable, when the door opens just wide enough to admit our dearest and shuts before we can follow, when we want to see Him whom we love, we find ourselves using Peter's words again: "Why not now?" It is not wise or right to let our hearts express themselves thus; yet if we do, our Father knows our frame, and remembers that we are but dust.

Heaven delayed.—"Thou canst not follow Me now." The emphasis is on the cannot. It is as though the Master said, "The hindrance is not in some arbitrary edict of Divine power, but in the infinite knowledge and wisdom that cannot err." Peter was not fit to go. There were lessons of the utmost importance waiting for him to acquire in the near future. He must learn to know himself, and Christ, and the grace of the Holy Spirit. When he proudly vaunted that he would lay down his life for Jesus he gave incontestable evidence that he did not know himself.

Heaven guaranteed. "Thou shalt follow Me afterwards." There could be no doubt about it since Jesus had said it; and often, in after days, these words must have been as a cordial, "Thou shalt follow Me afterwards." But what the Master said to Peter He says to each who believes, Thou shalt follow Me afterwards, "unto fountains of waters of life."

THURSDAY, April 28.

"Believe also in Me,"—John xiv. 1.

Were we less familiar with these words we should be more startled by their immeasurable meaning. One who seems as a man asks all men to give him precisely the same faith and confidence that they give to God. He would not abate his claims for less, though He was the humblest and gentlest of men. And the irresistible conclusion is forced on us, by the impossibility of convicting Him as an impostor or an enthusiast, that He was and knew Himself to be "God manifest in the flesh."

1. Faith in Jesus is the cure of heart-trouble. It is of little use to say "Let not your heart be troubled," unless you can add "Trust Christ." Only if we can trust can we be still. Only if we can shift the responsibility of our life on the care of our never-failing Redeemer can the veiled guest of weeping be exchanged for the radiant face and glad greeting of joy.

2. Faith in Jesus conducts to the knowledge of God. "Believe Me that I am in the Father, and the Father in Me." Philip said, "Show us the Father." Christ answered, "Believe and thou dost behold." The world says, Seeing is believing; Jesus says, Believing is seeing. The true way to know God is, not by arguing about or seeking to verify his existence by intellectual processes, but by obeying the precepts of Jesus, following the footsteps of Jesus, holding fellowship with Jesus.

3. Faith in Jesus will make our lives the channel through which He can work. "He that believeth on Me, the works," etc. (12-14). The Gospels are included in the one clause, the Acts and all the marvels of the following ages in the other. Jesus is always the worker, but as the members of his mortal body were his medium once, so now are the members of the spiritual body; and the man who yields himself most utterly to Him in obedience and faith will become the channel through which He will work most mightily.

FRIDAY, April 29.

"Abide in Me, and I in you."—John xv. 4.

The unity between the Lord and his members is beautifully set forth in this exquisite parable. In certain conservatories the pliant branches are trained along roof or wall for vast distances, yet one life pervades the whole plant from the rugged root to the furthest twig and leaf and cluster. Thus there is one holy life pervading all who have belonged, or shall belong, to Jesus. They live because He lives. His life is theirs.

We are in Christ by grace, but we need to realise and accentuate the union by meditation and prayer. Waiting more absolutely for his impulses in intercession and action. Being silent for Him to speak. Drawing on Him by the constant appeal of faith, which becomes as natural as breathing. Looking away to Him for his commendation. Seeking only his verdict on what may have been said and done.

We are in Christ for ever so far as our standing is concerned, but we may be "taken away" so far as our opportunities of ministry are concerned. How many of us have failed to be what He desired, and He has had to bestow elsewhere the luxury of ministering to Him!

We are in Christ, not because we hold Him, but because He holds us; therefore we must expect the Father's pruning. Yet do not dread the knife. It is his Word, wielded by a Father's hand; and if we will yield to the golden pruning-knife of the word we shall escape the iron one of sorrow.

SATURDAY, April 30.

"In that day,"—John xvi. 23, 26.

Thrice in these closing words the Master refers to that day (see John xiv. 20). Without doubt He refers to the day of Pentecost, and the era it would introduce.

The Holy Spirit reveals the relation between the Father and the Son (xiv. 20). And this not as a matter of speculation merely, but for our holy living. The model of our union with Jesus is his union with the Father. As He is in his Father in perpetual and most blessed union, so are we to be in Him.

The Holy Spirit's presence answers our questions. "Ye shall ask Me no questions" (xvi. 23). Whilst the Lord was with them they were constantly breaking in on Him with their questions: "Lord, are there few that be saved?" "Wilt Thou at this time restore the kingdom?" "When shall these things be?" This is always the symptom of the earliest stage of the religious life, perpetual questioning and worrying. But when the Spirit comes, his presence is the sufficient answer.

The Holy Spirit's indwelling teaches us how to pray. "In that day ye shall ask in my name" (xvi. 26). Name is nature; to pray in Christ's name, is to let His nature pray in and through our lips. Of course such prayer prevails, because God recognises it as identical with the nature and intercession of his well-beloved Son. The one condition of successful prayer is to bring yourself into a line with the thoughts of God, to breathe his spirit, to be swayed by his impulses; this is only possible through the gracious operation of the Spirit of God. Has the blessed day of Pentecost broken upon you? Do you live in its light?

How the Light Came to Me.

A PERSONAL TESTIMONY.

By Rev. JOHN McNEILL.

I REMEMBER it was like this. I was a young fellow, a booking-clerk, about seventeen or eighteen years old. I cannot say I was terribly anxious. That is where some of you make a mistake; you think that unless you are in a terrible state of anxiety about your sins you are not ripe for being saved. Don't you raise difficulties and put conditions where God has put none: "Him that cometh unto me, I will in no wise cast out." Don't be working up something; let yourself alone. You must come as you are; you could not come as you are not.

I knew my Bible well, and the Shorter Catechism; I could say it in my sleep—can say it yet. But our Scottish Shorter Catechism is just the Bible boiled down. Justification by faith, effectual calling, the work of Christ, and so forth—I knew it all by heart, and the proof-texts; but I was as blind as a bat to it all: I had no light and no peace. I remember I just wanted to know what it was to be saved; though, as I say, I was not very anxious, or in a state about my sins. I knew that I was getting a year older, a year harder and colder, and nearer to sin and wickedness; although I had had no outward career of cursing or swearing, or drinking or badness. But I was honest enough to feel in my heart that I was not saved in God's sight. It is a great matter when God saves you from being a self-righteous Pharisee, even though as yet true salvation has not come.

I wanted to get into the light, but I never could have stayed to an after-meeting; so I can sympathise with the people who, when a second meeting is mentioned, just bolt as if the police were after them. I was then staying all through the week in the old town of Greenock. Every Saturday night I walked to our quiet village to spend the Sabbath at home with father and mother and the rest of them. I could never have spoken about my soul to the minister. But the minister's son and I were great chums. Although I was only a quarryman's son, my father belonged to the spiritual aristocracy, and it was no degradation for the minister's son and quarryman's son to "hunt in couples." We used to talk together, as young fellows will talk, about sweethearts and a lot of other things; we also talked about something that was not settled, but we felt the time was ripe for settlement about becoming a true Christian.

We agreed we would try to find out, and I remember one evening I wrote to my minister from the booking-office. I said something like this: "I cannot say I am greatly anxious, but I do feel I ought to decide. If I do not decide for Christ, the world won't allow me to be half-hearted." And it won't. You will have to decide one way or the other. I was very full of knowledge of the Bible, as I thought, and I fancied the difficulty was in the Bible, not in me. So I said to the minister, "I will give you a text (Acts xvi. 31), which says, 'Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved.' I believe in Jesus Christ. I am no atheist or blasphemer. I believe all about Him, but I do not feel one bit the better for it." And I sent away the letter with the kind of notion that I had given the minister a poser.

Two or three days passed. I remember I was at the booking-office third-class window—I never go to a railway-station but I think of it. I was just about flinging up the window to serve tickets for the sugar-brokers' train to Glasgow at 10.30, when the postman came round and gave me a letter. I looked at the letter and saw from the postmark that it was from my minister; I knew it was an answer to mine. I tore it open and read something like this, and it was a sort of prophecy:—

"My dear John, you will never know, unless you become a minister yourself" (I had no more idea then of such a thing than that lad down there probably has) "how glad I am to get such a frank letter from you about salvation, although you may be still in the dark as yet! I am glad you have fastened on a text. It is a good one, and I will join controversy with you there. You say you believe all about Jesus Christ, but you do not feel a bit the better. Now, I put it in this way: Which am I to believe?—you who, after consulting with your feelings, pronounce your own verdict on yourself and say you cannot be saved because you do not feel any the better? Or am I to believe God speaking in his Word and pronouncing his verdict, and saying that if you believe in Christ as you say you do, you are saved, and you will be saved for ever and ever?"

This way of putting it, dear friends, may do nothing for you; but to me it was just like lifting a curtain. I saw the whole thing on its human side. It was not feeling—it was believing; trusting Jesus, no matter what I felt or did not feel. And the minister clenched it by saying: "Besides, John, I am surprised that a lad of your education and upbringing should quote Scripture so badly. It is not, 'Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and you will never feel a bit the better for it.'" That took me down a great many pegs. Why, I saw that I was not really believing in Christ at all; I was knocking the Bible end-ways. I was believing in myself—in my own heart. And the Scripture says: "He that trusteth in his own heart is a"—philosopher? No—"is a fool." And philosopher often is just fool, writ large.

Do you see it now? That is how it came to me. I had no great feelings; I did not shout Hallelujah! for I am a Presbyterian, and they are not of the shouting kind. But I saw what it is to trust in Jesus and be saved, just as you are, immediately, without any feelings up or down. I went out and took a walk along the platform. I thought I would not fling up the ticket-office window just yet. It was my first walk in the light of salvation. And, do you know, it made this difference: I had taken that walk along the length of the platform times and times every day; but that morning I remember saying to myself: "Has the place been whitewashed?" The very dingy, dirty, smoky old bricks looked whiter; it actually seemed as if there had been a cleaning going on there; it does make a difference!

> The common air, the earth, the skies,
> To me were opening Paradise.

That is all there was about it. Except this: for we are queer creatures—George, my companion, the minister's son, was also seeking salvation. Mr. Moody came along to Glasgow. George wrote to me, and said: "I have been to Moody's meetings, and I am just where I was; I have no light." When I read that from George—would you believe it?—I went back into the dark again. I said to myself, "This cannot be real. There is Geordie, a sharp fellow, and the minister's son; I doubt I am wrong after all." I actually turned away back into the dark out of sympathy with Geordie. Twenty-four hours later there came another letter from Geordie. Ho! it was nearly fizzling in my fingers. I opened it and read. He had been at another meeting. Mr. Moody had pushed the young men up in a corner with a kind of rush and rally, and shut them up to Christ; and Geordie was full of it. "Man, John," he said, "don't you see it is not your feelings; it is simply taking Christ at his word."

Next day we met, and George was full of it again. "John, don't you see it?" "Man," said I, "I saw that before you did; but because you could not see it I thought I was wrong." And we rejoiced together. I was telling him about it when I met him lately in Brooklyn, where he lives. My old minister is gone now. Two years ago the son and I were both back in Scotland. The minister died, and my old companion and I met when laying his father's dust in the grave in the quiet old village. I believe God arranged it so.

Now, will you trust Him? Look to Jesus, for He does save. Years have passed since then, and all I have been doing has been simply still looking and trusting. I have had feelings and convictions of sin—aye, deeper convictions since I was converted than before.

Do not look in wrong directions. I had one battle—just one—the next morning. I woke up, of course, the same old fellow. I had to go back to the booking-office to meet the other clerks and temptations of different kinds. And I was as cold as ice again, as if I had slept it all off. I said: "It has been mere excitement. Here you are, as flat as a flounder! There is nothing in it." Where I rallied was here. I said to myself in my misery and wretchedness next morning, and thinking it was all a delusion: "Now, through the night? Has Acts xvi. 31 altered? No! Has the value of the finished work of Christ altered, or the worth of his blood and righteousness and intercession? No! Then nothing has altered on which you were relying and trusting; it is only your feelings that have altered; and you are not saved by that. You are saved through faith in Christ." Dear men and women, get over the bar of feeling and into the harbour. Trust in Jesus.

HAS THE BIBLE ALTERED

Mr. McNeill in London.

THE AGRICULTURAL HALL.

LAST Sabbath saw the opening of Mr. McNeill's sixth sectional mission in London, and the last of his present Gospel campaign. Those who have followed our weekly records of the work are aware that a large measure of success has attended this special effort, so far at any rate as numbers go. It has been shown very abundantly that men and women of all classes in our great community are attracted by the earnest preaching of the old Evangelical Gospel. If it were needed, a crowning proof of this was afforded by the great gathering on Sunday evening, when ten thousand persons were assembled under the roof of the Agricultural Hall, Islington, several thousands in addition having been turned away for want of seating room. It was a marvellous spectacle. Sluggish, indeed, must be the soul that could witness it without a thrill of thankful joy.

Comparisons or contrasts in connection with Gospel work are peculiarly out of taste. The conditions of time and place and organisation are so varied that no proper data for such comparisons are available. Some of us cannot recall without emotion the Agricultural Hall meetings of 1875. These were heralded by a lengthened period of preparatory effort, as well as by the expectant curiosity that marked the first mission in London by Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey. This time the interval for organising has been brief, and the evangelist has for years been one of ourselves. Without instituting, therefore, any sort of comparative appraisement, we gratefully record the fact that immense public interest has been awakened; and we look upon it as the harbinger of a season of real spiritual revival throughout the great Northern district of London.

Mr. McNeill must have taken heart of grace when he stepped on the platform at eight o'clock on Sunday morning and found a congregation of nearly 3000 massed in front of him. Presumably they were to a large extent Christian workers who had come from many points of the compass and varying distances, at that early hour, to show sympathy with the mission, and to get a spiritual lift. The evangelist discoursed on the lessons derivable from the incident of the fall of Jericho. He urged his fellow Christians to unfaltering faith in the victory of Christ's cause and kingdom, cautioned them against premature elation, and enjoined unity in sympathy and endeavour in order to obtain success. These points were amplified in Mr. McNeill's graphic and happy fashion. At the regular hour for forenoon service he preached to a large congregation in Highbury Park Presbyterian Church.

From the opening of the doors of the great hall in Upper-street on Sunday evening a steady stream of people flocked in, and the great spaces were quickly filled up. The monster auditorium has been skilfully arranged and seated for 10,000 people, so that all can see and hear. The platform is erected on the eastern side of the arena, and by the aid of a large sounding board the speaker's voice is well heard throughout. The choir of 500 is ranged on the first gallery behind the platform, and it did good service in leading the praise. By seven o'clock the vast area and all the galleries were virtually full, and there seemed scarcely a vacant seat when the hour of service arrived. The County Council have imposed stringent rules against allowing people to stand in the aisles or under the great galleries, and so the doors had to be closed, though, as we have intimated, that excluded several thousands who desired admission.

Letting the mind go back, one could not but think regretfully of the many forms and faces that were familiar on the platform and elsewhere twenty-four years ago, and of whom very few now remain with us. Mr. McNeill had a note of reminiscence in his prayer when he thankfully recalled how in past times the presence and power of God had been felt within these walls. "There are souls with Thee now in glory who first met the Saviour here; repeat thy former mercies even more abundantly." But if many who rallied around our two American brethren, in the days of old, have now joined the great majority, there are not wanting sympathisers with such work still. Among those around the evangelist on the platform we noticed Lord Overtoun, Rev. Robt. Balgarnie and Mr. C. Russell Hurditch (both of them veterans in the ranks of evangelism), Lady Hope, Mr. T. A. Denny, Dr. Barnardo, Colonel Morton, and other friends. Lord Overtoun led in the opening prayer.

Any doubts as to whether the speaker's voice would carry to the furthest corners of the hall were speedily solved by the quick responses that passed over the entire congregation, like breeze-blown ripples on a calm pond, when Mr. McNeill made a specially interesting point in his announcements or in the sermon. No one need stay away from the meetings for fear they cannot hear or see. The subject of discourse was Psalm cxix. 59, 60, a favourite one with the preacher at the opening of a mission. For fifty-five minutes he pressed home on his eagerly attentive audience the necessity of such spiritual thoughtfulness as would lead to an immediate turning of the soul and the life from the world and sin to God and salvation. Though familiar to constant attenders on the evangelist's ministry, the message is one of great cogency and power, and by its plainness of utterance well fitted to arouse concern in the most apathetic. After the closing prayer the vast company melted away, and the hopeful proceedings of the opening day were over.

Monday is always a slack time in Gospel work, and no one expected to see a repetition of Sunday evening's crowd. But there must have been quite six thousand people in the hall, and to these Mr. McNeill preached with powerful impressiveness from the old message to the Church at Laodicea—Christ knocking at the door. The great audience seemed as one man in drinking in the urgent exhortation to give Jesus Christ his proper place in heart and life. Many brother ministers were assembled on the platform, and to these also the evangelist had some straight and needful things to say.

Rev. John McNeill's London Mission.
Agricultural Hall, Islington, N.—Each week evening (except Saturday) to May 6, at 7.30 p.m., Sundays at 7 p.m.

Hausaland.—Good news has been received from Dr. Walter Miller from Sierra Leone, where he is spending six months at the Princess Christian Cottage Hospital. A Christian medical man is needed to take up the work there when Dr. Miller leaves very shortly. It seems probable that any new recruits for Hausa work may have the opportunity of a short time of study in Tripoli, North Africa, before going to the Niger. The advantage of this can hardly be over estimated, for if opportunities exist in Tripoli for making a good start with Hausa it will be of the greatest advantage.

THE LATE

Rev. H. M. Dyke.

MANY will hear with sorrow of the death of one who for upwards of half a century has been engaged in educational and Gospel work in South Africa, for the greater part of that time in connection with the well-known mission in Basutoland of the Paris Society of Evangelical Missions.

Hamilton Moore Dyke was born in Bayswater in 1817, being the eldest son of Richard and Sarah Dyke, who left England in 1822, and settled in Cape Town. Having passed his youth in schools in the old land, the young man took the three months' voyage to the Cape in 1832. In the meantime his father had died, and his mother had married Mr. D. Williams, a man of strong business habits, who did his best to develop the energies of a numerous family. After completing his educational course for a commercial career, Hamilton had his opportunity with the rest in the neighbourhood of Cape Town, but other purposes were seriously engaging his heart. Around him was a mixed multitude of neglected races, and having become a member of the Congregational Church (Union Chapel), Cape Town, under the pastoral care of Dr. Philip, he found it increasingly difficult to give his attention exclusively to temporal affairs.

Dr. Philip was not only a man of great personal influence, but also an enthusiastic worker for the enlightenment of the natives He had done much to promote the emancipation of slaves, and on this account was persecuted by the slave owners of South Africa. In season and out of season he advocated the cause of missions to the heathen, and was for many years director of the L.M.S. in South Africa. It is unnecessary to say that, on taking Dr. Philip into his confidence, Mr. Dyke was greatly encouraged in his missionary aspirations and desires to serve God among the benighted and oppressed tribes of Africa. While the young man waited in a prayerful spirit for the way to open events happened which gave clear indications of God's will and purpose.

One of these was the arrival of two bands of missionaries from America, into whose society Mr. Dyke was much thrown, to his great joy and blessing. In due course he obtained from some of them letters of introduction to the Mission Board at Boston, with the hope of entering a training establishment in order to qualify for work under American auspices. Another occurrence that threw light on his path was the marriage, in 1836, of his sister Sarah to Pastor Eugène Casalis, who had arrived from Paris as one of a mission party to Basutoland. She wrote to her brother, asking him to visit the mission field, and see whether Basutoland would not provide him a suitable sphere of work. In the meantime the young man had been occupied in educational work among the natives at Papendorp, near Capetown, under the auspices of the L.M.S. He was pleased to find that the children of white settlers and residents attended school, as well as the children of coloured people. The work was congenial, and allowed of study by way of preparation for mission effort of a more definite character, for which his soul hungered.

The mission in Basutoland had but recently been founded, but wise men were at the head of its affairs, and it grew marvellously in institutions, although not, at first, so rapidly in converts. A wave of missionary enthusiasm swept over the Reformed churches of France in 1830; hence this mission. As at that time French Protestants were not allowed to establish missions in their own colonies, a field had to be sought that was not under the protection of any European Power. Dr. Philip appealed for the land of Chief Moshesh, and the result was the Basuto Mission, the founders of which were MM. Casalis, Arbousset, and Gossellin. Right well did these good men and their excellent colleagues of later days plant, for there are now some fourteen thousand natives on the church roll, and half as many children in the day-schools. Moreover, men trained at the mission schools in Basutoland are preaching the Gospel in the Cape Colony, Orange Free State, Transvaal, Mashonaland, Bechuanaland, Delagoa Bay, and even to the Barotsi north of the Zambezi.*

Invited to view the land, Mr. Dyke made the subject a matter of earnest prayer, and after some delay embraced an opportunity to proceed up country. That was in 1839; and, arrived on the spot, he determined to stay and do the work, first of catechist, and later of pastor, in connection with the many churches of the mission. The educational institutions were his special concern, and he was delighted to be able, at length, to report quite phenomenal success. Who shall question the reality of his encouragement when, as in 1896, he was able to write:—

> In May last we presented twenty-two of our pupils at the Cape University elementary examinations, and of these twenty passed—ten in honours, nine in Class II., and one in Class III. Our two failures were but a small percentage in comparison with other schools. No native institution had more than four in honours, and only three European colleges in South Africa have more than ten. Another cheering event has taken place by fifteen of our pupils being added to the church, and three others will be received at an out-station to which they belong.

In joy and sorrow, year after year, our friend laboured unceasingly, and at length his son (Rev. R. Henry Dyke) entered into the same blessed service. The mission has long been an oasis in a desert land; but, all the same, there is the desert land all around. Into remote regions the workers and converts have penetrated, and have been greatly cheered, although far from satisfied, with the results of their toils. With advancing years Mr. Dyke's time of rest came, and with this the partings that are inseparable from the present life. Last year Mrs. Dyke, a devoted helpmeet of many years, departed. Now from Morija, into the country for miles around, the sad news has travelled that the aged and honoured worker himself has "gone in to see the King."

* Deeply interesting particulars of the work are given in a small book, The Switzerland of South Africa, by Rev. R. Henry Dyke (son of the lamented missionary). The pages are bright with facts and illustrations. (1s. and 1s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.)

Though physically weak, Mr. Dyke had for a good while enjoyed a measure of comfort, but recently he sustained an injury to one of his legs, which necessitated careful nursing for some weeks. He never recovered strength, however, but fell asleep on March 13, in the eighty-first year of his age. His last days were happy, being spent, so far as consciousness allowed, in praise to God and a joyous confidence of seeing his face. He made his boast in Christ; to Him in days of health he committed his soul in well-doing, and in hours of sorrow and trial he had no other desire or care. Men of such a humble mind, and characterised by such hearty diligence in Christian work, are a blessed gift of the Lord to his Church, and we pray that their number may be greatly multiplied.

Buried in the Country.—II.

My first round of visits taught me that patience and love would have to be the chief levers of our work in the village. The women I visited were dull and apathetic, and difficult to rouse to the least enthusiasm. They stared sleepily at me as I explained my visit, eyeing the newcomer in a doubtful way, and not apparently over pleased to be jogged out of their ruts. But if for an instant I felt discouraged, the cornfields all round preached patience, and the lesson that for growth of any sort time is needed. And with patience much love. That, too, I learned, chiefly perhaps from one woman; she was rough and coarse, and noisy, and seemed angry at my intrusion.

Evidently she had had a hard struggle to make both ends meet, and naturally as I learned this I made some commonplace, kind remarks in the way of comfort. Not easily shall I forget the way in which that hard-featured woman turned on me with a fierce gesture of impatience. "Don't talk kind to me—don't talk kind," she repeated. "If you do I shall cry; I'm tough, and I can go on if I don't think, so

DON'T YOU GO AND TALK KIND."

Ah, what will not love do, what will it not break down!

"I am thinking of starting a woman's 'at home,' will you come to it? I have come to live here, and I should like to know my neighbours, especially my sister women—for we are all sisters, aren't we?" I added, as a blank stare of surprise greeted my invitation, on the face of nearly every woman to whom I gave it. "I don't mind," or "I'll see about it," were the replies generally given, but in three cases I was cheered by a genuinely hearty response. "Yes, miss, I will. I'm right glad someone 'as come as will do summat for us women, for it's allus the men as gets them societies, they does. We ain't had no mothers' meetin' here." Altogether, as I counted up my visits and invitations, I found six had partially promised to be my guests on the next Monday, and three had heartily responded.

My brother and I both felt we were right in beginning our work in a small and quiet way, and by some little class that would not frighten the people into thinking that "them London folks were turning the village upside down with their new-fangled notions." Also I believed, and I believe it even more firmly to-day, that the key to the position is the woman. Once get a firm hold in the heart of the wife and mother of the family, and you have a wedge that is irresistible. "Is your husband a Christian?" I once asked a little woman, who by force of character kept things going in a poor home. "I've made him so," was her triumphant reply. "I've taught and taught him till he is." We smile at this notion of forcible conversion, somewhat on the lines of the conversion of the petty kings and peoples of Britain. But there is, for all that, a residuum of truth in what the woman said, in that she realised her influence in the home, and having grasped truth for herself strove to make others grasp it.

When the next Monday—the day of our first meeting—came, down came also the rain in pouring torrents, and at half-past two, when I expected the women, there was not the slightest sign of its clearing. So I was not disappointed when only three dripping figures presented themselves and informed the maidservant they had come to "the meeting." Three—out of, I suppose, about one hundred possible members, considering the population of the place was 500. Sitting with those three that first day I told myself, and I told them, that we must never rest till our class came very near to the limits of the population, and till we had, at any rate, made an effort to reach every woman in the village and bring her to Christ. And the three present, the pioneers, and myself then and there formed ourselves into a sort of committee to arrive at this end. One of the mothers I discovered was an earnest Christian. Of the others I could not feel certain; but to know of one, and feel sure that she would back up any efforts on my part in this work, was a great encouragement. And may I say here that in all mothers' meetings it seems to me there should invariably be of women pledged to pray together and work together for the whole class. Not that this inner band should be allowed for one instant to feel that they are the select few up here, and the others are "down there." There is always a danger of this feeling being aroused, and it must be carefully watched against. They must not be petted, or specially considered, rather in all gatherings they must be shown that it is for service they are chosen, and that they, if any, are expected to take the back seats. Again, it sometimes happens that a woman who calls herself a worker will get to fancy she must take an active part in every prayer meeting, and her voice must be heard whoever else is silent, with the result that the prayers are voiced by a certain set of workers, and no one else takes a part.

I told the women at the onset that, though we should try to spend a happy time together, and to make this one quiet hour in the week a real spiritual help to them, we were all to be fellow-workers together. They would have to work every bit as much as I did, the responsibility was not to rest on me alone; if members stayed from the class, they would have to help in the visiting. Everyone had a share in the "concern." This plan proved in my case a success, and I believe it is one of the secrets of work among women. Make a woman share the responsibility, put her on her mettle, and she will show you how and what she can do in the way of helping, even with all her home calls.

That first day my "at home" was extremely informal. I explained the end I had in view, how we proposed to carry on the class, and, after a cup of tea, my visitors departed. One promise I extracted from the three, and that was that during the week each would do what she could to bring one other woman to the class, and only one. I did not want their energy to be too much dissipated, and by asking them to each find only one they would put more zest into their search. Rus.

Sons of Poor Clergymen. — St. John's Foundation School, Leatherhead, Surrey, is an institution occupying a position peculiarly its own, and has a strong claim upon all who sympathise with the thousands who are devoting their lives to the service of God in the ministry of the Church of England, and for whose temporal necessities very insufficient provision is available. The school provides free education and maintenance for the sons of the poorer clergy. To quote one case among many, the father is a curate in the diocese of Ripon, with an income of £105, and ten children dependent upon him. There are now one hundred and fifty boys on the foundation, which was established in 1852; and during the past year the students have maintained a high standard of scholastic and athletic attainment. Secretary, Rev. Sutton Patterson, 1, The Sanctuary, Westminster Abbey, S.W.

Gathered Gold.

Many are fond of ministers who are not fond of Christ.—McCheyne.

As Thou wilt! What Thou wilt! When Thou wilt!—Thomas à Kempis.

Eternity is a circle, with now for its centre, and always for its circumference.

Love is the law of Christ's kingdom, the lesson of his school, and the livery of his household.

There are two choice mercies: First, to have a broken heart for sin; second, to have a heart broken off from sin.

THE WILL OF GOD.

Thy beautiful, sweet will, my God,
Holds fast in its sublime embrace
My captive will, a gladsome bird,
Prisoned in such a realm of grace.

O sweetest burden, highest yoke,
It lifts, it bears my happy soul,
It giveth wings to this poor heart,
My freedom is thy grand control.
Madame Guyon.

CHRISTIAN NAMES.

Scripture gives four names to Christians, taken from the cardinal graces so essential to men's salvation—"saints," for their holiness; "believers," for their faith; "brethren," for their love; "disciples," for their knowledge.—Fuller.

LIFE'S JOURNEY.

Each true Christian is a right traveller; his life is his walk, Christ his way, and heaven his home. His walk is painful, his way perfect, his home pleasing. I will not loiter, lest I come short of home; I will not wander, lest I come wide of home; I will be content to travel hard, and be sure that I walk right. So shall my safe way find its end at home, and my painful walk make my home welcome.—Warwick.

GIVING TO GOD'S CAUSE.

The giving which is worship must needs be self-denying. Nobody is ever entirely converted when the purse is held in reserve. The disciple who would be as his Master must not hold dearest houses or lands, or father or mother, or wife or children. Still, down from the clear heaven above us, rings the trumpet call, "If any man will be my disciple, he must forsake all, take up his cross, and come and follow Me."—Margaret E. Sangster.

THE HIGHEST WISDOM.

If God be our greatest good, if there can be no good but in his favour nor any evil but in departing from Him, then it is plain that he who judges that the best thing he can do is to please God to the utmost of his power; who worships and adores Him with all his heart and soul; who would rather have a pious mind than all the dignities and honours in the world, shows himself to be in the highest state of human wisdom.—William Law.

INTERCESSION.

I cannot contentedly frame a prayer for myself without a catalogue for my friends, nor request a happiness wherein my sociable disposition does not desire the fellowship of my neighbour. I cannot go to cure the body of my patient without forgetting my profession and calling upon God for his soul. If God hath vouchsafed an ear to my supplications, there are surely many happy that never saw me, and enjoy the blessing of my unknown devotions.—Sir Thomas Browne.

DESTRUCTIVENESS OF DOUBT.

Some of you are always fashioning fresh nets of doubt for your own entanglement. You invent snares for your own feet, and are greedy to lay more and more of them. You are mariners who seek the rocks, soldiers who court the point of the bayonet. It is an unprofitable business. Practically, morally, mentally, spiritually, doubting is an evil trade. You are like a smith wearing out his arm in making chains with which to bind himself. Doubt is sterile, a desert without water. Its progress is the decay of comfort, the death of peace. "Believe" is the word which strikes life into man; but doubt nails down his coffin.—C. H. Spurgeon.

THE VINE AND THE BRANCH.

The one reason for the existence of a branch, the one mark of being a true branch of the Heavenly Vine, the one condition of being allowed by the Divine Husbandman to share the life of the Vine is—bearing fruit. It is because Christians do not understand or accept of this truth that they so fail in their efforts and prayers to live the branch life. They often desire it very earnestly; they read and meditate and pray, and yet they fail—they wonder why! The reason is very simple: they do not know that fruit-bearing is the one thing they have been saved for. Just as entirely as Christ became the True Vine with the one object, you have been made a branch too—with the one object of bearing fruit for the salvation of men.—Dr. Andrew Murray.

Child-Life in London.

I.—SUFFERING CHILDREN.

YOUR friend, Uncle Tom, thinks you would be glad to know something of what is being done for poor children in London, and he has asked me to write now and then about what I have seen. I will begin by telling you of little boys and girls who cannot run about as you do, and who suffer, many of them, great pain. Perhaps you have never thought that in this great big city there are many thousands of poor wee cripples. Many cannot walk at all. Mother must go out to work, for she is very poor, and so the child, who cannot go to school, has to sit or lie all day alone in a dull little room. Some of them tell me they "can hear the children running in the court," and they cry because they can't get out to enjoy the fun.

Well, the Ragged School Union has been trying to help these for some years. It has now nearly 6000 names on its books—think of that, 6000 afflicted, blind, lame, paralysed children! Visitors take a number under their charge, and visit them, talk, read, sing, and do what they can to cheer them. They take them toys, picture-books, and other things to amuse them and pass the weary hours.

A teacher, Miss Smith, goes to those who can learn—many cannot, they are in such pain and distress—and teaches them to read and sing; and you know it is a great pleasure to be able to read when the day is long and dreary. A few learn to make little fancy things.

Some are able to go out, and the R.S.U. has got from kind friends, prams, go-carts, bath-chairs, and invalid carriages for these. Pleasant evenings are held in some little room near their home; and they are always told of the love of Jesus, and many have given Him their hearts. Several Cripples' Parlours have been opened for them, and made as bright as possible. Some friends have sent second-hand pianos, and the children say "it is just beautiful." Many never had a bit of fun in their lives before, and you can guess how they enjoy it. Their sayings are very funny indeed. Some time I may tell you a few of these, they are so quaint.

Care and treatment (suggested often by the visitors) have done many of them good. A little boy came into the parlour the other night shouting, "Look, teacher; look at my back, it's nearly straight now." And a wee girl, who had never walked before, toddled in, calling out, "See me; I can walk now." I have myself found many cases of this kind, after a visit to one of the R.S.U. Cripple Homes.

My own daughter has about thirty to look after. Here are two of them. Blind Willie could not move from his cot, being paralysed as well as blind. As he loved music we gave him a musical box. How it delighted him! A schoolboy, who can play the violin, offered to go and play to him, and oh, how Willie enjoyed it. Dear Willie has gone now from his weariness and pain to the land where there is no more darkness, for Jesus Himself is the light of it.

Florrie, aged six, has a loving mother, but mother has to go out to work, for father is lying very ill. So the poor little one has had to lie in a box all day long, strapped hard in a steel surgical jacket, like a cage. But the bovril and other things taken to her are helping her, and she is actually trying to walk—by the chairs. Some weeks ago her wee legs gave way, and she fell downstairs and hurt herself; but she is better, and is again doing her best to get about the room. Perhaps we will see little Florrie able to walk out yet.

Here is one little story to show how glad they are to help one another. Poor Harry will never be better, the doctor says. His room is dull, and he is alone all day. So the visitor thought of giving him a canary, for company. Before taking it to Harry, he showed it to the children in the Cripples' Parlour; and what do you think? Two of the children were so eager to tell Harry that they had a race on their crutches; and blind, lame Georgie got there first. Hobbling into Harry's room, he cried out, "Harry, Harry! I ran along the Sheepcote-lane like a mad bull to tell you that teacher has got such a fine dickey-bird for you." Think of a blind and crippled boy running "like a mad bull" to carry good news to another poor little sufferer.

Many happy children in London and the country have asked for the name of one child, and write dear little letters, and try to be friends to them, and send them little things to cheer them up. Some, when in London, have gone to see their cripple friends, and have been so pleased with their welcome. The Ragged School Union, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, is always glad to give names to any willing to help in this way.

Our Tenth Prize Competition.

I have much pleasure in placing before my young friends the results of our competition, which has greatly increased this quarter. Amongst such a number of papers there was naturally a great diversity of excellence, and many of the competitors who had commenced their papers with the greatest care fell off lamentably before they reached the final question. Many, too, forgot that the questions need to be answered more fully than an ordinary Searcher, and that more attention should be given to the "get-up." But the papers, as a whole, have been very well done, as the number of names below plainly shows. Most of my "nephews" and "nieces" have gained some recognition; and to those who have failed I wish better success next time. Some of the boys' papers were splendidly done, and next competition I hope that boys and girls will equally share the honours.

ANSWERS TO LAST WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (118).

1. He shall feed his flock like a shepherd: he shall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom (Isa. xl. 11).

2. God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble (Ps. xlvi. 1; lxii. 7; xci. 2; cxlii. 5, &c., &c).

That by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us. (Heb. vi. 18).

3. In that day there shall be a fountain opened to the house of David and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem for zin and for uncleanness (Zech. xiii. 1). The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin (1 John i. 7).

4. Neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood He entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us (Heb. ix. 12). For it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins (Heb. x. 4).

Personal.

I HAVE again to acknowledge with many thanks boxes of flowers and blotters, and I need hardly assure the senders of them what pleasure is given to those who receive either a bunch of flowers or a blotter.

I find I have some fresh "nephews" and "nieces" this new quarter, and gladly welcome them all. If some of their papers are incorrect, they must not feel discouraged, but try again.

KATE SMITH.—I think your paper would be better written in ink, and please number your answers another time.

ARTHUR WEBB.—As you have such difficulty, why not write on lined paper ?

GUINEFRED LEIGH.—Thank you for the bunch of white violets, they smelt so nice.

HERBERT M. STUART.—I was very glad to receive your note. The stamps were acknowledged in the Donation List of April 5.

BESSIE UNSWORTH.—Your paper was unfortunately incorrect. I am glad you have interested your cousins in the Searcher.

The Power of Grace.—Divine grace, even in the heart of weak and sinful man, is invincible. Drown it in the waters of adversity, it rises more beautiful, as not being drowned indeed, but only washed; throw it into the furnace of fiery trials, it comes out purer, and loses nothing but the dross.—Archbishop Leighton.

"THE TRIUMPHAL ENTRY."—Matt. xxi. 6-16.

GOLDEN TEXT : "Hosanna to the Son of David ; Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord." —Matt. xxi. 9.

PREPARATIONS (6, 7).

It is Sunday morning: The night passed at Bethany. (Teacher should use the map.) The ass much used by Jews. Better cared for, and therefore better creatures than those we see in England to-day. Fulfilled the prophecy (Zech. ix. 9). He rode as the Prince of Peace.

Illustration.—The triumphs of the Roman Emperors with prisoners tied to their chariots. Christ's loyal vassals and slaves followed Him from love, not compulsion.

THE PROCESSION FORMED.

Starting up the hillside (Olivet—eastern side), the disciples were joined by other devoted followers until they came to the shoulder of the hill, from whence they gained the first sight of Jerusalem. Magnificence of the view. Crusaders, when they reached the spot centuries after, cried in enthusiasm, "Hirusalem! Hirusalem!" Christ from this spot looked upon the city and wept over it. During the halt multitudes of Galileans from Jerusalem (present for the feast) came out to welcome Him. Their enthusiasm now knew no bounds—garments, palm branches, singing.

SPONTANEOUS PRAISE (9).

This was beyond all programmes and orders of service. Times when we ought to be so enthusiastic in praise of Jesus as to get out of ordinary ruts.

Illustration.—Coronation of Queen. As the procession marched up the nave of Westminster Abbey, choir burst forth, "I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go up into the house of the Lord." The Queen stood still, and with clasped hands prayed.

IN THE NAME OF THE LORD (10).

Christ does not always come in the glory of triumph. Sometimes in the guise of an angel of sorrow, pain, disappointment, death. Yet his coming brings hope and peace. We ought always to say, "Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord."

THEY DID NOT KNOW HIM (10).

Many in Jerusalem from obscure parts of Palestine heard of Christ but did not know Him. There were plenty to tell who He was. So we must not be silent when the question is asked.

Who heals the sick to-day ?
Who comforts the downcast ?
Who strengthens the weak ?
Who consoles the mourner and the dying ?

It is Jesus of Nazareth ! Christians must tell the world what they know. We are here for that very purpose.

CLEANSING THE TEMPLE (12, 13).

Animals were sold within the Temple precincts at an exorbitant price to those who wished to sacrifice. The priests encouraged this, obtaining a commission on what was sold. The money changers were necessary because the people would have come from all parts of the civilised world.

His words are those of a son defending his father's house. There is indignant passion in every word.

Lesson.—Our reverence for the house of God should not be marred by frivolity or other unseemly conduct. If we do not feel it to be the house of God, others do. It is the house of prayer.

HEALING THE SICK (14 and 15).

Compare Christ's treatment of the sick with his treatment of the healthy hypocrites. He was the friend of the poor, sick, despised, outcast, sinners. The others could take care of themselves. Our duty is just to follow Christ. We like strong, wealthy, good people. We should be ready to help those who "have not."

CHILDREN'S SONGS.

This praise we can give to-day. Our lives must sing. Each deed is a tuneful note or a wail. Children's lives must be bright and glad. Laughter and song are like the measles—very catching. The singers are not only happy and strong themselves, but they make others so too.

Be good, sweet maid, and let who will be clever,
Do noble deeds, don't dream them all day long ;
And so make life, death, and that vast for ever
One grand sweet song.

A Regenerated London.

DR. PARKER'S SCHEME.

THE pastor of the City Temple re-delivered his plea for a "Layman's League" at his noon service last Thursday. He said the Guildhall, where the address was originally given, was only intended to accommodate speakers after a champagne dinner and a great feast of nonsense. It was a big, hollow, resounding place, and he questioned whether the half of those present heard what he had said. Moreover, the meeting was of the "stupid sort" which are confined to "men only"—a wonderful sign of decay, in his opinion (from which, however, many of our readers will join us in dissent).

The Doctor's scheme is that a league of Christian "laymen" should be formed for the social and religious betterment of London. By "laymen" he meant those who believe that atheism is really not essential to commercial success, and that it is possible to earn honest bread even in the City of London. This, he added, is the day of thieves ; though he admitted that there are business men in the City who act on most honourable principles, and achieve success. Referring to various plans for the government of London, the preacher declared that its true unification can only come through its regeneration.

One of the first results of such a movement ought to be the doing away with drinking as a basis of business ; that sort of thing is the curse of the City. There are business men who are almost drunk before ten o'clock in the morning. This kind of iniquity cannot be stopped by law ; the only thing that will do it is the creation of a common sentiment of ineffable disgust. How such a sentiment can be better fostered by a layman's league than by the existing pulpit the speaker did not indicate. He had also something to say about the Sunday opening of museums. If it were the only alternative, he would open every museum and picture-gallery and burn down every public-house. We remark, by way of criticism, that the opening of all the museums on Sunday would not secure the abolition of a single public-house, but would probably increase their evil traffic all round. We fail, therefore, to understand the cogency of his argument as to this point. He was on firmer ground when he observed that if men leave the church and go to the picture-gallery, the preacher has need to ask himself why they do so. Is it because the Gospel has been smothered in pedantry and professionalism? Men cannot be whipped into church. The preacher must give them something better and more soul-satisfying than they can get anywhere else. The Gospel must be so preached as to eclipse every other light, and to shine in its unique, imperishable glory.

Another result of such a league would be found in the personal consistency of its members. Employers would act as the friends of those in their employ, and young men would render honest, faithful service. No merchant should compel a young man or young woman to wander the streets on Sunday because they cannot get into the warehouse till 10 p.m. The employer who gives a young woman a small salary and a latch-key stands in the presence of God and man as a soul already damned. Do not ask if such things are possible ; actual is the word.

After an eloquent plea for the abolition of Newgate as a gaol and its reconstruction as the headquarters of the Layman's League, Dr. Parker vindicated the practical nature of his proposals by saying that he would make it discreditable for a man to smoke or drink liquors before he is forty years of age ; to wear a coat he has not paid for ; to be in bed after eight on Sunday morning ; to take two hours in doing a thing he could do in one. He would make religious character the first qualification for a seat on the County Council or in the City Council Chamber. No man should be Lord Mayor who made an investment of his honours, or betrayed the unsuspecting into spending their money for that which is not bread.

Home Missions.

London Medical Mission.

THE progress made during the past year by the London Medical Mission, 33, Short's Gardens, Endell-street, W.C., has been very remarkable, for the opening of work on the south side of the river in Lambeth has resulted in more than doubling the work of healing the sick and preaching the Gospel The numbers at Lambeth are such that the hall will not contain all who press into it on Tuesdays and Fridays, patients having to be refused for want of room.

We gather from the twenty-sixth report that care is taken that only the poor and deserving should benefit by the free medical aid given. Dr. Owen the medical superintendent at 78, Oakley-street Lambeth, writes :—

We are very careful and constantly concerned to prevent the objects of our mission from being set at naught by non-needy people. Full notice of this is printed on our patients' cards, as well as exhibited in our dispensary window. We have furthermore made continual inquiry from district visitors and householders in the immediate neighbourhood regarding the means of the patients who apply for help.

Mrs. T—— encouraged us by stating that her husband who "never had troubled himself about religion," had been quite changed after a visit to our medical mission service for men.

Mrs. H——, the victim of rapid consumption, who had been struggling for some time against unfortunate home circumstances, especially being harassed by the unkindness of her husband and by the knowledge that she could not recover from this illness, has at length been enabled by God's grace to find rest in Jesus her Saviour. She told us that her first husband was a converted man, and she had been much exercised lest she should not meet him again, but that now she is prepared to die. The home is a sad one, for a little infant of eight weeks is fast fading away from the same disease as its mother.

A little girl, Lizzie I——, who is slowly dying from the effects of dropsy with heart disease, is resting in Jesus with a grateful heart, but she needs daily help and encouragement in the midst of her many home drawbacks.

Another case is that of a poor old Roman Catholic woman and her daughter, who have been rescued from the hands of the so-called sisters of mercy and the priestly power of pagan Rome. They are now happy and believing in one Mediator, even Jesus Christ, having clearly seen by the light of God's Holy Word that Mary is no mediator at all. She told us she had never had a Bible, and was very glad to accept a copy, which she reads daily.

A most important branch of the work is that which provides for the sending into the country of the little children from the slums for a fortnight at a time. Few can understand the delight and the change it must be to these little ones, accustomed to be pent up in one-room tenements, to find themselves in the green fields and woods near Brasted.

The Convalescent Home at Folkestone has continued its blessed work of refreshment for soul and body of the women who are sent there. We are sorry to see that the funds are not adequate for the work done.

It is not a little discouraging to the toilers in these difficult and over-crowded parts of London to find that not only have they to bear the burden of the day in labouring among sick and dying people, but they have also to spend much time and thought in raising the funds for sustaining it. The treasurer states that the expenditure has exceeded ordinary income by £300 odd. We have not mentioned the invalid kitchen work, which forms such a useful and important adjunct of the work, but recommend our readers to write for a report to the secretary, 33, Short's-gardens, Endell-street, W.C.

Wesleyan Seamen's Mission.—When "the stormy winds do blow," and one hears of fog and peril on the sea, it is not difficult to give a sympathetic thought to our sailors, or even to offer a prayer for their safety. But their needs are not limited to times of danger. Sailors are often reduced to great poverty, and their homelessness and lack of friends make the case all the sadder. At this mission we have been welcoming sailors for weeks past to our daily Bible-class from twelve to one, and giving them, at the close, a cup of coffee and some bread, which have been very gratefully received. They also hear the Gospel, and our hearts have been gladdened from time to time by the conversion of sailors who have been reached by this means. Since the beginning of January over 900 men have received this small refreshment. Some of them are very poorly clad, their boots all in holes, and revealing the fact that there are no socks inside. The superintendent is Rev. W. W. Grigg, Seamen's Rest, 1, Jeremiah-street, East India Dock-road, E.

The Mildmay Institutions.

IN sending out the customary cash accounts in connection with the Conference Hall, and the numerous hospitals, missions, and other institutions, associated therewith, the Superintendent says :—The Jubilee year has to some extent affected adversely the ordinary subscriptions, yet owing to various grants, and the careful supervision over every branch of the work which kept expenses to the closest possible figure, we have been enabled not only to meet all current demands, but also to end the year with a decreased balance due to the bankers.

As regards the "Willows," the receipts almost exactly met the expenses; but there is still £522 debt on capital accounts. The Nursing Home account closed with a small balance in hand after payment of all expenses. The amount realised by the sale of the Mildmay illuminations, etc., provided no less a sum than £800.

As regards the whole financial retrospect, the debt to the bankers, which stood on 1st January, 1897, at £2,251 3s. 11d., has been reduced to the sum of £1,202 8s. 8d. The friends of Mildmay will join in our thankfulness for this comparatively satisfactory financial ending of the year; but we must not forget that nearly the whole of the income for carrying on the work of these extensive missions is dependent on voluntary contributions, as only some £2,000 arose from assured income, out of the £25,000 expended last year.

If only further help were afforded the work of the Mildmay Deaconesses could be greatly increased, as the calls for workers in various parts of London are numerous and urgent, and we would gladly extend our borders were we furnished with the means of doing so.

In addition to the ordinary expenses, there is a special need—the two very old buildings in which our Orphanage work has been carried on for so many years are becoming unsafe, and in the opinion of the architect it will soon be necessary to entirely rebuild.

In view of the whole situation, it is hoped that those who have for so many years supported these institutions, and to whom Mildmay and its work is dear, will make a liberal response to this appeal for help.

The Racecourse Mission.

THIS mission will commence its summer campaign on Epsom Downs during the Derby week (May 24-27). In the large tent opposite the grand stand some thirty or forty earnest men of God make their home for four days and nights, in the midst of this great and motley gathering of people. Instead of forty, at least three times that number of earnest, consecrated Christian men are wanted this year to help during Derby week. Friends are invited thus to help by testimony, tract distribution, etc.

Some £100 is needed to make up last year's deficiency and cover this year's expenses. An unlimited supply of Gospels and pure literature is also desired for distribution. Mr. Josiah Nix hopes to be at Epsom during the week.

Will helpers kindly send their names and addresses to Mr. O. L. Heatley, The King's Own Mission, Royal-road, Kennington, S.E. ? Gifts should be sent to Mr. W. Hodson, North Tadworth, Epsom ; and parcels of literature to Mr. Hodson, Kingswood Station, Chipstead Valley Line, S.E.R.

Bethnal Green Free Library.—The twenty-second anniversary meeting of the Bethnal Green Free Library was held on Monday week at Skinners' Hall, Dowgate-hill, Mr. A. Barton Kent presiding. The annual report stated that the free lending department, which was established at the close of 1896, had proved a great success. The necessity of increasing the maintenance fund to at least £1000 was urged. The total number of registered readers was 50,487, and since the opening of the Library 800,000 persons had been benefited by it. Owing to the inadequate accommodation in the present building, the committee renewed their agitation in favour of a new building. Archdeacon Sinclair appealed to those who had it in their power to assist the committee. Under-Sheriff Gardiner and Sir M. M. Bhownaggree, M.P., Rev. E. Schnadhorst, M.L.S.B., and Mr. John Lobb spoke briefly.

Working Girls' Home.

FOR thirteen years this work has gone quietly on in Drury Lane, providing a home for friendless working girls, whether in or out of employment, finding situations for young servants, attending to the wants of the sick and suffering, and carrying on needlework and Bible-classes.

The report presented at the recent annual meeting, when Mr. Justice Grantham spoke, shows that fifty-seven girls were received into the home last year, of whom twenty-three were placed in situations and eighteen are at work in the neighbourhood, while the rest were disposed of in various ways. Among the instances given are :

"W. L., thirteen, an orphan, rescued from a dreadful home, where she was brutally treated by an uncle and aunt. As this case comes under the Act against Cruelty to Children, we are enabled to keep the child, who, in spite of the very evil surroundings she was snatched from, is a nice bright little thing, goes to school, and gets a bit of training for service.

"A. L., is now at E. She is well and strong, has kept her last place nearly two years. Her mistress spoke very kindly of her, and said A. was quite a good influence with the other servants.

"L. T., a young girl sent to Arizona, has married satisfactorily. A friend sent a year later is married to a very steady young man, who keeps a store, and is doing well."

Results like these go a good way to encourage in the midst of many disappointments. Many girls, seeming to bear fair promise, fall among bad companions and get lost sight of; but it is hoped that the good seed will yet bear fruit.

The home is sitated at 31, Stanhope-street, Drury-lane, W.C. The resident matron, Miss Hollington, will gladly give all information.

Orphan Homes of Scotland.

IN his recently issued Occasional Paper, Mr. Wm. Quarrier devotes much space to the proceedings in the Court of Session respecting the rating of his Orphan Homes. For a number of years they were tacitly exempted from local taxation, but latterly the Renfrew County Council, or some members of it, have taken steps to secure the imposition of the rates. The question has been argued in the Court of Session, and the Judge now decides that the Homes, regarded as a whole, cannot claim exemption on the score of the Act which gives rating relief to ragged schools. The ground on which this decision is based is that the Homes do more than an ordinary ragged school—they feed and clothe the poor children. Most people, we should imagine, would have decided that that was an additional reason for exemption, rather than a ground on which to make the institutions liable. Mr. Quarrier is anxious to appeal to the Inner Court, but cannot go to the expense unless friends come to his help. If the present judgment stands, £600, the rates demanded for the last four years, besides the expenses of the action, will have to be paid.

Another matter of anxiety referred to in the Occasional Letter is the passing of a law by the Government of Ontario, prohibiting the immigration of children into that province of Canada without a special licence. There are conditions attached with which Mr. Quarrier is not disposed to comply, so that for the present he will place out the children in the home country; this will involve a longer training and a greater outlay.

The work of the Homes generally is making good progress. Since the beginning of November 164 destitute children have been added to the family, which now numbers about 1200. Advance is also being made with the Consumptive Hospital scheme, the first part of which is nearly ready for opening. To complete the scheme in all its details Mr. Quarrier yet wants £35,000. Our brother's great and many-sided work affords ample scope for the generous consideration of all Christians, whether poor or wealthy.

Hyde Park,—On Sunday afternoon, in connection with the West London Mission, open-air services were commenced for the season in Hyde Park, near to the Marble Arch. Rev. Hugh Price Hughes said that for ten years on Sundays services had been held by the West London Mission in Hyde Park, and this was the opening service of another season, which he hoped would be greatly blessed by God. Bishop Thoburn also gave a brief address.

THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD.

THE EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.

SOME very encouraging missions have recently been held by the agents of this Society in public buildings, with the happiest results. The hon. secretary would be very thankful to hear from friends interested in evangelisation in any part of the kingdom who may be willing to aid in arranging for similar missions in places of assembly in the fall of the year.

The work immediately in hand is, however, largely tent services. The season is just opening when the Gospel under canvas proves most attractive. About forty tents will shortly be in use in different parts of England and Scotland by evangelists of the Society. This tent work costs about £2000 for tents and maintenance, salary and expenses of evangelists, but experience has shown it is worth doing, for many will come to a tent meeting much more readily than to halls or places of worship. The Society greatly values the prayer of God's people that blessing may rest on the efforts put forth, and that the needs of our country may in some degree be met by the publication of the Gospel in its simplicity and power.

Amongst numerous letters just to hand telling of blessing, the following may be quoted: From Lydney, Glos., a local resident writes that a united town hall mission has been held by Mr. C. Galletly in this town of 3000 inhabitants, largely employed in the tin works. The place, which is spoken of as cold and dead spiritually, was well canvassed, while united prayer-meetings were held in the four chapels. "The services were well attended from the outset, and those on Sundays were large. The afternoon Bible-readings aroused much interest. During the three weeks of the mission over seventy went into the inquiry-room, and most of them professed to find peace. Many others, however, settled the matter in the hall or at their own homes. The choicest result of the mission has, however, been the awakening of the Christians and the bringing of them closer together and into hearty co-operation." Another writes:—"The meetings continue to grow numerically and spiritually; there is a mighty movement. Our mission services are the talk of the district. So far about forty have professed faith in Christ. God alone knows how blessed the mission has proved to be. We had a united prayer-meeting yesterday afternoon, attended by about 350 people, and in the evening the hall was quite full."

A correspondent writes:—"A fifteen days' mission has been brought to a close in the Town Hall, Oswaldtwistle, Lancs., by Mr. J. Shields, who first visited the town sixteen months ago, when great blessing was granted. A number of these earlier converts are still standing fast and earnest in Christian service. The mission just concluded was well attended, especially on Sundays, when large congregations have listened with rapt attention to the simple Gospel so fearlessly proclaimed by the evangelist. Many have been brought to God, while believers have been strengthened. The last Sunday evening will never be forgotten by those who were there. The power of the Spirit of God was manifestly present, and many in the vast congregation were touched. At the close of the meeting a number went into the inquiry-room, and it was very late before the last of the people left the hall. If all the evangelists sent out by the Evangelisation Society are as earnest as this one, the Society must be a power for good in our land."

From Alresford, Hants, the secretary has had many letters about the recent mission in the Town Hall. One lady writes:—"The faithful preaching has been greatly blessed of God, attracting great numbers night after night. We have realised, as never before, that the Gospel alone is still the power of God unto salvation. God's children also have been cheered and aroused to greater earnestness through the fearless testimony of the Word of God. I believe I know several who have decided for Christ during the mission."

A lady writes from Corsham, Wilts:—"My heart is very full of thankfulness to God for all the blessings I have heard of as the result of the splendid Gospel addresses we have had from your evangelists. I saw Pastor Smith, who said that the last service was the best of all, and especially the extra half-hour to the unconverted. Many remained, and Mr. C—— spoke most touchingly to them. One Church lady told me she would not have missed these services for anything."

MRS. BAEYERTZ IN BLACKBURN.

A FIFTEEN days' mission has been conducted by Mrs. Baeyertz in St. George's Presbyterian Church, Blackburn. The interest in the town has been widespread. People of all denominations have crowded to the meetings. During the first week the church was filled, but in the second week it was packed every night to its utmost limit, even half an hour before the time of service. Persons were waiting for admission an hour and a-half before the advertised time. Very manifestly the Lord has been working. Many times a deep solemnity and hush would steal over the meeting, and one felt that God was dealing with the hearts and consciences of the people. More than 700 persons passed through the inquiry-room, and were dealt with over God's Word by Mrs. Baeyertz. Many meetings were held for prayer before the mission commenced, and it is felt by all that glorious answer has been given. On the closing days of the mission church and school were crowded, and hundreds turned away. It is regarded as a marvel in the history of the churches in Blackburn. At "Thanksgiving Services" held since the mission was closed many have openly declared the blessing they have received.

The pastor, Rev. E. Ritchie, writes in his local magazine:—"As minister of the church in which Mrs. Baeyertz is working here, I am glad to find in the prayer-meeting and inquiry-room that the separating walls of ecclesiastical partition have been broken down, and that from almost every place of worship in the town inquiring souls profess to have found salvation through Jesus Christ. God speed the day when we shall be 'all one in Christ Jesus.' It is impossible to say what the ultimate results will be; but the town has been awakened and stirred, and we who are friends of God must give ourselves to prayer that the word may be accompanied 'with signs following.'"

EVANGELISTS' MOVEMENTS.

There has been a genuine revival in Merrion Hall, Dublin, during the labours throughout March of Mr. J. J. Sims. Christians of all denominations have attended the mission, and testimonies of blessing and conversion have come in from all quarters, including Roman Catholics.

A mission has been held by Mr. William Forbes in Cambridge, in the large new hall of the Lower York-street Mission. Upwards of fifteen years have elapsed since he held the first Gospel Temperance Mission in the town. Miss Watts, who helped in that mission, is the chief worker in the mission now going on.

Mr. Charles Cook, of Hyde Park Hall, has recently completed another month's mission in Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road. Taking into consideration that he followed the crowded meetings of Rev. John McNeill, it was most encouraging to see so many gather night after night to hear the Gospel proclaimed. Much good has been done, and some very interesting cases of conversion have taken place. The excellent singing of the Browning male quartette on Sundays added much to the interest of the meetings.

Under the auspices of the Rugby Free Church Council, Gipsy Smith has conducted a most successful mission. The Free Churches united together in prayer during the preceding week in a way that has never been witnessed in the town before. Gipsy Smith won the ear of the people from the beginning, and the Town Hall proved quite inadequate to accommodate the number who flocked to hear him. On this account many of the meetings were held in the commodious Wesleyan Chapel. The story of his life, "From Gipsy Tent to Pulpit," was given on Easter Monday, when the mission (which began April 3) was brought to a close. Some 200 inquirers are the result of the mission, and the preacher has won the affection and esteem of the Christians of the town.—J. Y.

Requests for Prayer.

For a nine days' mission among the young, May 1 to 9, at West Norwood, S.E.

For monthly gathering at Ipswich on April 25. Speaker, Rev. J. Gregory Mantle.

For blessing on a mission in Hove Church, from April 23 to April 30, by Rev. W. J. Watkins.

For blessing on work being carried on by Mr. and Mrs. Innes Wright near the border of Nepaul, India.

For blessing on a Y.M.C.A. Mission in Enniskillen, to begin next Lord's day, and to be conducted by Mr. Wm. A. Boyd.

For open-air work at the April Fair Mission, Lincoln, for 1898, by Rev. G. Goodchild, Mr. Northcote Willy, and Mr. James Neech, throughout the week commencing on Saturday night, the 23rd inst.

Praise.

For answered prayer in the village of Whitletts, Ayrshire. Prayer is still requested on behalf of the work.

The P.S.A.

LAST week the fourth National Conference of the P.S.A. was held at Leicester, when delegates were present from different parts of the country. On Monday evening an admirable sermon was preached by Canon Sanders in St. Martin's Church; he spoke of the power of Christianity in producing strength as well as beauty of character.

Conference meetings were held on Tuesday, when helpful addresses were delivered by several friends. The subject of the morning session was "Prayer." One of the speakers was Rev. F. B. Meyer, who urged that the work of the P.S.A. should continue to be steeped, as hitherto, in the spirit of dependence on God and adhesion to the spiritual aspects of truth. At other meetings Mr. J. S. Blackham, Rev. J. K. Nuttall, Rev. F. Hibbert, and others dealt with different phases of the movement. The whole proceedings were most stimulating.

Not My Will, but Thine.

O Thou, who hast in sorrow borne
My sin on Calvary's tree,
Whose heart of love by grief was torn
While suffering there for me.
Teach me to love Thee in return
As only those can love
Who, having "much forgiven," burn
With gratitude, and daily yearn
For this—How they from Thee may learn
That gratitude to prove.

Prepare my heart to know thy will,
And, when that will is known,
Give grace and strength—prepare me still—
Thy service calls to own.
This prayer be mine throughout life's way:
"Thy will—not mine—be done";
Guard me, my Father, lest I stray;
Oh, go before me day by day,
Till, at the end, I hear Thee say:
"Thy race has been well run!"

Antony Templemore.

The Difference.—One woman in China asked, "What difference does it make whether we believe in Jesus or in the idols?" Another woman replied, "I can tell you that myself. I'm not a Christian yet, but my son-in-law is. He used to smoke opium, never brought home a cent of money to his family, but took all their clothes and pawned them, also all the furniture and bedclothes. He used to beat his wife and children nearly to death. But one day he went to a Jesus chapel and heard them preach. He kept going back every day, till at last he believed on Jesus, and joined the church. Now you just ought to come to our house and see how happy we all are. One of the first things he did after he became a Christian was to hunt me up and take me home."

Obituary.

MRS. STEPHEN WELLSTOOD, EDINBURGH.

There passed away at Edinburgh on the 11th inst., in her 76th year, Mrs. Stephen Wellstood, well known in the United Kingdom and United States of America, as an active and earnest Christian worker. A daughter of a Bristol minister, she married Mr. Stephen Wellstood, and, emulating the example of Mrs. Fry, she visited the penitentiaries of America and this country. Neglected children and women in misfortune found in her a warm friend, always ready with kindly sympathy and practical assistance, and many will shed a tear when they hear of her falling asleep. She was an attached member of the Society of Friends, and was one of the few old remaining members of that body in Edinburgh.

MRS. PARRIS, LAVENDON.

The death is announced of Mrs. H. Parris, of Lavendon, near Olney, Bucks, who passed away in the early hours of Good Friday. She will ever be remembered in this village as the leading mover in every work for the happiness of the people to whom she was so attached, and to the extension of the Master's kingdom. The crowning object of her life, which she, happily, lived to see completed, was the erection of Union Chapel and class rooms, at a cost of from £700 to £800. The funeral, which took place on Easter Monday, was the largest ever seen in Lavendon, not only relatives and members of the chapel attending, but practically the whole village followed the cortége. The service was conducted by Rev. T. Scott, of Olney.

M. PAUL BOUCHARD.

The death is announced of M. Paul Bouchard, Mayor of Beaune, Côte d'Or, France, at the advanced age of eighty-four. He was well known to many British Christians, among whom he came on several occasions, collecting funds for the erection of the Protestant "temple" in his historic town. In France his fame was widespread, one of the most striking incidents of his career being when, years ago, he boldly came out of the Church of Rome, in which he had been brought up, and attached himself to the Reformed Church. Ever since then he has borne steady witness for the primitive faith, and done much to make the Protestant position understood in central France. Though a sturdy Evangelical, M. Bouchard was esteemed on all hands, and the greater part of the notabilities of the Department, and practically the entire population of Beaune, attended the funeral.

REV. JOHN JENKINS, D.D., WEST DULWICH.

This well-known Presbyterian minister passed away on Thursday morning, at his residence in Thurlow-park-road, West Dulwich. Dr. Jenkins was ordained to the Presbyterian ministry in 1837, when he entered upon missionary work in India. The climate and broken health, however, caused his return to England, and some time later he proceeded to Canada. He laboured in Montreal, where he was pastor of St. Paul's Church, which he resigned in order to take up work in Philadelphia. After a period of service in Philadelphia, Dr. Jenkins returned to Montreal, where his eloquence, combined with a rare beauty of voice, made him one of the most popular and persuasive of preachers. In 1878 he was Moderator of the Canadian General Assembly, and took an active part in promoting Presbyterian union in Canada. Dr. Jenkins concluded his active labours in Montreal in 1883, much to the regret of his large congregation, and returned to England.

REV. THOMAS MILLAR, LEITH.

We record with much regret the death of this well-known and highly esteemed pastor of St. Paul's Parish Church, Leith, where he had laboured with much success for the last ten years. He was a man of strong individuality and vigorous energy. His sermons and addresses were characterised by a pronouncedly evangelistic spirit, and he became a notable personality not only in his own parish and town but in many parts of Scotland. He never spared himself, and had gathered round him a congregation which for spiritual life and vigour is scarcely surpassed in Scotland.

He was engaged in pastoral and other duties till a few days before his death. His illness was brief and painful; he gradually sank, and died on Tuesday, the 12th, at the early age of 41. The funeral was attended by thousands, and was of a most impressive nature. Much sympathy is felt for his young widow and four children in their great sorrow. Scotland is the poorer for Mr. Millar's death, the cause of Christ has lost a valiant champion and soul winner, his church a faithful and valued pastor, and many a dear friend and brother.

CANON NASH, LITTLE WENLOCK.

A good man and true has passed away in Canon T. A. Nash, beloved of many for his character and work. Canon Christopher gives in The Record a full account of the life-work and faithful testimony of this devoted servant of Christ, whose useful and energetic ministry of thirty-six years has thus closed. Converted at the age of twenty-three, through an attack of cholera in which he came very near death, he gave himself on his recovery to the work of the Lord, beginning as curate to Canon Christopher, and passing on to Heigham, Norwich, St. Philip's (Ball's Pond-road, Islington), Lowestoft, and Herringfleet (where he did a remarkable work), and finally going in 1889 to Little Wenlock, near Wellington, Shropshire.

Rev. W. A. Campbell says: "He combined the tenderness of a woman in sympathy and thoughtfulness with a very strong will and discernment, and the courage of his convictions, sometimes seen in indignation against injustice and wrong. He was a true king of men, and in after life his business capacity was recognised and his wisdom deferred to by men of the world. Indeed, at college he ever had the respect—and, indeed, fear—of men of totally different principles and manner of life from his own. Anything like 'cant' was never laid to his charge, and he could ever speak and be listened to by the most careless because of his supremely consistent life. It was this, with the traits above alluded to, which gave his preaching in after life such power. Mr. Nash never pretended to anything, certainly not to oratory or fine preaching; but every word he uttered came with the force of a life of consistency, godliness, and all that is lovely and of good report, as well as eminently manly and strong."

Canon Christopher closes his notice in these words: "When I was with dear Nash early in his illness in December, 1896, not long after a crisis in which his life almost passed away, he said to me: 'When I fully believed that I was dying I found the old Gospel I have long preached enough to sustain me. I was in perfect peace, believing the old Evangelical truths, and so trusting altogether the Lord Jesus.'"

Personalia.

Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, M.A., of Norwich, has, owing to weak health, felt compelled to decline nomination as successor to Dr. Booth, secretary to the Baptist Union.

Rev. Thomas Champness intends starting for China next October, in order to visit the Joyful News Missions. He expects to be absent a year, and to return home viâ the United States.

Rev. James Davidson, Free Church minister, North Berwick, has just been married to the daughter of the late Sir Andrew Agnew. Miss Agnew is a sister-in-law to Lord Kinnaird.

Rev. John McNeill.—In our last week's announcement of the evangelist's approaching marriage we should have stated that the bride-elect is the daughter of Mr. H. L. Millar, manager of the Union Bank, Charing Cross.

Bishop Thoburn, from India, has arrived in England, where he hopes to stay for a few months. His work in our great dependency is well known. As opportunity offers, he will be glad to address meetings for missionary effort. Letters to him should be addressed 67, Torrington-square, W.C.

Rev. Oscar Michelsen, of Tongoa, has been recruiting in New Zealand, after a long and somewhat serious illness. He reports himself as "making splendid progress." Meanwhile he is preparing a text-book in Tongoan and English for the schools, and is hopeful of a speedy return to his beloved work.

Rev. W. J. Humphrey.—The gravest fears are entertained by the C.M.S. as to the safety of Rev. William John Humphrey, formerly of Tunbridge Wells, missionary in charge of Cliveton, and principal of Fourah Bay College, Freetown, Sierra Leone, who started some weeks ago after his return on a tour to the main missionary stations. Since his departure nothing has been heard of him, and the Bishop of Sierra Leone has telegraphed that the most stringent inquiries have failed to discover his whereabouts. It is feared that he has been captured or murdered.

Oxford Letter.

[By Our Own Correspondent.]

BRIGHT weather has prevailed during the greater part of the holidays, thus enabling the workers in the open air to hold special gatherings. On Good Friday afternoon the St. Aldate's Mission Band, assisted by Capt. Easton, of the Church Army, held a meeting on Mr. Salter's wharf and succeeded in catching some of the holiday-makers. There was an earnest tone throughout the meeting, and the hearts of the workers were cheered by the evident tokens of God's presence. Special meetings were also held at the Magdalen-road Mission Hall.

We are glad to notice that a public meeting is to be held with a view of improving the trade of Oxford during the Long Vacation. Tradesmen and lodging-house keepers have to pay rent and rates all the year round, and find the summer months draw heavily on their resources. It is likely the railway companies will give greater facilities for tourists, as Oxford affords many attractions to those who want a restful and quiet holiday.

We note with pleasure the growing work of the Church Army Labour Home. The value of the Home cannot easily be over estimated, and especially so at a time when the number of vagrants is increasing. In connection with the Home a branch of the Lodging-house Union scheme has been started, by which "work tickets" can be procured, and men can be sent to the Home at once. It is hoped the scheme will prevent some of the indiscriminate giving of money.

An Invalid.

The Princess Louise Home. — The sixty-third annual meeting of the Princess Louise Home and National Society for the Protection of Young Girls was held at the Home, at Kingston Hill, on Saturday afternoon. Mr. T. Skewes Cox, M.P., presided. Mr. Reginald Drake (secretary) presented the report, which stated that the number of inmates had increased during the last five years from seventy-five to 121. Addresses followed by the chairman, Rev. J. Rooker, Col. Barnes, Mr. G. F. Porter and others, Workers Needed.—Says Dr. Harford Battersby in Niger and Yoruba Notes:—Mr. Macintyre and Mr. Hill are both due home for furlough from West Africa, and there is no one to take up the promising work which they have begun in the Basa country. Nor can we forget the great heathen population of Ibo-land and the great area of the Niger delta, including the region of Benin, large portions of which are without a missionary. In the case of Yoruba also there has been no lack of officers volunteering for service in the New Yoruba regiment, and many a young man has received the congratulations of his friends on being appointed to a post in the hinterland of Lagos; and yet it seems that for soldiers of the Cross Africa still must wait. How long is this to be the case?

Navvy Mission Society.—The 21st annual meeting for the Western District of the Christian Excavators' Union was held at Barry Dock on Easter Monday, members coming from Swansea, Port Talbot, Wentwood, Newport, Bridgend, and other places. At the opening prayer meeting intense earnestness and great humility were shown. A very solemn hush came over all as they gathered round the Lord's table, words of wisdom and tenderness being spoken by Hon. and Rev. R. Grimston (Supt. of N.M.S.) After lunch we had the "Roll Call," and several fresh members were added to the ranks. Testimony and praise meeting followed, several very striking testimonies being given. No doubt seemed to trouble some of these dear men and women; their faces shone. No sensational, excited, or unnatural experiences were given, but direct and clear-cut statements that a mighty change had taken place. At these annual meetings may be seen what a blessed work the society is doing. There are hundreds of Christian men on public works now who are daily witnessing a confession of our risen Lord. Great persecution and petty trials follow. Yet there is an increasing number of men who are following Christ. —W. S. S.

SCOTLAND.

Several of the presbyteries in Scotland are petitioning the General Assemblies in favour of employing the ministers of the churches more on special evangelistic work.

The Grange Free Church, Edinburgh (of which Dr. H. Bonar was at one time pastor), has a membership of 612, and has contributed during the past year for all purposes £2320.

The Spurgeon Memorial Tabernacle, Leith, which was begun seven years ago with a membership of five, has now over 400. This is the outcome of hard work and perseverance on the part of pastor and people.

The Church of Scotland reports that £199,941 12s. 10d. was the income during last year for the various schemes of the Church. Of the above amount, nearly £60,000 was subscribed for foreign missions and work among the Jews.

Rev. J. M. Witherow, of Berwick, has intimated his acceptance of the call as colleague and successor to Rev. Dr. Drummond, Belhaven, U.P. Church, Glasgow. This is one of the largest and most important churches in the West of Scotland.

At the annual Spring Conference of the Baptist Union, held at Aberdeen, Prof. McLellan said that one reason of failure of preaching was the present-day indifference to things spiritual. There might, however, be failure in the churches, and he thought that by shorter services, outdoor mission work, and personal visitation, an improvement might be effected. Some might object to these methods as sensational, and suitable more for the mission hall than the decorum of the church. Perish dignity, but they must leave nothing undone to carry forward the work of the Cross.

THE Y.M.C.A.

A special building for the Youths' Section is about to be erected at Birkenhead.

Easter and Whitsuntide camps have been organised by the Nottingham Association.

Archdeacon Sinclair has consented to preach in the parish church, St. Helen's, in behalf of the local Association.

The Edinburgh Association reports a falling off in membership which numbers 385, but the various agencies, with trifling exceptions, are in a fair condition.

The second annual meeting of the Blackburn Association was held last Friday. The chair was occupied by Mr. James Parkinson. The membership roll now contains some 190 names, being more than double the number of last year.

With great rejoicing new Y.M.C.A. premises have been opened in Rome: The inaugural meetings were attended by many ambassasadors and consuls, in recognition of the good work done among young men from America, England, Germany, and other lands.

The anniversary meeting of the Wakefield Association was held in the Music Saloon, Wood-street, under the presidency of Mr. Alfred Haley, the speakers being the Mayor of Wakefield (Mr. A. W. Stanfield, J.P.), Mr. T. Cheney Garfit, J.P., D.L. (Louth), and Rev. J. Foster Holdsworth. The membership now stands at 383, in addition to fifty members of the boys' section. £31 has been raised for missionary work in the year, and no fewer than seven members of the Association are already in or are preparing for the foreign mission field.

The educational work of the Glasgow Association has been closed for the winter session. The convener stated that 2700 students had enrolled in the various classes. Over £40 were given in money prizes, and 200 certificates were handed to the successful students. The Y.M.C.A. Club is now in working order, and over 120 young men have taken up their residence in it. Mr. Anderson and the students of the Bible Training Institute, to the number of fifty-eight, have been conducting a mission in the hall of the Christian Institute. Many interesting cases of decision have been recorded.

The annual conference of the Midland District Union was held at Shrewsbury on Easter Monday. The report showed a substantial increase of membership, and gave evidence of good work being done throughout the district. Mr. H. J. Allcroft, J.P., of Stokesay Court, was re-elected president. Interesting and helpful discussions were evoked by papers presented by Messrs. J. A. Roxburgh, Wolverhampton, on "Principles that Underlie Y.M.C.A. Work"; J. Palmer Howard, Hanley, on "System in Association Work"; W. J. Davis, Malvern, on "Open-air work"; Charlton Jones, Worcester, on "Evangelistic Work among Boys"; and A. K. Yapp, travelling secretary for Lancashire, on "How to Increase and Maintain Membership."

Nearly one hundred delegates and visitors attended the annual conference of the North-Eastern District Union, at Morpeth Town Hall, on Easter Monday, twenty-two Associations being represented. The address at the devotional meeting, by Rev. A. H. Drysdale, was upon "The Lord's Prayer, a stimulus to devotedness, as well as a model for devotion." Mr. C. S. Wilson, president of the district, was chairman at the morning session, when the reports from new Associations and others were alike of unusual interest and encouragement. The rector of Morpeth (Rev. H. J. Bulkeley, M.A.) presided at the afternoon conference, when a paper upon "The Danger of Religious Indifference," so characteristic of the time, was read by Rev. R. S. Fyffe, curate of Bishopwearmouth. The paper contained many practical suggestions, and was warmly approved by the succeeding speakers. The last hour of the Conference was spent in considering the foreign work of the Y.M.C.A., under the direction of the English National Council.

Sierra Leone.—Officers of the Army Medical Staff have left Liverpool for Sierra Leone.—The Manchester Chamber of Commerce has condemned the hut tax. Why not proclaim its cessation at once?

Russia.—A Russian Privy Councillor and his daughter have been banished to Siberia for life, who were charged with selling military documents and information regarding the defences of the Empire to agents of the Austrian Government.—The Russian Government has decided to build several large iron-clads.—A notification has been sent to the Porte by Russia that a large payment of arrears of the indemnity must be made forthwith.

America and Spain.—The American Senate and House of Representatives, after some disagreement have passed a joint resolution to be presented to the President, recognizing Cuban independence, and authorizing the Executive to interpose by force of arms. Meawhile Spain is afire with excitement, and a National Fund is being raised towards which the Queen Regent has contributed a million pesetas. Great preparations are being made in the United States; 100,000 men are to be called out, and the Navy is being mobilised off the coast of Florida.

The Far East.—In response to an official intimation, the Russian Press has ceased its onslaughts on Great Britain in connection with the acquisition of Wei-hai-Wei.—The Russian Volunteer Fleet will convey 20,000 troops and heavy guns to Port Arthur. —An agreement has been come to respecting Japan's demand for a port in China.—A formidable conspiracy in the Imperial Palace at Peking has been discovered, involving some of the highest personages in the Empire.—The Chinese Government has given its consent to the demands of France.—Energetic steps are being taken by the Chinese to improve the condition of the tea trade by the adoption of "foreign" methods and machinery.—A concession has been granted to an Anglo-Italian syndicate for working the vast Shan-si coal and iron deposits.—Banks, hospitals, and other important undertakings are being established by the Russians at Port Arthur.

The Book World.

A GREAT WORK OF REFERENCE.

While small books and manuals are to-day being multiplied on all hands, there is no lack of large undertakings in the form of works of reference. And though, compared with some countries, Great Britain has little ground for boasting in this respect, she unquestionably maintains a praiseworthy activity in the production of books of wide and lasting interest and value. The great Edinburgh house of T. & T. Clark, which has done so much to stimulate theological thought and learning for many years past, has now given to the world the first volume of A Dictionary of the Bible*, the work of many of the foremost scholars of the day, edited by Dr. James Hastings, who conducts The Expository Times with such remarkable ability and energy.

Dictionaries of the Bible are a great boon. What should we do without them? Naturally, all works of this kind have their peculiar complexion, and this latest may be described as remarkably full within its defined limits, and singularly "up to date" in its thousandth detail. And if these things apply to the facts of positive research, so also do they apply to matters of controverted and uncertain speculation. Thus the latest discoveries in the field of archæology, whether stated by Professors Hommel ("Assyria" and "Babylonia"), or Sayce ("Elam," "Cyrus," "Darius," etc.), or Mr. W. E. Crum ("Egypt"), are placed alongside analyses of Exodus, Deuteronomy, and Chronicles, by Rev. G. Harford Battersby and Professors H. E. Ryle and Francis Brown, that show much cleverness in literary dissection but small power of descriptive illumination. This was to be expected, for Higher Criticism is of great account just now; but certain it is that the results of the modern method cannot have a value that will compare in permanency with the more general contents of this great and useful work.

All the chief articles are from the pens of experts, as, for example, Alphabet, by Dr. Isaac Taylor; Apocryphal Literature, by Dr. F. C. Porter and Rev. R. H. Charles; Oriental Botany and Natural History, by Dr. G. E. Post, of Beyrout; Topography, by Lieut.-Colonel Conder, Prof. E. Hull, Dr. F. J. Bliss, Rev. W. Ewing, and others. Then, in other fields (to name a few only), Professors Adeney, Agar Beet, A. B. Davidson, T. Witton Davies, W. T. Davison, J. Denney, S. R. Driver, H. M. Gwatkin, D. S. Margoliouth, J. T. Marshall, J. Massie, R. W. Moss, A. S. Peake, W. M. Ramsay, J. Skinner, and O. C. Whitehouse. Students will value the work increasingly as they grow in familiarity with its style. They will go to it for information given in the most succinct form, yet with fulness of detail; and they will not be disappointed in their search. They may occasionally be sorry to meet with hard critical tables, that make little appeal to the reason, however much they may incite to a course of investigation in the field of literary analysis; but, as a rule, they will find substantial help. In many directions the work exhibits a changed aspect and a modified emphasis as compared with the older compilations of its class, so that few will be disposed to dispense with Kitto or Smith when making place on their shelves for this Dictionary.

Among the longer articles of great value, scrupulously full and candid in their induction, and worth a whole library of controversial books, are those on Baptism, by Rev. Dr. Plummer; Christology, by Professor J. Agar Beet; Church, by Rev. S. C. Gayford; Election, by Rev. J. O. F. Murray; Eschatology, by Professor A. B. Davidson (as to the Old Testament), Rev. R. H. Charles (as to the Apocryphal literature), and by Professor S. F. D. Salmond (as to the New Testament); and Faith, by Professor B. B. Warfield. Other weighty departments are Bible, by Professor A. Stewart; Chronology, by Professor E. L. Curtis (as to the Old Testament), and Mr. C. N. Turner (as to the New); Conscience, by Rev. T. B. Kilpatrick; Crimes and Punishments, by Professor J. Poucher; Decalogue, by Professor W. P. Paterson; Education, by Prof. A. R. S. Kennedy; Ethics, by Rev. T. B. Strong; Feasts and Fasts, by Principal F. Elmer-Harding. From these names it is apparent that all sections of the Church have had a hand in the work, quite a number of American scholars being on the staff.

While calling attention to sections of special importance, we would not overlook a feature which finds representation throughout this beautifully printed volume. That feature is supplied by the articles, generally short, of the editor himself. These deal for the most part with words of a technical character, or such as have varied meanings or applications in our A.V. or R.V. of the Bible. At a random opening we find articles from his pen on Colt, Come, Comely (Comeliness), Commandment, Commend (Commendation), Commentary, and Common, all these terms being explained as to their Scripture uses, illustrated from a wide range of literature, and supplied with cross-references to the more substantial, though hardly more erudite, departments of the work.

Another feature is the indication, at the conclusion of the articles, of the general sources of information. In some cases these small type additions are of great value, pointing out where full discussions may be met with on points of detail. These references will direct the student to approved works; and as they are often given with the utmost precision as to chapter and page they will save time in the hour of inquiry. This feature will make up for what the book lacks through the "modern" leanings and consequent exclusiveness of some of the contributors. There are also maps and some engravings. Taken as a whole, this Dictionary will amply repay systematic use, as well as demand consultation on the many questions that arise in Bible study and teaching.

* A Dictionary of the Bible: Dealing with its Language, Literature, and Contents, including the Biblical Theology. Edited by James Hastings, M.A., D.D., with the assistance of John A. Selbie, M.A., and, chiefly in the revision of the proofs, by A. B. Davidson, D.D., LL.D., S. R. Driver, D.D., Litt.D., and H. B. Swete, D.D., Litt.D. Vol. I.—A—Feasts. (28s. *Edinburgh: T. & T. A LIFE OF GEORGE MÜLLER.

With commendable promptitude, Mr. W. F. Mack, the Bristol publisher, issued, two days after the funeral service, a life of George Müller: The Modern Apostle of Faith. By F. C. Warne. (1s. and 2s.) We have read these chapters with much interest, and with growing conviction that a fuller and more comprehensive biography of this sainted veteran must prove of inestimable service to the Church of Christ. The brief glimpses of the German lad's early days, his conversion, and the way in which he was led to adopt what then seemed novel and daring views of faith, awake a longing to know more of these spiritual experiences. The records of the Orphan Houses and other institutions are compiled from the "Annual Narratives," with which most of our readers are familiar. We cordially wish this memoir the wide circulation it richly deserves. Closely allied with this, the same publisher sends Does God hear Prayer?—by Rev. John Thomas. (1s. and 2s.)—being largely a collection of simple illustrative instances of direct and clearly recognised answers to prayer, both in regard to temporal and spiritual matters. Facts such as those recorded by the author ought to stimulate and strengthen the faith of many.

BOOKS FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS.

We have frequently been asked to recommend small books specially designed (1) to meet the inquiries of such as are under a sense of spiritual concern; and (2) to give instruction to persons just entering upon the Christian life. Pastors and evangelists join in an earnest search for work that shall be definite and to the point in this ministry, and at the same time free from denominational bias and propagandism. Several to whom we have recently named the small books of Dr. Robert Boyd, so cordially commended by Mr. Moody, have expressed unqualified delight with them; and in order further to assist those who are on the look-out for such works we again call attention to The Way of Life; A Book for Inquirers (tinted covers 6d., cloth 1s.), and Young Converts; or, Beginners in Zion's Ways (cloth 1s. 6d.). These are little books of sterling value, and so simple in style that there is no mistaking their purpose and meaning. That Mr. Moody has circulated many of them both is at once a testimony of their intrinsic worth, and a proof of his excellent judgment. Sunday-school teachers will be glad to place these books in the hands of thoughtful scholars, while all who undertake to assist the anxious and guide the perplexed will find them of great service. (Morgan & Scott.)

Those who take a friendly interest in domestic servants will be glad to know of a book filled with good counsels for such. It is The High Estate of Service, by Isabella Cowan, who shows the Christian servant how she may glorify God in home mission work, which may prove as surely influential for good as it is of necessity quiet and properly conducive to social comfort. (Edinburgh: David Douglas; London: Simpkin, Marshall & Co.)

Some time ago we accorded a hearty welcome to Mr. Sydney Watson's autobiography. Now a second part appears — Brighter Years, by Mr. Sydney Watson (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton)—giving the story of his life as a Christian in the Royal Navy, and of his subsequent labours as pastor and evangelist. The narrative is illustrated by numerous anecdotes and adventures. It will find many eager readers, and to some it may prove the messenger of the Gospel.

A useful volume of addresses to young Christians is The King's Own, by Rev. G. Arthur Sowter, M.A., rector of St. George's, Birmingham. (3s. Nisbet & Co.) Fifteen in number, the addresses make a compact body of counsels, beginning with the assertion that "Ye are not your own," and proceeding through well-graded stages of teaching on duties and privileges, virtues and graces, to some wholesome words on "The King's Table" and the injunction, "This do in remembrance of Me."

Mr. Eugene Stock, in a prefatory note, heartily commends Miss Louis A. Wilson's Gems from the Morning Watch as fresh and independent, "like what may be found in mediæval writers." The object of the writer is avowedly to lead others to dig more deeply into the Word of God, and to devote the early morning hours to this study. The author, converted under the preaching of the late Rev. John MacNeil in Victoria, is now a C.M.S. missionary in India. Though sometimes fanciful, these "Gems" are rich in spiritual suggestion. (2s. 6d. Marshall Bros.)

Christian apologists are a great host, but we should think no modern list complete that did not include the name of Dr. G. Frederick Wright, Professor of the Harmony of Science and Revelation in Oberlin College, whose excellent work, Scientific Aspects of Christian Evidences, has been issued in this country by C. Arthur Pearson, Ltd. (7s. 6d.). The pages cover a wide field, and deal with matters regarding which there is great variety of judgment; and, although not always agreeing with the author, we readily commend his work as thoughtful, and calculated to be of real service to many a perplexed mind. This is a book that takes account of the most recent questions and facts, and among the many striking chapters is one on the newly discovered external evidences of Christianity. The author is logical as well as learned, and ably maintains that "the historical proof of Christianity rests upon a much firmer basis than can be found underneath the great mass of beliefs which inspire and direct the general activities of the human race." The book is an elaboration of the Lowell Institute Lecture delivered in 1896, and is a valuable contribution to literature of its class.

The Coming Marriage is a rhyming allegory intended to urge the need of readiness for the return of our Lord Jesus Christ. To be had of the author, 20, Burlington-road, Redland, Bristol. (2d.)

The Cactus Journal. (6d. E. W. Allen, 4, Ave Maria-lane, E.C.) A new monthly, dealing exclusively and exhaustively with Cacti and other succulent plants. It will be especially useful to amateurs, as well as professional growers of this favourite and interesting plant.

The disquiet caused by certain propagandists has compelled many preachers and teachers to study the Lord's Day question in special aspects. All such will be glad to consult Mr. Henry Varley's booklet, The Seventh Day Adventists and Sabbath Observance. (5d., post free. Alfred Holness.)

It is a matter of great thankfulness that the little volume on English Church Teaching by Canon Girdlestone, Dr. Moule, and Mr. Drury is having such a good circulation. It is now in its second edition, and will prove of real value to all who desire to know and be grounded in the "Church Doctrine" which, of course, should be "Bible truth."

Two small works by Dr. Bullinger that will be of service to Bible students are The Structure of the Books of the Bible (2d.) and The Divine Names and Titles (1s.) The former exhibits marvels of correspondence and relation in the order of the books; the latter interprets the names of God in a very instructive manner. (Eyre & Spottiswoode.)

We have the thoughts of a veteran Hebrew Christian in The Sun-clothed Woman of Rev. xii., a paper read before the Prophecy Investigation Society, by Rev. A. Bernstein, B.D. The interpretation is somewhat novel, but it deserves the attention of all students of the Apocalypse. (3d. Operative Jewish Converts' Institution, Palestine House, Bodney-road, Hackney Downs, N.E.)

Mr. H. L. Hastings, of Boston, U.S.A., issues an excellent essay on the "Higher Criticism," in which the claims of the most radical school of criticism concerning the book of Daniel are discussed by Dr. J. D. Steele. The pamphlet presents many excellent reasons for accepting the conservative views regarding the date of one of the most severely criticised books of the Old Testament, and should be read by everyone who has been disturbed by the contentions of the "Higher Critics." The London publishers are Marshall Bros. (Price 1d.)

Many will be glad to hear of a very readable Memoir of the Late George Muller, with a report of the funeral, reprinted from The Bristol Mercury. (1d. Mercury Office, Bristol.) The life of the late George Müller, as outlined in the books entitled The Lord's Dealings with George Müller (3s. 6d. each, Nisbet & Co.), has had many readers, the first part having circulated to the number of 36,000 copies. A capital narrative of the life and labours of George Müller has been compiled by J. E. H., and issued in a neat form with the title Rich in Faith. In addition to a resumé of the career (with portrait) of the renowned preacher and friend of the orphan, we have here a report of his last public address. (1d. J. E. Hawkins, 15, Paternoster-row, E.C.)

Among the Churches

Church of England.

Rev. J. McArthur, vicar of All Saints', South Acton, has been appointed Bishop of Bombay.

Rev. G. S. Streatfeild was inducted into the charge of Christ Church, Hampstead, on Tuesday week.

The Bishop of Stepney received on Good Friday an anonymous gift of £1000 for the East London Church Fund.

We hear that the vicarage of St. Matthew's, Brixton, has been offered to Rev. Dr. Springett, rector of West Tarring, Worthing.

Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton, Governor of South Australia, is expected to pay a visit to England with his family at the end of this year.

The trustees of Christ Church, Finchley—an Evangelical body—have conferred the living on Rev. J. T. Long, M.A., Vicar of St. Benet's, Cambridge.

Rev. H. B. Bisshopp, Caius and Ridley Hall, Cambridge, and honorary worker at St. James's, Bermondsey, has been offered the charge of St. Luke's, Plymouth.

It is now stated authoritatively that, acting upon urgent medical advice, the Bishop of Calcutta (Metropolitan of India) is about to resign his see, as he is suffering from an affection of the nervous system.

Bishop Lightfoot's memory will long be fragrant in the Durham diocese. But there is also an outward and visible constant reminder of him. A large window is about to be placed in the west front of the Church of St. Ignatius the Martyr, Sunderland. The late Bishop founded the church, at a cost of £10,000, in 1887, in commemoration of his ten years' ministry in the diocese.

It is a noticeable fact that the Church Army has a greatly increased demand made upon it for parochial evangelists, mission nurses, rescue and slum workers. There has been a remarkable development of mission and colportage van work, and the committee are constantly looking out for likely candidates for it. The old experience is again verified that those who go out to seek the people find them.

Archdeacon Diggle has been giving addresses at several men's services in the diocese of Carlisle, but perhaps the most interesting service was in Christ Church, Cockermouth, where all the Dissenting ministers attended, and were accommodated with seats in the chancel, and one of them, Rev. R. W. Butterworth (Wesleyan), read the lesson. It was generally felt that the cause of charity, if not of reunion, was furthered by the service.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, presiding at the annual meeting of the East Kent Church Missionary Union, referred especially to the great importance which women's work occupied in the evangelisation of heathen and Mohammedan countries. It was well known that the hardest work which missionaries had to face was that among Mohammedans, but he thought as time went on that women would be able to do a great deal more than men had accomplished by quietly influencing Mohammedan women and children.

Congregational.

Rev. Edward White is better, but still weak.

Rev. E. E. Wilkins has entered on his new charge at Torrington.

Rev. N. MacNeill is resigning his charge at Rouel-road, Bermondsey.

An invitation to Tonbridge has been accepted by Mr. D. F. Stewart.

Rev. F. V. Dowling has been ordained to the ministry at Claremont, West Australia.

Rev. F. Hall, of Worple-road, Wimbledon, has been called to Bar Church, Scarborough.

Rev. Martin Johnston, of Hamley Bridge, has been called to the pastorate at College Park, Adelaide.

Last week a new mission hall was opened at Toker's Green, Reading, and a new chapel at Twyford.

Rev. William T. Ball, of East Cowes, Isle of Wight, has accepted the pastorate of the Fishergate Church, Portslade, near Brighton.

The London Congregational Board has elected Rev. J. Morlais Jones as chairman, and Rev. James Knaggs vice-chairman, for the ensuing year.

At the annual meeting of Paddington Chapel it was stated that seventy-four new members had been received since Rev. J. Ossian Davies became pastor in June last. The whole work is bright with promise.

Baptist.

Rev. C. H. Marsack Day has accepted a call to Bartholomew-street, Exeter.

Rev. G. Buckley, late of Hanley, has been recognised as pastor of Salem Chapel, Longford.

Rev. I. L. Near has entered on the pastorate at Christ Church, Aston Park, Birmingham.

Rev. E. M. Andrews, of Shepshed, has accepted the pastorate at Ramsbottom, Manchester.

Rev. I. O. Stalberg, Penarth, Cardiff, has accepted the pastorate of Bunyan Chapel, Norbiton.

Rev. A. Rollason has resigned the pastorate at Saffron Walden, after twenty-three years' service.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the work at North Finchley has been held with much enthusiasm.

Rev. T. Moore Smith, late assistant at City Temple, Glasgow, has accepted an invitation to the pastorate at Tandragee, Ireland.

Trinity Chapel, Huntingdon, under the pastorate of Rev. R. F. Guyton, has recently had a blessed time of ingathering; forty-nine new members, most of them young people, being received into the fellowship on Sunday, April 3, as the result of the "seed-sowing" of the pastor and his helpers, and of a united mission arranged by the Free Church Council.

At the Bromley-road Tabernacle, Burnt Ash Hill, Lee, the pastor's twelfth anniversary was celebrated on Easter Sunday and Monday. The preacher on Sunday was Rev. S. D. Hillman, and on Monday Rev. W. Stott. A public meeting was held on Monday, presided over by Mr. Frank Arnold, J.P. Addresses were delivered by Revs. W. Holyoak, S. D. Hillman, G. Simmons, Isaac Levinsohn, Mr. S. J. West, and the pastor (J. W. Davies).

The annual meeting of the Tredegarville Chapel, Cardiff, was held last week. The secretary reported an increase of twenty-one members during last year, making total membership 649. The Sunday-school has also grown rapidly, some 150 additional scholars being reported. The total amount raised for all purposes was £1340 9s. 8d. The present aspect of the whole work is very encouraging, and special satisfaction is felt that all the four branches of the church are sharing in the general prosperity. Addresses were delivered by Principal Edwards and Rev. W. T. Lee.

Methodist.

Special missions of an encouraging character are reported in Middlesbro', Saltburn, and Peterboro'.

At Yarmouth a fortnight's special mission has been conducted by the ministers and a missionary of the town.

New chapels have been opened at Willerby, near Hull; Oldham; Leicester; and St. James'-road, Old Kent-road.

The fire at the Lycett Memorial Chapel has done damage to the extent of £1600, part of which is not covered by insurance. The vicar of Christ Church offered any of his church rooms for services, but arrangements had already been made to hold services in Beaumont Hall. About £100 worth of bazaar goods was destroyed in the fire, which had been prepared for a bazaar on the 28th.

Writing from Golbanti, East Africa, Rev. R. M. Ormerod reports substantial progress during the past year. The most influential chief, formerly an avowed opponent, is now a regular attendant at the service, and his younger brother is a scholar in the Sunday-school. Three Sunday-schools have been opened on the Tana for the Pokomoes. Mrs. Ormerod is the only English woman in the province of Tanaland.

The Shang tung Medical Mission reports that for each of the three months of last quarter there was an average monthly attendance of 1000 patients and a daily average of twenty-six in-patients. Dr. F. W. Marshall says the successful performance of an unusually large number of major operations has materially increased the reputation of the hospital. A number of grateful patients have presented an honorary tablet to the hospital.

The trustees of the Wesleyan Centenary Hall and Mission House, having decided on the permanent retention of the present site in Bishopsgate-street Within, are taking steps for the erection of a new structure suited to the requirements of modern Methodism in the City of London. The proposed scheme involves an estimated expenditure of £70,000. The lower portion will be let off, and the first and second floors, with remaining sections, will be used for home and foreign missions and other departments of Methodism. The present edifice has been in the possession of the Wesleyan Methodists for more than half a century, and has greatly increased in value during the past few years on account of its central position.

Presbyterian.

Rev. D. M. Connan has withdrawn his resignation at Kentish Town.

A call from the recently formed congregation at Bournemouth has been accepted by Rev. A. Urquhart, Aberdeen.

Rev. J. Park Noble, of Lister-hill Congregational Chapel, Bradford, has been received into the Presbyterian Church.

The London Presbytery, North, reports forty-nine congregations, with an increase for the year of 210 communicants.

Interesting services have been held at Caversham-road, Reading, in connection with the induction of Rev. J. H. Cooke, LL.D.

The Pan-Presbyterian Alliance will be held next year in Washington, under the presidency of Rev. Dr. Marshall Lang, of Glasgow.

Salvation Army.

The Salvation Army opened at Motherwell six weeks ago. So much interest has been awakened that a larger hall has had to be taken. A large number have professed conversion, some of the cases being of exceptional interest.

The recent week of self-denial observed by the Salvation Army has yielded in the British Isles alone £33,000, or nearly £8000 more than was similarly raised last year. The returns from British Colonies and foreign countries have not yet been received. Wales sends £1344, Manchester £1105. Telegraphing from the United States, General Booth congratulates his "British forces" upon the results of their self-denial efforts. He adds: "Your magnificent and unprecedented self-denial achievements have earned my deepest gratitude. I am satisfied that the outcome of the offering will not only prove of immense benefit to the dark, suffering, sinning masses, but also constitute a monumental object-lesson to the entire Army."

Fallen Asleep.

At St. Andrews, on 11th inst., Rev. J. Millar, aged 84, upwards of 50 years parish minister of Largoward, St. Andrews, N.B.—At Portobello, Mr. John Webster, aged 92, a celebrated Scotch farmer, an attached member of the Free Church of Scotland, and one who, through a long and honoured career, had worn the white flower of a blameless life.—At Frinton-on-Sea, on 9th inst., Rev. W. Crombie, Congregational minister.—At Moorlynels, Bridgwater, Mr. W. A. Palmer, an evangelist and earnest labourer.—At Gravesend, Mr. T. Smith, J.P., a leading citizen and a liberal supporter of Christian work.—At Lister Hills, Bradford, on 7th inst., Mr. F. Whitley, aged 73, Sunday-school superintendent for many years, a devoted worker.—At Burlington, Mrs. Bosward, wife of the minister of Bondgate Wesleyan Chapel.—At Scarborough, Mr. William Barry, J.P., a valued worker at Albemarle Chapel, and a leading citizen.—At St. Clears, Carm., Rev. David Williams, aged forty-eight, pastor of Salem Chapel.—In Bendigo, Victoria, Rev. G. A. Welter, who went out to Australia some nine years ago, having previously been engaged in evangelistic work in this country in connection with the Evangelisation Society and Mr. Charrington's work in the East End of London.—At Maidstone, Rev. G. B. Watson, a retired Presbyterian minister, who for a quarter of a century laboured at New Brompton.—At Deeping St. James, Rev. John George, vicar of the parish, at the age of eighty-one, a standard-bearer of Evangelical truth, who had held the living of Deeping St. James for fifty-seven years, having been appointed in 1841.—At Teneriffe, on the 11th inst., Mr. J. T. Gray, of Edinburgh, a well-known business man, an elder of Mayfield Free Church, and a prominent member of several of the Free Church committees.—At Bovea, co. Derry, Rev. Adam Magill, for over fifty years the respected Presbyterian minister of Bovea.—At Clonbioch, Ballinasloe, Mr. Robert Hay, an earnest Presbyterian elder, aged eighty-one years.

"I was brought low, and He helped me."

Psalm cxvi. 6.

By T. J. BARNARDO, F.R.C.S., Ed.

IT is from no lack of gratitude that at a time like this I feel bound to ask—Is it always to be the open door and the empty treasury? the unceasing, steady stream of waif-entrants, and the trickling or the nearly stagnant flow of monetary help? The burden of the work is as nothing; but the burden of the financial strain is incalculable! If only I could be set free to devote myself to the actual task of child-rescue! But I have had that IF ahead of me for thirty years and more, and I hardly expect to attain it now. Yet it does one good to have an ideal, and perhaps God may yet lay it on the hearts of His stewards as something to be prayed for and to be sought after. To-day nearly Five Thousand Children, of all ages and both sexes, all of them helpless and friendless but for the Homes, look for sustenance and upbringing to me and to the army of helpers who act through me. Eighty thousand donors contribute annually to the treasury. So that, roughly speaking, it takes the united offerings of a dozen or sixteen givers to support each child. Every new admission, therefore, ought to imply some sixteen additional donors. But my receipt-books, alas, show that it does not!

THAT is the human side of it, and God works by means. On my side I DARE NOT lessen the work or narrow the doorway! The task is urgent enough in the interests of the children, of the State, of the Church, of civilisation! And I feel that it is the duty of Christ's servants to bring the income up to the stern needs of the situation, and my personal duty just to keep open wide the door and lay hold of the wanderers on the highways and byways. I cannot disguise from myself or from my readers that the task is growing more and more difficult as the years roll on. But I feel and know that this is God's work, carried on in obedience to God's call, and I cast the burden upon Him in assured hope and confidence. It is the cause of God's people, of God's Church, of God Himself; and I am assured that, despite all my difficulties and drawbacks, it shall not be confounded.

BUT to touch very lightly upon my most recent experiences. Few except those who know would give full credence to the story of daily perplexities, of daily deliverances, and of daily anxieties which it falls to my lot to chronicle. Suffice it to say that the task of keeping everything going, of maintaining open doors for the absolutely destitute and homeless Waifs who apply day and night, and of feeding and clothing the thousands of Orphan and Outcast Children who are always in my family, has been, since the 1st of January, 1898, exceptionally severe. On some mornings the post has not brought me in money enough to pay even the food bills of the day! On other days special demands have been encountered for which no adequate financial provision could be arranged beforehand.

I BEGAN 1898 with a deficiency from the previous year of £3850 to be made up, and no one can realise what that has meant in a work which at the best of times is strained to the utmost to meet other strenuous calls upon it! Since then, alas, a further deficiency has been steadily growing day by day. One or two friends who gave me very large help last year, and who promised, if possible, to renew that help in 1898, have had to explain that, owing to curtailment of income, they must for the present withhold their hands.

AND YET the children are thronging round my doors, with their pitiful cry for aid, in undiminished numbers! Oh, these poor ragged, footsore, wretched tramp Children; these Waif Children living in slums and lodging houses, under the care of thief-trainer and professional beggar, in the clutches of the exploiter of child misery and of the cruel English savage! How my heart yearns to save them all! Some of those I admitted recently are stone-blind; some are crippled for life; some are the victims of inherited disease; some are girl waifs who have been exposed to degradation as well as to hunger and homelessness; some, hardly less to be pitied, have been little bread-winners on their own behalf, with all their childhood crushed out of them by the bitter struggle; others still have always been tramps, small children who have never known home, or home life, or family love, or innocent pleasures, or tender care! God help them all! I have sometimes dared to refuse everyone not absolutely homeless, or, being girls, not in immediate moral danger; but even so my doors have had to be thrust back wide to the wall to let in a multitude of the struggling, perishing Waifs whose cases were too bad to permit of one moment's hesitation or delay!

When I occasionally talk of Waifs who have not had a home, or have never known the comforts of the poorest little room as their permanent dwelling, people often say, "Surely there are no children like that nowadays!" Look at the two little faces glancing out at you from this page! Ethel is seven years of age; Sophie is five. All their lives long these girls have been homeless. They have tramped about the country with their parents, sleeping either in lodging-houses or in the casual wards, but they never had a hearth of their own. The union has been the only place to which these English nomads could give the name of home. They were among the "ins and outs," that heart-breaking class who claim a shelter for a few days, and then when the children begin to settle down to school the parents take their discharge, and the whole family are out and off again.

THE MOTHER finally died in the workhouse in 1896. The father, a thorough vagrant and of utterly worthless character, continued to tramp about, accompanied by his two daughters. In their wanderings they passed through Yorkshire, and application was made at our Leeds Ever-Open Door to give a night's shelter to the two girls. My agent immediately saw the possibility of detaining them, and of thereby changing the whole current of their lives. Inquiry into the father's character made it certain that we could not hope to effect any permanent change with him. He had frequently been in the hands of the police. At one time it was for being drunk and disorderly; at another time he had served fourteen days with hard labour as a refractory pauper; at yet another time he had undergone ten months' imprisonment for horse-stealing. He was a beggar and a tramp; he did no work that he could avoid; he spent any money he could get in drink, and always, alas! these two poor little mites were dragged at his heels! It was hard to prove neglect against him. An attempt had been made, but it was unsuccessful. He was the children's father, and therefore, in the eye of the law, he had to be a gross offender before he could be punished. Meanwhile the little girls were growing up. For what? Vagrants, beggars, tramps, or worse—assuredly, if unrescued, for a life of nameless degradation! Prevention was the only thing. Save the children now; lift them out of the morass in which they were sinking up to the neck, place them upon the rock of a kindly home, and surround them with the atmosphere of Christian feeling and loving care—do that, and then they might be saved! And as ours is not mere theory, but practical work, the doors of our Leeds branch were opened widely to dear little Ethel and Sophie. They are now members of my family, and will go no more out until they are trained to fill a useful niche in life, and go forth to enter upon, I trust, a happy and a Christian career. They will, perhaps, enter domestic service, or they may go as emigrants to one of our colonies.

But while I write of doing this I am, and have been for some time, penniless! Yes, my dear reader, this is no exaggeration. For days I have had nothing in hand—indeed, less than nothing, if I must state the bare and naked fact, for I have had to overdraw at our bankers as heavily as they would suffer me to do. In my helplessness each day my only comfort has been to cast my burden upon the Lord and wait upon Him. Sometimes wonderful answers have arrived, often at the very last moment of extremity. At other times faith and patience have been sorely tried, and, doubtless for some good and gracious end, I have been often made to learn afresh my absolute daily dependence upon the good hand of God. It has, indeed, been a severe and constant struggle between the dictates of "prudence," the arguments of "common-sense," and the obedience of faith. "Does God hear? Will He help?" are answered by Christian experience. "I was brought low, and He helped me."

SOMETIMES I feel as if there were a great and unexpected deliverance at hand! How it will be sent I know not, nor from whom, except that it will come through some earthly channel, by our Mighty Deliverer. "This poor man cried, and the Lord heard him, and saved him out of all his troubles." So I go on "not knowing," simply day by day, "trusting God in the dark," doing the work He providentially sends me, even when the wherewithal to do it is not in hand; yet waiting upon Him and for Him, and knowing that somehow all will be well in His own good time.

SPECIAL ASSISTANCE came in most marvellously for the emigration of this year's first party of 160 fine lads who left on 31st March last, and who have since, I am glad to say, safely reached their destination; but for all the other requirements of the varied work in my hands I have known often and often of late what it is to "suffer want." And yet, in those hours of greatest trial and deepest exercise of faith, I have never been permitted to doubt even for one moment the rightness of my action in stretching out both hands to the perishing children at my doors, or as to the ultimate lifting from my shoulders of all these accumulating burdens. "In God's good time" is my hope and comfort. "Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted in me? Hope thou in God; for I shall yet praise Him who is the health of my countenance, and my God."

Notes and Comments

ON page 12 will be found a telling address by Dr. Fairbairn upon "Methods of Bible Study," which we commend to the thoughtful attention of all who love the Word of God.

We regret to announce that Mr. Ira D. Sankey, who, as mentioned in our columns, was intending to spend some weeks in this country, has felt compelled on account of the outbreak of war to alter his plans and return home at once. In anticipation of being here during the greater part of May, Mr. Sankey had entered into engagements to sing at some of the May Meetings. This he will not now be able to do, which adds to the regret with which his numerous friends in this country will hear of his early departure.

The advent of spring, with its gleaming sunshine and strengthening winds, is full of spiritual teaching. The resurrection life so abundant everywhere speaks in parable of the moral and spiritual resurrection of souls rising from the grave of sin into new and beautiful vitality at the call of Christ's voice, or the touch of his hand. As Nature yields herself to the genial wooing of the sun, and there is growth at once, so if we yield ourselves up to Christ we grow, naturally, in grace and in the knowledge which is life eternal. As silently as the rose puts on its beauty, so through the silent might of the Spirit may the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us.

A learned divine once said : "A Christian's duty is to ADMIT, SUBMIT, COMMIT, and TRANSMIT. You admit the truth of Christ ; you submit your will to Christ ; you commit your soul to Christ ; but what do you transmit ?" In the answer to the last point is found the measure of our success in those that precede. There are so-called Christians whose whole conception of religion seems to be summed up in the sense of benefits received. It may be truly said that no spiritual benefit can be adequately enjoyed except as it is being transmitted to others. Unless our hope is contagious, and our faith infectious, and our love diffusive, and our whole spiritual life a fund of helpfulness to others, we shall soon find that every spiritual activity in us will droop and fade, and all our wells of salvation will run dry.

The news of the destruction by fire of the Metropolitan Tabernacle will be a profound grief to an innumerable number of people throughout the world. The circumstances amid which the conflagration broke out gives to the event a melancholy interest. From all parts of the United Kingdom pastors trained in the College had assembled for the annual conference. The meeting of old students was very dear to the great Mr. Spurgeon's heart, and it was at the hour of this assembly that the calamity befell. There is to be no delay in reconstructing the edifice, though probably on a modified plan. The spot is sanctified by the prayers and praises of the countless worshippers who learnt from the gifted preacher's eloquent lips how to love and follow and serve the Lord Jesus Christ. Mr. Thomas Spurgeon writes us :—

I have made an earnest endeavour to reply to my sympathisers, but I am forced to give it up. Will you kindly help me to let friends who have written to me or to my church officers know that we all deeply appreciate their prompt expression of sympathy ? The interest and feeling are truly wonderful, and they have done much to keep us brave and to make us hopeful.

For the first time for a quarter of a century two Christian nations are at war. The long-drawn dispute between Spain and America has ended in an open rupture, and only through the wild terrors and anguish of a terrible conflict can peace and friendship once more be concluded. What lives will be sacrificed and suffering be caused before the end is reached no man can foretell. Christendom looks on with apprehension at this unleashing of the "dogs of war." Since the sword was last unsheathed between two great peoples the arts of destruction have been carried to an awful perfection, and the possibilities that open out are terrible. The only limits that hedge them are the humane instincts of the combatants (from which, however, little can be hoped for the present), and the Divine Sovereignty in which every earnest heart may put its trust. The prayers of the men and women in every land should now be raised that out of this disastrous struggle the will of God may be fulfilled, and good be brought through the working of warlike passions and hate.

The usual effects of war are already appearing in the increased price of coals and flour, two of the necessaries of life. Other things will be diminished in quantity and raised in value, thus causing more or less straitness to tens of thousands of the poor. We shall realise afresh how real is the solidarity of the nations. Is it too much to hope that one good result of the war may be the formation of a stronger antagonism than ever to war itself as a means of adjusting differences ?

In view of the great struggle that is just commencing, it is a helpful reflection that the ultimate issues of past conflicts in history have shown a Divine hand at work, and that results quite other and better than those aimed at by the human agents have been brought to pass. "I have girded thee, though thou hast not known Me" is a motto that applies far more widely than to Cyrus the Great. The Great Will that moves unhindered beneath the storms of human conflict carries the world on "by paths that men have not known," and in the long run the victor in every war, however disastrous its immediate consequences, is the Lord of Hosts. Out of sorrow and suffering come forth the fair growths of progress ; and after the anguish and terror of human struggles are over the "power that makes for righteousness" vindicates its holy sovereignty.

It is a great temptation to many, when events are stirring the public mind, to invest in a Sunday paper ; and certain daily organs issued special editions on Sunday last. The proprietors, no doubt, made a good thing of the prevailing excitement, but the purchasers of those editions had less reason to be satisfied. Probably a greater collection of canards was never published in England at once, as Monday morning's papers proved, and in the fraudulent paragraphs served to their patrons there was something typical of the unsatisfactory nature of all attempts to break in on the Divinely appointed rest, and to substitute vain amusements for the refreshment which God has appointed.

In spite of all the "competition" of foreign nations, and the disastrous trade struggles that continually break out at home, the Budget returns for the year proclaim a state of unparalleled commercial prosperity and progress. The British nation just now is at the very apex of its social expansion. There is more wealth, and it is more evenly divided among the community, than ever before in our history. For this we should be thankful. But we should also be severely on our guard, for periods of prosperity are periods of great danger to all our higher interests. Pride and arrogance, materialism, and a mad thirst for pleasure, are open traps for well-to-do nations as well as individuals. What Britain does with her wealth at this critical stage in her fortunes will inevitably settle the future of the Empire. If the people make use of the opportunity to develop their life into high channels, and to live a true and noble life, this wealth will be an unmixed blessing ; if they use it to pander to instincts of self-indulgence, and to forget God and the soul, it shall not be well for us in the end.

One effect of the Budget proposals ought to be to stimulate generosity on behalf of all philanthropic and missionary enterprise. Owing partly to the special schemes set on foot during the Jubilee year, and partly to the multiplication of societies, many of the older institutions have greatly suffered of late, and are sadly crippled for lack of funds. Many of them find it increasingly necessary to spend more money on advertising their needs, and in costly appeals for help. It is surely the duty of such as have been blessed with prosperity to seek out desirable causes to which to contribute, instead of waiting till heavy pressure has been put upon them to contribute. If the people remembered this when they are inclined to complain at the heavy percentage often frittered away in collecting income, they would find that a far larger proportion of their gifts go to the object to which they contribute, and save the hard-worked officials much anxiety and labour

The Bishop of Norwich has expressed in his presidential address to the Diocesan Conference some timely words on the changing social aspects of our times. Formerly the relation of rich and poor was summed up in the formula :

Deference from the poor towards the rich ; charity from the rich towards the poor.

Both these are now repudiated. Deference is now felt to be due to character, not to station. Throughout the country working men of all grades rebel against being in any way dependent on the alms of the rich, because it robs them of their independence, and takes away the strongest incentive to thrift and self-control. Such changes may cause some friction and some regret on the part of the well-to-do who have expected deference, and have willingly given alms where alms were needed; but they are signs of health and vigour that, as the bishop, says, should be wisely and kindly encouraged.

It will soon become urgent upon the Bishop of London to take steps to prohibit the Romish practices openly observed in some churches in his diocese. In one Church of the Reformation, on Sundays, before the eleven o'clock choral celebration of the Communion or High Mass, it is the practice to sing the Asperges, as is the custom in R. C. churches before High Mass. Writing of a recent "solemn requiem" there, the special correspondent of the Daily Chronicle says the service was partly taken from the Book of Common Prayer, and partly from the Roman Missal. .. On the other hand, the Ten Commandments with their responses, the prayer for the Queen, the Nicene Creed, the "Gloria in Excelsis," and the blessing ("The peace of God, etc.), all parts of the Anglican Communion Service, were omitted....The most remarkable innovation, however, was a ceremony that took place after the Communion service was over, to wit, the Roman Catholic ceremony known as the Absolutions.

The sermon was in support of the doctrine of purgatory. Some effective measures will have to be adopted if the Protestant character of the Church of England is to be preserved.

It is of the greatest importance that those who send convalescents to seaside and other Homes should know the character of the institutions which they select. An esteemed correspondent informs us that he has known of instances in which Protestant Nonconformists have been greatly shocked to find such Homes, though in name unobjectionable conducted on High Church, Ritualistic, and Popish lines as to their religious services and instructions. In Homes for children, particularly, this insidious policy is likely to prove very mischievous; therefore great vigilance is required on the part of those who would help the suffering poor in the stage of convalescence Mrs. Arbuthnot, of the Women's Protestant Union, has compiled a list of Homes where the religious teaching and influence are Scriptural and Protestant; so that in cases of doubt the benevolent might with confidence address inquiries to her, at Plaw Hatch, East Grinstead.

It is not generally known that, in spite of the favouritism shown generally to Roman Catholic institutions by the French Government, the only University Faculty in Theology under its sanction is a Protestant one, which still receives full governmental recognition and support as a constituent element of the University system. The French Assembly, after a long discussion of the matter, recognised that in the Roman Catholic Church theology has no adequate chance of being studied as a subject for reasoned investigation by scientific methods, while Protestants both profess this and actually do it. As a result, the faculty, since it was reconstituted in Paris after the war, has flourished so effectively that, though it, began with only ten students, now it has sixty-five, exclusive of foreigners. It would be difficult to over-estimate the value of the work done by this institution in leavening French thought, and rehabilitating theology in the national life and consciousness.

It is very doubtful if much good is gained by the publication of "Humours of Examinations," which are fashionable in the papers just now. They nearly always deal with absurd answers to Scriptural questions, which, however ludicrous they may be, betray a pathetic ignorance of Holy Writ among the examinees, and tend to associate the most incongruous ideas with sacred words. The more whimsical these ideas are, the more they tend to suggest themselves at times when the mind is anxious to give itself to serious thought, and so spoil a devotional mood. We know of cases in which beautiful verses have been largely spoiled for spiritual purposes by such incongruous associations. Humour is good, and there is a place for the ridiculous; but the circle of sacred thought should be kept free from the intrusion of ludicrous associations that are easy to form, but hard to banish from the mind.

In a well-conceived series of papers on "Life's Minor Moralities" in Good Words Lady Magnus gives a place for what she calls "Ways of Pleasantness," i.e., the duty of cheerfulness and contentment in our work. The fret and worry of the present day are proverbial; there are few who fulfil Carlyle's saying, "Give me the man who sings over his work." We miss many a wayside pleasure because of this; and we fail to fulfil the Divine law of joy in service. "Because thou servedst not the Lord with joyfulness and with gladness of heart for the abundance of all things...thou shalt serve thine enemies in hunger and thirst, and in the want of all things" (Deut. xxviii. 47, 48).

As with our worries, so is it with our work. "Because there are thorns in thy lot," says an old writer, "that is no reason for sitting on them"; and, as Lady Magnus aptly puts it, "they may be got rid of in a dozen different and better ways than by using them as stuffing for smartly upholstered chairs and cushions." To be bright of heart, to have our spirits full of the "joy of the Lord"—this is a duty which is "twice blessed," for it "blesses both him that gives and him that takes."

Mr. Henry Russell, now eighty-five years of age, has been informing the Young Man that all his famous songs, such as "Cheer, Boys, Cheer!" were composed and set to music as a medium of common-sense and righteousness "to make men satisfied with their masters, and masters satisfied with their men, or to put down gambling, or slavery, or the drink misery, or some other evil." Present-day songs he regards as generally degrading and lacking in originality. We know the songs of the day only as they casually strike our ears, and certainly they always appear imbecile enough, if not also positively mischievous. We could do with some singer and song-writer who would put conscience and heart into his work. Probably, the "common people" could more easily be lured by song into paths of contentment and religion than by any other means.

The British sailor is disappearing from our ships and steamers, and to a great gathering of admirals, captains, and other members of the United Services Commander Dawson has told the reasons why. His wages are poor, his living is none too good, his work is never done, and he has no home and no future. Commander Dawson said:—

In recent years British sailors have grown in respectability, in moral character, and in Christian principle. Make it possible for such superior men to earn secure livelihoods in the foreign-going trade for themselves, their wives, and their children. Respectable, God-fearing British-born sailors man the ships of the coasting and home trades, of some well-managed shipping companies in the foreign trade, yachts, and the Royal Navy. The just and considerate managers and captains of these well-ordered ships don't speak ill of their British crews. They are proud of them. Like master, like man; give retainers, pay at reasonable intervals, legal security for life at sea, stop crimping, stop Sunday cargo-working, give domestic wants more attention—make it pecuniarily profitable for shipping companies to carry Britons, and their managers will quickly find simple remedies for the evils existing in the foreign-going trade. They will take care to make their forecastles morally and physically habitable to respectable men, and to make frequent payment of wages, and thus attract decent Britons to their employment.

We are thus brought back to the simple old plan, which, in everything, is the best. "Do to others as you would have others do to you," and treat men as human beings.

It is an advantage to a man to travel, provided he goes with observant eyes and an honest mind. He will be sure to see that each nation has some good or useful thing which the rest lack. Thus Austria, reckoned among the backward nations, is said by Miss Edith Sellers in Temple Bar to have an emperor who, in his treatment of vagrants and of the aged, is a century in advance of his age, the former coming in for stern measures and the latter for kind consideration. No Austrian official would dream of classing the aged poor, whom the State supports, as paupers. Denmark distinguishes between the thriftless and the respectable poor. In Holland the aged poor are provided for by the various churches to which they belong; those who are of no church are supported by the communal or municipal authorities. In Iceland each ratepayer receives one or more of the aged poor as guests. In North America they are treated as criminals, but then, as a French writer declares, in Canada and the United States, especially in Columbia, the protection of children is intelligently organised. Perhaps new countries are most careful to prepare children for life, and then think they should make their way.

According to Dr. Charles F. Thwing, who writes in the North American Review on "Personal Morals and College Government," there has been a great improvement within the last twenty years in the morals of American students. A friend of his states that, after a careful observation of his own class, he had come to the conclusion that 85 per cent. were morally clean, whereas twenty years ago he does not think that that would have been true of more than 50 per cent. of the men in the senior class. Moral teaching, the endeavour to form a sound opinion on the vital question of purity which has marked the last quarter of a century, has evidently not been in vain.

How cheaply human life is held in Mohammedan countries, and how difficult it is to obtain justice, is graphically depicted in a sketch of the Court of the Ameer in Afghanistan given last week by Miss Lilias Hamilton, who spent some years as his guest and medical adviser. Our notions of the sanctity of the rights of the individual are rudely shocked by such an incident as this:—

On one occasion, when in a bad temper, and also in a great hurry, he ordered an innocent man to be hanged. With some trepidation this fact was pointed out to him. "Innocent!" said he, shrugging his Royal shoulders; "well, if he isn't guilty this time, he's done something else at another. Away with him."

We do not realise the blessings of liberty and even-handed justice which the poorest subject of the Queen enjoys till we find that such incidents as these are enacted in our own day and generation, and that under the rule of an ally of our own Government. Such violent contrasts should make us value our privileges at their true worth

A Work for All.

England is not to be evangelised by public preaching: it will not be done by galloping through a place and asking people to come and hear any public preacher.

So said the late Mr. Reginald Radcliffe at the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate-street, in March, 1875, and we believe he was right. A kind of uneasiness comes over us when we hear it still asked, as one of the problems of evangelistic despair, "How to reach the masses?" There is only one way, and never has been any other, viz., the way of individual dealing. It was the Master's way. He could work on the masses, He would call a crowd about Him, but He only won, saved, healed them one by one.

It is one of the most difficult things to bring the Gospel to the hearts and consciences of individual men. That which is said to the multitude is frequently received and believed by none. A person will sometimes listen for years to earnest appeals and urgent entreaties, and yet reach no decision and confess to no responsibility. The Apostle Paul informs us that in the ministry he not only taught the people publicly but "from house to house," thus by personal entreaty and admonition following up his exhortations and securing the desired results. This kind of ministry needs to be undertaken to-day upon a large scale by Christians of every denomination—or of no denomination — willing, courteously and courageously, to invite the people to a Saviour whom they themselves have already found.

During the past few months we have been rejoicing to see the vast multitudes who have gathered to hear and hang upon the words of Mr. McNeill, and afterwards to be seen in groups as the way of life was being explained in conversation by Christian men and women. We are hoping to see much more of this during the next few weeks. But are there not many thousands who will not go to the end of their street to hear any preacher? Therefore the very carelessness of these people is a strong appeal to earnest Christians to carry the Gospel to the doors and the homes of our whole population. Again the words of Mr. Radcliffe come to us—

How many thousands there are who, from infirmity, engagements, or indifference, never can be reached until the Church obeys the command to "Go" to "every creature"! Is it not a wretched, unbusinesslike mistake to reverse this command, and expect the walking to be done by the unconverted, instead of by the Church? There are times when we are to "hold the fort," but on this point the word of command of our Master, who walked Himself till He was weary, is "Advance!"

Yes, our Saviour set us the example of this quiet, persistent, personal work. How many of his conversations were personal and informal! A large proportion of his recorded sayings were to single individuals, even when spoken in the presence of the multitude; and often his discourses were communicated to a few friends or disciples, away from the tumult of the noisy throng.

But the seed thus sown in secret was not unfruitful. The "straight talk" with Nicodemus led him to come with Joseph and take down from the cross the mangled body of Him who said that night, "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up." The quiet conversation of the Lord with the woman by Jacob's well was echoed in the streets of Sychar, until the city was moved and many believed on the Lord "for the saying of the woman, which testified, 'He told me all that ever I did.'"

Let us follow the example of our Master, and our labour shall not be in vain—that is, if we labour "in the Lord." Let us make no mistake here. We are not exhorting God's people to go from "house to house" simply for the sake of filling up some spare time, or so that it may be known that you are a "district visitor," or a helper at this church or chapel or mission. God is marking what you are doing, therefore do it as unto Him. Don't go about it as if it were child's play, but let it be earnest, thorough, conscientious work, done with all your might. The souls saved by one such diligent worker may outnumber those gathered to Christ from the vast crowds that throng some costly edifice, and hang entranced upon the words of some Apollos, eloquent and mighty in the Scriptures.

We must not undervalue the gifts of God, or the power to move the hearts of multitudes; but neither must we bury in a napkin those smaller talents which are no less a sacred trust. J. S.

Misdirected Lives.

By D. L. MOODY.

THERE is something inexpressibly sad in a life misdirected and wasted. I do not feel so keenly the lack of funds for sending forth new missionaries as I do the failures of those who have evidently never been chosen by God. When God selects a man He never fails to open the way for him to go where He wants him, and in very many instances where God has not provided means I believe that is a clear indication that He has not called the would-be messenger. When Cornelius received the heavenly vision, and was commanded to send for Simon Peter, the latter was prepared by another vision to answer to the summons. So when God prepares and calls a servant He never fails of means to send whithersoever it may be.

I would not for one moment seek to discourage any man or woman who is called to Christian work at home or abroad from obeying the Master's voice, but I would do all in my power to keep any from pledging themselves to a work for which they are unprepared. No greater honour does God give a man than when He commissions him to serve at the front in some outpost of heathendom. But special qualifications are needed, such an unmistakable call that one shall call out like the Apostle of old, "Woe is me if I preach not the Gospel"—in India or China or the uttermost parts of the world. Let a man ever hold himself in readiness to do the will of God, learning from prayer and Bible study what each day's duty may be, and God will prepare him and set him to work in the very place where he can do the most towards the upbuilding of the kingdom of heaven.—Woman's Evangel.

Thou Complainest of Pain! What use were there of thy patience if thou ailest nothing? God never gives graces without an intent of their exercise. To what purpose were our Christian valour if we had no enemy to encounter?—Bishop Hall.

The Mormon Church.—There seems to be a belief, amounting to conviction, in the United States that the Mormon Church was not honest in its abandonment of polygamy, but simply professed its abolition to secure Statehood. The difficulty of getting trustworthy statistics is almost insuperable, as all Mormon marriages are performed in Mormon temples, where Gentiles are never allowed to enter. All ceremonies are secret, and all records hidden. The Independent, of New York, sent a circular to the postmasters of Utah asking certain specific questions. The replies received show that 2,500 men and 5,500 women were living in polygamy at the time of Utah's admission to the Union, and that at the present time "nearly all" have resumed their former relations.

Fellow Workers.

A TRIBUTE.

DURING each of my long journeys some of my dear friends and of God's dear and faithful servants have passed away. So that I wonder with painful interest whom I shall miss on my return. Shortly after I left England last October I learned that one of my most intimate and dearest friends, Mr. John Rodger Hall, of Newport, Mon., had been called in to see the King. Well do I remember his conversion in 1860, and his immediate entry into the vineyard to work for Christ and souls. Eleven years later, through the ministry of that mighty man of God, Robert Aitken, of Pendeen, he gave himself unreservedly to the Lord and to his service, and I have happy recollections of companionship with him at Brenchley, during Mr. Aitken's last mission, as well as at the historic Oxford Convention, and quite recently at Keswick. How well do I remember the persevering, indefatigable way in which he followed up those who were brought under his influence. Then our valued correspondent Mr. D. M. Drysdale, of Liverpool, whose papers on Aggressive Christianity must have been a stimulus to many, not merely to imitate him, but to stir up the gift that was in them and to exercise it in unconventional ways, to beat out a path for themselves in the world's wide wilderness—rather to yield themselves to the Holy Spirit's leading in accordance with the peculiarities and idiosyncrasies with which they were endowed by their faithful Creator.

And more recently, by the departure of the venerable George Muller, the Church of God throughout the world is made to consider afresh how mighty is the man who takes hold of the strength of God and commits himself unflinchingly, expectantly, and joyfully to a child-like faith in his unfailing promises. This man of God has been prominently before the world for upwards of sixty years. One remarkable feature in his life has, in his public utterances, constantly kept before us the year and month and even the day of the chief events of his life. Few men so lived under the microscope, voluntarily and spontaneously applied by himself to everyone's eye, and few men have lived who could bear so close an examination; few whose reputation has suffered so little, even by undeserved reproach.

These three men, so widely different in gift, in character, and in experience, were alike in this, that they were eminently soul-winners. They recall a story of "Uncle Vassar," who was of the same wise and noble order of Christian men. He was in the drawing-room of an hotel in which a lady was the only other occupant. He courteously approached her and asked her some plain question, and gave her wise counsel as to her personal salvation. Shortly after he had left, the lady's husband returned, and she told the strange circumstance of a perfect stranger speaking to her about her soul. The husband asked, "And did you not tell him to mind his own business?" "If you had been here, my dear," replied his wife, "you would have thought that was his business."

Of the three men whom I have named, who have been called to their reward, it may be said that it was their business to win souls.

Other brethren and sisters of whom the same testimony is borne are among the number recently called up higher. May their mantles fall with a double portion of their spirit upon others.

Los Angeles, April 4. R. Cope Morgan.

[Among these we may include the names of Mr. A. J. Arnold, for so many years secretary of the Evangelical Alliance, and Rev. H. M. Dyke (whose portrait was given last week), who, with his devoted wife, pioneered in Basutoland for above fifty years.—Ed.]

Shanghai.—Writing on January 28, our esteemed sister Mrs. Dalziel, who does visitation work among Chinese women, writes:—"This is the first week in the Chinese New Year. The native Christians met every day in one or other of the churches for prayer. Some five or six hundred met in the Cathedral, which was got through the influence of Rev. A. Elwin, of the C.M.S. I feel sure that we are being prepared for 'times of blessing,' for our missionaries and the Lord's work amongst the Chinese. One and another of his servants have come to Shanghai quite unexpectedly during the last year. Meetings were held for the 'deepening of spiritual life,' and on the subject of 'Our Lord's coming.' Will you remember Shanghai in your prayers?"

Methods of Bible Study.*

By Rev. Dr. FAIRBAIRN, of Mansfield College, Oxford.

THERE is nothing more difficult than for the man who teaches devotion to be devout; and yet unless such an one be as good as his own instruction his words will deservedly carry no weight. God, Eternity, Christ, and the Holy Spirit—the highest themes that can exercise the mind of man—may by use become so familiar that the theologian ceases to be a living personality and becomes or reciter of formulæ. Unless the faith of which he speaks is the very life of his soul a man should be dumb concerning things sacred. God has often to be pitiful to us when we speak in his name to men from a state which practically is the result of idleness and consequent unpreparedness, instead of having our whole man and our whole mind consumed with activity about sacred truth.

Devotion is not emotion, still less is it mere sentiment. A devoted man is not necessarily a devout man, for the one may serve a system, but the other lives in and for God. Hence, the study that I advocate seeks a Divine indwelling which shall subordinate all within the man to the gracious influences and impulses of the Holy Spirit of God. True devotion is very varied in its types; and I trust that whatever this Students' Movement does, it will not attempt to reduce piety to one mould, nor seek to make all devotion take on one character. The Spirit of God is infinitely varied in his operations and gifts, and He teaches charity towards forms of piety differing from our own, in the recluse, the theologian, the missionary, and the minister at work in slum or suburb. Wherever there is the possessing a man, with the earnest desire that it may be so in increasing measure, there and there only is devotion.

The Book which is to feed our devotion comes to us baptized with peculiarly holy associations when we regard its great Author as the God of our fathers, in whose lives it was a living thing; and what it was for them it may be for us. The first condition of devotional study is to take the Bible not merely as spoken to men centuries since, but as a living revelation speaking to us now; for the inspired Word will commend itself to the man indwelt by the Spirit of God. To be truly devotional, Bible study ought to be reasonable; for irrational study is of all kinds the most undevout. Strauss once said, "Science knows only the true: it does not know the holy"; to which I would reply that religion regards all which is true as holy. Nathaniel Culverwell well remarks that reason and faith are like Esau and Jacob: faith may be the younger and has the blessing; but reason is the elder, and ought to have its birthright.

This study should be continuous. I have a great aversion to dealing with Scripture in sentences—extracts taken out of their setting, and often deprived of their meaning. There are no verses in Scripture grander in devotion, or more majestic in phrasing, than those which conclude Rom. viii.; but their significance is lost by isolation, and he who would realise their full blessedness must not grudge the labour of coming to them through all that lies before. No study of the Bible is devotional which is occupied with detached texts, selected often in deference to human weakness; but the Bible is to be regarded as a means of giving spiritual strength. Growth should supersede the use of elements; and where a young man remains childish what English term shall characterise a condition which neither displays grit and Christian manhood nor affords ground for the reception of such things? We are all anxious to agree, but should be courageous enough to differ. Paul has made us richer by the way he did so; and his experience may well be made our own in similar circumstances. That leads me to of Bible study, namely, that it be personal. Your needs vary, and you would not be a man if they did not. When despondency comes, as it will come to all, do not turn for comfort to emasculated phrases. There are hymns of a sweet and luscious kind which I dare not give out in our college chapel; or I should see strong men of blood, muscle, and brain standing up to sing what not one of them can apply to himself. I would have you turn to those things which tend to make you strong. I am thankful that the sacred songs with which I was trained as a child were the grand old Hebrew ones; that my tongue found employ in the old village psalms that elevated the soul to God and yet humbled it before Him, picturing Him as our refuge and strength, well known in Judah's land and great in Israel, bearing sway, imposing commands, and accepting nothing but complete service from the soul. When your spirit is weak, seek elements of strength in the inspiring strain of the psalm, the ethical intensity of the prophet, the controversial vigour of the apostle, and in the passionate love of Christ shown by John and Mary. Make Scripture study have personal reference to yourself and to the inspiring of your own soul.

Unless this study be regular it will soon cease to exist. Fear not to be bound by rules as long as they are good. Not to be so bound means that you are carried about by any chance wind. Make the regular study of the Word of God bound to be observed, never once to be passed by. If you get into postponing a thing until late in the day, it will speedily disappear from the day altogether. Plan it for a time in the morning which you can command, and do not be afraid of the morning. Jeremy Taylor recommends us ever and again to rise early, get to the mountain top, and see the sun in its midsummer glory coming out of the bosom of darkness. How many of those whom I address have had that sight? How many of you have seen the sun rise on a winter's morning? It is very comfortable when the air is cold to take one's ease and lie still in bed. If you do so, having resolved overnight to rise betimes, you will speedily discover that failing to fulfil your resolution leaves you far weaker for the accomplishment of your purpose another time. Liszt, the pianist, said, "I practise three hours a day. If I miss a single day, I myself discover defects in execution because of the omission; if I do so twice, my most intimate friends detect the effect; but if I neglect such preparation for a third time, the public are conscious of the difference in my performance." Exactly so; and if you omit your customary study and mastery of the Word of God, your own soul will soon feel the effect of that omission. It will next become patent to your friends, and finally to the congregation which you address.

There are some phases of modern agitation for improved worship with which I cannot sympathise. I confess that when some speak of bright services, pleasant services, and all kinds of attractive services, my soul turns away in loathing. These things seem to suggest that the great end of service is not the worship of God, but the pleasure of man. The idea which commands my hearty and absolute belief is this—that the one thing needful to make service what it should be is the leading of a truly devout man. The man who lives in daily fellowship with God, secret, regular, thoughtful and spiritual, will never be other than simple and devout when he comes to speak to the people in the name of his Master. These, then, are points connected with the study of Scripture, as a condition of the devotional ministry, which should never be forgotten. Our own devotions being neglected, we are absolutely unfit to conduct exercises designed to bring men to the feet of God. If we are to remain what we ought to be—spokesmen of God to men and of men to God, we should day by day make it our first and supreme duty devoutly to study that Word which speaks to us of his truth, and the disclosure of which is to be the grand theme of all our preaching.

* Addressed to Theological Students assembled at the recent Conference in Birmingham.

Theological Students in Conference.

(Concluded.)

[By Our Own Representative.]

RESUMING our report of this interesting Conference in Birmingham, we come to the afternoon meeting in the Masonic Hall on Thursday, 14th inst., Mr. D. M. Thornton presiding. The subject was, "Devotional Bible Study." After Rev. Dr. Fairbairn, Mr. J. R. Mott (U.S.A.) spoke upon "The Morning Watch," earnestly advocating an extension of the practice adopted by many eminent Christians in our own and other days, of early rising in order to spend the first quiet hours of each day in communion with God through his Word and Spirit.

The speaker offered numerous practical suggestions for the profitable use of the time thus set apart. Rev. G. H. Macgregor next dealt with the subject of intercessory prayer as an instrument of mighty power for good, involving a closeness of fellowship with God of which few have had experience. The work of intercession is the very highest form of Christian service, and its importance as an auxiliary in the conversion of men cannot be over estimated. For the exercise of such a ministry the qualifications are a full experience in our own personal life of God's saving power and the special aid of the Holy Spirit. It involves much self-denial, seeing that the extent of God's indwelling in us is inversely proportioned to selfish inclination and practice.

The evening meeting was held in the Town Hall where Mr. D. M. Thornton again presided, supported on the platform by ministerial and other representatives of various denominations in the city and throughout the country. Mr. Eugene Stock (C.M.S.) enforced in simple but powerful style the claims of Christ upon his people for increased attention to the needs of unevangelised lands. He detailed one piece of history from the records of missions (connected with the Punjab in 1848) showing how godly men in the midst of subject races have been influential for the cause of peace and order. Finally, considerations of personal responsibility for absolute surrender of Christians to their Divine Master's disposal at home or abroad were solemnly pressed home. Rev. W. T. Barber, who has recently returned from work for God in China, dealt with the subject of the evening, "The Duty of the Church of Christ to the World," from a missionary's point of view. He eloquently urged missionary claims from the absolute unity of spirit and interest which should characterise the relations of the Church with her Lord, as reflected in the Christian home; and from the Saviour's Spirit of self-emptying, that needy suffering souls might be filled.

The progress of the World's Students' Christian Federation is a theme which was ably expounded by the earnest secretary of that movement, Mr. J. R. Mott. It was started in America and Canada, twenty years ago, and now has a membership of nearly 35,000 students and professors, with 11,000 young men in Bible circles. Since its beginning this movement has influenced between 4000 and 5,000 young men to enter the Christian ministry. From the Student Volunteer movement about 12,000 workers have reached the foreign mission field; and another 400 were derived from the British College Christian Union. Germany now has its University Christian Alliance. Scandinavia has an international organisation just three years old, including Norway, Sweden, Denmark, and Finland, and an S.V. movement has been organised. In Holland and Switzerland beginnings are seen; Paris has a Protestant Students' Association numbering nearly 200; and Italy, Austria-Hungary, and the Turkish Empire have been visited in the interests of the movement. In India 1500 student delegates came together; and here 300 young men have given up agnosticism or their Hinduism, and two gave up Mohammedanism. In the numerous student centres of Australasia the movement is spreading fast, and in South Africa it has greatly stimulated missionary effort. The possibilities of the Chinese race much impressed Mr. Mott. The China which had gone down under the chariot wheels of Japan was composed of men of the official classes, graduates of an antiquated system. It is the chain of modern colleges, founded with few exceptions by missionary societies, that is training the leaders of the new China. At a federation conference there were 1500 Chinese students, 600 Chinese masters and pastors, and 400 educational missionaries; and the S.V. movement is showing great vigour. In Japan the federation has thirty-eight college associations, the great Imperial University being included. It is a great cause of thankfulness that, instead of the five young men who prayed under a haystack twenty years ago, Mr. Mott's tour round the world reveals 50,000.

All Friday's meetings were held in the Masonic Hall. At the first of these, mainly devoted to prayer, Rev. Dr. Geo. Robson, of Perth, delivered a brief address calculated to clear away misconceptions concerning "the watchword" of the Student Volunteer movement, namely, "The Evangelisation of the World in this Generation," which motto he regarded as simply and purely a definition of missionary obligation to be taken up in dependence upon the Holy Spirit of God.

At the ensuing morning session Mr. W. H. T. Gairdner, travelling secretary of the S.V.M.U. (Students' Volunteer Missionary Union) read a report on the relations of that body and of the B.C.C.U. (British College Christian Union) to British theological colleges. It showed that the Christian movement among students has two aspects. First in order of time was the S.V.M.U., which, in its existence of six years has enrolled 1500 members, of whom 400 are already actually at work in the foreign field. The second aspect, and wider spiritual action of the movement, is the B.C.C.U., a separate but complementary union, to which organisations, not individuals, are affiliated, the ultimate object being the winning of our colleges to become strongholds of spiritual life. This latter union has, since 1895, affiliated over thirty colleges. The missionary study scheme, started two years ago in connection with the S.V.M.U., was adopted in many theological colleges, and the students had been made acquainted with "the watchword." It was, however, a serious fact that the colleges had to some extent failed to keep in touch with the gradual development of the Union ideals, which could not be accomplished without a deep knowledge of missions on the part of the entire Church at home. On this important subject much ignorance exists in congregations and ministry alike; and the executive hope that one direct result of the Conference will be the launching of a regular systematic course of missionary study in theological colleges, which may have far-reaching influence on the great primary aim of the Union.

Mr. G. T. Manley (Christ's College, Cambridge) spoke of the reception of the memorial presented last year to all the leaders of the various sections in Christ's Church. The Union entered upon this step only after long deliberation and prayer. Looking back upon that action, they could only regard it as natural growth rendered necessary by that inner force which is the life of the Union. The conviction grew upon them that the world would not be evangelised by chance, and that it would be brought about by nothing short of a great revival in the Church, culminating in set purpose and wise plans. Enthusiasm had abounded, and votes of sympathy had been passed, but none of the great Christian bodies of England had adopted the watchword, discussed its possibility, or formulated it as a purpose and policy. In the encyclical of the Lambeth Conference foreign mission work was said to be the primary duty of the Church; and he hoped that at the next gathering of that kind—nine years hence—the watchword would be adopted and plans made in accordance with it. In one aspect of the ministry they were unworthy of being called prophets, but it was their duty to voice the watchword to the Church and devote their lives to its realisation. If the leaders of to-day reject it, the time will come when students will be ministers, with a passion to satisfy the longings of Christ, and determined to claim the power of God for evangelising the world in this generation.

Eminently practical suggestions as to how the matter is to be taken up in churches and congregations were offered by Rev. G. Wilson. Students must "peg away" at the Churches, not depending too much upon leaders, but getting hold of the hearts of God's people with the memorial, until the mind of the Master becomes the policy of his Church. They must obey the Divine imperative which grasps a man's heart and brain, and settle with God the sphere in which the uses of their lives shall be given, recognising that home and foreign missions are one in organic unity. The reports of missionaries are not always helpful reading to home Churches; and men are wanted with pens powerful in vivid portrayal of what they see among the perishing heathen.

Student members of the Established Church in England and Ireland, delegates from Welsh colleges, English, Scottish, and Irish Presbyterians, and members of Nonconformist Churches in Britain assembled in sectional conference during the afternoon, and afterwards jointly adopted the report.

Cordial letters of sympathetic greeting to the Conference were read out from the chair by Mr. D. M. Thornton at the evening meeting. The first came from 1500 Christian Endeavourers of Birmingham, the next from the president of the faculty of theology in the University of Paris, and the last from the theological students of Dugdale, South Africa.

The watchword, which has justly loomed so large in the view of the Conference, formed a congenial topic for Mr. J. R. Mott, as the first speaker at this final public gathering. To accomplish "the evangelisation of the world in this generation" means bringing Christ within the reach of every human being, so that all may have an intelligent opportunity of accepting Him as a personal Saviour. The possibility of carrying out such a large programme of missionary work must be evident when we consider that the Early Church reached with the Gospel the whole known world of its day, and was not possessed of any advantage which the Church of the present day has not. Indeed, Christians now have means and facilities which should make the reaching of the present known world much easier than was the task of early times. The greater part of this work would fall upon the Anglo-Saxon race; and it will be a calamity if that race does not rise to its opportunities. At the end of this address students and others who hope to become missionaries and those who hope to be in the mission field within a year stood up at the invitation of the chairman.

Mr. W. H. T. Gairdner (Trinity College, Oxford), dealt with "The Secret of Giving," showing that money is not essentially evil, but may be considered as the equivalent of bodily or mental labour. While the incomes of missionary and other societies are not declining, the increase within the last ten years has not kept pace with that of volunteers for the mission field. This is not owing to scarcity of means in the nation generally, but mainly arises from the keeping up of a certain style of living. He pleaded, therefore, for simplicity of life, so that there may be greater gifts for the maintenance of God's work.

From the statement of Mr. H. C. Duncan, general secretary to the two Unions, it appeared that the S.V.M.U. needs £800 for its year's work, not more than one-third of which is yet promised; while the B.C.C.U. budget of £650 is short by £200, which has to be raised within three months in order to avoid a deficit. The Conference came to a suitable close with a praise meeting in the Y.M.C.A. on Saturday morning.

Friendless and Fallen.—The five homes and open-all-night refuge, which have just commenced a new financial year, are needing funds to carry on the work. Since January last 269 applications for admission have been received, and all suitable cases have been promptly succoured, irrespective of creed, class, or country. The benefits of the homes are free, and all workers amongst the lapsed masses are heartily co-operated with in seeking to save the lost. At least 700 meals have to be provided for every day throughout the year. The inmates are trained in habits of industry, and upwards of 2000 Gospel services, Bible, temperance, and other classes are held annually with a view to win them for Christ. Further particulars may be obtained post free from Mr. W. J. Taylor, 200, Euston-road, London, N.W.

Persecution in Russia.

A FOREIGN correspondent, who has been travelling in Southern Russia, sends us notes of measures recently discussed, and in some places applied, for the suppression of Dissent, by the persecution of persons designated in official quarters as "dangerous sectarians." It is not the Stundists this time, nor the Dukhobortsi, but the Shelapoots, or Spiritual Brothers, a communistic sect who are as much admired for their moral purity, honesty, and industry as they are feared in official circles because of their proselytising activity.

Engaged in agriculture, these people lead useful lives, and, in spite of repression and persecution, charm many into their ranks by reason of their happy mood and peaceable condition. At a missionary conference in Kajan some months ago, the Russian ecclesiastical authorities resolved that the sectarians should no longer be allowed to open schools for themselves, and that those already open should be closed. It was also decided to regard membership of the sects as justifying banishment to Siberia. Moreover, as it was reported that in some districts dissenters were attending the Lutheran churches, it was resolved to ask the Government to forbid Divine service in these churches in the Russian language. Further, it was proposed to deprive dissenters of their children, and place the little ones under the care of Orthodox guardians; but financial and other difficulties presenting themselves, this proposition was not adopted. Another suggestion—the adoption of which would, it was said, greatly advance mission work — was that dissent should entail the confiscation of property. These matters were left for debate at a future conference.

One of the brutal suggestions of the Kajan conference was carried into effect shortly afterwards in a village in the Rostof district of South Russia. On the fatal day, thirty families, parents and children, of the Shelapoots, were gathered in the yard of the rural board, and were there mocked and abused by the authorities of Church and State. The priests declared that sectarianism must be put down; the judge pronounced for the abduction of children of from two to eleven years of age, in order that they might be educated by "trustworthy" villagers. At first dazed with this decision, the poor parents soon burst into woful crying, in which they were followed by their little ones, and at length even by onlookers, who had previously echoed the official mockery and scorn. "Why are they so cruelly treated?" said many a pitiful witness of the scene; "they have done nobody any harm." A minority, with sullen looks, cried "Serve them right, the castaways!" As the cruel penalty was, in due course, put into execution, by the children being forcibly taken away, mothers wailed and fathers prayed for mercy. One by one the poor people fell to the ground, and, regardless somewhat of the demands of consistency, flocked around the authorities, kissing the hem of the priests' gowns, and embracing the feet of the judge! The scene was painful beyond description, and one of the priests was observed to join in the general weeping. One poor man, a widower, fell senseless when his little girl was taken from his side. A savage kick brought him round, and then he realised anew the severity of the punishment meted out to him and others, while some of the Orthodox compassionately inquired, "Why are they thus tormented?" And all this barbarity in the interest of "home missions," and for the furtherance of the Gospel!

Central Africa.—Dr. Prentice, of the Livingstonia Mission (says the Scotsman), has recently arrived in this country, after completing his exploration of the watershed of Central Africa from near the foot of Lake Tanganyika south to the foot of Lake Nyassa, at Kasungu. He has laid open a fine country, well peopled and generally well watered, between the head-waters of the Congo and the sources of the northern affluents of the Zambesi. Proceeding by the Ngoni, whom the mission has tamed, Dr. Prentice and his party crossed the Mzimba river on the 18th November last, and at Mlala found one of the Ngoni native teachers hard at work among the youth of an immense parish. Chipwaira, the late Kasungu chief's brother, enthusiastically welcomed Dr. Prentice and his teachers, and the son of King Mwasi became the first pupil. For a week the headmen of the many villages pressed for teachers, and ultimately eight were settled, with 516 lads, who in six weeks mastered words of two syllables. All the Scottish and German missionaries were well, except Dr. Ramsay, who has been invalided.

The Pastors' College:

BURNING OF THE TABERNACLE.

CONFERENCE week at Newington Butts in this year of grace will be ever memorable for the sudden fiery catastrophe which on Wednesday, April 20, swept the Metropolitan Tabernacle out of existence. In one brief hour the great building, so historic in the annals of modern Christianity, was gutted by the devouring flames and reduced to a smouldering mass, with only the bare walls and the front portico remaining as tangible relics of an illustrious past. Readers will have seen full details of the sad event in the daily Press. The fire seems to have been caused by an overheated flue; it spread so rapidly that any hope of saving the building was speedily gone. Fortunately the ravages of the flames were confined to the Tabernacle itself. All the surrounding property, including the College buildings, escaped, thanks largely to the absence of high wind at the time of the outbreak.

Excessive regrets in such a case are vain and bootless. Though naturally moved with real sorrow and a sense of irreparable loss at the vanishing of a building so fraught with holy memories and inspiring associations, Pastor Thomas Spurgeon and his fellow-officers in the church are bravely bearing up, and striving to see in the apparent calamity some wise and providential visitation from the hand of Him who never afflicts his servants willingly. The building was insured to a considerable extent, and therefore the task of re-erection will be rendered comparatively easy. Moreover, the event has struck a chord of world-wide sympathy among Christians who revered the memory of the late pastor, C. H. Spurgeon, and who valued the undying service he rendered to the cause of Christ in his day and generation. That sympathy is finding practical expression in many quarters, and we cannot doubt that the monetary loss caused by the fire will be much more than made up by the spontaneous gifts of Christendom. Many words of heartfelt and brotherly condolence have already been sent to the Tabernacle authorities, and many more will be received in the days and weeks to come. The immediate needs of the great congregation in connection with Sunday services are being met by a temporary resort to Exeter Hall, and for the week-day operations of the church the College buildings will meantime suffice. We need not ask that our readers should join their fellow-Christians throughout the world in a practical expression of helpful sympathy and cheer for the Tabernacle friends in this hour of trial.

THE COLLEGE CONFERENCE.

The swift and complete destruction of the time-honoured sanctuary has largely overshadowed the proceedings of the Pastors' College Conference, which was in the height of its sessions when the fire occurred. But the Conference proceeded to its customary close, and was a time of real profit to all concerned, apart from the special lessons of the unexpected visitation. There were preliminary meetings on the Monday evening at Abbey-road, St. John's Wood, and in the Tabernacle itself—the last public gathering under the old and hallowed roof.

Pastor Thomas Spurgeon's presidential address to the assembled students and pastors on Tuesday morning was a very timely and rousing utterance on the need of fidelity and thoroughness in faith and service. Strangely enough, the symbol of fire was largely used in the consideration of the subject—as if there were a premonition of the coming disaster. Pastor Tom possesses in goodly measure the gifts that were so conspicuous in his illustrious father—terse, epigrammatic utterance, with ample illustration full of pith and point.

On Tuesday evening, at the Stockwell Orphanage soiree, an address was given by Dr. W. R. Nicoll on "The Uplift of the Soul." He reviewed the doctrines that are mainly associated with the Keswick platform; while deprecating certain features and formulas of current holiness teaching, he agreed as to the need of definite Holy Ghost power for all true Christian life and testimony.

Wednesday is the great College day, when the subscribers meet and renew their pledges of support at the supper-table in the basement of the Tabernacle. That function was frustrated this year through the intervention of the fire, but the usual meeting was held in the adjoining College building. In the tea hour a lively address was given by Rev. John McNeill, who applauded the basis and methods of instruction for the students in the College. He was severe on the undue prominence given to questions of modern Biblical criticism in some similar institutions, and exhorted the men of the Pastors' College to stand by the old lines of the doctrines of grace, which had done so much for the Christian Church in the past, and which are equally potent in converting and sanctifying power to-day.

At the subsequent meeting, under the presidency of Mr. Joseph Peters, some encouraging details of College progress were given by the president, Pastor Thomas Spurgeon, who also spoke hopefully, though regretfully, about the destruction the flames had just wrought in the adjacent Tabernacle. Pastor Charles Spurgeon briefly spoke, and Dr. Barnardo gave a stirring address, in which he urged the College men to uphold, in this day of rebuke and defection, the Protestant doctrines of the Bible that have made our nation what she is in spiritual power as a channel of blessing to the world. The contributions to the College funds were naturally not so large as on former occasions, many friends being absent.

A crowded meeting at Exeter Hall on Thursday evening afforded another opportunity for pleading the claims of the College, as well as for making known the needs of the church through the burning of the building, and the rising tide of sympathetic response that is coming from many quarters. It is understood that the amount of the insurance exceeds £20,000.

With respect to last Sunday's services in Exeter Hall, The Daily Chronicle says:—

The whole congregation of the Metropolitan Tabernacle migrated to Exeter Hall, and rarely has that centre of Evangelical activities been called upon to accommodate a larger or less disconsolate, though bereaved, audience. Pastor Spurgeon's sermon, in the course of which he narrated his own experiences of the fire, bristled with points which indicated his belief that the congregation bore their loss manfully. He intimated that, as far as possible, they were going on with everything—prayer-meetings, Sunday-school, and Bible-classes—just as usual, Pastors' College being still available for these duties, and the prayer-meeting on Thursday will be held at a baptismal service in Upton Chapel.

The chapter read was Isaiah lxiv., and Mr. Spurgeon took as his text the concluding verses, which read: "Our holy and our beautiful house, where our fathers praised Thee, is burned up with fire; and all our pleasant things are laid waste. Wilt Thou refrain Thyself for these things, O Lord? Wilt Thou hold Thy peace, and afflict us very sore?" He said he had been instinctively drawn to that text because of its appropriateness, tenderness, and true pathos. There was a very peculiar sanctity attached to the Temple of old, but it was not so with them. They did not attach any superstitious veneration to bricks and mortar, beams and timber, tables, and the like. Nevertheless, the associations of a place and the use of it did in a very real sense consecrate it. The old building might have been destitute of much of the beauty which the world admired, the beauty of æsthetic art, but it was full of that which was still more precious, the beauty of deep spiritual emotion. He himself could not bring himself to believe that the Tabernacle was half so ugly as some people tried to make out. Perhaps it was that love was blind, and the Tabernacle was his spiritual home. Some had said that it was of the "railway station order of architecture," and as it was an expert who made the observation he did not feel disposed to contradict him, but turned the occasion to good account by saying that it was even so, for from thence thousands of precious souls had started heavenwards with through tickets for the New Jerusalem. There was a beauty in utility, and in spite of its colossal size it was a perfect auditorium. It was comparatively easy to speak in, for every part of all the walls was as a sounding-board. He believed that this fact in part contributed to its speedy demolition. What wonderful offerings of money had been made in the Tabernacle! What glorious movements had been initiated in it!

They had lost a good deal as well as the actual structure. The table on the platform was no more; the Bible on which his father had laid his hand so often, and on which his eyes had looked with falling tears, was now in blackened ashes. Their own hymn-books and Bibles, of course, had also gone. But, thank God, much of value had been saved. The books, the accounts, the trust deeds, some of the pictures, and the old copy of the declaration of faith that hung in the pastor's vestry were happily amongst them. Among the suggestions he had had was that the new building should be identical with the old one. That was quite impossible. The Building Acts would prevent it, for one thing, and there were other reasons why it should not be as it was; but he hoped as a church they would hold together. Thank God, the last words that were said in the old chapel had been of salvation. The first and every word in the new Tabernacle would be of salvation, and yet again of salvation.

"One Thing is Needful."

Luke x. 42.

I gave my time to Jesus,
Was busy night and day,
Wherever help was needed
I never answered "Nay."

I gave my wealth to Jesus,
And ne'er withheld my hand,
His interests and his people
My aid could e'er command.

I freely gave to Jesus
My influence and name,
And Him to serve was ever
My best and highest aim.

But sad, how sad to say it!
My heart was satisfied
In what I did and offered,
All ministered to pride.

I failed to know, like Mary,
How precious and how sweet,
Above e'en toil and service,
Was sitting at his feet.

Ah, this is dear to Jesus,
Else empty all beside;
'Tis in communion only
The heart is satisfied.

Home of Industry.—The usual gathering of workers on Wednesday last week was very bright with the songs of the 74th party of children taking farewell before sailing on April 28 for homes awaiting them in our loved Canada. Mr. Byrne, the newly appointed Ontarian examiner, is well pleased with every one, and that after a careful examination of each of the children under eighteen years. We are grateful to the Lord that means are in hand to send off this party, but others are waiting to fill up their beds. Who will help?

Fire at Metropolitan Tabernacle.—The Poor Ministers' Society regret to announce that the whole of the clothing in the storerooms at the Tabernacle has been entirely destroyed, and was not insured. About 500 ministers were up last week attending the annual Conference, many of whom are labouring in poor country churches for less than £60 a year. This society provides such with clothing for themselves, their wives, and children. Friends who have garments not further required are invited to send parcels to the Tabernacle, so that the committee may help the most needy.—S. Barrett, Hon. Sec.

Our Daily Homily

SUNDAY, May 1.

"Father, the hour is come; glorify thy Son, that the Son may glorify thee."—John xvii. 1 (R.V.).

In one form or another we are constantly asking the Father to glorify us. Glorify me, O Father, we cry, by giving me the largest congregation in the town; by commencing a great revival in my mission, by increasing my spiritual power, so that I shall be greatly sought after. Of course, we do not state our reasons quite so concisely; but this is really what we mean. And then we wonder why the answer tarries. Is it not because our Father dare not trust us with glory? He knows that we would become proud and self-conscious; that we would ascribe our success to the strength of our arm and the swiftness of our foot. Nothing would be more harmful to our Christian growth. But when we desire glory only that we may be able better to glorify Jesus, then there will be no stint in what He will confer on us. Glory, like a golden river, will pour into our hearts and lives.

Oh, for this absorbing passion for the glory of Jesus! To be able to pray, "Thy kingdom come" without reference to our share in securing its advent. To be as glad when another says a thing well, or does a noble deed, or scores a great success, as though it had been ourselves who had won the laurels. To pray as eagerly for the success of others as of ourselves. Here is an ideal, which seems inaccessible, as it laughs at all our natural attempts to win it. To be pleased to suffer, to fail, to be counted nothings and nobodies, if only our dear Lord is extolled, exalted, and made very high.

Do you choose this? Then be of good cheer. This is the hunger which God has promised to satisfy. He never shows you your lack of a grace without pledging Himself thereby to realise it for you. Yes, it shall be even to you. You shall learn the blessed lesson of perfect love.

MONDAY, May 2.

"Jesus answered, My kingdom is not of this world."—John xviii. 36.

Well might Pilate ask if Jesus were a king. Thou poor, weary, rejected Nazarene, art thou a king? A strange contrast, surely, to the Herod that built those halls of judgment! Thy people, at least, fail to recognise thy royalty! But Jesus did not abate his claims. "Thou sayest that I am," he answered—"a king." And as the ages have passed they have substantiated his claim, and will substantiate it until great voices are heard in Heaven, crying, "Hallelujah! the kingdoms of this world have become the kingdoms of our God, and of his Christ, and He shall reign for ever and ever."

The origin of his kingdom.—"My kingdom is not of this world." The Lord did not mean, as his words would have been too often interpreted, that his kingdom had nothing to do with this world, but that it did not originate here. The "of" means out of. Jesus is King by the purpose and counsel of the Father, who said, "Thou art my son; this day have I begotten thee: yet will I set my King upon my holy hill of Zion."

The method of its promulgation.—It is not spread by armed force. "Her servants do not fight." They are priests clad in the white robes of immaculate purity, and bearing aloft their banner with the inscription, "Blessed are the peacemakers."

There is true royalty in bearing witness to the truth.—Humbly we may appropriate our Master's words: To this end were we born, and for this cause are we left in the world, that in every act and word we might bear witness to the truth; and as we do so we manifest a royalty which is not of human gift or descent, but which has been communicated by the reception of the Christ-nature, through the Holy Ghost.

TUESDAY, May 3.

"When Jesus had received the vinegar, He said, It is finished."—John xix. 30.

Finished, the long line of sacrificial rite.—From the gates of Eden the blood of sacrifice had begun to flow, augmented by the confluent streams of the years. From that moment, however, not another drop need be shed. The types were finished now that the anti-type had been realised.

Finished, his fulfilment of prophecy.—How contradictory some had seemed. Ancient of Days, yet a babe; the Mighty God, yet marred of visage, and led to the slaughter; Son of Man, yet scion of David's stock; ruling in the midst of enemies, yet a bruised and broken sufferer. But all of them, even to the last pathetic intimation of his dying thirst, fulfilled.

Finished, his mortal life.—Never again to be weary, hungered, tempted, buffeted, or to bear the contradiction of sinners. Never again to sweat the bloody sweat, or bear the accumulated fault of men. Never more to die. "In that He died, He died unto sin once." Behind Him all the bitter grief; before—the joy that was set before Him, the welcome of the angels, the bosom of the Father.

Finished, a world's redemption.—He had wrought out and brought in a perfect salvation. The world, so far as God could make it so, was already reconciled. Sin was put away the penalty incurred by a guilty race met and exhausted, and every obstacle to the putting forth of the love and grace of God swept for ever away.

WEDNESDAY, May 4.

"Jesus saith unto her, Mary."—John xx. 16.

Many had called her by that name. She had been wont to hear it many times a day from many lips, but only one had spoken it with that intonation. In his mouth its familiar syllables had a sweetness and tenderness which lingered in her heart, as they say the fragrance of the Roumanian rose-valley clings to the clothes of those who have entered it for many a day after.

Her eyes had deceived her. Startled by the sudden glad expression which had passed over the features of the angels, who sat sentry in the sepulchre, she had turned herself back to see the source from which the radiance had gleamed, but even with that hint to help her she had failed to recognise her Lord. But her ear could not mistake, the voice carried immediate recognition.

We sigh sometimes for "the touch of a vanished hand and the sound of a voice that is still"; but we shall hear those voices again. Our mortal body is to be fashioned according to the body of Christ's resurrection glory; and evidently in that body there were the old familiar tones. May we not, therefore, certainly infer that the voices which welcome us on the other side will be those that have made life's sweetest music.

The Master knows our names, and calls his own sheep by them. Anglo-Saxon names are not less familiar to his lips than Hebrew ones. And there is one response, which He waits to elicit—one which will satisfy Him; one in which the love and devotion of a life may be summed up. Like Mary, let us turn and say to Him: Rabboni—which is to say, Master.

THURSDAY, May 5.

"That disciple, therefore, whom Jesus loved, saith unto Peter, It is the Lord."—John xxi. 7 (R.V.).

This miracle was also a parable. When we go fishing apart from Jesus we may indeed toil all the night and take nothing. But when through the darkness Jesus comes, and speaks to us across the wave, and tells us where to let down the nets; when we are in blessed partnership with Himself; when, though we see Him not, we obey his slightest promptings—then the nets are filled to their uttermost.

Those who are loved, love.—It was the consciousness that Jesus loved him which made John the Apostle of Love. Love casts such a wondrous spell over its objects that they begin to shine in its rays and reflect them. Nothing will make a coal glow with heat but to plunge it into the heart of the fire. Do you want to love the Lord Jesus? Dwell on his love to you. The love of Christ constraineth us.

Those who love Christ, see Him.—Not Peter, the man of eager action, but John, the man of devoted love, saw the Master amid the haze that lay on the lake shore. Love will penetrate every disguise; will detect Him by the slightest sign; will strip from our eyes the film that sense of sin draws over them. If you loved Him more, you would see his hand in that disappointment, that crushing sorrow.

Those who seek Christ, cannot keep it to themselves. They must tell it out to their next companion, with beating heart and thrilling speech. John said unto Peter, It is the Lord. Oh for one to whisper thus to us when we are nearing heaven, and that we may see Jesus standing on the shore, with preparations beyond all thought, to welcome us as we arrive from the night cruise!

FRIDAY, May 6.

"Ye shall be my witnesses."—Acts i. 8 (R.V.).

The Church is not called to argue for Christ, but to witness to Him. She is not an advocate, but a witness, summoned by act and voice to bear witness to her unseen Lord. As the moon bears witness to the sun when it has set beneath the ocean rim, so when our Sun set on the world at Calvary, the Church, holding fellowship with Him and shining in his light, took up the witness.

How different this function, entrusted to the Apostles, to that assumed by the self-styled priests of our time, who claim the power to repeat the sacrifice of Calvary, and to absolve the penitent from his sins! Nothing of all this is said in these significant parting words. The Master did not say that his followers were to become sacrificing priests, but simple witnesses to what He had done once for all, and was doing at the right hand of God.

Witness-bearing must spread through successive circles of influence.—Like the circling wavelets from a stone flung into the midst of a calm mountain lake. Some think they could witness in the uttermost ends of the earth, but they neglect the Jerusalem of the home. Those who begin there will be led almost unconsciously forward to the Judæa of their relatives, and the Samaria of their near neighbourhood, and so to the further boundary.

For witnessing we have supreme power.—If ever your testimony is demanded, claim the power for the emergency. It is certainly at hand, and within reach. The hand of faith, the opened heart, may surely receive not a power, an attribute merely, but the Spirit, whose attribute of power certainly accompanies Him. Not It but He.

SATURDAY, May 7.

"Having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, He hath poured forth this."—Acts ii. 33 (R.V.).

What a sublime commencement! As Jacob's heart revived, and he was assured that Joseph lived when he saw the waggons that his sons had sent, so the heart of the Church revived when the Spirit came. It was the promised sign that the Master had reached the Father's throne, and was fulfilling the unforgotten promise that He would ask the Father for another Paraclete to fill His place, and abide until He should come again in glory.

It was as if He said: "Father, I ask nothing for Myself, for all thine are mine, and mine are thine. But for others I ask that I may have the power, as the representative Man, the Head of my Church, of giving to my own the same anointing and power which Thou gavest Me, when I stood on the threshold of my work. I was then filled with the Spirit; grant unto Me the power to fill the hearts of all who believe with that same Spirit. It was in the power of that Spirit that I wrought, died, and rose; let my Church be quickened and endued with the same sacred power."

And it pleased the Father that in Him all the fulness of the Godhead should dwell, bodily. And the glorified Divine-human body of Jesus became the cistern, receptacle, reservoir of the Divine fulness, from which we all might receive, and grace for grace.

Revival in Scotland.

A FORMER communication bore testimony to the work of grace in Glasgow and among the teeming masses where the instruments of degradation abound. Many expect and desire a work of grace there; without it they acknowledge there is no possibility of lifting up or of permanent improvement. They are prone to say that in the country and among a quiet rural population similar results are not to be expected. This, however, your readers know is a mistake. A work of grace is needed for the country as well as for the large city, and such a work in quiet village or lonely hamlet will by-and-by tell upon the city to the best advantage.

At Kirkintilloch a quiet and yet effective work has been in progress all winter and spring. It began in a very quiet way by a few persons gathering together for prayer. In a little while the room became too small. Then they adjourned upstairs to the Town Hall, which again proved too small. They then applied to Rev. J. Y. Reyburn for the use of the Free Church, which was cheerfully granted. Scores of young people have come out for Jesus. It was a joy to me, on a recent visit, to meet with numbers who had taken their stand on the Lord's side.

All over the Highlands there has been much spiritual fruit reaped during the six or eight months. Rev. John McKay, Highland evangelist, has been wonderfully blessed. With Mr. Alexander Cameron and Mr. Alexander Murray he has conducted work in many parts of this interesting field, and ministers and people feel deeply grateful for the quickening they have received and for the rich blessing vouchsafed. In Sutherlandshire the local ministers report that "the results are such as may well evoke the warmest gratitude to God for 'signs following' upon the Word preached." Both old and young have shared in the blessing. The testimony is uniformly given that wherever minister and people have been previously engaged in united, earnest, and expectant prayer early and abundant blessing was graciously vouchsafed. On some nights as many as thirty persons stood up to testify that they had received the Lord Jesus as their personal Saviour. In another case twenty-four were added to the communion-roll at the close of the mission, more than double the number ever added at one time in the history of the congregation.

The north of Sutherland did not share in the blessing granted to other parts of the county in 1860, 1874, and 1880, but this time there seems to have been a moving of the dry bones all the way from Thurso to Cape Wrath. Friends and relatives who have been have had prayer answered and are rejoicing in the Lord's goodness. In one case a grandfather and three grandchildren professed to surrender to Christ the same night.

For two years the west and south of the Island of Arran has had exceptional blessing. During the past few months there has been again a wonderful quickening in this island, whose spiritual history has been a succession of revivals from the days of Rev. Peter Macbride and Rev. Angus M'Millan till now; and large numbers of young people are now witnessing for Christ as their Saviour.

On the opposite side of Kilbrannan Sound lies Carradale, a district long spiritually neglected. The settlement of Rev. George S. M'Leod there some years ago has been followed with increasing interest and blessing. Mr. Samuel Mackenzie, evangelist, was secured for some special services. At the close of the first week the meetings were so crowded that they had to be removed from the hall into the Free Church. From the first the attendance was exceptionally good, but they improved as the work went on. Originally a fortnight's mission was contemplated, but it had to be extended to one month, and night after night numbers testified to accepting Christ as their Saviour, of the parish, as well as many of the old, being gathered in. In one township of seven families every soul, except the very young children, profess to have become partakers of the blessing.

THE FINEST YOUNG PEOPLE

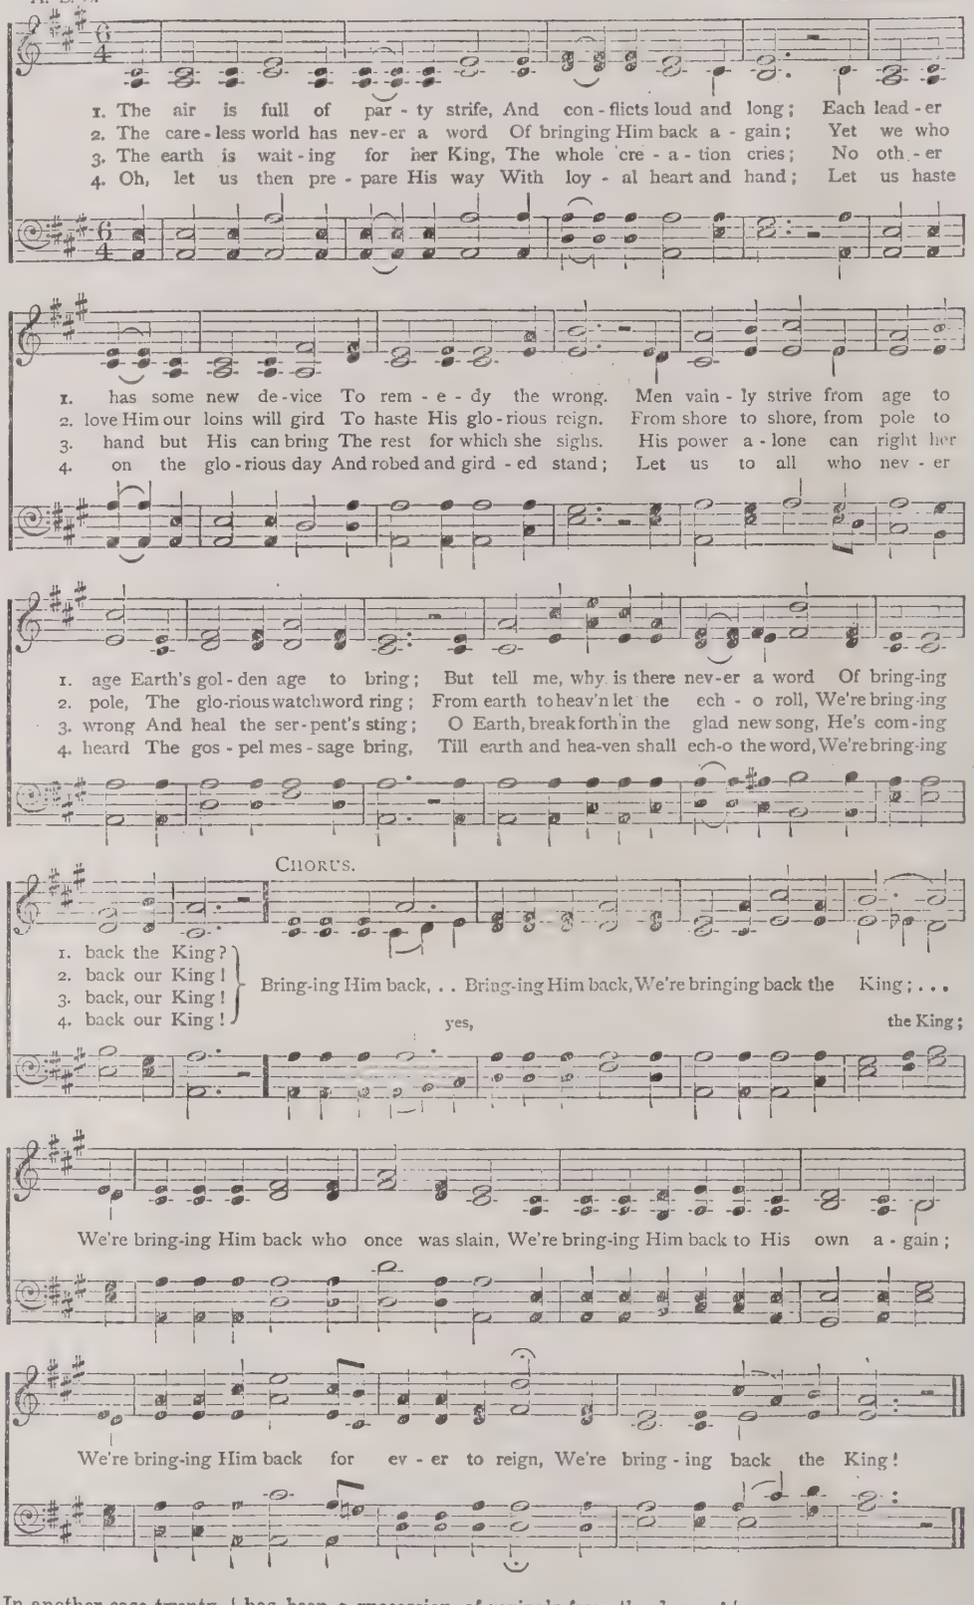
Through the generosity of a valued friend of the Lord's cause, the Free Presbytery of Kintyre were enabled to engage Mr. Mackenzie to continue the work, and recently he began at the upper end of the parish at Skipness. Fruit began to appear at the very beginning, and the blessing has been definite and large. The minister testifies that the whole district is moved, and that such times have not been seen there since the days of the Haldanes. Notwithstanding that there has been bitter opposition, with its accompanying unfriendliness, the young Christians are brave and loyal to Christ. A Society of Christian Endeavour has been formed in Carradale with about 100 members, and there will not be fewer than sixty to start a similar society in Skipness.

A notable feature of the work in the North and West Highlands is the number of farm servants who have been reached. Both Mr. Campbell, of the Free Church, Petty, and Mr. M'Leod, of the Free Church, Carradale, testify to this. In regard to the latter districts it is said that almost all the farm servants have been influenced. Reports are now coming to hand showing that the cause of Christ is being strengthened by an accession of members to the church; one reports forty, another thirty, and another twenty-four additions at recent communion services, while many more are waiting to be received. We have been praying for a widespread revival in Scotland, and God is answering prayer. "The fields are white unto the harvest." May I ask your readers to join us in prayer for a great and gracious ingathering of souls all over the land?



—Yours in his service,

William Ross.

Bringing back the King!

A. B. S. Rev. A. B. Simpson.

The Strangers' Home for Asiatics held its annual meeting last week, at the Home in Limehouse. Mr. H. M. Birdwood, C.S.I., presided, and spoke of the work accomplished by the Home. The report showed that during the past year 1084 persons had been received into the Home. Addresses were delivered by Colonel Birch and Rev. A. H. Bowman.

A Consecrated Musician.

THE LATE MR. H. C. BANISTER.

THE late Mr. Henry Charles Banister was for upwards of forty-six years a professor in the Royal Academy of Music, and outlived nearly every master who was there when he entered the institution; he also filled the office of professor at the Guildhall School of Music from the time of its opening to the time of his death; for sixteen years he held a similar appointment at the Royal Normal College for the Blind at Norwood. As a pupil he had a distinguished career, and his first professorship was given him before he was twenty years of age. But his stand as a Christian was made even earlier, for at the age of eleven he was admitted a member of Keppel Street Baptist Church, Russell-square, London. The place had sacred associations for him, his grandfather, Charles William Banister, an amateur composer of hymn tunes, having been a leading man there.

His musical gifts were hereditary; his father was a professional violoncello player, who took part at all the leading concerts, and published some pieces of music; his uncle (Joseph) was a professional violinist. Mr. Banister regarded his gifts as an endowment from God to be used for his glory and the good of men. If his calling had peculiar temptations, as other callings have, he lived to prove that, by prayer and watchfulness, it was possible to avoid falling into them. He delighted in his beautiful art, and his love to God was the ground of his love of truth, of simplicity, and of purity in music.

His grandfather's pleasure in composing hymn tunes, just as Dr. Watts delighted in composing hymns, led Mr. Banister to compare old hymn tunes and new, not altogether to the advantage of the new. "Our tunes to-day are in better taste," he said, "but the common people don't take to them as they did to the old ones." He began his own efforts in composition at an early age, and tried his hand first at hymn tunes. It sometimes seems to us that, as most of our noblest hymns sprang forth at the time of a great revival of religion, so we shall never get the purest music to suit them until another revival comes and calls it forth. Both words and music must be the children of intense religious feeling.

Mr. Banister's early life must have been very pleasant for the opportunities it afforded him of following his favourite studies, and also for the intercourse it gave him with distinguished persons in the musical world. He took a great part in oratorio singing when he was only a boy, and on one occasion he sang in a private performance of a piece of Mendelssohn's, the great composer himself accompanying on the pianoforte. He counted among his friends Sir Sterndale Bennett and Sir George A. Macfarren.

He became not only a teacher in connection with three of our greatest schools of music, a composer, and the author of some excellent and widely used text-books on music, but was frequently asked to read papers before musical societies on some phase of his art. They all display a keen sensitiveness for the maintenance of the loftiest standard, and for the purest uses and ends of music. The elevating influence of religion is everywhere apparent. He places a strong, firm hand upon all doubtful methods, and indicates the dangers that arise from departing from severely intellectual forms of musical composition. In "Musical Art and Study" he shows in almost every page how an artist may defend and inculcate honesty and truth. Thus on sensationalism, "which is wholly a degradation of all that it affects," and which has not left music untouched, he remarks:

> How often are the expressions nowadays used, with regard to certain orchestral writers, "What wonderful instrumentation!" "What effects he produces!" "How he uses the brass!" and this by young people and others who are totally ignorant of the first principles of orchestration. Now, of course, instrumentation is a beautiful art, worthy of the utmost and most detailed study by all musical students. But then it is as a mode of expression that it is thus beautiful and worthy, and not for its sensational effect...Just as language is valuable in so far as it expresses thoughts with force, clearness, and persuasiveness, and has missed its mark if it diverts attention to itself, so it betrays an unhealthy, a false view of the art, a degraded sensationalism, if that which is most prominent in and most persistently reiterated about any composer is the effects he produces by his instrumentation, and that, moreover, by the wind, and especially by the brass...To be effective is not the bad thing; it is the thinking about the effect rather than about the idea that implies sensationalism, either in the listener or the composer, or both.

From a Photograph by Mr. W. J. Wright, Grosvenor Studio, Upper Norwood, S.E.

The conscientiousness evidenced by this quotation is the same as makes a merchant absolutely honest, and a speaker absolutely correct in his facts and truthful in his setting forth of things. It insists on moral healthfulness, without which business, politics, and art become corrupt and pestilent.

Readers of Mr. Banister's addresses cannot get through many pages without their attention being called to the highest aspects and uses of music. He is not ashamed to quote his Bible or to name the name of God. He never pretends that music can give a new heart, but he clearly and rightly insists that

> If the Giver of all good has "given us richly all things to enjoy," he is sure that not the least of those beneficent provisions is that beautiful art which, though it is a treasure that we have "in earthen vessels," coming to us, that is, through human channels, with the impress of human individuality, appeals all the more touchingly thereby to our human susceptibilities and receptivities.

Mixed up as he was with all sorts and conditions of men in his own profession, just as every Christian has to be in his particular calling, he nevertheless took his own path as a disciple of Jesus. Sunday concerts and the debasement of music for selfish ends had none of his countenance. Sunday was a day of rest, a day of worship, a day of Christian service in the Gospel; and he might be seen wending his way to some quiet Nonconformist chapel to take part in a simple form of worship—some would have called it "bald"—perhaps to give an address on the fundamental truths of the Gospel. For many years he worshipped at the chapel in Tottenham Court-road, which was originally known as Whitefield's "Soul-Trap"; he lived to be its senior deacon. At Streatham, to which he removed because of its nearness to the Normal College for the Blind, he purposely sought a Baptist Church where an additional member and helper would be a conscious gain. At Lewin-road he again was called to serve as a deacon. The welfare of church and congregation lay very near to his heart. He was a devout man in private, and prayer was his defence and inspiration.

He was a favourite among his pupils. The blind at Norwood found in him a kind and sympathetic teacher, and every year they gave him some mark of their esteem, generally a theological book.

Mr. Banister could speak the Gospel in very simple and fitting terms. In "A Village Address" on "Faith: Salvation: Peace," he gives a very lucid explanation of the way of life:

> Sin can be forgiven, however great, not because it is excusable, but because Jesus has died to atone for it. The woman that was a sinner knew little of this, for she was forgiven and saved before He died. But we know it. "Christ suffered for sins, the Just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God." The woman trusted his word before knowing of his work. We have both word and work of his to trust in. Forgiveness comes solely through "the precious blood of Christ," God's Son, "which cleanseth from all sin," "Her sins, which were many, were forgiven." And because she was forgiven her heart was changed, for she loved Christ, "loved him much," because she was forgiven so much. And to be brought to love Christ is a change of heart.

Very happy and apt are his divisions on the text, "Lord, save me." "The sinner's danger, 'beginning to sink'; the sinner's cry, 'Lord, save me'; the sinner's Saviour, 'Jesus stretched forth his hand and caught him.'"

Mr. Banister's end was sudden. On the evening of his last Sunday he heard a sermon in which the preacher remarked upon the readiness of a Christian man to die anywhere and in any occupation. He joined in singing the hymn with the refrain—

> Through life's long day and death's dark night.
> O, gentle Jesus, be our light.

On the following Saturday (in November last), when he was giving a music lesson in his own drawing-room to a former pupil who was nearly blind, he fell down, and in a few minutes, without groan or word of farewell, passed into the presence of his Lord. He was doing as he had done since boyhood, serving Jesus in a profession which he loved and adorned. At his funeral service his blind pupils sang with tender hearts in memory of a highly respected friend.

J. P. G.

Great Leighs, Essex.—Since 1854 a good work of evangelisation has been sustained in connection with the chapel built here by the late Mr. Joseph Tritton. The chapel, after needed repairs, was lately reopened, when special services were conducted by the pastor, Mr. H. Putterill, and Mr. J. H. Tritton.

Mr. McNeill in London.

THE AGRICULTURAL HALL.

THE crowds that flocked into the great hall last week, evening by evening, were on an ascending scale, till on the two closing days of the working week the place was virtually full. That in itself is a portentous fact. As Mr. McNeill sometimes remarks, "Jesus is the biggest draw yet"; and he is experiencing the truth of it these weeks in North London. Whether the people come to any extent from other quarters of the city no one can with certainty tell, but it is matter for much thanksgiving that at the close of the working day seven, eight, nine thousand Londoners, or more, betake themselves to a strictly Gospel service.

Of course, the fact must be taken into account that Mr. McNeill's way of delivering his message is as far as possible removed from the usual thing. There is neither the pulpit tone, the pedantry, nor the professionalism to which Dr. Parker so much objects. The truths spoken are not new, but they are given out in a way that is fresh and attractive to many. The very superabundance of humour which tends to become wearisome after frequent repetition keeps the attention of the casual hearer at full stretch; while the ever recurring notes of pathos and appeal fall on hearts already aroused from their sluggish indifference. Night by night the preacher has buckled to his work and preached for an hour or so with all the energy and intensity of his Celtic nature. Notwithstanding the bigness of the place, in which serious and abiding impressions are naturally in danger of becoming dissipated, impressions are being made. Towards the end of the week the evangelist called for definite indications of soul concern or of conscious trust, and he was rewarded by a fair proportion of responses.

Last Sunday evening another mighty throng of ten thousand people filled every seat in the building. The Mohawk Hall, under the same roof, was also filled, and, after all, hundreds were denied admission for want of room. It would be a deeply interesting quest if one could discover the number of "chance" hearers in such a crowd. The writer was moved to this train of thought by noticing, when entering from Upper-street, a well-dressed young woman moving listlessly with the stream along that busy thoroughfare. For an instant she seemed startled at the way in which people were crowding into the hall, being evidently in ignorance of the mission services. Swifter than it takes to write it, the purpose seemed to take shape in her mind, and she joined the company that passed in and listened to the very earnest discourse of the evangelist. Possibly this hearer was only a sample of many who never intended to hear the Gospel that night, but were led by a way they knew not, to a blessing that will colour all their future life.

The sermon was on the "Comes" of Rev. xxii. 17—all the bells of heaven set ringing by God and man to induce the far off, or the weary, thirsty souls, to receive the water of life, and the refreshment that goes along with salvation. Some of the illustrations were of the homeliest and most realistic kind; but they went home, and doubtless they will fix the preacher's points in mind and heart.

Before the sermon Mr. McNeill said that it is desired this week to evoke a spirit of prayer for blessing on the mission. To that end a meeting for prayer will be held each night in a room near the Barford-street entrance to the hall, from 6.30 to 6.45. Christian friends are invited to join in this concert of petition. Requests sent in asking prayer for definite cases will be presented at these meetings.

Belleville Mission, Paris.—Miss de Broen will have a stall at the United Sale of Work in the Albert Hall on April 28 and 29. She has only recently recovered from influenza, and hopes to be present herself to meet anyone who will pay a visit to her stall on either day. She has interesting accounts to give of the work.

Earlsfield.—For three years a good pioneering mission effort has been maintained in this part of Wandsworth district by some earnest workers. During the summer much open-air work is done, and for this a portable harmonium is needed. Bible-classes, tract distribution, visitation, and other branches of Gospel work are in full vigour. The hon. secretary is Mr. F. J. North, 60, Vanderbilt-road, Earlsfield, S.W.

"Palestine" in Shepherd's Bush.

PREACHERS and teachers are, or ought to be, ever on the outlook for fresh illustrations, for light on the circumstance and setting of Scripture narrative, for anything that will help to elucidate the meaning of Bible allusions and references to customs which may seem obscure or difficult. All such seekers after fresh matter will be interested in a series of lectures now being given by Rev. James Neil, late of Jerusalem, in the Uxbridge-road Tabernacle, Bloemfontein-road, Uxbridge-road, W.

The general theme is "Life in Palestine"—the customs, habits, dress, character, and ideas of the people; with the animals and flora of the Bible; and the climate and conditions of life in the land. These are illustrated by a series of large and beautiful oil paintings by such artists as James Clark, Tristram Ellis, and J. Macpherson Hayes, together with a remarkable "raised" map, based on the Ordnance survey of the Holy Land, showing the elevations and range of the Har or mountains from Lebanon on the north to the deserts of Arabia, the water-courses and lakes, the position of Jerusalem, and the wonderful Jordan valley.

To attempt even a summary of the wealth of Bible illustration, the byways and unexpected evidences of the historic accuracy of the Scripture given in the course of any one of these lectures were a vain task. To hear is to appreciate. No mere report can do justice to the material for teachers contained in even one address.

The subjects of the past week have been Nazareth or Village Life (fellaheen), Jerusalem or Town Life, Desert Life (Bedaween), Courtship and Marriage, and Strange Scenes in Syria, and each of these, aided by his pictures, the speaker made to pass before his hearers in a vivid and telling way. To those who heard, the land and people of the Bible must have seemed to acquire a fresh fulness and meaning. This week the themes are Farmers and Farming, Palestine Trades, Homes and Haunts of the Messiah, Curiosities of Syrian Life, and (on Saturday) Courtship and Marriage (part 2). Next week's subjects are not yet announced. The lectures are being given in the Uxbridge-road Tabernacle, address as above, which is not far from Shepherd's Bush and Uxbridge-road (Metropolitan) Stations, each evening, Tuesday to Saturday, at 8. A charge is necessarily made (as the cost is great) of 1s. Those who find their way to these lectures will, however, find time and trouble well repaid in the teaching material furnished.

Native Missionaries.—Writing from 12, Allworthy-avenue, Belfast, Mr. T. H. Ramsey, hon. secretary of the Native Missionary Union, Belfast, says:—"We confine our efforts to the support of native workers, of whom we have eight at present in the foreign field, labouring under the supervision of English and American missionaries. We should be very glad of the co-operation of Christian friends to help us to increase this number. Some who cannot undertake the support of a European missionary may see their way to become responsible for a native evangelist. The cost of the latter is as under: South Africa, £15 to £30; India, £6 to £15; China, £10 to £15; Madagascar, £5 to £10; New Hebrides, £8 to £10."

"The Marriage Feast."—Matt. xxii. 1-14.

Golden Text: "Come; for all things are now ready."—Luke xiv. 17.

The King (2).

THE new kingdom which Christ came to reveal and establish is a kingdom of spiritual subjects, laws, and life. A spiritual King—God. He is ruler of all things, but He wishes all men to enjoy the benefits of his rule and to come away from their slavery to sin and self.

The Marriage Feast (2).

Lasted several days. The meaning of the parable here indicates the joy of God's people. There are times of gladness as well as grief—

Religion never was designed
To make our pleasures less.

The son is Jesus Christ. The bride unmentioned is the Church (Rev. xxi. 2). The bride is not mentioned because it would complicate the parable. The righteous ones here are the guests.

Invitations to the Feast (3, 4).

The invitations had been sent previously. Now those invited were called.

The feast was ready. Christ had come to lay before them all the glories of the Father. The servants sent out were the prophets in each succeeding generation. Now more were sent—the disciples. The guests invited and now called were the members of the Jewish nation. Invitation given to-day by all Christian workers, "Let him that heareth say 'Come.'" The servant is also now guest, and each guest who receives the King's bounty should become his servant.

Invitation Refused.

Note the three classes:

(1) Those who are indifferent to the Gospel invitation practically refuse it—"They who are not for Me are against Me."

(2) Those who belittle the Gospel in order to stifle their own conscience.

(3) Those who become very wrath with God's messenger, and slander Him by way of payment for his faithfulness (6). Compare the treatment of prophets, Christ, disciples, martyrs.

The Punishment (7).

"God is love," but God is not weakness. No man can break his laws or refuse his mercy with impunity. The wicked are and will be punished as in the parable. It is a matter of cause and effect. Every act has its result, and "the wages of sin is death."

A Wider Call.

The advantages of true religion had been given to the Jews much more than to any other nation. They had abused those privileges. The invitation by Christ was sent to "all nations upon earth." The keynote of the invite now is "Whosoever will." The command of the King here corresponds to the command of Christ, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel."

The Wedding Garment.

This supplied by the King on the entrance of the guests. What does it represent? The righteousness which Christ revealed to the world, and which can be attained through his strength alone. No excuse for any one without this garment (12), for the wealth of Christ's power is awaiting our appropriation.

Outer Darkness.

In the presence of the King all was brilliant light. Outside all was dark. The guest was carried outside, where there were hundreds who were grieving because they had refused the invitation. Spiritually the outer darkness is the place where they see not the brightness of God's presence, yet where they can appreciate what they have lost.

Called and Chosen (14).

The choice ones in all things and persons are the few. These were the chosen ones in the sense of being the choice. They valued the King's invitation, and so proved themselves to be worthy of it. The King sees the few inside compared with the multitude outside, and comforts Himself with the reflection, "Well, you may offer any good gift to the crowd, but the choice persons who are able to value it and accept it are always a small number."

What is the Bible?

Bread of Life.—At the seaside services we ask those who have had their breakfast that morning to hold up their hands. Just a few are too shy to raise their arms. Of course everyone has had their breakfast. Who would like to go out on the sands to play, having had nothing to eat? Then we ask those who have read their Bibles (fed their souls) to hold up their hands, and not so many are able to do that. Yet it is as foolish to starve the soul as to starve the body (St. Matt. iv. 4).

You could not put a whole loaf, or even a slice, into your mouth all at once. A mouthful at a time, slowly eaten, will do you the most good.

In the Bible we have loaves (the books), slices (the chapters), and mouthfuls (the verses). A few verses, well thought over and hid in your heart, are better than a great deal read without attention.

Idol-Breaker.—In South China there lived the captain of a Mandarin's barge. Among his passengers one day were a European doctor and his wife. This gentleman spoke to the Chinese captain about his soul, and found that already he knew something of Christianity. Before the river voyage ended the captain was listening to God's Word, and at last he threw overboard his idols and incense-sticks, and would join the doctor and his wife at morning and evening prayer.

The Bible is like a hammer, which breaks in pieces stony hearts and overthrows the idols within them. The Word of God will break down the idols of temper, pride, and unkindness, and they are very ugly idols indeed (Jer. xxiii. 29).

Building-Tool.—When Nehemiah built the walls of Jerusalem the men held a trowel in one hand and in the other a sword. They built the wall, and were prepared to resist their foes (Neh. iv. 17).

The Bible is both the sword of the spirit and a building tool. Keep your sword sharp and bright with constant use. Employ the Bible as a building tool, that every day you may see the walls of your faith rise higher and grow stronger, until you will be able to keep out the foes who would capture the stronghold of your heart (Acts xx. 32).

Lately I saw a whole row of houses demolished by order; they were "jerry-built." The builder had put too little lime in the mortar, so they were unsafe, and would never have stood against a high wind, but would have fallen, and perhaps killed the people who lived in them, supposing themselves to be safe.

Build up your character carefully and well. By daily reading God's Word, and asking Jesus our Lord to open your mind to understand it and help you to keep its commandments, you will build up that which will stand all the storms of life.

Looking-glass.—I saw a bright sun on the road; at least, it dazzled my eyes, and might have been a bit of the sun which had fallen on the path. It was a broken piece of looking-glass, but the sun shone from it so brightly,

Out of the pages of God's Word, Jesus, the sun of righteousness, shines so brightly. Read it, and you will find some of that sunshine entering your heart and glowing in your face (St. John v. 29).

Even a looking-glass, though it shows you yourself, is not equal to God's Word. That shows us our hearts. If we wish to know ourselves and to know Jesus, we must go to the Bible for both (James i. 23, 24, 25).

Engineer's Chart.—The captains of those ocean greyhounds which steam from England to all the parts of the world spend every day a great deal of time over their charts.

These charts mark all the harbours and coasts, all the rocks, shoals, and currents, the depths of the waters, and even the bottom of the sea, stating whether sand or gravel, or clay, or rock is to be found. The captain traces the course of his ship on his map by means of his instruments, and his chart tells him just where he is, and what dangers or difficulties he must expect.

We are on a voyage. Some of you are only boats, and some of us are ships. The Bible is our chart. In it we are told what shoals, rocks, currents, and dangers we are likely to meet with. If we steer our ship by it, or allow Jesus, rather, to be our helmsman, and steer the ship for us, we shall certainly reach the port of heaven in safety (Joshua i. 8).

One Drop of Red Paint.

A BOY walked into a house-painter's shop one day and stood looking at the different colours. Here were lamp-black, white lead, yellow ochre, verdigris, Indian red, and everything needed in mixing any tint or shade that could be desired. Here too, were oils, varnishes, and driers of all kinds for thinning the paints to the right consistency.

The painter had gone out for something, and the boy thought he would investigate a little. Some of the paints were mixed, thinned, and ready to use; some, like the white lead, were thick and stiff, and would need to be diluted with oil before they could be spread with a brush; while others were in the form of a dry powder.

On the floor stood a keg containing 50lb. of thick white lead, and close beside it was a smaller one filled with Indian red all ready for the brush. In each was a wooden paddle for stirring up the paint. The boy took hold of the paddle in the smaller keg and held it up, watching the thin red stream which flowed from the end. Something startled him, and he turned quickly and let a single drop fall into the white lead. There it lay, one little red spot in the white mass.

The boy was frightened and wanted to repair the mischief which he had done, but he went at it the wrong way. The red paint had not mixed with the white, for the white was too stiff. If he had taken a little stick or the point of his pocket-knife he might easily have lifted it out, and there would have been no harm done. Instead he tried to hide it by stirring it in. At first a little red streak followed the paddle round and round; soon it disappeared, but some of the lead was stained a very light pink. The boy stirred deeper and deeper, and at last he thought that the red drop was completely hidden. Every spot and streak was gone, and it seemed to him that it was all as clean and pure as ever. But the first thing that the painter said when he came in and looked at it was, "That keg of white lead isn't very white. I wonder what's the matter with it?"

Some of us have tried to do the same thing with the spots in our characters that the boy did with the spot in the white paint. Instead of removing them, we seek to hide them by mixing them up with good deeds and high motives. It's a very poor way. Root a sin out, and you are rid of it; leave it there, and, no matter how well it is covered up, the Painter will find it, if no one else does. But "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin."

ANSWERS TO LAST WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (119).

1. In spirit and in truth (John iv. 24).
2. Because of the saying of the woman which told them that Jesus told her all that ever she did. Many believed because of the saying of the woman, and many more because they heard him themselves (John iv. 29-42).
3. The turning of the water into wine at the marriage feast. Healing of the nobleman's son (John iv. 46-54).
4. That they have everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but are passed from death unto life (John v. 24).
5. Christ said that they sent to John, and he bare witness of the truth (John v. 33), and that he was a burning and a shining light, and that they were willing for a season to rejoice in his light (John v. 35).
6. Having seen his miracles, they believed He was the Prophet that should come into the world (John vi. 14-15).
7. Many of his disciples left Him because they did not believe and could not understand what Christ told them when He said that He was the Bread which would give life to all true believers in Him; also because He told them that no man could come to Him unless God gave him power from above (John vi. 58-66).
8. (a) Jesus said this to the woman of Samaria (who was drawing water from a well) after she had perceived He was a prophet, and when he was explaining to her the true way to worship God (John iv. 22).

(b) Jesus said this to the nobleman whose son lay dying at Capernaum, when the nobleman besought Him to return home with him and heal his dying child (John iv. 48).

(c) Jesus said this to the Jews of Jerusalem, when He was showing them who He was (John v. 30).

(d) Jesus said this to the people who followed Him to Capernaum (John vi. 35).

(e) Jesus said this to his twelve apostles, when many of his disciples, being offended at his teaching, deserted Him (John vi. 67).

In reply to a correspondent, there are no special rules for children living abroad, but papers must be signed by a parent or teacher. Where the rate of postage is high two Searchers may be enclosed in the same envelope. Each child must keep a record of how many times he or she is correct during the quarter, and if correct the necessary nine times send in the competition paper, giving the dates when the name appeared in the Foreign List.

Daisy McArthur.—You have indeed had a long illness, and I am glad you are better.

Tom M. Hunter.—Hope you will enjoy your stay in Switzerland. If your paper cannot reach me in time for the ordinary list, your name will appear in the foreign list.

Edith Harris.—I am so sorry you think you will have to give up, but perhaps you will be able to manage to find time after all.

Kenneth J. Vining.—Your letter was most interesting.

Carrie Ingham.—Am glad to see your name once again.

Daisy M. A. Clark.—You did not answer enough questions this last week.

Rose Hamilton.—It must have been a great treat to you to come to London, especially as it was your first visit.

Janet Speed.—Your weekly Searcher need not be signed by a parent or teacher.

THE "MAY MEETINGS."

The Baptist Anniversaries.

OUR brethren, the Baptists, are holding their Union meetings and anniversaries during the present week. Last week, however, one or two interesting gatherings were held. Judging by the opening meetings, the series is likely to prove very successful. In spite of the Jubilee year the Zenana Mission reported an increase in subscriptions, which, it was hoped, would be permanent.

On Thursday there was a large attendance at the Mission House in Furnival-street, at the introductory devotional service, when Professor Marshall, of Brighton Grove College, Manchester, gave an address on the reflex action of foreign missions upon the home churches, and his discourse was largely an exposition of the 67th Psalm.

THE ZENANA MISSION.

Later, Mr. A. H. Baynes presided at the business meeting of the Zenana Mission, when Miss Angus and Miss Edith Angus reported that, in answer partly to the special appeal to avoid debt, the total receipts had risen to £9,890, including £303 from the Legacy Fund, and that the annual subscription list appeared permanently increased. The expenditure had been £10,055, which left an adverse balance of £165. In addition, £1,121 had been received in legacies, which, added to the Legacy Reserve Fund, raised that fund to £2,419, after deducting £303 for the year's revenue. The report showed that the various operations of mission work had steadily continued; a new hospital had been built at Bhiwara, and the China Mission was advancing. The Society had now sixty-two lady missionaries in India and seven in China, besides native Bible-women.

Miss Tritton expressed thankfulness for the improved health of some of their workers; and among other speakers was Rev. J. B. Myers, who declared the dominant note of the meeting to be one of thankfulness, and expressed pleasure at the great success of the work during the past year. Mrs. Underhill and Mr. Payne, of Clapton, also spoke.

THE BAPTIST UNION.

The Union opened its annual assembly on Monday at Bloomsbury Chapel, when Dr. James A. Spurgeon was elected vice-president for the present and president for next year. On the motion of the chairman, Rev. Samuel Vincent, it was decided to defer the election of a successor to Dr. Booth in the secretaryship until the autumn session at Nottingham, meantime empowering the Council to secure a nomination for the autumn assembly, and to provide for the carrying on the work of that office until then. Dr. Booth reported an increase in every department of the denomination's statistics, except in baptisms registered. Thus there are 3842 chapels (as against 3822 in 1896), with 1,293,459 chapel seats, and 364,779 members, as against 1,286,514 chapel seats and 360,112 members. There are 51,800 Sunday-school teachers, 527,616 Sunday scholars, 5021 local preachers, 2006 pastors in charge, and 15,950 baptisms.

Rev. J. R. Wood, of Upper Holloway, read the minute of the Council on the retirement of Dr. Booth, warmly appreciative of his work, and sympathising with him in his failing health. This was seconded by Mr. Hunt, of Nottingham, who expressed great gratification at the success achieved all along the line, except in the matter of baptisms. These had been gradually declining, he said, for some years past, and he urged that special attention should be paid to this matter, and efforts made to discover the cause.

In the evening large numbers gathered at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, at a soirée followed by a public meeting connected with the Home Missionary Society and the Church Extension Fund. Mr. D. Clarke, Mayor of High Wycombe, presided, and Rev. W. J. Avery reported that the total income on revenue account was £3679, the expenditure leaving a deficit of £20. The accounts of the Centenary Fund showed a net balance of £2428, which had been invested; of this amount £1785 were the net proceeds of the bazaar. There are now ninety mission churches on the Council's list, formed into twenty-one groups of two or three churches each. In addition there were twenty-nine mission stations, and over the whole 119 places there were sixty-one mission pastors.

The chairman pleaded the claims of the churches. Rev. J. W. Ewing pointed to moral and material tendencies, which indicated that the denomination had still a great function to fulfil in English life, and ought to engage in a great effort of church extension. Rev. F. G. West gave some account of six years' home mission work at Byrom Hall, Liverpool, and Rev. T. R. Williams, of Bristol, spoke of their obligations to rural churches.

Meantime Mr. Lloyd George, M.P., had been presiding at the Mission House at the annual meeting of the Bible Translation Society. In the course of his speech Mr. George declared there never was a time when the principles of Protestanism were in greater danger, assailed as they were by priests and by men of science. With all his confidence in missionaries and preachers he would rather trust the Book. When the Bible was translated in Wales the result was that the people had been firmly grounded in Bible principles. Rev. W. Hill reported the revenue to be £1716, and expenditure £1697. The translations of the year had been chiefly the Scriptures in Bengali, Orissa, and Cinghalese, also the Dualla version (Cameroons) by Rev. Alfred Saker.

The Open-Air Mission.

THE open-air preachers held, on Thursday last, their anniversary gatherings at Exeter Hall. In the afternoon Archdeacon Sinclair presided, filling the place of Sir C. Gage Brown, unable to be present.

The report, an abstract of which was read by Major Mackinlay, laid much emphasis on the Race-course and Fair work, describing it as "A Mission to Abandoned Men." Four great campaigns of this kind were specially mentioned—at Epsom, Ascot, Doncaster Races, and Peterborough Fair. Details were also given of the ordinary Mission operations—1084 members are now enrolled, while special agents have visited 658 fairs, wakes, races, shows, etc., etc.; have made twenty-seven Gospel village tours, have held 2025 services; and have reached a total of 522 cities, towns, and villages. Special attention was also called to the new method of village evangelisation by means of united bands, which has been in operation about a year; other special services—such as the dinner-hour services at the Small Arms Factory at Enfield Lock. Many telling incidents will appear in the full report of the great blessing God has granted in all parts of the land, and under all manner of circumstances. It was very cheering to find that the income of the Mission shows a very decided increase during the past year.

The Chairman, having admirably expressed his sympathy with the pastor and people of that great congregation in South London who had lost their magnificent building, proceeded eloquently to show that open-air preaching is primitive, and is of the utmost importance in these days of vast populations and increasing indifference. Probably, for example, of the five million inhabitants of London, not more than two millions ever visit any place of worship or religious gathering of any kind. Hence the imperative necessity of going—as open-air preachers do—to those who will not come.

Rev. W. Lawrence Tweedie, Northcote-street Baptist Chapel, Stockton-on-Tees, gave an animated account of racecourse work, especially at Ascot and Doncaster, describing the excited crowds, the sea of human beings, of all classes, gathered to worship at the shrine of a god whose name is not love, to spend time, money, and energy in the pursuit of that which can only mean the ruin of thousands. He graphically delineated the reckless throngs, the jeers and ridicule, the vigorous testimony, and the effect on many, as the conviction cut down into one and another heart that the message came from more than man. It was very noticeable that on the northern course tracts and booklets were willingly accepted, while at Ascot many were contemptuously rejected. The speaker closed with a ringing plea for fresh sympathy and help for the Open-Air Mission.

Mr. Gerald R. Coultas followed with an account of a village campaign in South Wales—a time of great awakening. "Starting from Barry Dock, we reached a large village where a number of men were engaged in a quarry. Our concertina and vigorous voices attracted the men, who speedily gathered round us, listening to the story of salvation. Making our way to other villages, we found opportunities of putting the Gospel very plainly; sometimes climbing a high mountain to get at a little hamlet perched on the top, and again scrambling down into some rocky valley. Everywhere the people seemed eager to hear the simple Gospel. In this way, day after day, hundreds were reached who rarely had heard the message of mercy, and God was pleased richly to bless it to many."

Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence, vicar of St. Michael's, Blackheath, gave the concluding address on "Power for service—the gift of the Holy Ghost for power, perception, purity, and perseverance."

In the evening a crowded meeting was held, the Open-Air Mission Male Choir rendering admirable service. Lord Kinnaird presided, opening with a few hearty words. Mr. Frank Cockrem followed with telling extracts from the forthcoming report, while hearty addresses were given by Revs. E. J. Kennedy and John G. Train.

Palestine Nurses' Mission.

UNDER the auspices of the Church of England Women's Missionary Association the annual meeting of the Palestine and Lebanon Nurses' Mission to the Druses was held on Friday afternoon, in Exeter Hall parlour, at 3 p.m.

Rev. H. C. Sturdy, the chairman, spoke of the land of Palestine as being always interesting owing to its having given us the Bible and our glorious King, and this year it was just 1260 years since the Mosque of Omar was built on the site of the old temple in Jerusalem.

The report, read by Rev. R. Douglas, showed a great need of more help with regard to nurses. A letter received from Dr. Ali Alamudên stated through the lack of nurses the hospital had had to be closed. This was very sad, and surely Christian friends will immediately remedy it. The balance-sheet read by the treasurer, Mr. J. W. Peake, showed a balance of £29 in hand, but against this there was a loan from the C.E.W.M.A. of over £53.

Miss Lloyd then explained what she felt sure was the difficulty in finding nurses to go out to the Lebanon. Nurses applied, and when told where the Mission was situated, and that it was in a Turkish province, declined to go. The necessity of binding themselves to stay a term of years seemed also an obstacle. What was wanted was a missionary spirit among the nurses, which would give them the desire to go anywhere the Master directs. Rev. J. Williams Ashman, as a missionary, bore testimony to the good work of the Mission, and he was sure that missions were as necessary to-day as ever, and were a necessity to the growth of the Church. Miss Ward, who has lived for fifteen years among the Druses, explained that the word "Unitarian," as applied to the Druses by a former speaker, was perhaps misleading, as the God in whom the Druses believed was not the God that Unitarians, in our sense of the word, believe in. Their god is to them a God afar off, as they interpret "He rode upon the cherubim and did fly" to mean that God created the world and then flew away and left it to go its own way. She said that the Druses were willing to come to their daily prayers in Arabic, and the women, who used to come to the mission singly to be taught English fancy work, now came together to a sewing meeting at the mission to sew plain calico garments for the poor.

Miss Eliot, who has worked as a missionary nursing the sick in Baakleen for seven years, gave a very interesting account of the work of the Mission. She said they had a dispensary three times a week, and to show the appreciation felt for this work, fever and other patients would come three, four, and even five hours' journey in burning sun or rain to get advice and medical attendance at the dispensary at Baakleen. Most of them went back and spread the fame of the ladies there, and soon brought their neighbours. When asked "Why don't you go to a doctor nearer?" they would say, "Oh! there is a blessing on the Baakleen work." Even these poor Druses seem to find something here which they had not got. There are often thirty or forty patients at the dispensary at one time, so some must be kept waiting, and during this time a Gospel address is given; this does a little, but we want more workers to follow this up. There should be one lady to devote her whole time to this and house to house visiting, sick and healthy alike. We are always being asked to come and see someone who is ill. "Why don't you have a doctor?" we say. "We can't afford it," is the answer. We perhaps find a woman who is ill, and if the nurse is unable to deal with the case she fetches the doctor, and then the case is daily visited, and suitable food has in many cases to be supplied from the mission-house. The patient improves, and when convalescent says, "Why did you come to me?" Then is our opportunity to witness for the Master. We find work amongst the poor much more encouraging than with the rich. Rev. J. J. Luce spoke, in closing, on the words, "Who is so great a god as our God? Thou art the God that doeth wonders."

Midnight Meeting Movement.

ARCHDEACON SINCLAIR, who has for years been vice-president of this Society, has succeeded the late Bishop Billing as president, and on Wednesday week took the chair at the thirty-eighth annual meeting at Exeter Hall. The finances of the Society felt the result of the Jubilee celebrations last year severely, and in the early autumn of 1897 the outlook was very gloomy, but the committee were able to state that they had been able to pay every liability and have a small balance in hand, a result chiefly owing to an "effective and pathetic" appeal written by Mrs. G. S. Reaney, which realised a considerable sum, much of it from entirely new friends, in amounts varying from 1d. to £10. Mrs. Reaney was present, and moved a resolution of gratitude for the large amount of success vouchsafed to the operators of the society. The report showed that the night missionary met "continually new faces, and those unhappily of young girls," that great pains were taken to reach such, and that many had been induced to quit their evil life. Meetings had been held by the committee in all parts of London, including Woolwich, and in Portsmouth, making a total of 1775 meetings held since the formation of the society, with an aggregate attendance of 98,366. Several instances of reclamation were given.

Archdeacon SINCLAIR, in the course of his address, said that he feared there was no doubt but that a great trade was going on in procuring young women for immoral purposes in London, and urged the Society to continue its noble work, while endeavours should be made to educate public opinion on the subject, to arouse a sense of shame, a sense of pity, and of self-respect. Among those present who took part were Mr. T. H. Whitamore, Mr. T. Nixon, and Mr. C. C. Wilson McCree, secretary. It was also pointed out that the present healthy financial condition could only be maintained by the numerous contributors extending to the Society their help in the future as in the past, otherwise debt would arise and cause much embarrassment.

The Camberwell Mission.

THE anniversary meeting of this Mission, held on Monday, April 18, was largely attended, the big hall being crowded. The Cripples' Choir proved a great attraction, the children singing admirably. Mr. Travers Buxton, who presided, owing to the unavoidable absence of the president (Mr. Edward Rawlings), spoke very heartily, and called special attention to the great amount of work done as compared with the small cost. This feature is, of course, common to most of the Ragged School Missions.

The report, read by Mr. A. H. Ward, showed that this is one of the oldest—if it is not the oldest—Ragged Schools in the South of London. It was established by Thomas Cranfield, of Rowland Hill Chapel, in a carpenter's shop. It has now a commodious building, in which fifty-six meetings are held every week. During the year, it was stated, twenty-one girls and sixteen boys had, by the help of the parent society, enjoyed the benefits of a fortnight in the country; and 3000 dinners had been given to destitute children. A cripples' day school is held twice a week; and after school the room is formed into the cripples' parlour, and the children are supplied with toys, etc., and a pleasant afternoon is spent. In the autumn a flower show is held, and it is surprising how marked is the improvement in the character and number of flowers exhibited. For adults there are Bible-classes, a penny bank, clubs, and open-air Gospel and temperance meetings. One important part of the mission is the distribution of useful clothing to destitute children.

Addresses followed by Rev. G. E. Asker, M.A., vicar of St. Andrew's, Lambeth; Mr. T. W. How; Rev. W. J. Mills; Mr. J. F. Shorey, of the R.S.U. Council; and Mr. John Kirk, who enlarged on the value of such work in the heart of a miserably poor and sadly indifferent district.

Anti-Sunday Travelling Union.

THE Anti-Sunday Travelling Union, and the Shareholders' Union for the Defence of the Lord's Day, held their annual meeting in Exeter (lower) Hall on Friday evening. Sir Mark Stewart, M.P., presided.

The reports for 1897-8 stated that a memorial, signed by 1286 proprietors, was sent to the Great Western Railway directors, which elicited a reply from Lord Emlyn, in which he admitted that not only ought the Sunday goods traffic to be restricted, but that it might be, if considerable sums of money were voted for additional rolling stock and sidings, which Major Mackinlay had advocated. A memorial will be presented to the Midland in August, and another in the summer to the L. and N.W. and G.N. Railways. The plans of the Union in future include a persistent struggle with those companies. During the year 840 names had been added to the membership, making a total of 22,440.

The Chairman said that a seventh day of rest was a necessity for man. It was a fact that those who had to work all the days of the week exhausted strength and shortened their days. The present was the time to bestir themselves.

The adoption of the report was moved by Rev. Sydenham Dixon, Park Chapel, Chelsea, who said a great sore in the present day was Sunday cycling. He hoped such beautiful exercise would not degenerate into a source of desecration. Pastor E. Poole-Connor followed on the same lines. A petition to the House of Commons for the abolition of the sale of intoxicating liquors on Sunday was signed by the chairman, amidst cheers. Mrs. Grace and Rev. Lawrence Tweedie also addressed the meeting.

Factory Girls' Country Holiday Fund.

THE annual meeting of the fund was held at the Mansion House on April 22. The Lord Mayor presided, and said that during the past year 1250 women and girls had been sent into the country for 2120 weeks, at a cost of £1230, of which he was glad to see that £246 was paid by themselves. Princess Christian had consented to become patroness in place of the late Duchess of Teck, who gave the fund her valuable support in the earliest and most difficult stage of its existence. He urged one of the most satisfactory features of the work was that those who were sent away for a holiday contributed whenever possible to the expense, and that therefore, while they were helped, they were not pauperised. Mrs. Garrett Anderson urged the immense importance of the country holiday to the girls, and the pleasant and helpful recollections it provided them with all the year round. Mr. Arnold White said this was not a question of charity, but of national importance. The factory girls were penned up in our great cities, shut out from all the health-giving delights of nature, and yet they were to be the mothers of the future. This crowding into the great cities was really deteriorating the fibre of the nation; the monotony of toil was part of the pathos of the city. Canon Newbolt, Miss Yeatman, Mr. Barton Kent (Master of the Skinners' Company), and Mr. W. G. Rawlinson also appealed most earnestly for increased support for the fund.

Aborigines Protection Society.

MR. ARTHUR PEASE, M.P., presided on Wednesday week, at St. Martin's Town-hall, over the annual meeting in connection with this society. The report submitted by Mr. H. R. Fox Bourne, secretary, reviewed the work of the year, and intimated that the income was quite inadequate.

The Chairman urged that although we had a Christian Government in this country, the existence of the society was necessary for the protection of native races under our rule. Its operations had a very salutary effect upon colonial administration. With regard to the "rebel" Bechuana, if they could not be returned to their own country, it was the duty of the Government to employ them, instead of handing them over as "apprentices" to private individuals. It was our duty as a nation not only to protect native races from oppression, but to do all we could to promote their happiness and progress. Mr. Charles E. Schwann, M.P., spoke of the Matabele Campaign as one of the blackest stains on our national history at the close of the nineteenth century. Mr. Thomas Bayley, M.P., followed on similar lines.

On the motion of Mr. A. E. Fletcher, seconded by Mr. R. McKenna, M.P., and supported by Miss Eliza Orme, it was resolved—"That this meeting protests against the arbitrary and wrongful treatment to which natives of Bechuanaland, Matabeleland, and other parts of South Africa are being subjected, and appeals to her Majesty's Government to uphold their rights as British subjects."

Mr. Frederic Harrison moved, "That this meeting regards with alarm some of the measures now in progress for extending British control in West and Central Africa, and urges on Her Majesty's Government the duty of taking no action that is not clearly conducive to the welfare of the inhabitants." Mr. J. Renner Maxwell (West Africa) supported these views.

There was a Great Cry.

Ex. xii. 30.

THERE'S a cry in the wind to-night
From the lands where the Lord is unknown,
While the Shepherd above, in his pitiful love,
Intercedes at his Father's throne.

There's a call from the dark to-night
That haunts the lighted room,
From his "other sheep" on the broken steep
At the edge of eternal doom.

There's a pain at my heart to-night—
From the heart of God it came—
For I cannot forget that He loves them yet,
And they've never heard of his name.

There's a sob in my prayer to-night,
When I think of the million homes
Where never a word for the Lord is heard,
Nor a message from Jesus comes.

WHAT CONVERSION IMPLIES.

We are called to be Christians, to be converted from sin to holiness, and from the kingdom of darkness into the kingdom of God's dear Son. St. Paul's call to apostleship is nothing to his being made a child of God. Judas was a Christian by profession, an Apostle by call, and a devil by nature, and what is Judas in his own place to the meanest of God's children?—to poor Lazarus in Abraham's bosom?—Fletcher of Madeley.

PRAYER DEFINED.

Prayer is the application of want to Him who alone can relieve it; the voice of sin to Him who alone can pardon it. It is the urgency of poverty, the prostration of humility, the fervency of penitence, the confidence of trust. It is not eloquence, but earnestness; not the definition of helplessness, but the feeling of it; not figures of speech, but compunction of soul. It is the "Lord, save us, we perish," of drowning Peter,—the cry of faith to the ear of mercy.—Hannah More.

The Evangelistic Field.

REV. E. PAYSON HAMMOND.

We have received the following communication, written by a worker, with respect to a recent mission:—

Rev. E. Payson Hammond has been conducting a week's revival meetings at Lynn, Mass. The meeting on Sunday afternoon at the First Methodist Church was a great success. Many ministers occupied seats on the platform, and an organised corps of ushers seated the adults among the thousand children present in such a way that every ten children were watched over and assisted by a Christian worker. Mr. Hammond preached a powerful sermon on "The Sacrifice of Christ," at the close of which the workers began conversing with the children, and, it is believed, were successful in leading a large number to Christ.

Mr. Hammond has conducted afternoon meetings through the week in different parts of the city, giving the children an opportunity to attend the meetings by going direct from school. All denominations united, and over five hundred, as the result of the work of Sunday and of the week-day meetings, have given evidence of a change of heart, after being carefully examined.

While Mr. Hammond's methods to those who are not acquainted with them may seem radical, he is careful and constantly on his guard lest any child should entertain a false hope. He does not look for lasting results in his first meeting so much as in those which follow. The testimony of one child is the experience of many—that she went home from the first meeting to pray, and at the second she found Jesus. Nevertheless, results are obtained at the beginning often exceeding most sanguine expectations; but the evangelist warns against superficial work, knowing that only the Holy Spirit can tell a child when he is converted.

Only time can prove the genuineness of this work, and such proof Mr. Hammond has received in almost every large city from Maine to California, as well as in England, in the acknowledgment of thousands of adults that salvation came to them when they, as children, attended his meetings.

BARNWELL MISSION, CAMBRIDGE.

The report of the Theatre Royal Barnwell Mission testifies to much blessing during the year. "Three special missions were held, and a deep interest was shown. Although at the time we did not see much result, our hearts were cheered later on to learn that cases of real conversion were not a few. Two missions were conducted by Gipsy Smith and his wife, who are always well received. The Weaver Brothers also visited us and held an eight days' mission, when numbers flocked to hear them sing and preach the Gospel. The week-night services have also been successful. The open-air work has been constant, and those engaged in it have shown much zeal." The superintendent is Mr. W. K. Vawser, 32, The Cury, Cambridge.

WORK AT EPSOM SPRING RACES.

These races, held on two days in last week, were the scene of vast assemblies of people, the last day almost rivalling the noted "Derby Day" for the numbers gathered. Amid them it was the privilege of a splendid body of workers, connected with the Open-Air Mission and the London City Mission, to labour, and both in the town and on the racecourse itself hundreds heard the Gospel, while many thousands of choice Christian publications were distributed. Signs were not wanting that, even amid the distractions and ungodly pre-occupations of a race-course, the Word of God had laid hold upon some. They returned again and again to the services, as if impelled by an irresistible impulse. A striking instance of the changed attitude of the crowd toward the work lay in the fact that the fine new banner of the mission, with its striking Scripture text, was unfurled for the first time on the course, no opposition whatever being offered. The poor gipsies received visitation, and were greatly affected on hearing that their veteran missionary, Mr. Wm. Clarke, had passed away.

EVANGELISTS' MOVEMENTS.

Rev. Thomas Waugh has been holding impressive mission services in Grosvenor Hall, Belfast, and Pastor Ed. T. Mateer has been conducting similar meetings in Londonderry.

Rev. S. Chadwick, Leeds, the well-known Methodist missioner, has been on a fourteen days' tour in Scotland, preaching and lecturing with much acceptance and signs of blessing.

A short series of special evangelistic services has been held by Mr. William Forbes in the Lower York-street Mission Hall, Cambridge. His addresses have been marked by freshness and force.

A very remarkable work of grace has taken place at Summerhill Presbyterian Church, co. Meath, of which Rev. Samuel Craig is the pastor. The whole district, which previously was a very ungodly one, has been marvellously moved, and immense excitement prevails. The movement appears to have been spontaneous in its origin, and many have professed conversion.

For eight years preachers have been sent every week by the Evangelisation Society to conduct meetings in the Town Hall, Great Dunmow, and much blessing has attended their efforts. On Sunday, April 17, anniversary services were held by Mr. Joseph Whiting, whose words will be long remembered. There were good congregations and much interest manifested by all present.

The work of God in the Shetland Islands continues. Some of the places are quite changed in character. The effect of it upon public-houses is very great; one of them had only one customer on a Saturday. The work has not caused much gain to the Methodist societies themselves, but has been felt in other churches. "In Scotland," says the Methodist Recorder, "Methodism has been called to fulfil a purpose in relation to the Presbyterian churches which they have not been slow to recognise as of God." This is as it should be, one church aiding another, the diversity of gifts blending to secure a common good, and in the result each church honouring the rest.

A fruitful mission has been held in Shanklin, Isle of Wight, by Messrs. William Sampson and Henry A. Varcoe. A week of prayer preceded the mission, and a house-to-house visitation was carried out. Thus the missioners found a prepared people. On the Sunday morning many sought prayer. In the evening the chapel was crowded, and many were led to "flee from the wrath to come." On the second Sunday the chapel was again full. On the third Sunday Mr. Sampson again occupied the pulpit, and on the following evening he concluded the mission by an account of his evangelistic tours in the West Indies. The chapel was crowded. Efficient help was rendered by friends of other churches. The result of the mission will be found in the quickened life of many.

An eight days' mission has been held by Mr. W. R. Lane in busy manufacturing Preston, where four years ago he held a very remarkable mission, the fruits of which are still to be found in the new lives of many. A welcome was, therefore, ready for him, and during the past week the large hall has been crowded night after night by some 3000 people. The hall not being available on Sundays, the largest theatre in the town was taken, and packed to the door afternoon and evening. In the morning Mr. Lane had the unusual privilege of preaching in a Church of England, the devoted vicar of St. Mark's (Rev. D. M. B. Chapman) having thrown himself heart and soul into the mission. The afternoon meeting for men only was also marked by great power. At the closing meeting on Sunday evening numbers bore open testimony to the power of God, including sceptics, drunkards, and, in one very remarkable case, a leading Unitarian to whom the Gospel came as of awakening and life.

Great interest appears to have been aroused in Portland, on the far distant Oregon coast of the Pacific, by a mission held by Dr. Munhall. On the first Sunday he delivered an address on the Bible, which was intended for business men. Arrangements were made to have as many of these as possible present. The sermon proved so satisfactory to those present that a request was sent in for the evangelist to repeat it in the Marquam Grand, and another effort was made to secure the presence of as many business men as possible. There was not a vacant seat in the building when the speaker commenced his address, and he held his auditors in such close attention that hardly a man left the building during the one and a-half hours he spoke. During the three weeks of the mission 800 converts signified their purpose of leading a new life as a result of the work. A grand rally was held in which all these were assembled for a parting address on the Christian life. Dr. Munhall took very strong ground on theatre-going, dancing, and on Christian separation from the world in marriage, business, and pleasure.

Mr. Josiah Nix, Halifax, May 8-16.
Mr. F. G. Spurr, Malvern, May 14-23.
Mr. E. P. Telford, Bow, E., May 8-19.
The Weaver Bros., Cardiff, May 1-15.
Mr. George Clarke, Teignmouth, to May 5.
Mr. W. R. Lane, Hull, April 30-May 12.
Mr. Monro Collings, Croydon, May 1-3.
Mr. Charles Inglis, in May, Great Assembly Hall.
Gipsy Smith, West Bromwich, April 30 to May 9; Deptford and Greenwich, May 14-23.
Sergeant Pullinger, Institute, Mitcham, May 10-15; Welbeck-street, W., May 22; Soldiers' Home, Winchester, May 29 and 30.
The Evangelisation Society.—The following, amongst other missions, are arranged for members of the society:—Blakeshall Common, J. G. Stanger; Pewsey, W. Notman; Abram, J. Shields; Kilmington, S. J. West; Shelley, J. Harris; Hatfield Broad Oak, J. Whiting; Langford, E. Bailey; Hillmorton, C. Noakes; Bingham, G. Pell; Trimley, J. Rochfort; Chipperfield, J. Haynes; Newton Stewart, J. W. Moodie; Falkirk, J. Galletly; Broadley Common, C. Galletly; Methil, T. Canning.

Requests for Prayer.

For special services for children at Panghourne, May 1 and 2, by Mr. C. D. Smith.

For a beloved son, that he may be led to the Saviour, and enabled to say, "Jesus is mine," and restored to health.

Personalia.

Mr. Francis Murphy has lately been having a successful series of Gospel temperance meetings at the Avenue Theatre, Pittsburg. One evening 350 pledges were taken.

Professor Charteris intends to retire on May 16 from the Chair of Biblical Criticism in the University of Edinburgh. It is thirty years since he was appointed, and great regret is felt at the severance of so long and honourable a connection with the University.

Miss Wigham.—Much regret is felt in Edinburgh at the departure of Miss Wigham to take up her residence in Dublin. For more than half a century she has been a well-known figure in the capital of Scotland. She has had a long and busy life, full of manifold interests and abundant labours.

Mrs. Ardill, who lately visited this country, and is well known in connection with rescue work in Sydney, has recently returned to England from a tour in Canada. She would be glad of opportunities to address any meetings in London during May. Her present address is South-road, Kendal, Westmoreland.

Dr. Charles Berry, of Wolverhampton, has been compelled to cancel all his engagements during the forthcoming May meetings owing to a breakdown in health. Rev. J. H. Jowett, of Carr's-lane Chapel, Birmingham, has consented to take Dr. Berry's place as one of the speakers of the Congregational Union, at the meeting at the City Temple, on May 12.

Dr. and Mrs. James A. Graham sailed on Wednesday last for their distant sphere on the head waters of the Tocantins River, Brazil. Chief Sepe's Indians await their arrival at Para, to convey them 1500 miles by canoe. It is a great cause for praise and thankfulness that they have been enabled to start in time to reach the Indian party before their departure into the interior. Dr. Graham is the 205th missionary whose passage has been promoted by the Missionary Bureau (186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.) during the eleven years of its existence.

Mr. John Robertson, minister of the City Temple, Glasgow, has sailed for America for a three years' evangelistic tour round the world. He will be first for some weeks in California. During his absence the work in the centre of Glasgow is to be carried on under his supervision by evangelists and preachers from all parts. Mr. Robertson is personally responsible for this work in Glasgow, and the fellowship of the Lord's people in giving for its support will be gratefully received by the missionary in charge, Mr. Archibald Bell, 122, Ingram-street, Glasgow. Mr. Robertson's address in America is Missionary College, Nyack, New York.

The School of Sorrow.—How fast we learn in a day of sorrow. Scripture shines out in new effulgence, every verse seems to contain a sunbeam, every promise stands out in illuminated splendour; things hard to be understood become in a moment plain.—H. Bonar.

Obituary.

MR. J. GURNEY BARCLAY.

We record with much regret the death of Mr. J. Gurney Barclay, of the well-known banking firm in Lombard-street, and a warm friend of many leading religious societies. He had been ailing for some time, and passed away at Brighton on Monday, at the age of eighty-two.

REV. GEORGE HALL.

Intelligence has come to hand of the death of Rev. George Hall, ex-Moderator of the Presbyterian Church of New Zealand. Mr. Hall was a native of Scotland. Under the auspices of the London Missionary Society he laboured for three years in Jamaica, but was afterwards transferred to India, where for twenty-five years he had charge of the Madras Training College. His labours were highly successful. In 1881 he was called to the Presbyterian Church of Waihold, Dunedin, where he laboured with much acceptance till about two years ago. Since his retirement from active service Mr. Hall has resided in Dunedin, where he was well known and highly esteemed. He died somewhat suddenly at the age of seventy-three.

REV. DR. BREWSTER.

This faithful and beloved clergyman, who passed away at Capetown, on March 17, had resided for the last twelve years at Eastbourne, whither he had retired after a busy and eventful career. Born in Dublin 1812, he started life in the practice of the law in Dublin and Melbourne. On his return to England he went to Oxford and entered the Church, his labours beginning at St. Helens (I.W.) in 1853, and extending to 1880, when he retired from the vicarage of Leyton. Since residing at Eastbourne he became known specially for his Bible readings, held in a tent on the lawn weekly during the season. These proved of the greatest value and blessing to many.

MR. WILLIAM ROGERS.

This servant of Christ, who has just passed to his rest, was for forty years agent of the London City Mission, twenty-five of these being spent amid the squalor and vice of Rag Fair, Whitechapel. He was well known as a brave open-air preacher, several times his life having been threatened when the cry of "No Popery" was more often heard than now. For the last ten years he was special missionary to Bethnal Green Infirmary, where he won the confidence of doctors and nurses and the loving gratitude of many a weary sufferer. He will also be remembered by the few remaining fellow-workers as superintendent of the theatre services at the Pavilion, Whitechapel-road. He leaves a son (missionary to East London bakehouses) and a son-in-law (missionary at Chelsea) to carry on the blessed work while, at the ripe age of eighty-six, he has entered into rest. He was buried at Ilford Cemetery on April 19 amid the regrets of many warm friends.

LIEUT.-COL. WILMOT-BROOKE.

Many readers will learn with sorrow of the death of this servant of God. He had an attack of influenza at the end of February, but he rallied so quickly from that as to be able to attend, as usual, the meetings on the two consecutive days of the Army and Navy Missionary Union and the Army and Navy Prayer Union, of which latter he had been secretary for twenty years, viz., from 1870 to 1890.

After a fortnight's stay at Boscombe, he returned to his home in Tunbridge Wells, apparently in his usual health, though to many around him he had appeared for some months to have failed in strength. The intense cold setting in suddenly towards the end of last month brought on an acute attack of the complaint from which he had for years suffered in a chronic form. After an illness of less than ten days, he quietly fell asleep in Jesus on Good Friday, aged seventy-one. Abundant in good works and Gospel service, he will be greatly missed.

MR. WILLIAM BURGESS, HOLBEACH.

This aged servant of Christ passed from the earthly to the heavenly life on the 11th inst., in his eighty-eighth year, to be for ever with his risen Lord. In 1832 he left the Church of England, dear to him from early associations, and became a member of the Wesleyan Church. Six years later he was enrolled a local preacher, taking for his first text the words, "Marvel not, my brethren, if the world hate you." At this time he was called to suffer for his religious opinions—being threatened, first, with the loss of the valued friendship of his only uncle, a clergyman, if he left the Church of his fathers; next with the loss of his farm and the displeasure of the Duke who owned it, if he refused to occupy the pew belonging to it in the parish church. On both occasions he answered firmly and respectfully, "I do not mean to violate my conscience before God for friendship or worldly gain." This in the end won him respect, not the loss of friend or farm as he feared. Very closely through all the years of his life he observed the commandment of God (Isaiah lviii. 13) on the keeping of the Sabbath. His life was intensely spiritual—in the field, in the market, and by the fireside he was a preacher of the Gospel of the ever blessed God—he fed on the Word of God as a soul hungering for the hidden manna, and thus he was well equipped for counsel or for fight when "called to contend for the faith once delivered unto the saints."

REV. WILLIAM WEST, RANMOOR.

This veteran missionary was fifty years ago engaged in work for the Wesleyan Missionary Society in the Bahamas and afterwards at Jamaica and the West Coast of Africa, where for nearly forty years he laboured with incessant zeal and devotion. In 1873 he returned home. Then he became totally blind, and so was able neither to return to the mission field nor to take an English circuit. But, nothing daunted, he undertook deputation work with his usual earnestness. Neither he nor the people to whom he spoke seemed conscious of the great affliction which had overtaken him. He would, in preaching services, turn over the leaves of the Bible as if to find the lessons, and would to all appearance read them with accuracy and force. In recent years even this work has had to be laid aside, but up to a few days ago his friends found him ready to converse in his usual spirited fashion. His blindness was one of the incidents of a long and eventful life, never spoken of as a misfortune. On Sunday evening (17th) the congregation in the little chapel of Ranmoor heard to their great grief that, even while they were preparing to come to worship, their old friend and father had passed away from them. He never saw death, and knew not that the end was come. On Wednesday week he was laid to rest in the Sheffield Cemetery, in the eighty-eighth year of his age and the sixty-third of his ministry.

REV. W. J. HUMPHREY, SIERRA LEONE.

Last week we mentioned the anxiety felt about this missionary. Now his fate seems no longer in doubt. A telegram has been received by the C.M.S.: "Humphrey killed." How he met his death we do not at present know with any certainty, though we are led to believe that he was murdered contrary to the wishes of the rebel chief into whose country he had penetrated, as we are informed that the murderer has been executed by the chief's order. What we do know is that Mr. Humphrey died whilst seeking to establish communication with the missionaries of the C.M.S. in the hinterland of Sierra Leone, as he was responsible for the sending to them of supplies, and he was afraid that they might be in want. The last letter from Mr. Humphrey to the C.M.S. shows that he was endeavouring to get through from Port Lokkoh to Rogbere and Makomp in order to learn the condition of his brother missionaries, Messrs. Caldwell and Castle, who, if in no other danger, were known to be short of food. It would appear that Mr. Humphrey's death was the work of some individual, so that it must not be taken as proof that he acted rashly. The loss of Mr. Humphrey is the greater calamity to the Sierra Leone Mission because Mr. Alvarez and another missionary are due home on furlough—and furlough in the case of West African workers cannot wait. Moreover, owing to the death of Mr. Cox last June, the mission is short-handed.

A message from Freetown, Sierra Leone, says that Mr. Humphrey's head was found impaled on a stick. A servant who was with him when he went into the interior is now in the hospital at Freetown. The servant is wounded in the hand. Although the party was fired on, Mr. Humphrey would not return, as he said he must see how his people were further up. He even bandaged his servant's hand, but this servant and the carriers became so frightened that they fled from their master. Mrs. Humphrey is at Freetown, and much sympathy is felt for her.

The Book World.

A USEFUL MANUAL.

In our last issue we called attention to a great work of reference, which we regretted to state combined several serious weaknesses with many excellent qualities. While the inductive method is calculated to yield useful results in the study of Christian institutions and doctrines, the critical spirit, when not held in check by considerations arising from Christ's word and Scripture authority, is sure to lead to dangerous conclusions. We are glad now, with less need for reserve, to speak of a hand-book which has for some years been before the public, and appears in a new edition this week*, with additional matter. Dr. Wright's Introduction to the Old Testament is one of the "Theological Educator" series; it is the work of one who is at once unimpeachable for his scholarship and highly esteemed as a Christian teacher.

This little work is in two parts, the first dealing with sources—manuscripts and editions, versions, etc., and the second with the books of the Old Testament, firstly in groups, then separately. The chapters are explanatory to a useful degree, and rich in their summaries of literature, this feature being brought up to date by a valuable appendix.

We do not know the instructed man who is prepared to deny that Old Testament study has its problems. Dr. Wright reviews these as they arise, and always in a reverent spirit. This is a striking quality of his book, and on that account, as well as because of its useful contents, we heartily commend the work to Bible students. In his original preface Dr. Wright uttered a word of solemn warning against rationalistic criticism; in a new preface he speaks still more boldly, and we give some of his words for the information of those who think that the critical onslaught has already decided the conflict:—

There is a marked tendency, even among those who profess belief in Scripture as a whole, to accept all that is merely stated to be the latest results of modern criticism. The spirit of submission to authority is as rampant as ever. Some years ago it was dangerous to question "the authority of the Church," which was supposed to have placed barriers in the way of free inquiry; now it is dangerous to a scholar's reputation in England or elsewhere to call in question "the unanimous interpretation" of the critics. Theologians who but twenty or thirty years ago would have been found in the ranks of those striving to harmonise Scripture and Science, are quite ready, without having made any thorough examination of the matter, to express belief in the latest dicta of critics, however opposed those dicta may be to the truthfulness of the books of the Old Testament. Some, filled with the new-born spirit of liberality, are willing to admit the narratives of the Old Testament to be a confused mass of legend and fable, of which the less said the better. Histories and prophecies to which Christ and the writers of the New Testament appealed as of decisive authority are now put aside as no longer reliable; while the question has already been debated in Church journals whether our children ought to be taught at all the histories of the Old Testament.

Proceeding, Dr. Wright shows that such a surrender of the sacred books is not justified by the facts of criticism. He points out, on the other hand, that it is beyond question that the books of the Old Testament have come down to us substantially in the same shape as they existed in the days of our Lord, who with his Apostles accepted them as of Divine authority. Recalling that Christ spoke of the prophecies in the Books of Moses, the Psalms, Isaiah, Daniel, and the other Hebrew prophets as "the true sayings of God," he writes with a candour that we greatly admire and heartily approve:—

As Christians we cannot abandon the teaching of Christ, or forget the endorsement of the Old Testament books by the writers of the New. We, therefore, refuse to seat ourselves as pupils at the feet of critics who to a large extent regard the Old Testament histories as mere fictions, and the visions of the Hebrew prophets as only grand poetical imaginations.

It is obvious to all that criticism is receiving from the critics themselves as many blows as are dealt from those who meet its attacks. Dr. Wright says:

Modern criticism, as now in fashion, bids fair ultimately to extinguish all faith in criticism. When one great critic can affirm that the first part of the book of Isaiah is a mosaic, so badly put together that it has first to be broken into pieces, in order that its pieces may be readjusted according to his fancy; when another, commenting on the great prophecy of Daniel ix. 24-27, proposes alterations in every clause of the text but one (for none of which any external authority can be adduced); when a third has ingeniously suggested that the Book of Isaiah is a composite work, composed of fragments of many different writers,—one can easily see that if in time past theologians have brought discredit on theology by all sorts of forced harmonistic hypotheses, the critics, although they have occupied the field for a much shorter period, have already outdone the theologians.

We trust that the many students who use this book will not merely benefit by the author's research and judgment, but learn to exercise his caution, and see the wisdom and need of regarding Old Testament story in the light of New Testament interpretation.

At a missionary gathering last week in the Christian Institute, Glasgow, interesting accounts of work were given by missionaries from India, Italy, Livingstonia, and Hankow.

It is proposed to set apart a missionary in connection with the Free Church of Scotland for work among tinkers—a very difficult class to reach, owing to their migratory habits.

At a meeting, in Edinburgh, of the Scottish Women's Protestant Union one of the speakers said that the greatest hindrance to the progress of the truth lay in the apathy of Protestants.

At the annual meeting of the Sailors' Orphan Society of Scotland last week it was reported that seventy children had been admitted during the year, making a total of 537 dealt with through the year. A fine site for the new homes has been secured near Kilmalcolm.

IRELAND.

The Dublin Medical Mission is doing a good work. Its staff includes three doctors, who give their services gratuitously, a nurse, and several trained lady and gentlemen dispensers.

The annual conference of churches of Christ in Ireland has been held in Londonderry. Delegates were present from various parts of the country. The possibility of a union between Baptists, Disciples of Christ, and Brethren was discussed at considerable length, but no decision was arrived at.

The session of the General Synod of the Irish Church was held last week, in Dublin, when the Primate, Dr. Alexander, of Armagh, delivered an earnest address. In dwelling on the subject of Christian union he urged that controversy should not be made the grave of charity, and said there were Christian souls in each Christian sect—that each had "some sweet instinct of the family of Christ." Unity, however, cannot be forced. The address was a beautiful one, and its spirit was unexceptionable. Afterwards a motion against the spread of Ritualism in the Church was rejected by a large majority.

THE Y.M.C.A.

Mr. C. T. Studd's Mission at Manchester was productive of much good.

The Leominster Association is carrying on a good all-round work in new and more commodious premises.

The report of the Blackburn Association shows earnest work and cheering progress, in the evangelistic, social, and educational direction.

A mission to men has been held at Ashton-under-Lyne Association by Mr. A. K. Yapp. The attendances were good and much blessing resulted.

The Blackburn Association has just published the first number of the Monthly Record, a bright little paper, full of interesting items of Y.M.C.A. interest.

The annual meeting of the Waterfoot (Lancs.) Association was held under the presidency of Mr. J. J. Ashcroft. An interesting report was given of the year's work.

The annual meeting of the Lewisham Association was held at the Court Hill Schools, Mr. G. S. Bournes presiding. The report showed that good progress had been made since the starting of the association a year ago—the membership is now over 100.

At a well-attended and enthusiastic meeting of young men, held in the Oddfellows' Hall, Buxton, on Monday week, it was unanimously resolved to form a Y.M.C.A. A representative provisional committee was appointed to take steps to give effect to the resolution with as little delay as possible.

The report of the Hammersmith Association shows that earnest work is being done in West London. The change to new rooms in The Grove has been beneficial in many ways. The review of the operations shows a grand Sunday afternoon Bible-class, also Gospel meetings, Youths' Bible-class (Monday), Bible Study (Wednesday), and other useful meetings. Great importance is assigned at this centre to Scripture study. The hon. secs. are Messrs. John Goodley and H. Japes.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

At the Duxhurst Industrial Home for Inebriates a large number of habitual drunkards have been successfully cured.

A Bill has been introduced into the Manx House of Keys containing a clause imposing a penalty on "every licensed person who sells or delivers, or allows any person to sell or deliver, any description of intoxicating liquor to any person under the age of fourteen years."

A painful discovery was made at the Birmingham office of the Order of Good Templars on Tuesday week. Mr. John B. Collings, who was well known in the temperance world, and who edited the Templar Watchword, was found dead in a lavatory, whither he had apparently gone to wash his hands on Monday evening, and had had a fit and died, being locked in the building all night.

The Duke of Connaught, who presided last week at a district meeting of the Army Temperance Association, held in the Officers' Club, Aldershot, said he was glad of the opportunity of again expressing his sympathy with the work being carried out by the Association. When in India he saw a great deal of its working, and he was able to bear testimony to the excellent results attending the work. There have been hardly any failures.—At Aldershot 1156 soldiers are members of the Army Temperance Association, and the numbers are steadily increasing.

At a Congress held at Ramsgate on Tuesday a paper was read on Intoxicants in Workhouses, in the course of which it was shown that the workhouse drink bill had been reduced from £82,000 to £32,000, thus saving £50,000 per annum. Maps and diagrams were used to illustrate the excessive consumption of alcohol in some workhouses as compared to others. The Chief General Inspector and Assistant Secretary to the Local Government Board writes in reference to these facts:—"By the Board's regulations no inmate of a workhouse may receive any fermented or spirituous liquors except in pursuance of a written recommendation of the medical officer."

The Irish Sunday Closing Bill has secured first place on Wednesday, May 4, for its second reading. It needs only the concentration of the Christian forces of the country to secure its triumphant passage through Parliament, and the deliverance of the Lord's Day, so far as Ireland is concerned, from the dominion of strong drink. The desire of Ireland for this deliverance has long been uttered with no uncertain voice. The hour for united action is come, and every Christian should be up and doing on behalf of this great cause. The Archbishop of Canterbury and others, representing the Sunday Closing Special Campaign Committee, ask prayer to God that these efforts may be crowned with success.

Foreign.

A Bill has been introduced to the U.S. Senate for the appropriation of 450,000 dols. for the payment of British claims under the Behring Sea award.

The Spanish Protestant Bishop Cabrera has commenced a series of addresses in various centres throughout the country upon the spread of the English Church in Spain.

The Premier of New Zealand, the Right Hon. R. J. Seddon, has announced that the financial year yielded a surplus of £500,000. Much satisfaction is expressed.—New Zealand railways have an estimated surplus of £100,000.

The Sultan is sending a mission to the Tsar laden with presents, in the hope of obtaining indulgence as to Russian indemnity arrears.—Amongst distressed Armenians in Asia Minor the British Vice-Consul has distributed in kind (largely seed-corn) and in cash £1800.—The Bible Lands Mission Aid Society has sent considerable help to the Armenian orphanages, containing over 3000 children.

The evacuation of Thessaly began on Saturday last. The loan for the payment of the war indemnity will be issued ten days after the first zone has been evacuated.—Lady Egerton's efforts to relieve the distress in Thessaly has been most successful. The embroidery industry is in a flourishing condition. Self-supporting looms are at work. The industry is to be extended to Volo. Help in this form is of a permanent nature, and does not pauperise.

The Far East.—It is stated in Yokohama that the negotiations between Japan and Russia for a new convention respecting Korea are nearly concluded.—Russia is negotiating with China for the lease of Kin-Chau.—Further reinforcements of troops have left Odessa for Port Arthur and Ta-lien-Wan.—Japan is to receive £2,000,000 of the Chinese loan.—35,000 Russian troops are to be despatched to Port Arthur from the Black Sea.—The British Government has given assurances to Germany that no railways will be built from Wei-Hai-Wei into the interior.

Crete.—Admiral Skrydloff, after reviewing the Russian troops here, distributed 700 sacks of flour, as the Czar's gift for the relief of Christian peasants. A thousand Christian peasants were also provided with a dinner. The Mohammedan peasants had been invited, but none came.—After the Mohammedans surrendered who recently fired on the Russian troops, they were generously released, the admiral reminding them that he had full power to shoot them.—Prince George of Greece will shortly proceed to St. Petersburg. It is expected that his nomination by Russia to the government of Crete will be made during his visit.—Five hundred bags of Sicilian sulphur will be distributed amongst distressed peasants in Crete for dressing their vines, which have suffered severely through neglect.—The admirals at Canea have telegraphed to their respective Governments demanding the reinforcement of European troops, and the withdrawal of half the Turkish forces in the island.

Africa.—From Liverpool comes the statement that the amount to be paid by Government as compensation to the Royal Niger Company has been definitely fixed at £700,000.—The head of Rev. W. J. Humphrey, the missing missionary in Sierra Leone, has been found impaled on a stick.—Bishop Tucker is seeking to ameliorate the miserable and helpless condition of women and young girl slaves in Zanzibar.—Telegraphic communication has been opened between Blantyre, Nyassaland, and Umtali, Mashonaland—an important link in Mr. Rhodes' scheme to link the Cape to Cairo. There is now through communication from Cape Town to Blantyre (British Central Africa Protectorate).—At a meeting in London of the South African Company, when Mr. Cecil Rhodes was re-elected a director, he gave a glowing account of the present condition and future prospects of Rhodesia, and suggested a railway from Lake Tanganyika to Khartoum. What great opportunities are here opening to missionary devotion!

MISSIONS TO SEAMEN.

Patron:—

Admiral of the Fleet H.R.H. the Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, K.G.

THE MISSIONS TO SEAMEN is unable to respond to several urgent appeals received from important ports abroad, where numerous British crews greatly need spiritual and physical help.

Increased Funds are also required for the maintenance and extension of the existing work, afloat and ashore, of the Missions to Seamen at home and abroad.

The Society has to maintain one hundred and sixty-eight Chaplains, Readers, Boatmen, &c., working amongst the shipping and fishing vessels in sixty-eight seaports in every part of the world.

Sixty-nine Mission Vessels and Boats, and Eighty-seven Seamen's Churches and Institutes are in daily use, winter and summer.

INCOME in 1896, £38,291.

Increased Contributions, Offertories, Drawing-room Meeting Collections, &c., are urgently needed to maintain the existing sailor work and to extend it to other Ports. They should be sent to COMMANDER W. DAWSON, R.N., The Missions to Seamen, 11, Buckingham Street, Strand, London, W.C.

DISTRICT VISITORS, OPEN-AIR PREACHERS, TRACT DISTRIBUTORS, and CHRISTIAN WORKERS generally should send to Messrs. MORGAN and SCOTT, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., for their Lists of BOOKS, TRACTS, LEAFLETS, HYMN SHEETS, etc., etc.

BEFORE SIXTY YEARS AGO.

THE SPECIAL CLAIMS OF THE SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING FEMALE EDUCATION IN THE EAST

TO RECOGNITION ARE:

(1.) That it was the only Society for both Zenana work and School work existing in the Empire at the time of the Queen's Accession.

(2.) That it was then already carrying on Zenana work, Harem work, and School work, in China, the Straits, Egypt, and India.

(3.) That it was the pioneer of all subsequent efforts in Zenana and Harem work, for which it prepared the way, by encountering, and, to a certain extent, overcoming the greatest initial difficulties.

(4.) That it still occupies a wider sphere than any kindred Society in existence.

(5.) That by the help of God it has continued steadfast unto this day "in the Apostles' doctrine," and in the sending the Gospel to the heathen women and girls of the East.

The Committee urge these claims, and APPEAL for HELP to their COMMEMORATION FUND, to enable them to strengthen and extend the work of the Society.

PRESIDENT, THE MARCHIONESS OF NORTHAMPTON.

267, Vauxhall Bridge Road, S.W. Miss WEBB, Secretary.

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY

STARVING AND DESTITUTE

Sheltered and Fed

ALL-NIGHT RESCUE WORK.

Already, since this work began, over 40,000 poor Homeless and Starving Men have been gathered from the streets in the dead of night, Sheltered, Fed, and otherwise assisted, with most gratifying results.

Free Meals for the very poor, both Adults and Children, are given every week to some hundreds all the year, and have proved a great boon to many really starving and destitute poor.

The continuance of this much-needed work must depend upon the liberality of those having the means to support it. Contributions will be gratefully received by the SECRETARY; or Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or may be sent to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

JAS. ATKINSON, Secretary,

Among the Churches

Church of England.

A fine new church was opened last week in Wombwell.

The Spanish Protestant Bishop, Juan Cabrera, was last week in the North of England, giving a series of addresses in various centres throughout the country.

Rev. W. Bardin, curate of St. Chrysostom's, Everton, has accepted the charge of Holy Trinity, St. Anne-street, Liverpool, vacant since the death of Rev. J. H. Skewes.

A friend in London has guaranteed to Rev. R. Middleton the salaries of two curates a year for his new parish in Norwich, where he has taken a bold stand for Protestantism.

The Bishop of Manchester, in a circular dealing with the spiritual needs of that city and Salford, said sixteen districts required new churches, and, in addition, eleven mission-rooms were needed.

Alluding to the distress amongst the clergy in the agricultural districts in the N.-W. of England, the Vicar of Bolton says: "Many clergymen are literally starving for want of bread. Upwards of 1350 incumbents receive the miserable pittance of 23s. a week."

Efforts are being made to perpetuate Bishop Billing's name by a suitable memorial. But care will need to be taken, lest in the endeavour to do this the effort should be spoiled by attempting too much. There are no less than three different proposals before the public. Concentration on one, or at most two, is advisable.

It is stated by the Liverpool Courier that Lord Grimthorpe intends to call attention in the House of Lords to the ritual usages condemned by Mr. Kensit. There ought to be an important debate on this subject, at which some of our Protestant Bishops should be present, and express their condemnation of the Romanising work of the Ritualists.

The C.M.S.'s financial position is thus estimated: The total receipts for general purposes are £305,625. This total is £7000 more than that of last year, £44,000 over that of the preceding year or any other, and at least £100,000 more than the average ten years ago. The total receipts, including all special funds, amount to £331,600. Last year the total was £341,395, which included one gift of £29,000. The expenditure is not yet quite adjusted. Probably there will be a deficit on the year of £19,000.

Congregational.

Rev. D. Stephens has accepted a call to Toller Chapel, Kettering.

Rev. William Daniel, of Limehouse, has accepted a call to Victoria-road, Southsea.

Rev. S. S. Reed, of Lewisham, has been invited to Princes-street, Gravesend.

Rev. Lewis Kenfig Morgan, of Cambridge, Glos., has accepted an invitation to the pastorate at Fairford, Glos.

Rev. J. H. Bainton, of Ilkeston, is about to sail for Vancouver, having accepted the pastorate of the first Congregational church.

Rev. J. and Mrs. Calvert, of Margate, leave Liverpool this day in the ss. Dominion for a visit to Canada and the United States.

The reports of the work at Bishopsgate Chapel show a wide range of activity in the poor districts around. Various missions are vigorously maintained.

Rev. R. Turner Sole, late of Margate, has accepted an invitation to the pastorate at Trinity Chapel, Devonshire-road, Hackney, his ministry commencing on Sunday.

The opening of the fine new chapel at Westbourne, Bournemouth, has awakened much interest. Rev. T. S. Robyent and his people are full of hope for the future.

North London Congregationalists are making a special effort for church extension at Muswell Hill. A site has been secured adjoining the residence of the late Mr. Mudie, founder of Mudie's Library.

Interesting farewell services (in which Mr. F. S. Arnot took part) have been held at St. James'-street Chapel, Blackburn, in connection with the departure of Mr. and Mrs. R. Harwood and Mr. and Mrs. H. Cunningham for West Central Africa.

In connection with the centenary of the Berks, South Oxon, and Bucks Association, the president issued an address recalling the life and testimony of heroes of the faith who struggled for freedom of conscience, civil and religious liberty, and their ideal of the Church of Christ.

Dr. Fairbairn, in a lecture to the Cardiff theological students, made a good point when he said that he had no quarrel with evolutionists, but as nothing that was true was other than good he asked for proof. Similiarities between the man and the ape might be great, but the far greater point was the differences and their effects. It might be that there was only so many ounces difference in the weight of the brains of man and ape, and similarly in their composition; but, while the ape to-day was the ape of centuries ago, man had created—his brain had been productive—and the ape simply cracked his nuts as his fathers did. What caused the difference? Reputed scientists were dumb.

Baptist.

Rev. G. Woodvine Ball has received a very hearty welcome at Balham.

Rev. S. J. Robins, of Blakeney, has accepted a call to Scapegoat Hill, Golcar.

Rev. R. Lloyd, of Castletown, has accepted the pastorate at Llandaff-road, Cardiff.

Rev. Matthew Millar has entered on the pastorate at George-square, Greenock.

Rev. H. J. Milledge, of Gamlingay, has accepted the pastorate at Brighton-road, Croydon.

Mr. and Mrs. Ellison have arrived home on furlough after some years' labour in Rungpore, Northern Bengal.

Last week Rev. Richard Evans resigned the pastorate at Llanelly, which he has held for about twenty-five years.

Mr. Joseph Mayfield has accepted an invitation from Shalom Church, The Oval, Hackney-road, to supply with a view to the pastorate.

The pulpit at Lansdowne Church, Bournemouth, has been filled by Rev. Alexander Corbet, who enters on his new charge under hopeful auspices.

It is interesting to note that the vicar of Arnesby (Rev. H. Hammond), in addition to lending the National schools for a service of song in aid of the new Sunday-schools for the Baptists, assisted with the connective readings.

The anniversary services of Peckham Rye Tabernacle were held on April 19. The chairman, Rev. H. J. Knight, gave statistics showing a great improvement in the membership and finance. Rev. W. Stott and others also spoke.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. E. Henderson, President of the London Baptist Association, was marked on Wednesday week by a noteworthy gathering in Victoria-road Chapel, Wandsworth-road. Coinciding with this anniversary was also the celebration of the twenty-fifth birthday of the chapel. Consequently special efforts had been made to give the pastor a suitable presentation, and Mr. A. Sullivan, senior deacon, handed him an illuminated address and a cheque for three hundred and ten guineas.

Methodist.

A new Central Mission Hall has been opened at Wigan.

New chapels are being or about to be built in York-road, Southend, New Southgate, Wootton-under-Edge, Meersbrook Bank, Atherton, Northallerton, Borough Green, Brinscall, Chorley, and Skegness.

At the anniversary of the Victoria Hall, Ancoats, belonging to the Manchester Mission, the report showed that all the work was being vigorously conducted. As many as five times in one week the hall has been crowded. Revs. S. F. Collier, Dr. Randles, and W. H. Heap took part.

Rev. W. A. Langsford has been elected president of the South Australian Conference. He is forty-six, Australian by birth, and possessed of a remote Methodist ancestry. The Christian Weekly (Adelaide), of which he was formerly joint editor, describes him as earnest and evangelical.

The coming transference of Rev. W. T. A. Barber from the Mission House to the head-mastership of The Leys has raised anxiety as to his successor in the secretariat. The name of Mr. Price Hughes has been mentioned, but it is understood that he would not care to sever his connection with the West London Mission. Another name which meets with favour is that of Rev. Henry Haigh, who has spent twenty-four years in missionary work in India.

The official returns of Wesleyan membership, annually presented by the superintendents of circuits to the March quarterly meetings, have been issued. There are in Great Britain 829 circuits, 465 of which report an increase in membership, 319 a decrease, and in 45 the numbers are stationary. The total number of adults in full membership—i.e., "who meet in class"—is 442,010. There is an increase of 3041 for the year. Those on trial for membership number 32,227, an increase of 351, and the number of young people meeting week by week in junior society classes is 76,156, a growth during the year of 2789.

Presbyterian.

The English Presbyterian Synod is holding its meetings this week in Sefton Park, Liverpool.

The New Jewin-street Welsh Church, London, has a membership of 659, and a congregation of 900.

Rev. R. A. Stewart has been ordained at Aldershot.

Rev. J. Pengwern Jones, one of the Welsh missionaries in Sylcht, India, has just arrived in Wales on furlough.

Dr. Thoburn McGaw has returned home wonderfully strengthened by his voyage to the Cape.

It is stated that Melville Free Church, Aberdeen, and St. Nicholas U.P. Church at one time formed one congregation, and in view of the approaching retirement of Dr. Robson, of St. Nicholas, it is proposed to reunite.

Dr. John Hall, of New York, who has been ill and laid aside, has now improved in health so much that he has been able to resume his ministerial duties. It is said that Dr. C. W. Barnes, of Chicago, has accepted a call to assist Dr. Hall.

Fallen Asleep.

At Bovey Tracey, on the 15th inst., suddenly, Rev. D. A. Beaufort, formerly incumbent of Portman Chapel, and some time rector of Warburton, Cheshire, aged eighty-four.—At Woodbury-hill, Tunbridge Wells, on the 18th inst., Rev. John Henry Oldrid, for nine years vicar of Gawcott, Bucks, then for nineteen years lecturer at the Parish Church, Boston, Lincolnshire, and then for sixteen years vicar of Alford, Lincolnshire, in his ninetieth year.—At Kempsey House, Worcester, Rev. Alfred F. Boucher, aged seventy-eight, vicar for thirty-one years of Cheddleton.—At Folkestone, Rev. W. F. Chambers, late vicar of North Kelsey.—At Maidstone, Rev. F. E. Tuke, aged seventy-three, formerly vicar of Borden.—At Bradford, Rev. R. Nicholls, aged sixty-four, minister for many years of Muffield Church.—At Llandudno, Mrs. Delf, widow of Rev. E. H. Delf, who for thirty-eight years was pastor of West Orchard Church, Coventry.—At Settle, Mr. D. Ineson, aged seventy-six, a devoted Sunday-school and temperance worker for many years.—At Harwich, Mr. W. Rawlinson, a valued S.S. superintendent.—At Ashton-under-Lyne, Mr. Thomas Warren, an earnest and leading worker for over fifty years.—At Walsall, Alderman T. Evans, ex-Mayor and a strong supporter of Christian work.—At Blaenavon, Mrs. Forth, wife of Rev. W. Forth, and herself a very acceptable and gifted evangelist.—At Birkenhead, Mr. Thomas Leech, for sixty years a local preacher, and proprietor of The Bacup Times.—At Dukinfield, Mr. and Mrs. Worth, for sixty years among leading workers in the place.—At Dublin, Mrs. Sullivan, widow of Rev. Jas. Sullivan, Methodist Minister and for many years a most devoted Christian worker; at Fenagh, Bagnalstown, Rev. T. G. J. Phillips, for nineteen years rector of the parish.—At Garvaghy, Rev. Robt. Moorehead, Presbyterian minister, aged eighty-four years.

Notes and Comments

OUR next issue will contain a special supplement, dealing with May Meeting and other reports.

On another page we furnish some details of the coming series of summer conferences at Mr. Moody's home in New England. He is anxious that English friends should attend in goodly numbers, and we gladly add our word of commendation. Those who have been there in former years will need no urging, and those who go for the first time may be assured beforehand of many delightful and memorable experiences. We do not think that the unhappy war between the States and Spain need prevent anyone going. They will be far removed from the scenes of conflict, especially if the voyage is taken viâ Quebec and Montréal. Doubtless the serious circumstances of the time will lend an added power and interest to these happy Christian gatherings.

The Mildmay Conference circular of invitation has reached us; the dates fixed are June 21-23. The subject chosen for this year's consideration is "True Prayer." The conveners observe :—

It is said that the habit of meditation is dying out amid the feverish activities of our restless time; if that be so, the practice of secret prayer will be diminished and power in public prayer will be withdrawn. If due attention be given to the claims of the living God upon us in the sphere of prayer, which He has so graciously been pleased to make the channel for securing all kinds of blessing, and which Christ our Lord made so prominent by example and precept, we shall not have met in vain in our approaching Conference, but shall return to our various places enriched, chastened, and brought nearer in mind and heart to Him who has taught us how to pray.

Tickets for reserved seats and all details as to the arrangements can be had from Col. Morton, Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, London.

The circular announcing the usual convention at Keswick, July 18-23, has been issued on behalf of the trustees by Mr. Robert Wilson. He says :—

Union with our risen and glorified Lord—as branches in the True Vine—is essential to fruit-bearing. When we realise our own nothingness, and that all are dependent for life and fruitfulness upon Him, how earnestly should we pray that no "root of bitterness" may spring up to mar the love which is the proof of our union, and that we are not in word only, but in living reality, "all one in Christ Jesus." Whilst the outer world is "like a troubled sea that cannot rest," may we hear our Lord's cheering words as He walks on the water as of old, "It is I, be not afraid"; may we, too, hear his blessed invitation, "Come," and flee unto Him to hide us, till He brings us safe to land in the eternal haven of his love. May the Spirit of God make his Word more than ever precious to our souls, and keep us from the snares of the enemy, and from all "evil questionings," which would lead us to give heed to "fables," in place of the truths of that eternal "Word, which shall not pass away."

There is something beautiful but deceptive about the activity of the earth in spring. She seems to "bring forth fruit of herself" in a way never meant by our Lord in the parable of the "seed growing secretly." As a matter of fact the glory of the springtime around us just now is primarily the result of the passive surrender of the earth to the influences of the sky. She turns herself sunwards as she spins in her orbit, and the light and warmth streaming from above cause the belt of verdure and song to creep slowly northwards from the tropics to the very edge of Arctic snows. In this there is a beautiful parable of the higher life. Our best virtues seem to be the fruit of human effort. But the true Christian knows well that really they are but the fruit of self-surrender. The heart turns itself towards the Saviour, and, receiving his down-pouring grace and life, puts forth in due course the blade and the ear, and at last the full corn in the ear. The "excellency is of God."

The Church Times is wrathful with the Bishop of Hereford for pronouncing the "Veneration of the Cross" a superstitious practice, and complains that people are too eager to dub any practice superstitious the reasons for which they do not understand. However ill-defined the term may be, it is at least clearly applicable when men transfer towards the symbols and material signs of a spiritual fact the feelings of "veneration" and worship which belong only to the reality symbolised. The Cross of Christ, to the Christian consciousness, means his sacrifice for sin, and when the mere wood of the crucifix is "venerated" an act of superstition is clearly committed. Protestants have ever affirmed this, and their protest against the revival of sacerdotalism is simply a logical insistence of the principle that symbols are nothing, while the realities of the faith are everything.

On the subject of "Leaving Chapel for Church," a "Friendly Churchman" gives his opinion of the cause :—

Nonconformity, having taken up the idea that it is possible to teach and preach religion without the dogma, is rapidly falling into a state of chaos, and ceasing to have any clear, definite message to deliver to minds sick and weary of doubt, and longing for something which they can lay hold of and cling to, believe in, propagate, and communicate to others. Men cannot live by the stones of negations. They require bread; something which their spiritual nature can draw sustenance from.

This statement is all the more remarkable as proceeding from a "Broad" Churchman, for if Nonconformists have to any extent cast off doctrine, and given themselves to the preaching of a vague religious sentiment instead, they were certainly led astray by the Broad Church of Maurice. Kingsley, Robertson, and Stanley. But we think there are hopeful signs that doctrine is taking again, if it has not already done so, its rightful place among Nonconformists.

Something more, however, seems to be needed than the preaching of dogma, for, according to Mr. Heath's article in The Contemporary, Evangelicalism is waning everywhere, or almost everywhere. Notwithstanding the increased sitting accommodation in places of worship, attendance declines and membership wanes. In 1887 Birmingham had 141 places of worship, but there were fewer worshippers than in 1861, when it had only ninety-two. In 1891 Liverpool had 20,000 more sittings than in 1881, but less attendants to fill them. The cry is always for more buildings; the Congregationalists are now busy raising a fund of £100,000 to be spent in new churches, and a great portion of the Methodist "million" will go in the same direction; but certainly if Mr. Heath is a safe guide on this subject, we want more than dogma in the pulpit or pews for the people. Mr. Heath says :—

If we turn from England to Scotland, where church building since 1851 has also gone at a similarly prodigious rate, the same kind of result appears. Dundee, where ninety-four churches in 1891 had 1000 fewer attendants than eighty-four churches in 1881, would probably be found only peculiar in being an extreme case. Without claiming for the censuses of religious worship taken during recent years in various towns absolute exactness, the striking similarity of their results leaves but one conclusion—attendance dwindles as well as membership.

Is not the one great lack the power of the Holy Spirit?

The recent correspondence in the British Weekly on the proper length of pastorates emphasises two sources of unrest. First, it seems to be widely felt that a ministry of indefinite length is, on the whole, detrimental to the best work, and secondly that the three years' limit fixed by Wesley is too short for effective work. The suggestion which meets with most favour is that the average ministry should last for, say, seven years, but that there should be some definite organisation at work whereby ministerial removals should be secured without the haphazard element now at work, which results in frequent humiliation and many difficulties, both for churches and ministers. It is a perplexing subject, and the correspondence betokens a widespread unrest upon it. It is one that should be much furthered by free and frank interchange of opinion.

Mr. Frederic Harrison has made a notable admission as to the inability of Positivism to produce the same pure and lofty type of character as Christianity does even in its "decline."

It must, he thought, be admitted that Positivists could not claim the intensity of zeal, the inexhaustible spirit of humility, charity, and devotion which still, even in their decline, irradiated the latter days of some communities inspired in our age with the old-world ideas of the Gospel. Had they the patience, human love, surrender of will and ambition which they still saw in not a few missionaries, in many ministers of the Gospel, and in so many Bible congregations and churches? And why had they not? He was free to confess that that late flower of an ancient faith had yet to be reared amongst them. It was true that by the very constitution of their movement the perfect fruits of the Gospel had yet to be born of them.

If Positivism cannot do as well in its youth as Christianity does in its old age, where is its title to acceptance, and why should men give up the old for the new?

The Home Secretary has introduced a Bill into Parliament for the rational treatment of inebriates who, through lack of self-control, come into the hands of the police. The Bill touches two classes of offenders—those charged with serious offences, and those accused of petty delinquencies. A contemporary well puts it :—

It will be for a jury in both cases to decide the fact of habitual drunkenness, unless the prisoner pleads it. There are, of course, many practical and still more theoretical difficulties in the way of dealing with the inebriate question. But nothing can be worse than our present way of treating the habitual drunkard, and it is time that the warder gave "place to the doctor."

The passion for drink in many drunkards is hereditary, and is therefore inherited like any physical infirmity or mental malady, and should be treated by the medical practitioner as a disease. But beyond this, what is wanted is a real interest in the individuals afflicted, and a genuine endeavour to reform them, not by mere external regulations, but by strengthening the will and rousing the moral and spiritual nature. How far Government institutions can attain this result is an open question; but without it, the evil is "scotched," not killed.

It is by no means to the credit of railway managers that, while they extend cheap holiday privileges in so many directions, they refuse such concessions to the Factory Girls' Country Holidays Fund. This point was emphasised by speakers at the recent annual meeting of the latter institution at the Mansion House. The result is that nearly half the money raised has to be expended in fares. These poor girls work at a pittance-wage and for terribly long hours. It does not afford much opportunity for saving money to have to make paper bags at 5d. per thousand, to pack tea at 4s. 6d. a week, or to make white aprons with elaborate frills and tucks at 1s. 3d. per dozen! A fortnight in the country or at the seaside, under good influences, does these poor girls, as Canon Newbolt pointed out, not only physical but moral and spiritual good. It is a real grievance to those who are engaged in this good work that, while a well-to-do yachtsman can get a return ticket to Southampton and back at a reduced rate, their beneficiaries and helpers are refused the smallest concession. This is a matter that well-disposed railway directors should see to.

The strain and stress of ministerial life is always heavy for those who, by virtue of their gifts and energy of character, are called to prominent public work. Just now several leading men are suffering from effects brought on by overstrain—for example, Dr. C. A. Berry, late Chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales; Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, recently nominated to succeed Dr. S. H. Booth as Secretary of the Baptist Union; Dr. T. Vincent Tymms, principal of Rawdon College; and Dr. J. Guinness Rogers. There is call for wide and prayerful sympathy for such men who serve the Church so willingly and with such small care for their own comfort and rest, from those who have been benefited by the expenditure of their energy.

Rev. C. Fleming Williams, Congregational minister, a Sunday or two ago, strongly denounced missions to the Jews as little better than an imposture. The results, he considered, were altogether out of proportion to the enormous expenditure. Of course, Mr. Williams, in saying this, is taking what may be termed the commercial view of the matter. In his opinion, provided the Jew were just, honourable, and true to his ancient faith he would be better let alone. But surely Christianity is primarily a mission to the Jews. The Apostles were enjoined to begin at Jerusalem. The Gospel was to be preached "to the Jew first." For a Jew to retain his ancient faith is to act in flat rebellion against the very God whom he professes to worship! By ancient faith, of course, we understand the ancient practice associated with it, including all the ritual observance, the maintenance of which is a denial of the Messiah and of his atoning sacrifice.

According to Mr. Williams it is a matter of complete indifference whether the Jew is converted or not; but it was not a matter of indifference with Him who wept over Jerusalem, nor with that great Apostle whose heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel was that they might be saved. Nor has it been deemed a matter of indifference by the thousands of Jews who, throughout the Christian era, have come to recognise Jesus as the Lord's Anointed. The objector's criticism, moreover, assumes that the Church has its roots in the Gentile world, and can be completed without accessions from Israel. Would not the Church have been poorer for the lack of Caspari, Cassel, and Neander—for the lack of Edersheim, Ginsburg, and Saphir? And, assuredly, Jewry is not prepared to repudiate these men, whose fame has been world-wide, shedding lustre alike on the Synagogue and the Church.

Edmond About, a Rationalist, once said that "What France needs is ten millions of Protestants," as no doubt she would have had had she not slain two millions on St. Bartholomew's day. M. Hermann Schell, rector of the Catholic University of Würzburg, seems to be of a similar opinion as to South Germany: what it wants is Protestants. He takes it for granted that the Catholic population in that part of Germany is behind the Protestant.

His reasons are that the Church lies outside society; that the priest is educated away from the great current of modern ideas and sympathies; that the Church has separated itself from science, and, finally, that its centralisation has worked towards the crushing of nationality. He calls for the abridging of external authority and for more individual liberty. There must be more freedom of inquiry. "It is to this liberty the Protestants owe their superiority."

This liberty is largely enjoyed by Catholics as well as Protestants in this country. But how long would that be the case if once the domination of Rome were renewed here as it exists in professedly Catholic countries? And yet a number of Englishmen would lead us again into this darkness and feebleness.

"The Bitter Cry of the Distracted Employer!" What is it? "Give us steady, sober men." This lies at the root of labour questions. But how far do masters encourage sobriety among their men by their own personal example? The drunken worker has neither a clear head for business nor a steady hand for labour, and employer and employed suffer in consequence. If the former will not abstain for the sake of his weaker brother, let him do so for the sake of his business. "A very low motive!" Yes; but a practical one, and better than none.

Again; what about household servants? Young women on first going out to service often have to suffer much persecution if they have courage enough to declare themselves total abstainers. Many give in rather than endure it. We hear of country mansions being burned, many of which accidents are due to the carelessness of intoxicated servants. A correspondent gives us personal experiences of candles burned down within an inch of the drunkard's bed; and also witnessed a female servant dragged out insensible with drink after the room was in flames—circumstances which occurred in two of the finest and largest castles of the kingdom.

Obviously this sort of thing could not happen in a teetotal household. Nor would little children learn to tipple from the example of their parents, as is too often the case. In business, in the house, in the family, total abstinence is a positive gain as well as a safeguard against negative loss.

Notes on War.

A SERIOUS danger lurks in the interest felt in the present war; it neutralises the good that might be derived from the close attention with which every move, or imagined move, is being followed. The thinking followers of Christ on both sides of the Atlantic can but view the struggle with awe and horror. The loss of life, the erring souls cut off, the homes bereaved, the sufferings entailed on combatants and those dependent on them, whatever the justification for war—these should awaken an agony of prayer for peace.

But, instead of this, there is a serious tendency to let approval of the object in view excuse indulgence in needless excitement and un-Christlike feelings; to be carried off one's feet by a surging crowd. It were better to step aside when the tide is so strong, and imitate the Master in his prayer and meditation apart.

There is another disquieting and very significant feature of modern life that has emerged during the negotiations preceding this war. It has always been one of the stock arguments of democratic and social reformers that had the common people a chance to settle their own national policy war would never break out, that being "a game that kings play at." In this instance, however, the actual rulers of the two nations did all they possibly could to secure a peaceful solution, and the hands of the Queen Regent and the President were literally forced by the pressure of "public opinion." This suggests that human nature does not change with forms of government, but acts just the same under any form. We need a more radical change than change of government. Neither social nor political redemption can come without a renewal of the national life from within.

Rather than permit the present lesson as to the awful nature of war to be transformed into an influence in cultivating warlike tastes, every Christian should systematically bring to the front the true nature of warfare, even under all our civilised regulations. Teachers of the young, especially, should seize upon this interest to quench the latent brutal instincts, and to turn attention to the blessings of arbitration and peace.

God has again and again "made the wrath of man to praise Him" by using "the harsh arbitrament of battle" to work out his gracious purposes. The Philippine Isles have often been mentioned as nearly the only place in the world "fast closed against the Gospel," while faithful witnesses in Cuba have been under sore disabilities. Surely, while we pray that the war now commenced may be speedily concluded, we may also plead that it may open fresh doors to the messengers of the Gospel!

The mortality of a battlefield is a trifle compared with the effects of sickness. In the Napoleonic war the British lost 5 per cent. of their army by sickness and other causes, but only ⅔ per cent. in battle. In the Crimean war our loss was 12 per cent. per annum of the force engaged, of which 9 per cent. was from sickness, and only 3 per cent. from battle. It is not possible to think of the Cuban struggle without a painful foreboding that sickness will, in any case, claim a vast number of victims.

Mindful of His Covenant.

(Psa. cxi. 5.)

Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

A COVENANT is a promise made on the fulfilment of a condition, and of which some outward circumstance is the sign and seal—the rainbow of that between God and Noah; circumcision of that between God and Abraham; the cup of the Lord's Table of that between God and the Lord Jesus, as the representative of his people.

Two covenants are specially in view in the Old and New Testaments, of which one is recited in Exodus xix. 5, 6. This was delivered to the people amid terrible accompaniments of thunder, cloud, and earthquake, but it was very tender and gracious in its intention. God had taken them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt, much as a parent takes the hand of a toddling child helping its uncertain feet to go. He was married to them in the tenderest affection. These are his own expressions, as He reviews that time from the days of Jeremiah (Jer. xxxi. 32).

The provisions of that covenant were very touching. The Most Holy One was desirous of taking that nation of fugitive slaves as his peculiar treasure above all peoples beside, to be to Him a kingdom of priests and a holy nation. There was one condition only for them to observe: "If ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant" (Ex. xix. 5). But they broke that sacred provision, and continued not in it (Heb. viii. 9). Alas! after protesting that they would do all that the Lord had spoken, within six weeks they were dancing around the golden calf. It is an experience of which most of us know something. We too have made profuse promises, and at the time have sincerely intended to be true to them; but we have and been as fickle and forgetful as the chosen people. Our goodness has been as the morning cloud, and as the early dew it has sped away.

It was necessary, therefore, that a new covenant should be introduced, in which as little as possible should be left to the people, and as much as possible rest on the will and work of God. Hence we read, "Behold the days come when I will make a new covenant...This is the covenant I will make... I will...I will...I will be...They shall be... I will forgive...I will remember no more." The whole stress is on what God would be, and it is not after the law of an outward commandment to be obeyed, but after the power of an endless life to be cherished and yielded to.

It is of this covenant that this Psalm, which is one of the later ones, speaks.

Our Lord is said to be the Surety and Mediator of the new covenant—that is, He has gone between his Father and us in respect to the provisions of this sacred agreement. On the one side He is Surety that God, his Father, will assuredly realise all that He has promised in the case of every penitent and believing soul; on the other He is surety that by his Grace and Spirit He will perform for us and secure in us all that obedience and all those dispositions which are the necessary condition on our part. God has therefore entered into a covenant with Christ, and with all those who are united with Him by a living faith. The blessings of the covenant reach us through his mediation, He is surety on God's behalf to us, and on our behalf to God (Heb. ix. 15).

Let me stay to press this upon thee, my reader. Art thou one with Jesus by the indissoluble bonds of a living faith? If so, thou art certainly included in the provisions of that covenant which is ordered in all things and sure. Thou mayest forget, and be unworthy of the least of all the items being kept, and be subject to the necessary discipline; yet, altogether independently of thy deserts or demerits, "God is mindful of his covenant."

Turn now to consider the provisions of this new covenant. It has been said, I think, that they may be summed up under the heading of three words which were constantly on the lips of the old mystics.

Purification. God pledges Himself to be propitiated with regard to our iniquities, and to remember our sins no more (12). Whatever may have been thy past sins, O child of the new covenant, they shall never be mentioned against thee for ever, they shall not be quoted as reasons which foiled their employment in God's lofty missions, they shall be as entirely lost as the writings by children on the sand are WIPED OUT BY THE INCOMING WAVES.

Illumination. God pledges Himself, moreover, to put his laws into our mind, which may include our memory, judgment, and will, and to write them on our hearts, that we may love them. He undertakes also that we should be all taught by Himself, and this indicates the special method which He will adopt.

Man teaches from without, God from within: man argumentatively, God directly and intuitively: man by the use of signs, diagrams, and words, God immediately by the vision of the soul: man by telling us about the subject which we are to know, God by imparting it to us, so that we know by possessing it. Things which are hidden from the wise and prudent are thus revealed to babes. The simplest souls have an anointing from the Holy One, and know all things.

Union. God pledges Himself also to take us into living union with Himself, to be to us a God, and to take us to be his people; so that we should be to Him what the heavens are to the sun, what the tabernacle was to the Shechinah, and what the body is to the spirit. Ah! what union is this. If only a branch, we might be torn off the parent stem; if only a limb, we might be amputated from the body; if only a child, we might become a wandering prodigal; if a wife, we might be divorced. But we are so joined to the Lord, that we have become one spirit with Him. And how impossible it is to separate spirit from spirit, when they have become so inspired as to make only one! These are the of that covenant, of which God will ever be mindful. That mindfulness is guaranteed by several considerations.

1. His Veracity. He cannot go back from the solemn promise which He made in the Council Chamber of Eternity, when He gave to Christ all who should believe in Him as their Saviour and Head. He made the promise with a clear understanding of all it involved in respect of thee, and me, and all; and having made it, He will stand to it. Heaven and earth may pass away, but one jot or tittle of his Word shall not fail. With Him there can be no variation, neither shadow that is cast by turning.

2. His Eternal Nature. His covenant is the emanation of his heart, which is love. But God's love cannot be conjugated in the many moods and tenses of other verbs. It is always the indicative present tense: "He loves." Even if we believe not, He remaineth faithful, He cannot deny Himself. God's love to thee and me did not begin with our birth, or the death and incarnation of Jesus, or with the fall of Adam. It has been from everlasting. It is dateless and eternal. It cannot therefore alter. We men may forget, but God never.

3. His agreement with the Lord Jesus. It is not a matter now of grace only, but of debt. Christ has fulfilled on our behalf all the requirements of God's holy law, on the express understanding (if we may so express it) that we should be admitted into all the privileges of the blessed covenant. Any failure, therefore, towards us would be a breach of contract with Him, which of course is inconceivable, because He and the Father are one. Therefore, if we confess our sins He is faithful and just to forgive and cleanse. Faithful to his covenant with Jesus, and just to the requirements of his Holy Law.

The existence of the Jewish people after 1800 years of persecution is a great encouragement to all who are building their hopes for time and eternity on the Divine covenant. In the paragraph already quoted from Jeremiah we read, "If these ordinances (of sun, moon, and stars) depart from before me ... if heaven above can be measured, and the foundations of the earth searched out beneath ... then shall the seed of Israel also cease from being a nation before me for ever" (Jer. xxxi. 36, 37). And as none of these natural ordinances have failed, so neither has the separate existence of the Jewish people ceased. They are scattered, peeled, persecuted, hated, but they survive. And if God has been mindful of his national covenant with his people, how much more of his spiritual covenant with us all.

Be comforted then, amid many fluctuations, hopes and fears, liftings up and castings down. God will never fail thee, will never cast thee utterly away, will not fail nor be discouraged, will not forsake the work of his own hands, or forget his covenant. Through strife and storm, if necessary; by water and blood, by his Son and Spirit, He will fulfil that Word on which He has caused thee to hope.

Let this be borne in mind, at each participation of the Lord's Supper. The cup is the sign and seal of the new covenant ratified in the blood of Jesus; and as we place it to our lips, we say in effect, each in the sacred depths of his own being, "I claim that Thou shouldst fulfil thy covenant with me. I appropriate each of its sacred provisions. I ask for this purification, illumination, and union; and I trust that in all times of weakness and failure, when memory misgives and the heart faints, in the hour of death and the day of judgment, Thou wilt ever be mindful of thy covenant."

*The Overcoming Life.

IN 1 John v. 4, 5, there are three powers stated that are necessary for the overcoming life. (1) "Whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world"; that is to say, life from above overcometh the world. (2) "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." Faith in the God who gives the life, to maintain and develop the life. (3) "Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God?" In one word, the truth concerning Jesus as the risen, ascended, and eternal Son of God.

What is "the world"? It is that which surrounds each life—the circumstances, home life, social life, etc.; and it has to be overcome in so far as it may prove antagonistic to the life of faith in God and the will of God.

Among the many illustrations given in the Bible of the overcoming life, Daniel may be selected. Chap. i., "Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself with the king's meat," etc. A captive, in the power of his captors, he nevertheless made God the judge of his actions and purposes in the minor matters of diet, and thus he

OVERCAME THE SELF-LIFE—"THE FLESH."

Chap. ii. gives us overcoming trying circumstances. Unknown to him and his companions, the edict had gone forth for their death, as grouped amongst the wise men of Babylon. A half-night of prayer, the answer given in a night vision, a praise meeting; and then the quiet annunciation to the King of the desired secret.

Chap. iii. illustrates the overcoming of popular religion. The golden image worship was the State religion. But there were three men afflicted with such stiff backs and necks that they could not and would not bend. God was their Judge, not policy, as to what they should do. "No compromise" was their motto, and they were blessedly careless as to results. A fiery furnace—but God.

Chap. v. sees Daniel confronting worldly power and offers of preferment and reward. Such he pushes aside, and again announces the Word of God in its fulness, caring nought for the unpopularity of it.

Chap. vi. shows us the conflict between Daniel and Society. The rules of Society are very stringent and binding, but he knew nothing of them. The rules for holy living had so taken hold of him that nothing could make him alter them, and so "he prayed as aforetime," with opened windows, and on bended knees. The overcoming life knows of no compromise. It knows only one circumstance, and that—God. This is the victory that overcometh the world.

Spiritual Forces and the P.S.A.*

By Rev. J. K. NUTTALL, of Liverpool.

THE P.S.A. movement is growing in magnitude and importance. It is definitely affecting the life of the nation, and of the churches. For good or ill it has, apparently, come to stay.

If we conduct our P.S.A. services with the consciousness that Jesus Christ is present, is a listener and a sharer in the service of song and prayer and Bible reading, we may be quite sure that spiritual forces will be present and that spiritual results will follow. Seeing Him there, we shall deprecate anyone taking part in the service whose character and life are inconsistent with the part they are taking, or who are not in sympathy with the highest spiritual aims. The solo should be as distinctly a Christian ministry as the prayer or the address.

We find at Great George-street, Liverpool, that the addresses, kept strictly to the time limit assigned to them, cannot be too earnest, too evangelical, too searching, too high-toned. Let the speaker be natural, sincere, strong, practical, and he cannot place too high an ideal of the Christian life before the men. Nor can he be too outspoken, too straight, or hit too hard at recognised sins and shortcomings.

Let us always pray for, work for, and expect the salvation of the men. By salvation I mean something more than reformation. To smite specific sins is important; to preach against sin in general is of little use. Every blow should strike the nail on the head. We cannot smite too hard our national sins, such as intemperance, impurity, gambling; or individual besetting sins, such as pride, covetousness, temper, and that prolific breeder of other sins—selfishness. But all this may end only in a work of reformation.

OUR AIM SHOULD BE THE REGENERATION

of the whole man by the direct action of the Spirit of God upon the individual soul. Regeneration changes character, brings Christ into the man's life with all his saving and sanctifying power. Our work is not done until the men become Christians, who love, serve, and obey Him as their Lord and Master.

Again, by salvation I mean something more than Christian socialism or Christian philanthropy. If you draw men to Christ so that they are wholly yielded to Him, then a new force begins to work, which gradually but surely changes their whole environment and brings deliverance all round. Christ is able and willing to save a man from all his sins—the very sins out of which not infrequently much of his evil environment springs; and if he knows Christ as Saviour, Sanctifier, Keeper, his social redemption will follow. My own method is to press upon the men to seek and obtain full salvation.

The hearts of the men are like virgin soil in many instances. In that fact we have a great advantage and opportunity. The men listen with eager interest to the gospel of a new heart, a Spirit-filled heart. Some have accepted that Gospel, and are daily living in the power of it. I believe, although comparatively few in number, these out-and-out Christians will be my joy and crown of rejoicing in the day of Christ's appearing.

HOW MUCH OF GOD?

Much of the success and spiritual power of our service are due, under God, to this little band of consecrated men. I want to ask myself and you, How much of God is there in our P.S.A. work? The answer to that question determines its real value. How much of God is there in the origination and execution of our plans and methods of work? Did He suggest to us our P.S.A. work? Is He sustaining it? Does it gratify and glorify Him? If so, then we cannot wholly fail.

Let our motives be pure and such as He will honour. If we start a P.S.A. simply to fill our empty pews, or to replenish our scanty finances, or to increase our personal popularity or the popularity of our own place of worship, or to extend the influence of our own denomination, or to provide a religious entertainment, or to carry on a social propaganda, our harvest will be according to our sowing. Let us see to it that God Himself is in all our work, its beating heart, his glory our sole motive, his will our supreme law, his life our one pattern, his truth our great weapon.

"DOES IT AUGMENT OUR CHURCH?"

The spiritual results are more encouraging every year. In the fourteen months ending January last, of the 106 members received into church fellowship, thirty were P.S.A. men. At a mission held during February, conducted by Mrs. Baeyertz, some 200 P.S.A. men passed through the inquiry room. One Sabbath afternoon ninety-six men arose one after the other and went into the schoolroom to be further instructed in the way of salvation. It was an impressive sight to see these men sitting in perfect stillness, each man with a Bible or New Testament in his hands, and turning to the various passages of Scripture which were being explained by the missioner.

The great majority of these do not attend Great George-street Chapel, but have been advised to make open confession of Christ in connection with their respective churches, without delay. What ingathering we may have ourselves remains to be seen, but these results could be traced in many instances to influences at work long anterior to the mission. We have met for prayer every Sunday morning for nearly a year and a-half before the service, and again every Sunday evening after the service; and on the Monday preceding the mission we held a half-night of prayer—from nine o'clock until midnight. The younger P.S.A. men, who have decided for Christ, are joining our Christian Endeavour Society.

We begin a new roll every November, and since November last 1623 men have been enrolled as members; and our average attendance for the last six months has been about 1500.

* From an address at the recent P.S.A. Conference, Leicester.

Always Trusting.

"The righteous shall be glad in the Lord, and shall trust in Him; and all the upright in heart shall glory."—Ps. lxiv. 10.
"Go your way . . neither be ye sorry."—Neh. viii. 10.

Oh, keep me always trusting,
And keep me ever glad;
Let not my heart be sorry,
Let not my face be sad.
In Jesus let me glory,
Who gave Himself for me;
Who fills my heart with singing,
My lips with melody.

I do not know what sorrows
May wait for me to-day,
But this I know, His presence
Will take their sting away;
I do not fear to meet them,
Or be they great or small,
For without his permission
No evil can befall.

I neither know what pleasures
To-day for me await,
I know some joy shall surely
Come early or come late.
In trials and temptations
Hear Jesu's prayer for me,
And let my faith not waver,
But gain intensity.

I know thy loving kindness
Encompasseth me round,
And though thy love must chasten,
Thy comfortings abound.
So keep me always trusting,
And keep me ever glad;
Let not my heart be sorry,
Let not my face be sad.

The Presbyterian Synod.

THE sessions of this body—the supreme court of the English Presbyterian Church—were continued at Liverpool through last week. On Tuesday delegates were cordially welcomed from sister Churches, and an address was given by Rev. George Lord, of Liverpool, on behalf of the Evangelical Free Church Council of that city. He alluded to the growth of sacerdotalism and ritualism in the Church of England, and exhorted the members of the Synod to present a firm front to these encroachments of priestcraft.

A discussion followed on the presentation of the report of the Committee on Religion and Morals, in which many of the growing social evils of the day were noted. It was stated as an encouraging fact that 220 Presbyterian ministers in England are pledged abstainers, and others practically so; while twenty out of the twenty-four ministers ordained last year are in the abstaining ranks. A strong resolution passed on the Opium Question was vigorously supported by Mr. S. Smith, M.P., and Rev. J. C. Gibson, of Swatow. In connection with the topic of Foreign Missions, the Synod released the Convener of the Committee, Rev. A. Connell, of Regent-square, from the duties of his charge for a time to enable him to visit the mission stations of China, Formosa, and the Straits Settlements.

The question of the Theological College (soon to be moved from London to Cambridge) was under consideration on Wednesday morning, the report of the College Committee being submitted by Rev. John Watson, of Liverpool. He pleaded for increased liberality for the new and enlarged college, and suggested that a theological lectureship might be instituted, in which many points arising in their study of the great doctrines of the Godhead might be dealt with by able and thoughtful men. Especially he considered that the neglected doctrines of Scripture with reference to the person and work of the Holy Ghost needed careful statement and exposition; that would save them from any possible dangers of wrong teaching in connection with the many conferences on sanctification now being held. Theology, he said, in conclusion, is only safe when it gathers around the cross of Jesus Christ.

In the after discussion Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., declared that what the people wished for from the pulpits to-day were not excursions into German Biblical criticism, but spiritual and strengthening exposition of the sacred oracles. In a brief reply, Dr. Watson said he believed we were on the verge of a return to real expository preaching.

On Thursday morning a proposal by the Foreign Mission Committee to transfer the Indian mission of the Church at Rampore Bauleah, to another missionary body was rejected by the Synod, after an interesting discussion. It was arranged that next year's Synod should meet at Regent-square Church, London.

The remainder of the morning session was taken up with Dr. Kennedy Moore's appeal from the decision of the South London Presbytery, in which that body recently declined to receive and transmit to the Synod an overture by Dr. Moore, bringing charges of heresy against Dr. Watson, of Liverpool. The London Presbytery maintained that any such charges ought to originate in Dr. Watson's own Presbytery. This view was ultimately endorsed by the Synod after a long discussion. An amendment that Dr. Moore's appeal be sustained was moved but found no seconder.

Routine business occupied the later sessions of the Synod.

Irish Evangelical Society.—Rev. Robert Mackay, of London, is on a visit to Ireland in connection with this Society, which has been carrying on a great and good work in Ireland for many years. It is in need of funds for the maintenance and increase of its operations. The secretary is Rev. R. H. Noble, 23, Memorial Hall, E.C.

Keswick Convention.—As many missionaries to the heathen desire to attend the Keswick Convention this year, a special fund is needed to assist them in their expenses. Contributions towards this object will be gratefully received by Albert A. Head (Keswick Convention), Corrie Lodge, Wimbledon, S.W. Missionaries to the heathen desiring assistance will oblige by writing, enclosing a stamped envelope with full address, to Mrs. Head. The fund raised is to aid missionaries to the heathen only. Others desiring to attend can write to Mr. John Postlethwaite, Eskin-place, Keswick, who will give information as to accommodation.

From Other Lands.

Northfield in 1898.

THE summer season at Northfield is approaching, and Mr. Moody has, as usual, provided an abundance of good things for the many friends who resort to his beautiful home in the Connecticut valley during June, July, and August. The "Northfield" hotel opens for guests on June 10, and during the immediately following days there take place the graduation exercises of the Northfield Seminary and the Mount Hermon School. Those who wish to see the working of these famed institutions should be on hand at that date.

The Students' Conference, which is now an important yearly fixture at Northfield, opens on July 1, and will continue for ten days. In connection with this may be mentioned the fact that a Y.M.C.A. encampment will be established from June 30 to September 1. It will be situated "in a grove of pines and birches on the lower slope of Notch Mountain, east of the village, near at hand, and yet perfectly secluded." Surely some of our British Y.M.C.A.'s will be enterprising enough to send a delegation to this delectable retreat during the summer.

The Y.W.C.A. Conference falls to be held from July 13-22, and promises to be a helpful and profitable occasion to all earnest-minded young women.

The General Conference for Christian workers will extend from July 29 to August 18, when able students of the Scriptures from both sides of the sea will expound them day by day. The leading speakers from our own country are to be Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, and Prebendary Webb Peploe; the last-named is expected to give Bible lectures daily throughout August.

At all the principal gatherings, of course, Mr. Moody himself will be the presiding spirit, and he may be trusted to do his best for the visitors in every way. There is now ample accommodation at Northfield for large contingents of sojourners. Any information desired as to accommodation or the conferences generally will be readily furnished on application by Mr. A. G. Moody, East Northfield, Mass., U.S.A. Friends who cannot be present in body may share the good things dispensed at these conferences by subscribing to Northfield Echoes, in which the addresses will be reported. The four summer numbers—June to September—can be sent to any address in this country, post free, for five shillings. Money orders, with directions, should be addressed to Northfield Echoes, East Northfield, Mass., U.S.A.

Work in Honduras.

We have received from Mr. L. B. Armstrong, of Barcelona, a copy of an interesting communication by Mr. Bishop, of the Central American Mission, at Santa Rosa de Copau, Spanish Honduras, describing a two months' trip into the interior. At the different places visited he found many opportunities for Gospel work in preaching from house to house, distributing literature, etc. The spiritual need of these regions is very great, and Mr. Bishop calls for volunteers to go and settle in the most suitable centres.

After a brief rest at home, he set out on another pilgrimage of visitation, accompanied by some fellow Christians, and again found open doors for service. Some confessed Christ in baptism. The Gospel was proclaimed to thousands of people during these travels from place to place, while a large number of Bibles, Testaments, and Scripture portions were sold or distributed.

Sailors' Home, Fiume.—This Hungarian home is now firmly established under the care of Mr. C. H. Hughes at the Piazza Elisabetta. Over ten thousand seamen visited the place during last year, and an aggregate of some two thousand attended services, the appreciation of which is most encouraging. During the visit of H.M. fleet, four hundred bluejackets frequented the Home daily, every care being taken to give them a hearty welcome and make them feel "at home." Mr. Hughes is anxious to make this mission one of extended usefulness, and will be glad of counsel and co-operation in the formation of a local Y.M.C.A.

Chinese in Chicago.

ALTHOUGH for many years the law of the United States has forbidden the Chinese from entering, and the Geary Bill made it still more strict, we find the Mongolians in almost all the large cities of America. We understand that most of these come from the province of Quang Tung, and their occupation, as a rule, is laundry work. They are a very industrious class of people.

The Chinese red signs are dotted all over Chicago, pointing to poor, unhealthy cellars, where they live and work. It has been a great joy to me to accompany my sister (Mrs. Davies), who has been working among the Chinese for the last eight years, on visits to their laundries, and to find that so many of the men are earnest Christians; also to hear them (in their own peculiar way) testifying to the love of Jesus. One poor man, standing in front of a heap of soiled clothes, assorting them, said: "We read many Confucius' books—no help; Jesus' Book comforts my heart." With this he pointed to a Chinese Bible, which was almost worn out.

There are about eight Chinese Sunday-schools in Chicago, and an effort is thereby made to reach the hundreds who flock together in a part of the city called China Town, where smoking and gambling prevail. It is very encouraging to notice that the young men who attend the Sabbath-school avoid going to China Town. Ambition to learn the English language brings the Chinese to the Sabbath-school at first; and here they are taught not only English, but the Gospel, which many of them are most willing to receive. It thrills my soul to hear them singing our hymns, such as "Blessed assurance, Jesus is mine," "Jesus, lover of my soul," and "There is life for a look." The gratitude and affection which the Chinese show to their teachers is wonderful.

As Chinese pupils leave one city the teachers follow them with letters to friends in other places. Thus, having once gained them, they endeavour to keep them under religious influence. Through converts in America families are reached in China. The story of the conversion of a whole family through the instrumentality of one boy who went back to China from Chicago is very encouraging. Through the kindness of Mrs. Grimké, we have been able to distribute Scripture text cards in the Chinese language; in many cases these were afterwards enclosed in letters to China. A friend sent us some Chinese tracts, through the reading of which light has gone to many a dark heart.

Le Loo was converted some years ago through the instrumentality of his Sabbath-school teacher at San Francisco. He went back to China, and the Lord used him to bring many of his own country people to the feet of Jesus. He has seen much of the evil that the opium is doing in China, and he accompanied Dr. Kate Bushnell and Mrs. Andrew to visit some of the smoking dens. Now he is in this country, full of fire, and would like to arouse the English-speaking people to do what they can to put down the awful curse. He is waiting for the Lord to open the way for him to visit England.

Kurdistan Missionaries in Budapest.

We have just had a visit from Mr. Marcus Gilyana Daniel and Mr. Sands, on their way to Kurdistan. They were present at the meeting in the large hall of our mission-building on a recent Tuesday evening, Mr. Daniel appearing in his native costume. There was a large assembly, and both brethren spoke. The people were much interested, and responded readily to the call for a collection.

Later on both friends addressed the Hungarian Y.M.C.A. Mr. Sands' simple statement of how he had left home and parents that he might tell the Kurds about the love of Jesus touched the hearts of theological students who were present, so that inquiry arose among them whether Hungarian students might not also go forth to such missionary work. On another evening they were with us again at an evangelistic meeting in our second hall on the Elisabethring; and, still again, they were with the Baptists. On the evening of the Lord's day, after having been with us at a largely attended Hungarian meeting, they addressed the German Y.M.C.A., and were well received. May the Lord go with them to their field of labour! Andrew Moody, D.D.

Persecution in Brazil.

NOT quite a year ago Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Kingston, missionaries in connection with the Help for Brazil Mission, left the city of Pernambuco for Carnaric, a town about 100 miles in the interior, where no teacher of the Gospel was found. Their loving ministrations were blessed, and although some months ago their house, in which already a little company met to worship God, was stoned by a Romish mob, they were enabled to hold their ground. Hearers, frightened for a time by persecution, had rejoined the meetings, and some had professed their faith in the Lord Jesus.

In spite of the complete religious freedom guaranteed by the present Constitution, the Romish priests inveighed against the Englishman, "the enemy to their religion, who must be driven away, or otherwise disposed of." This was done with such effect that on Sunday, Feb. 13, Mr. Kingston's house was suddenly invaded by a band of ruffians bent on carrying the priest's illegal injunctions into effect. They were armed with bludgeons and knives. They found Mr. and Mrs. Kingston, with two Brazilian believers, conversing on the things of God, and proceeded to attack them. They singled out Mr. Kingston for onslaught, but his wife and friends risked their own lives in defending him, Mrs. Kingston receiving "a bad gash on the forehead," and the two men being cruelly "bruised and knocked about." Mercifully, just as a knife was drawn, Mr. and Mrs. Kingston were enabled to make their escape by a back door. Mr. Kingston made his way to the barracks, where armed police are kept in waiting, and demanded assistance. When this was very tardily sent the assailants were found to have departed, leaving some of the furniture, with many Bibles and other books, burning in the front room of the house!

Mr. and Mrs. Kingston proceeded to the capital of the State to claim protection from the British Consul and the Brazilian Governor. This was promised. The missionaries, however, returned to their house in Carnaric to find that nothing had been done as to the arrest of the criminals, while enemies were constantly surrounding them and watching every movement. The local authorities showed such entire indifference respecting the outrage as to convince Mr. and Mrs. Kingston, very reluctantly, that it was their duty to retire, for a time at least, to Recife, whence the foregoing particulars have been received.

Brazilian Protestant ministers and missionaries in Rio were intending in person to memorialise the President of the Republic, and it is believed that the Brazilian Government sincerely desires to give effect to the provisions of its Constitution; but it is not strong, and has many difficulties, especially when called upon to contend with the malice and cunning of Rome. Much prayer is asked for these tried believers in Brazil and for those in this country who need heavenly wisdom in counselling and assisting them.

Haute Savoie, France.

IT is now ten years since two ladies began to visit in the Savoyard villages on the borders of Lac Leman. They gathered the women and children into classes, and read the Word of God in the cottages. From this small beginning the work grew, and now there are two halls in the Market Place of Evian-les-Bains, in which are held meetings of various kinds—evangelistic, temperance, Bible and sewing classes for girls and women, Sunday and Thursday schools for children. There is a free circulating library of pure literature.

A temperance society, which has the approval of the authorities, is going forward. There is also a small Band of Hope. The villages within a radius of twenty miles have been visited, and tracts and Gospels largely given away; in several places meetings have been held. The sick are nursed in their own homes, or sent to hospitals in Switzerland, as there is not any Protestant place to receive them in this part of France. Three children and one young woman are at this present time in hospitals or homes in Switzerland. This winter's work opened by the public confession of a Savoyard man, who has stood firm for three years amid great persecution. He is not afraid to speak openly to his fellow workmen, and we ask prayer that he may be used of God to call others in. The public meetings are well attended, but there is a spirit of great opposition. Reports and information can be had from the Misses Wellington, Evian-les-Bains, Haute Savoie, France.

The Nazarenes in Hungary.

THE religious bodies which have official recognition from the Hungarian Government are the Roman Catholic, Greek Catholic, Greek Orthodox, Reformed, Lutheran, and Unitarian Churches, and the Jews. The way is now open, however, for any denomination whose tenets do not endanger the State to apply for and obtain recognition. A petition thereanent has been lodged by the Hungarian-speaking section of the Baptists with the Minister for Religion and Public Instruction, and has, I understand, been favourably received. The Nazarenes, who are numerous in some parts of the country, resemble the Baptists, but they embarrass the Government by their refusal to bear arms. They will go to prison rather than touch a gun. They have now, however, prepared a statement of their principles and practice to be submitted to the Government. Its chief points are these:—

The foundations of the faith are the Old and the New Testament. Father, Son, and Holy Ghost are united in the unity of the Godhead. The congregation appoints those who are found worthy to the care of souls, the distribution of charity, and attendance on the sick. The order of public worship is singing, prayer, reading of Scripture, and explanation of the Word by teachers hereto designated. Those received into fellowship make confession in presence of the overseer of their open and secret sins, whereupon they are baptized. Then the blessing of God is invoked on their behalf, and they partake of the Communion. Nazarenes who are unfaithful to their vow are first warned, and if that has no effect they are excluded from fellowship. One excluded may be readmitted only if he has not committed mortal sin. Material punishments are not inflicted.

There are no Articles of Faith or morals besides those of Holy Scripture. The children do not receive "religious instruction," so called, but they are brought up in the fear of God, and when they come to years of discretion they are at liberty to seek admission into the fellowship of believers. If a man becomes affectionately attached to a woman, and perceives that the attachment is reciprocal, he communicates this to one of the overseers of the congregation. The overseer, obtaining, in the case of young people, the consent of parents, directs them to appear for the solemnization of marriage before the civil authorities, and then, with the assembled congregation, he entreats God for blessing on the newly married pair. The mode of burial is simple. When the grave is closed hymns are sung and texts of Scripture read and explained, this taking place not for the good of the dead, but of the living. They believe in the resurrection of the dead, laying emphasis on the words of Christ (John v. 28, 29). They will not take an oath, but only give a solemn promise. They are ready as citizens to fulfil in all respects their duty to the State, and also to serve in the army in so far as in such service the handling of weapons of war is not required.

Armenian Children.

THERE are, it appears, no fewer than 3000 children in various orphanages in Asia Minor who were the helpless victims of Turkish outrage and inhumanity which deprived them of their parents. Their terrible condition through the loss of father and mother appealed to Christian hearts in many lands, and the generosity which provided these orphan homes is the kindly fruit of the Christ-spirit in the lives of his disciples. The Armenian massacres have been used by God to foster in the Lord's own spiritual followers the love for child life that so tenderly animated Himself.

We learn that "liberal means are needed to support these children, who are full of gratitude for the kindness shown by English and American Christians; indeed, the relief already sent has prevented the extinction of the Armenian people, and has aided materially in keeping alive the flame of love to God in those dark regions. Large cities are often found in Turkey without a single physician or a chemist, where the only aid in the time of sickness is administered by the medical missionary."

Progress in India.

BISHOP THOBURN'S TESTIMONY.

AT the noon prayer meeting, at 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., on Thursday last, Dr. J. M. Thoburn, Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, having charge of missions in India and other lands, delivered a brief address on the progress of the Gospel in the East. His direction extends over the Straits Settlements, the Malay Peninsula, Borneo, Sumatra, Java, and the Philippines, as well as what is generally described by the term "India."

It is thirty-nine years since Bishop Thoburn first went to India, and at that time things were much different from now, in Europe as well as Asia. Then Roman Catholic Europe was as firmly closed to Evangelical teaching as the heathen lands of Asia were sealed against Western teaching. Wars and rebellions have since changed the map of Europe, and by various means great changes have been brought about in the Oriental world. After labouring for about fourteen years in the North-Western Provinces, the bishop struck out on lines of his own in order to get down among the natives. He saw great opportunities, and endeavoured to enter upon them without needless delay, residing in various places, including Singapore, Rangoon, and other great centres of mixed population. At first he preached to British people in India, then to Eurasians and natives. Now he superintends upwards of two thousand workers, preaching in twenty-four languages, with a Christian fellowship of 110,000.

At Singapore, where the work was begun with much caution, rapid progress was made, and now Chinamen as well as Malays are reached by various institutions. There is a school with 700 students, also a deaconesses' home, the large buildings having been provided mainly from indigenous resources. At Rangoon there is an orphanage, a boarding-school for girls, and colleges for English, Tamil, and Telugu students.

Dr. Thoburn held that Christianity is essentially aggressive; and in view of that fact missions must not be hampered or conducted with excessive hesitation. Open doors must be entered; and his testimony was that God was opening doors in a marvellous manner in these days. The work has its imperfections, no doubt; this is the case at home as well as abroad. But all the same it must go forward, and as it advances God will even bring to pass greater things than the past has witnessed.

WITH THE POOR AND OUTCAST.

OUR work in this district is very varied, and appeals chiefly, though not exclusively, to the lowest and poorest of the people. Indeed, it is the glory of Christianity in India at the present time that, while the intellectual aristocracy are holding aloof from Christ, the Gospel is laying hold of the poor, the ignorant, and the outcast. I have under my care here 1200 native Christians, scattered over twenty-seven small village churches. We baptized 161 people, old and young, last year, and have at the present moment 250 under instruction for baptism. Every month brings requests from new villages for teachers, and in almost every case the request is coupled with a desire for baptism. Many come to us out of great ignorance and from very unworthy motives; but, eliminating these, there are many who are worthy to be taught and guided and put on probation with a view to baptism. We greatly need more evangelists; also additional village schools and prayer halls.

Our work is very varied. Beyond the preaching of the Gospel by speech, we strive, by making ourselves helpful to all, to set forth the goodness of God, without distinction of creed or caste, and without stipulating that the recipients of a neighbourly act shall profess themselves Christians.

The Pariahs are oppressed and defrauded on every hand. Their ignorance makes them an easy prey. We are trying to open schools for their children—a night school and a day school—in every village. We have already more than forty such in this circuit. Many people, and especially little children, die for want of medical aid. We have opened a hospital for women and children, with provision for treating high caste and low caste with all deference to their caste prejudices. Two days ago a poor Hindoo woman was brought in ten miles; for three days she had been maltreated by ignorant village midwives. Mercifully the lady in charge of the hospital was able to relieve her, and she will, we trust, return to her village to report what has been done for her.

Our chief hope is with the children of the people, and for these we are building a Home for poor and destitute children. It is costing us £600, and will provide for 100. We have at present seventy boys and girls, housed in sheds; and if we could only house and feed so many we could have 700 instead of seventy. Heathen parents (Pariahs) would gladly hand over their children to us to bring up, with absolute freedom to bring them up as Christians. The end would in most cases be that the little children would lead their parents to Christ. The children who are with us we bring up in the simple habits of village life. The brightest of them we train as teachers to their own people, the others go back to earn their living by cultivating the lands or following a trade. Never was there a wider or more hopeful field of missionary enterprise ready to our hands than this: claiming the children of the poorest of the people for Christ.

Our prayer halls are for the most part small, mean buildings of mud and thatch, erected at a cost of from £5 to £8. A central church has become a pressing need, and we would fain erect a sanctuary which would modestly, yet not unworthily, embody our idea of a Christian temple. Add to all these things that we are again face to face with famine, owing to the total failure of our north-east monsoon. I hear everywhere of scarcity and hunger. An evangelist informs me that whenever he cooks his rice he finds half-a-dozen children about his cottage door, waiting in the hope of getting the water that his rice has been boiled in!

Back in North China.

WRITING from Wenchow, North China, Mrs. Stott tells of her safe return to her post there after her lengthened absence in this country. As to progress, she writes:—

"The work has been steadily if not rapidly progressing. There are a number of inquirers at nearly all the older out-stations, while at one, where two years ago there were only about fifteen Christians, now there are nearly fifty, and about a hundred inquirers. Mr. and Mrs. E. Hunt, formerly of Gan-king, and Mr. Upward, from the Glasgow Bible Training Institute, have joined us. Mr. Hunt will take charge of the church as soon as he has acquired the dialect. Mr. Upward and he are making good progress in that direction."

Among Italian Soldiers.

EXCELLENT results are reported of the work done among the Italian soldiery by the Protestant Evangelical staff of colporteurs under Signor Capellini. The Vatican was recently so alarmed at the extension of this leaven that a rival organisation was formed under the title "Circoli Cattolichi Militari," consisting of clubs where newspapers, games, and smoking were encouraged. The Government, however, have suppressed these on the ground that they are being used for seditious purposes, while it actively furthers Signor Capellini in his work. His aim is to impregnate the conscripts with Evangelical truth, so that when they are discharged after serving their time they carry into civil life the influences they have imbibed. The Press in Italy is beginning to help this work by giving reports of Evangelical conferences, etc., so that there are hopeful signs of awakening in many directions.

In Aid of Greek Refugees.

MOST opportune has been the assistance Lady Egerton has been successful in rendering Greek refugees from Thessaly. It has taken the wise form of self-help, and has been of immense benefit to the distressed peasants themselves, chiefly women and girls. With the approach of summer it is hoped the refugees will soon be all in Thessaly again.

It is determined, therefore, to remove the looms, which have been a means of livelihood to the distressed workers in Athens, to Thessaly, so that "before winter comes round the peasants may be rehabilitated in their homes and at work." So far it seems that the work was done chiefly for foreign markets; now it is intended to seek an opening for the fabrics produced in the Greek centres.

In transplanting the embroidery school also to the towns of Thessaly Lady Egerton hopes to make it a permanent industry. Help for this praiseworthy service of industrious peasants, driven from their homes by the barbarities of war, has been rendered through the Grosvenor House Committee.

Our Daily Homily

SUNDAY, May 8.

"Whom they laid daily at the gate of the temple which is called Beautiful, to ask alms of them that entered into the temple."—Acts iii. 2.

Is not this thyself? Thou art of the Israel of God. There is no doubt of thy name being enrolled in the pedigree of elect and regenerate souls; but thou art lame, needing to be carried by the strong support of minister and friend, never able to leap, and walk, and praise God, and at the best only able to attain to the outside of the Beautiful Gate that conducts to the richest, gladdest life. Through that gate of entire consecration there come snatches of holy melody, glimpses of white-vestured souls, visions of ideals of life which thou hast not attained, but thou art excluded, and must live on the alms of those that enter. How great the pity! Why shouldest thou not have the very best that God can give?

But, look up, expect to receive something, open thine ears to hear and thine heart to receive immediately strength, just where thou lackest it most sorely. The feet and ankle-bones of this helpless cripple needed strength; they were perfectly formed, but were paralysed. Similarly thine ideals of Christian living are true and accurate, but thou art deficient in power. The good thou wouldest, thou doest not; the evil thou wouldest not, thou doest. Thou must receive strength.

This strength can only be had by union with the risen Lord, who alone can make thee strong, and give thee perfect soundness in the presence of those who have hitherto only pitied thy weakness. The Spirit of Life in Christ Jesus shall make thee free from the law of sin and death.

MONDAY, May 9.

"They were all filled with the Holy Ghost."—Acts iv. 31.

They had been filled on the Day of Pentecost, and Peter had been suddenly and mightily infilled for his encounter with the Sanhedrim (ver. 8); but here again they were all privileged, whilst in the attitude of prayer and praise, to be again most blessedly infilled. From this we gather that we may claim repeated fillings of the Holy Spirit.

But let us remember that it is not necessary for the place to be shaken, or for the air to be filled with the outward phenomena of Pentecost as the necessary condition of this heavenly gift. Like Naaman, we are full of prejudices. We expect that the Pentecostal gift will come to us with as much ado, pomp, and bustle as the Syrian general looked for. But the blessed Paraclete often disconcerts all these preconceived notions. When we are looking for the hurricane, He comes as the zephyr. When we are expecting the torrent to pour into and fill the well, He fills it by the gradual percolation of single drops. When we are expecting some transcendent experience, we become aware of the distillation of myriads of dewdrops refreshing us with their quiet and copious benediction.

But the results will always be the same—great boldness in witness-bearing, much liberty in prayer and praise, great grace and beauty of character, self-denying love for those in need, great power through union with the risen Lord. Search and see whether these be yours! If not, receive the Holy Ghost.

TUESDAY, May 10.

"Thou has not lied unto men, but unto God."—Acts v. 4.

Achan, Belshazzar, and Ananias met the same fate, because of their persistent use of devoted things. When once we have devoted aught to the Lord He counts it as his own, and strikes down the hand that would abase it to common and profane use. Beware that you take back nothing which you have laid on God's altar, least of all yourself.

Each gathering of believers is endowed with mystic and extraordinary importance because the Lord, through the Eternal Spirit, is literally present. The true President is not the minister, however distinguished by his gift or grace, but the Divine Spirit Himself; and any sin against the Church is really against Him. It is this Divine Presence that invests a gathering of the simplest, humblest believers with such unique importance. Behind Peter was the real Head of the Church, and so with every faithful minister. Honour the Personality, the Presidency, and Deity of the Holy Spirit, as set forth in this narrative.

Dr. Gordon told me on one occasion that he had in his church a very crooked stick, which was obstructing all its work. So he spoke to him alone, and before his brethren; but to no purpose. He therefore handed the whole matter over to the Divine Spirit, as the Executive of the Godhead. In a fortnight this man was taken right away, and another put down in his place. God can deal with difficulties that baffle us.

WEDNESDAY, May 11.

"We will give ourselves continually to prayer."—Acts vi. 4.

If ever there was a sacred work, it was that of caring for these poor widows; and yet the Apostles felt that even such duties might interfere with the continual ministry of intercession. No doubt they always lived in the atmosphere and spirit of prayer, but they rightly felt that this was not enough either for them or for their work. So they sought a division of labour, that while some specially served tables and ministered the alms of the church, others might be set free for steadfast continuance in prayer. This would keep the communication with the King on the throne clear and fresh, and be the means of procuring wisdom and strength for their great responsibilities.

There are many courses of usefulness open to each of us in this world, and we must choose the one, not only most suited to our idiosyncrasies, but in which we can best serve our day and generation. It may be that in our incessant activities we are neglecting the one method by which we may contribute most largely to the coming of our Father's kingdom.

"In that day," said our Lord, speaking of the day of Pentecost, "ye shall ask in my name." It is only when we are full of the Holy Spirit that we can experience the true power to plead with God. Much prayer, much blessing; little prayer, little blessing; no prayer, no blessing. When the Apostles "gave themselves to prayer," "the Word of God increased."

THURSDAY, May 12.

"Being full of the Holy Ghost."—Acts. vii. 55.

The blessed characteristic of Stephen lay in his being perpetually full of the Holy Ghost. It is said of others, even Peter, that they were filled, as though they needed some special and over-mastering inducement for special service. But Stephen is more than once described as full (vi. 5), as though he were always kept brimming, like a lake from the hills.

Those who are full of the Holy Spirit are always looking steadfastly upwards. They look not at the things which are seen, but at those which are not seen. Across the valleys they catch sight of the Delectable Mountains, rising like the Himalaya above the plains of India. Whilst others look around for help, they lift up their eyes to the hills from whence cometh their help, and to them heaven stands always open.

Those who are full of the Holy Spirit see and are transfigured by the glory of God. What wonder that those who sat in the Council beheld Stephen's face as it had been the face of an angel. The light that shone there was not as when Jesus was transfigured, the light of the Shechinah breaking up from within, but the glory of God shining from the open door. So the sunrise smites the highest peaks.

FRIDAY, May 13.

"The same is desert."—Acts viii. 26 (R.V.).

Desert means uninhabited. It seemed a strange providence that took Philip thither. He had been chosen to the honourable office of deacon, and there was probably plenty of work to do in connection with the scattered church. Moreover, he had just completed a most successful mission in Samaria, where the multitude had given heed with one accord to the things he had spoken; and now he was in these lonely solitudes, where only chance travellers could be encountered. Did he not count it strange, and wish to get home to his four little daughters (Acts xxi. 9)?

There is the solitude of a new country, in which you do not know the language. The solitude of a sick-chamber, in which the earnest worker suddenly discovers the limitations of physical weakness. The solitude of suspicion and dislike, which contrast strangely with some large and devoted circle. Thither God brings us not unfrequently. No flower can thrive in unbroken light.

But in every solitude, if we wait patiently on the Lord, there are opportunities of service. There is always some inquiring soul in need of the precise help we can give. There is an old story of some monks to whom the Book of Revelation was being read. At the end each was asked to choose the promise he loved best. One said I will take this, "God shall wipe away all tears." Another chose, "To him that overcometh I will give to sit on my throne." The third replied, "I would choose, 'His servants shall serve Him.'" The third was Thomas à Kempis, who afterwards wrote "The Imitation,"

> Not caring how to serve Thee much,
> But to please Thee perfectly.

SATURDAY, May 14.

"The Church had peace, being edified; and, walking in the fear of the Lord and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, was multiplied."—Acts ix. 31 (R.V.).

These are the conditions of Church growth. Note it grew not simply by addition, but by multiplication.

First, there must be peace. Let us endeavour to help the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. As far as it lies in our power, let each of us live peaceably with all men. Let all bitterness and wrath, and anger and clamour, and railing be put away out of our hearts, with all malice, and let us be kind one to another.

Then the Church will be edified. When its foundations are deeply laid in righteousness and peace, the City of God arises into the pure air. Solomon, the man of peace, builds the Temple.

Lastly, it will be multiplied, on two conditions. The members of such a Christian community must first walk in the fear of the Lord. To walk means the daily plodding, routine life—full of commonplaces, somewhat prosaic; but always ruled by the fear of grieving the heart that was pierced on Calvary. Next we must walk in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, or, as the words might be rendered, in the paracletism of the Paraclete. The Holy Spirit is our Advocate, Teacher, Guide; and we should habitually dwell in his radiant and balmy atmosphere. This is an environment, indeed, in which we may thrive and develop without exhaustion, and mature into the perfection of our growth.

The late Mr. G. L. Pilkington.

A PECULIAR interest attaches to mission work in Central Africa, and the men and women engaged therein are at once the messengers of the Churches and the glory of Christ. As one after another has fallen at lonely posts in that dark field, not merely does a denomination or a communion mourn, but Evangelical Christendom, as a whole, feels the loss and combines in the expression of sympathy.

The late Mr. George Lawrence Pilkington, like Alexander Mackay before him, was a valued representative of the Church Missionary Society in Uganda; and his death, when announced at the beginning of the year, was a signal for deep sorrow on the part of all who feel for the woes of poor Africa, among whose sons he had been an instrument of great and lasting blessing.

The son of Mr. H. M. Pilkington, Q.C., the lamented missionary was born in 1865, at Tore, Tyrrellspass, co. Westmeath, and was educated at Uppingham, where he came under the powerful influence of the much esteemed Edward Thring. Passing to Cambridge, he entered Pembroke College, and took his degree in 1887. About the same time he took a bold Christian stand, and gave expression to a desire for missionary service. His educational career was distinguished and his prospects specially good, but these he was enabled to lay at the feet of Christ. Leaving Cambridge, he undertook work as assistant master, first at Harrow, then at Bedford; he also engaged in Christian effort in connection with the Children's Special Service Mission and the Schoolboys' Scripture Union. At length he saw his course clearly, and wrote home: "Morning, noon, and night someone seems to be standing beside me, saying, 'God intends you to go to the heathen.'" His parents, it is a joy to add, heartily consented to his response to what was evidently the call of God.

In 1889, when twenty-four years of age, he responded, with two other Cambridge men (Revs. G. K. Baskerville and J. D. M. Cotter), to the appeal of Mr. Douglas Hooper for men for East Africa. This was to the delight of friends of the Uganda Mission, and with the full approval of those who knew him best, Rev. Dr. Searle, Master of Pembroke College, writing: "I have never had any pupil who has gone out, in my opinion, so qualified—spiritually, intellectually, and physically. There is the promise of a Hannington and a Gordon in him." Sailing with Messrs. Baskerville and Cotter in January 1890, Mr. Pilkington had to stay some months on the coast, awaiting the arrival of Bishop Tucker. All the while he was preparing for his many-sided service as a lay missionary. The journey inland, the caravan being made up of 2:00 porters, did not start until July 20, and Uganda was not reached until December 27. Among others who fell ill by the way was Mr. Pilkington, but in spite of weakness and sickness he picked up the language with praiseworthy diligence; and on arriving in Uganda, to the surprise of all, he was able to speak to the people, whom he gathered round him in little crowds while he taught them short passages of Holy Scripture.

Settled in the country, Mr. Pilkington at once plunged into literary work, compiling a grammar, translating the Scriptures, and writing small books in the vernacular. His grasp of the language was wonderful, and he was known all over the country as "a true Muganda." In a little over a year from the date of his arrival in the country he had completed the translation of the New Testament, of which very little more than the Gospels was translated by other hands. Before the end of 1896 the Old Testament was also issued in Luganda, Mr. Pilkington having translated the whole, excepting a few of the Minor Prophets. While thus employed he superintended the organisation of the band of native teachers, and acquired a leading position in the counsels of his fellow missionaries.

Dr. C. F. Harford-Battersby, who was associated with Mr. Pilkington on various occasions and in different kinds of work, in a tribute in the Record of January 21, wrote:

There is no question about Mr. Pilkington's scholarly ability, but he always contended that men of quite ordinary attainments still might do valuable literary and translational work in the mission field if they would only follow the methods which he had pursued; and there are many scholars who would not have succeeded as he did in laying the foundation of the literature of an unwritten language. He recommended to all who wished to engage in such work a little book entitled "A Primer of Phonetics," by Henry Sweet, published by the Clarendon Press, as he believed that the most important point in acquiring a language was a correct understanding of the value of sounds. With some such scientific basis as that described in this little book, he recommended the student of a native language to get at once into contact with the natives. He himself stated how he would plant himself in front of his native teacher, and by the hour together employ himself by trying to imitate the sounds made by him, copying his grimaces, and using his eyes as well as his ears in order to ensure that he might accurately follow his teacher in every detail. No wonder that with such patient work he acquired the language. No wonder he was a universal favourite amongst the natives.

From a Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry, 55, Baker-street, W.

We give these lines with the sincere hope that the counsels which did so much to assist Mr. Pilkington may be followed by others taking up work in heathen lands. Another fact, showing the systematic method of the devoted missionary, is related by Rev. Ernest Millar, a fellow-labourer, who also gives us a glimpse of the man himself:—

No sooner had the printed copies of a book arrived in the country than he at once began to revise it in the light of the increased knowledge which he had obtained since the book had been sent home to be printed. He was the linguist of the Mission, and was surpassed by none in grammatical knowledge and accuracy in speaking Luganda. As to his personal life and character, he was a man who seemed to realise that God had a way in which he wished us to act in the very minutest details of work and of our daily life, and that it was our business to search out that will and act in accordance with it. I well remember his explaining Gen. iii. 19, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread," how that he thought that God gave those a blessing who diligently sought it, by Bible study and prayer, and that as bodily food was got by active work, so also spiritual food of the most profitable kind could only be obtained by those who diligently worked in order to obtain it. The Bible, and that alone, was his standard, and all questions of expediency or ancient custom or interpretation must stand or fall by that standard.

As he discharged his onerous duties in the fear of God Mr. Pilkington received great blessing in his own soul. In 1893 the Spirit of God wrought marvellously among the missionaries and their flocks, and the work seemed to enter upon a new era, in which the native church rose to a sense of its great obligations in regard to the darkness around. In 1895 Mr. Pilkington came home for a short furlough, and spoke at many meetings in the British Isles. Full of plans for the evangelisation, not merely of Uganda, but also of the surrounding country, he went back in 1896. With characteristic eagerness he took his bicycle, and rode on ahead of the caravan, reaching Mengo five weeks earlier than the remainder of the party! What followed is well in the memory of us all. Outside influences caused political unrest, and the Baganda went to the help of the Government officials in dealing with mutinous Soudanese soldiers. Numbers of the Baganda were killed and wounded in an endeavour to cut down the plantains, and so starve out the treacherous Soudanese. Mr. Pilkington, accompanied by Dr. Cook, went to the front to encourage the men in the defence of their homes and to act as interpreter for the Government forces. Then came the sad news that Mr. Pilkington had been killed. His remains were interred close by the spot where Bishop Hannington was seized before his blood was spilt for the sake of Christ and Africa. The Gospel cause is worthy the attention of the best of men; and we trust God will raise up many to labour therein with ability and diligence such as was shown by Mr. Pilkington during his comparatively brief but singularly fruitful period of service.

"Not Unto Death."

[John xi. 4.]

The echo of some thoughts in a sermon by Rev. W. B. Macleod, of Port Glasgow.)

Oft had the weeping sisters gazed
Upon that sleep unmoved by breath,
And questioned in their hearts amazed
The Master's word—"Not unto death."
The grave had claimed their household treasure,
And days dragged on, years could not measure.

The Master came; another word
Resounded through the still domain;
The disembodied Spirit heard
And took its robe of flesh again
And walked the world a new suggestion,
The answer to life's darkest question.

Our dead shall live, and health and youth
Glow in each face serene and strong
To prove that Jesus spoke the truth
And all our dismal doubts were wrong;
"Not unto death." O blest reflection!
"But through death unto resurrection."

THE "MAY MEETINGS."

Baptist Missionary Society.

ON many accounts the Baptist Missionary Society occupies an important place in the realm of aggressive Gospel work. While all Evangelical Christians glory in the story, and praise God for the blessing it has been to the Church and the world, quite naturally the enterprise lies heavily upon the hearts of the descendants of those who "held the ropes" when, upwards of a hundred years ago, Carey and his early colleagues launched forth into the heathen world. The anniversary gatherings this year have shown a measure of enthusiasm that must have cheered very greatly those who direct the affairs of the Society, the public meeting in Exeter Hall on Thursday evening last being as hearty in character as the report then rendered was encouraging beyond recent precedent.

In a lucid statement on the work of the year Mr. A. H. BAYNES spoke of sunshine and shadow, of great blessing on the field, and sad losses by death. There had been a larger number of baptisms than before, also an important increase in Christian elementary and Sunday-school education, with a growth of the Christian Endeavour movement, especially in Bengal. In reference to finance Mr. Baynes was equally buoyant, the income having reached a total of £78,546, a greater sum than in any previous year. At the beginning of the year it was feared that there would be a deficit of £10,000, but in response to a special and urgent appeal £9,550 had been raised. It is of the greatest importance that the income of the Society should be kept up, and therefore it had been resolved to undertake a visitation of the churches, and raise the permanent income to £100,000. In conclusion, Mr. Baynes impressed upon his hearers the grave responsibility imposed upon the Church of Christ by the great and many opportunities of the present day.

The chair was occupied by Dr. GEORGE SMITH, secretary of the Free Church of Scotland Missions, and known throughout Christendom as a writer on Indian affairs, and particularly on missions and missionaries in our great Eastern dependency. In an address rich in historical allusions, he compared the troublous times in which the Society originated with the present period of war and turmoil. Remarking upon the American-Spanish war, he said that the Philippine Islands appeared to him to call as loudly as Cuba for emancipation from the yoke of Spain. He spoke as knowing the islands, and said that there is no terror so great, no oppression so intolerable, no rule so cruel as that of the Spaniards among the seven millions of human beings in the four hundred Philippine Islands. Therefore, whatever the extent of the present war, he prayed that there, as well as in Cuba, the Evangel of Christ may find speedy entrance, and at least have toleration.

Having described the marvellous progress of recent years in the number of workers and converts, Dr. Smith highly commended the purpose of the Society to promote a visitation of the churches; the method was a success in Scotland, and it would answer in England, where many people want an opportunity to give for foreign missions. Another thing he heartily approved was the systematic training of native missionaries, because the time had come for the native churches to supply the apostles and teachers of the faith. Proceeding, the speaker indicated a point of failure in missions during the century—the children of Abraham have been left practically untouched. If there was never a Jew converted—and if many Jewish converts turned out the same as some had recently done—the duty would be equally plain. But what of the Mohammedans? The prayer, "Oh, that Ishmael might live before Thee!" has never been answered. The Mohammedans are the opprobrium of Christian missions; and only in India can a Mohammedan become a Christian with safety. There the C.M.S. has done nobly, and God has greatly owned their work. He would advise anyone going out as a foreign missionary, if possible, to take up work among the Mohammedans. That is the work for the coming century; and Dr. Smith prayed that the rule of the house of Othman might speedily cease to curse the heart of Asia.

Rev. HERBERT DIXON, missionary from Shansi, North China, spoke of the great need of the million-peopled Empire of the East, and of the work that has been done there in the name of Christ. He told a painful story of social wrongs and national sins, also of persecutions following upon profession of the Gospel. Recalling that he formerly laboured on the Congo, he told the deeply interesting story of a collection in the native church there in aid of his Chinese work. On this he founded a strong appeal to the audience to help China and the world.

A powerful address was delivered by Rev. J. MORGAN GIBBON on the world's need and God's provision. He emphasised the fact that Christ is not one of many saviours, but the one Saviour. Missions cannot be carried out without fire, and, in the main, we must hold the orthodox views if we are to have that fire. The last speaker was Rev. J. R. M. STEPHENS, of Congo, who told an encouraging tale. The Uganda and Congo Missions must soon meet; there is but a distance of two hundred miles now between the outposts of the two. Again, the railway in Congo, with contemplated improved steamship passage, will make it possible to reach the interior of Africa in less than six weeks from England, instead of travelling three months or more. Mr. Stephens rejoiced to say that, with more knowledge of the country, the rate of mortality is lower; so that the Society now has two missionaries who have been on the field for twenty-five years, and others who have been there sixteen, fourteen, twelve, and ten years.

The Baptist Union.

THE Union meetings were resumed on Tuesday, in Bloomsbury Chapel. At the devotional service Dr. J. A. SPURGEON, who was called upon by the President to respond to his election of the preceding day, was greeted with much enthusiasm, as also was Dr. Maclaren, of Manchester, who made his appearance on the platform. Forty-seven years had passed since Dr. Spurgeon joined the denomination, and he had received, he said, such unbounded blessings connected with it that he would have felt it his duty to respond to their call. But he knew it was not for himself that he had been chosen. There was at the back one whom they were wishful to honour; he was honoured and esteemed throughout the world, and nowhere more than here. He lived in the honour and affection of Christendom; and Dr. Spurgeon was persuaded that now he would have said, Brother, go and do your best. The door of the past was shut.

Rev. S. VINCENT then proceeded to deliver his address, which occupied nearly an hour and a-half in delivery. There is just now, said he, a cry everywhere for Christian unity.

IT IS A NOTE OF THE AGE.

Christian unity was the oneness of Christians by virtue of their union with Christ. But others—not the Free Churches—were not satisfied with this unity. Stress was now laid upon a unity visible not so much in a saintly life and a brotherly concord, as on a unity made visible in some city, or potentate, or system. So Christian unity was misunderstood; men cried for a unity which Christ never prayed for. New life under the abiding Spirit would develop from age to age, but if the forms were unduly emphasised ecclesiastical union was gained at the expense of Christian unity. Having enunciated what he regarded as the Baptists' idea, and that of the Free Churches generally, Mr. Vincent turned to that of other Churches. The following quotation would suggest the only kind of Christian unity recognised by many Anglican clergymen:—

> The Catholic Church is the home of the Holy Ghost. It is his only earthly home. He does not make his home in any Dissenting sect. Sometimes people quarrel with the Church and break away from her, and make little sham churches of their own. We call these people Dissenters, and their sham churches sects. The Holy Ghost does not abide, does not dwell with them.

This, said Mr. Vincent, is the "Exclusive Church" theory, which monopolises the Holy Catholic Church, and declares it visible only in one certain organisation or in one form of government. This theory was widely held and rudely asserted in the Anglican Communion, whence it had been all but banished seventy years ago. But it was held still more firmly at Rome, and the Pope had recently served Anglicans and their friends as they had treated the Dissenters. After examining the Pope's condition of unity, Mr. Vincent declared that the Exclusive Church theory which Romans, Anglicans, and the Eastern Churches shared was now put to shame by those who proclaimed it, because they themselves could not own one another, they could not agree where this visible Church was. God, he declared, was showing, partly by this controversy, that world-wide union was hopeless along the lines of these organisations, which claimed the great name of the Church for a part of the Church.

On Wednesday no fewer than seven meetings claimed the attention of Baptists. The first was the annual breakfast of the Zenana Mission, which was remarkably well attended at the Holborn Restaurant, in spite of the foggy and very unpleasant morning. Mr. Alfred Pearce Gould presided, and comparing the "cry" concerning foreign missions now with what it had been, said it used to be "No open doors," but now the doors were thrown wide apart, and the need was for "More Workers." Further, the grave social and political changes taking place would open the doors wider still. Miss Angus having stated the position of the Society, Miss Gleazer, of Cuttack, sketched Zenana work in India, and Mrs. Macfarlane, of the London Missionary Society, performed the same service for work in China. Dr. R. F. Horton, of Hampstead, taking an illustration from the reported invention of flashing pictures by telegraph, declared that the impression the home churches had of God was flashed to the heathen mind, and if missions failed it was due, not so much to the lack of devotion on the part of missionaries, as to the imperfect impression of God at home.

The proceedings of the Union assembly on Wednesday were largely devoted to public questions, resolutions being adopted on such topics as Temperance, the proposed Roman Catholic University in Ireland, and the Cuban war. At the final sitting, in Bloomsbury Chapel, on Thursday, the first paper was read by Rev. J. T. FORBES, of Edinburgh, on "Dissent in Fiction and History." He complained that the Nonconformist world, after being non-existent for many writers until the middle of this century, had since been misrepresented by types created by Dickens and other novelists who associated Dissent with vulgarity. Artistic sensibilities were an inadequate equipment for facing a great spiritual question. Dwelling on the great services rendered by Dissent to constitutional rule, to liberty, and to social and philanthropic work, he said that for a fair view of the Dissenter they must go to the historian—notably to Masson, in his life of Milton.

Rev. S. W. BOWSER, of Birkenhead, opened a discussion on "The Systematic Teaching of Denominational and Free Church Principles." They needed, he said, an Education Act for the denomination, with their own Education Minister.

Rev. Dr. CLIFFORD spoke at length on his recent journey through the self-governing colonies, eulogising the colonists in the highest terms. Never before had he felt himself dwelling where there was such a sense of justice and regard for the rights of others. The colonies had dared to resist the demand of the priest for special favours, and a man who had spent many years in the free air of Canada had told him he could not possibly go back to live in England.

United Methodist Missions.

THE United Methodist Free Church Missionary Society, although not one of the great societies, is nevertheless a growing and useful organisation. During the past year, with a distinguished Chinese missionary, Rev. Dr. Swallow, as president, missionary enthusiasm has increased throughout the Connexion. The body has at present in the foreign field twenty-nine missionaries, 284 local preachers, 449 leaders, 8419 members, 2884 on trial, and 209 chapels and preaching-rooms. The total income for the past year amounted to over £14,000. Last week's anniversary gatherings at the Exeter Hall were marked by large attendances and considerable enthusiasm.

A conference was held in the afternoon, presided over by Mr. F. W. Dixon, of Southport. Mrs. Swallow, Rev. James Whittles, Mr. C. Wardlow, and others took part. In the evening the large hall was well filled. Mr. James Chippendale, Mayor of Harrogate, presided. The annual report, presented by the missionary secretary, Rev. H. T. Chapman, stated that the West Indian stations had keenly felt the prevailing depression, but on the East Coast of Africa prospects had never been brighter, and in China the growth of the work was embarrassing. An increase on the Chinese stations of 200 members was anticipated. Rev. W. J. Dawson said that he had been brought up in an atmosphere of missionary enthusiasm. He well remembered the enthusiastic meetings which used to be held in the West of England. He still supported missionary work, because if Christianity was anything it was propagandist. They had no right to be content with parochial systems of Christianity. A Methodist who did not believe in missions would be a curiosity to be shut up in a show. Referring to the advance of civilisation, Mr. Dawson emphasised the fact that, whereas in the days of our fathers prayers were offered for the "opening of doors," now the whole world was open and all the Churches had to do was to take possession.

The President, Rev. Dr. Swallow, who has spent many years as a medical missionary in China, delivered an interesting address. He was very severe upon the greed of the European Powers in the Far East. "When I speak to a native about his soul," said he, "he replies, 'Why do you want to make me a Christian? It is only because you want our country.' I have repeatedly told them 'No, that is not our object'; but what shall I be able to say now when I go back in a few months? I shall have to tell them that the Christianity of the 'mailed fist' is but a caricature of the teaching of Jesus Christ."

Rev. James Wright delivered a thoughtful and earnest address. Rev. J. S. Withington and Alderman Duckworth, M.P., followed.

The Trinitarian Bible Society.

THE sixty-seventh annual meeting of this society was held on Tuesday week, in Lower Exeter Hall, Mr. H. C. Nisbet presiding. Dr. E. W. Bullinger, in giving an abstract of the report, urged the growing importance, in these days of increasing unfaithfulness and of approaching apostasy, of earnest protest against tampering with the Bible. This society was founded in 1831, by men jealous for the glory of God, for the purpose of translating, printing, and circulating the Scriptures in all their purity and without human adulteration. Details followed of the total circulation, and in especial the Hebrew New Testament (Salkinson's). Mention was also made of the Judeo-German Bible, now completed in MS., and ere long, it is hoped, to be printed and sent forth among German-speaking Jews. The work in Brittany, Spain, and other lands, as well as among seamen, has also given great encouragement. New work is opening in South America, and new versions are being prepared for those who have neither Bible nor Testaments in their own language.

The Chairman reviewed the reasons for the existence of the society, and showed the real work it is doing. He believed that the need for its protest is now greater than ever, while God has marvellously blessed its efforts to preserve the purity and integrity of his Word as translated into the language of the people.

Rev. Sydney Thelwall cited a number of instances illustrating the general ignorance, and even prejudice, existing as to the aims and work of this society. He lamented that even in Protestant and Evangelical circles slight importance is attached to absolute faithfulness to the truth of God.

Rev. T. George, Christ Church, Bromley Park, maintained that the Word of God must not be corrupted or altered, because of its Divine origin, because it is a declaration of the mind of God; because it is our spiritual food; because of the penalty attached in the last chapter of the Bible to altering the Word of God; and because there is nothing trivial in the Book—nothing that may lightly be tampered with. The text must not be altered, for the whole structure of Romanism is built on the distortion of Scripture. To print "Do penance and thou shalt be saved," instead of "Repent, and believe, and thou shalt be saved," is to corrupt the pure Word of God, and obscure the simplicity of the Gospel.

Rev. John Wilkinson maintained that the true work of a Bible Society is to distribute all over this world the Word of the living God. But all the societies in the world circulate about 7,000,000 annually, while the added population each year is 12,000,000—When, in this way, can we overtake the growth of the world? Hence more must be done than we are now doing. The world will never be covered by sales. People know nothing of the Bible, and therefore will not buy. The world must be flooded with the Scriptures, and towards this end the books must be given freely, even as God's gift is free. And in this all missionaries should be utilised. He hoped that the funds of this Society would be trebled at once, so that it might be able to give distributing societies all the copies they can get into circulation.

Pasteur L. D'Egremont, of the French Huguenot Church, London, testified to the help rendered him in his work by the Trinitarian Bible Society.

Pasteur Lecoat, of the Breton Evangelical Mission, gave a glowing account of the spread of the light in Brittany, mainly through the Scriptures in their own tongue. More than once lately colporteurs, on going to new towns, have found over some houses the words, "The Bible read here on Sundays." Someone who had obtained a copy had become interested, and had begun to read it to his neighbours. In this way the Word was spreading, in spite of all opposition.

Lord's Day Rest Association.

THE forty-first annual meeting of the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association was held on Tuesday last week, at the Holborn Restaurant. Sir Mark Stewart, M.P., presided, and in some opening remarks observed that churches which a few years ago were comparatively well filled no longer present that appearance. He ascribed this result to the fact that in the present day men and women seek pleasure rather than worship. The success of the English artisans was due to the fact that they had one day in seven in which to rest.

Mr. Charles Hill, secretary, gave an abstract of the report, which intimated that the fresh proposed attempt to repeal the Lord's Day Act of 1781, which protects the amusement and other great industries from Sunday labour, will be resisted by every means at the disposal of the Association. The Sunday opening of the Oxford Music Hall was opposed in a great variety of ways, and sufficient pressure was brought to bear on the offenders to influence them to inform the Licensing Committee of the L.C.C. that they did not intend to open again on Sundays. The trustees of the National Gallery have declined a suggestion made to them to open the Gallery on Sundays throughout the year. The cause of Sunday rest has rarely received a more cruel blow than that given by the Bishop of Chester in his pastoral letter in favour of Sunday newspapers and Sunday sports, and under such patronage Sunday cycling, games, sports, and amusements (and the consequent Sunday labour) have enormously increased. Cricket matches on Sundays are now being actively organised.

At Glasgow the Corporation, by forty-four votes against eighteen, decided not to open the People's Palace on Sundays. At Plymouth, Huddersfield, Carnarvon, Fareham, Edmonton, and Hawick various proposals for Sunday entertainments have been successfully withstood. 283,000 publications on Sunday observance have been printed during the year, and 164 lectures and addresses delivered by the Association's agents. The total income was £1147, being £52 less than the previous year.

Addresses were also delivered by Messrs. James Halford, J. H. Lydall, and H. R. King, and Rev. Arthur Woods.

Bible Lands Missions' Aid Society.

THE fifty-fourth annual meeting was held in the Parlour, Exeter Hall, on Thursday, April 21, Lord Kinnaird in the chair.

The Hon. Sec., Rev. W. A. Essery, read an abstract of the report for the year. It appeared that the principal work had been devoted to the orphanages in Asia Minor and to the impoverished native churches and their pastors. Grants had been sent to the orphanages in Aintab, Bitlis, Diarbekir, Erzeroom, Harpoot, Mardin, Van, and Zeitun. Considerable help for evangelisation work had been forwarded to western, central, and eastern Asia Minor. The most remarkable feature in these regions had been the abounding opportunity for Christ's Gospel throughout the entire area from west to east. So valuable had this help been that one of the missionaries wrote, "The aid of your society has under God saved our missionary work from destruction." Income for the year exceeded £2700, upwards of £1000 being received for relief work and massacre-orphans. These Armenian orphans must necessarily be a charge for six or seven years to come.

Lord Kinnaird said that in his recent tour in India he had met with many American missionaries whose labours were earnest and faithful. Men and women of the same kind were working in the Bible lands, and the work under their direction was aided by this society. Through trouble, in the marvellous providence of God, the work prospers, as we have heard by the report how the few have become many in the massacre districts. The cavils of those who said the sufferers were only nominal Christians are surely silenced by the heroic and faithful testimony of those, and they were many, who laid down their lives, not accepting deliverance which meant the denial of Christ.

Rev. Alex. Connell strongly supported what the chairman had said as to the unspeakable importance of religious instruction given in mission schools in Bible-lands. Our religion came to us from those old romantic lands, for we were once "the regions beyond," and now it becomes us to send it back; we owe it to those regions. Surely this society ought to command support.

Rev. T. Storer Toms thought it seemed strange that the Bible lands once Christian, and sending out a broad influence over the earth, should now be under the flag of Mahomet. He had visited these countries, and had seen great and unexpected signs that this old Christian life was finding its way back to the original home. He was especially astonished at the powerful mission institution in Beyrout. He gave a very interesting narrative of his stay in Nazareth, and of his visit to the girls' orphanage in that ever memorable city. A collection for Armenian orphans was taken.

South American Missionary Society.

THIS society held its annual meeting last week in Sion College, Mr. F. A. Bevan presiding. The report, read by the clerical secretary, Rev. R. J. Simpson, said that the society's work is extending, new doors are opening and being entered; while an increased income encourages the forward movement. The missionary work is full of encouragement, and the reports from the missionaries and others make most attractive reading. The work amongst the English-speaking people, especially the sailors who frequent South American shores in such large numbers, is being greatly blessed. It is the Protestant Evangelical work which presents perhaps the greatest difficulties and obstacles, and it is this, while all is to be well maintained, that is being specially pushed forward.

The Chairman dwelt on the various aspects of the work. Rev. Thomas Turner, who knows South America, spoke of the evangelistic and missionary operations of the society, showing how our fellow-countrymen come under the worst influences in South America, and if left spiritually uncared for not only deteriorate themselves, but become by their evil example an active hindrance to the spread of the truth. The work amongst the Indians is very interesting, but there is much to be done in training native teachers and in getting hold of the children. Mr. Turner thought the Society ought to have a much larger income than £17,600 to carry on its difficult and many-sided work.

Mr. John Hay, of the Paraguay Chaco Mission, told in simple language the story of his work amongst the Indians. The State authorities are very friendly, but do not lend much practical assistance. English trading corporations, however, have been very generous in grants of land. The promotion of temperance has been very successful, and so obviously beneficial in its results that the State has co-operated by prohibiting the sale of liquor to the natives. Work on the language has progressed, and schools have been established with remarkable results. The extension of the cattle ranches is bringing into the district Romanists of the lower class, whose influence is a source of much danger and anxiety. Rev. Walter Horne, vicar of St. Saviour's, Brixton, drew attention to the fact that the unsettled character of the population materially increases the difficulty of the work. Archdeacon Sinclair, Rev. W. Windle, and Messrs. W. F. A. Archibald, H. Morris, and J. H. Norman also spoke.

Wesleyan Missionary Society.

IT is several years since the Wesleyan Missionary Society has issued so buoyant a report as that which was submitted at the annual meeting held on Monday last in Exeter Hall. The gathering was large and enthusiastic, and ready and hearty response was made to appeals for extended interest and increased support. If the year now reviewed has been one of peculiar anxiety and large demand, so also has it been one in which the friends of the work have devised liberal things in sustaining the hands of the brethren who occupy the high places of the field. Sir George Chubb presided, in the unavoidable absence of Sir George Smith, of Truro.

Rev. F. W. Macdonald read the abstract report, which was encouraging from beginning to end. From a substantial advance in income, the statement proceeded to record important extensions in the society's operations. The expenditure reached a total of £131,266, which was more than covered by general income, to say nothing of special gifts for definite extensions (£2585), and financial responses to appeals consequent upon the terrible famine in India (£7732). Then, reviewing the various fields, the report spoke of great accessions of membership in

MANY LANDS ON THREE CONTINENTS,

China and India being mentioned in special detail. With reference to the European Missions, the committee was never more profoundly convinced of the necessity of maintaining its witness in France, Italy, and Spain. In the various missions still under the immediate direction of the society there is a church membership of 44,457, with 11,133 on trial. Allowing for the disappearance from the returns of the German district, which now forms part of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Germany, there is an increase on the year of 2298. The missions under conferences, which were founded and are still assisted by the society—in France, South Africa, and the West Indies—combine in their several fellowships a total of 180,000 souls. Of course, the report also took account of the important educational and social institutions of the society; and again the constituency of supporters was impressed with the undermanned condition of the missions, and the greatness and urgency of present opportunity.

Rev. W. L. Watkinson delivered a striking address. He showed that Christian civilisation is founded on the one principle which was fatally lacking in the civilisation of old Greece—consideration for the humble, the outcast, the slave, and the sufferer. "The Son of Man came to seek and to save that which was lost"; and if the Church forgets those for whom Christ is so greatly concerned, then Christ will forget the Church. In all men there is however these may be degraded, obscured, and overlain. To these faculties of recovery embodied in the race Christ appeals by his servants, and the results prove the Divinity of the Gospel, as by incarnate Reason the world is being "convinced of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment." In some concluding words the speaker urged the Methodist people never to doubt the success of the cause, and never to think that liberality in foreign enterprise would impoverish home effort.

Rev. F. W. Ambery Smith, of Raniganj, dwelt upon progress in an important part of the Indian field. He described a varied work, including an orphanage of sixty children, and a leper-home with seventy-five inmates. The leper church had afforded him much joyous work, and sixty of the poor people had been baptized, while several have died full of confidence and hope. During cholera and smallpox epidemics, when the native doctors would give no attention to the people, Mr. Smith did medical work on a large scale, with very encouraging results. Among the incidents included in his speech was the story of a Brahmin who had read a Bible in the course of his study of English, and at length submitted to Christian baptism, although to follow Christ meant and the loss of all his worldly possessions. The renunciation was grandly complete, although it was a joy to all that as time passed the keenness of the situation was modified, wife and children were restored, and the young man's father became in a measure reconciled.

Rev. Dr. E. E. Jenkins, active although venerable, spoke on political movements as they affect the mission cause. Recent history in regard to China was rehearsed, and the judgment expressed that there will be a new China, very different from the old. Speaking of India, Dr. Jenkins thanked God that the Pariahs, the victims of an oppressive caste system, are rising into notice. For years before legislation took up the case of the outcast races the missionary befriended and educated them. The battle for the Pariah was, however, fought in the high school, the missionaries insisting that the only caste to be recognised was the caste of merit, and that Brahmin and Pariah should occupy the same benches. That was the beginning of a revolution, and of a condition in which, in the eyes of Government, Pariah and Brahmin are one and the same, being doomed, and about to disappear altogether. In conclusion, Dr. Jenkins called attention to the great opportunity presented in the non-caste villages of India. The people live next door to famine, but they do not ask for food. Their normal condition is penury, but they do not ask for money. They ask for Christian teachers to be sent among them, and it is for the Church to-day to answer their call. Meantime the Mohammedans and Hindus are sending their missionaries among these people; so that the call is very urgent and the opportunity great beyond estimation.

THE INJUSTICE OF CENTURIES

Dr. Sydney R. Hodges followed with an account of medical mission work in Hankow. The need of such work requires no argument; it is sufficient to say that Dr. Hodges' story told of noble endeavour. In view, however, of the wideness of the field, it is hoped that the hospital buildings, sufficient already to accommodate about thirty-five patients, will speedily be enlarged, so as in a more complete measure to cope with the demands of the work.

Zenana Bible and Medical Mission.

THE meetings of this society were held on Friday, in the new Y.W.C.A. Hall, 26, George-street, Hanover-square, Lord Kinnaird presiding.

Rev. A. R. Cavalier gave an account of his recent visit to the stations of the society in India. The late famine had already shown its effects in a very remarkable increase of the work. He had found everywhere a refreshing spirit of devotion to the cause. Beginning with Bombay, of which he spoke highly, in spite of the great cloud hanging over the city—the plague—the schools and other work are going on with growing efficiency. In Poona the work is of very special value, especially that carried on by native Christian ladies under the lead of Mrs. Sorabji. Speaking of a plague-smitten city, he gave the saddest possible description of the deserted houses and the rows of straw huts filled with panic-stricken natives. Yet amongst all this people came to hear the Gospel. After visiting other towns, Lucknow was reached, and the hospital was found crowded with famine patients, while all the missionaries in town and village were full of work. There were twenty-seven baptisms at one morning service; while at another time 130 were baptized. The speaker said he had come home with a far higher idea of the work, and its depth and vitality, than ever he had entertained before.

Mr. W. T. Paton followed with a financial statement, from which it appeared that the result of the special appeal to adjust the finances has been (including the proceeds of the breakfast) £3800, but £1200 more is needed. The committee are making special efforts to increase the income of the society to £20,000, to free the work from debt and consolidate and extend the operations in India. For this Mr. Paton made a strong plea.

Rev. A. H. Bowman followed with a heart-rending description of the state of things in Bombay during the crisis of the plague visitation. Passing on, he said he represented, in thought, a hundred million Indian women, crying out under two awful curses, cruelty and immorality. "There is," says a native non-Christian paper, "no end to the suicides of the married women, let alone the widows," and that because of their intolerable misery. The Zenana missionaries help these women as no one else can. The light is piercing the dark zenanas, and touching the hearts of thousands, who dare not openly confess, but yet are "feeling after Him if haply they may find Him."

Bishop Thoburn rejoiced in the work of the women. When, many years ago, he went to India no such thing had ever been thought of. His bitter sense of the neglected state of the Indian women led to his own sister volunteering for India (where she is still working), but really at first he did not know what to do with her. Since then, in school, zenana, and hospital ward women have found their work, and on the women of India the light has begun to dawn. But, after all, India must be evangelised chiefly from the villages, for it is a land of villages; hence he heard with great joy of village work being done by the lady missionaries and Biblewomen.

The Chairman followed with a few earnest words on his observations during his recent visit to India.

In the evening a series of limelight pictures were shown, illustrating the ravages of the famine and the operations of the society. Miss Morley gave an account of her tour in India; while Miss Poynter, a missionary from Patna, spoke of the ladies' work in that city.

British Syrian Mission Schools.

THE annual meeting was held, at the headquarters of the Y.W.C.A., George-street, Hanover-square, on Tuesday week, under the presidency of Canon Tristram, who said that he had known the mission from its commencement, and had watched it grow to its present noble dimensions. The hardest task that the pioneers of Christianity have before them is the conquest of Mohammedanism, and the citadel is in the harem. It is a work in which it is not possible for male missionaries to do much. If you seek to convert a Moslem you invite him to certain death, but in the harem it is different. The only pure and perfect love known to a Moslem is that connected with his attachment to his mother, and he never forgets what he hears from her. In the harem we get at the root of Mohammedanism. If girls are taught to know Christ as their Saviour, depend upon it their sons will imbibe their faith. This is what these mission schools are doing for Syria. Canon Tristram rejoiced over the adoption of the twenty schools given up by the American Mission from lack of funds by the B.S.M. He concluded by saying that he had never seen any influence equal to that exercised by missionary ladies in the Holy Land.

Col. McNeile (treasurer), in giving the financial report, said that he hoped the mission might be able to close the year's accounts without deficit.

Rev. P. Courtenay, who had seen the work in Beyrout, Damascus, Tyre, etc., testified that the methods adopted by the workers are admirable, the women and children being reached by Christian education.

Dr. T. Chaplin said it gave him great pleasure to say a few words in support of the British Syrian Mission, with which he had been in touch for thirty-seven years. It is a very real work, supplying a very real need. It rests on sound principles, for it is founded on the Word of God, and the general results are most encouraging.

Miss Baily (dept. sec.) spoke of the new opportunities and responsibilities of the mission afforded by the Jubilee Forward Movement, and pleaded earnestly with her hearers to support it warmly, so that the work may continue to go forward. Miss Willmot (sec.) urged the need of the loan of drawing-rooms or school-rooms for meetings and local sales of work.

Ministers' Prayer Union.

THIS band of ministers and missionaries, among whom the common bond is union in mutual prayer, has its spring gathering like the larger societies. It has been in existence for a decade, and numbers some 770 members. There is also a union of ministers' wives, with a separate organisation.

The meeting held last week in Bloomsbury Chapel was well attended, and under the guidance of Rev. F. B. Meyer, its president, the proceedings were of a deeply interesting and helpful kind. The secretary, Mr. Martin, submitted a brief and modest report, showing, however, that real work had been done during the year, mainly in the holding of conferences and "quiet days," and the dissemination of the society's organ, The Remembrancer. There are branches in Scotland, Ireland, South Africa, and South Australia. Mr. Meyer said he had noticed in the report of a similar union in Wales that they have district secretaries who make it their business to arrange the holding of occasional conferences. It was agreed that some such addition might profitably be made to the working staff of the parent union.

All the officers having been re-elected by acclamation, mation, a very impressive address on the fully consecrated life was given by Mr. Hancocks. It was largely autobiographic in form, and was couched in terms of finely mingled modesty and candour. The gist of it all was that the life filled with the Spirit and fruitful in its reflex influence is to be received and maintained by faith apart from feeling. It is the privilege of the believer to claim this filling continuously, for the individual need and for each bit of work as it comes; God will not fail the trusting soul.

The President added some happy and suggestive thoughts in the same line of teaching. He passed on a recent "find" in John iii. 34, "God giveth not the Spirit by measure"—or "by meter," as the Greek work expresses it. There is no need to be afraid that we shall exhaust the Divine supply. Mr. Meyer was insistent in urging that the holy life is not an unnatural life; it only beautifies and purifies the attractive natural qualities a man may possess. He said he had resolved on three things—(1) he would not sit in stiff drawing-rooms; (2) he would play with the children; and (3) he would be natural.

The Ragged School Union.

QUEEN'S HALL was crowded on Monday evening by the friends and helpers of the poor children. The proceedings were varied and bright—the service of song being led by the cripples' choir, an admirably trained band of sweet singers selected from thousands of afflicted little ones.

The report presented by the secretary, Mr. John Kirk, indicated that the past year had been signalised by steady growth and development. The Ragged School Union of to-day exhibits a stronger and more diversified factor making for righteousness than at any previous period of its long, eventful history. The list of operations seems well-nigh endless, touching and helping the children of the poor at all points. There is, however, urgent need for increased religious work amongst poor children. It is difficult to give anything but a faint idea of all that is being done to make their lives purer, brighter, and better. Going down to the lowest strata of society, as is done, it is felt that something has been accomplished when it has been made impossible for tens of thousands of children to say, "No one cares for me." Putting first things first—for the Ragged School Union is a religious agency, a spiritual force, whatever else it may be—there are 231 afternoon and evening Sunday-schools, conducted in 155 separate buildings; total average attendance, 43,631; to this must be added 82 morning schools and services, with 6067 children's attendance; 199 Bible-classes, with a regular membership of 3965; there are 171 regular prayer meetings, attended by 8041 members, and forty of the classes report 228 senior scholars having become communicants. There have been many signs of blessing as resulting from this seed sowing—many of the young people have professed conversion, and special means are being used to establish the converts in the faith.

Special reference is made to such missions as the Ashley Mission; the S.W. London (Battersea) Branch; the Drift and Cripple Branches; the new home being erected for Cripples at Bournemouth; the Southend, Margate, and Windsor Homes, and the other holiday homes, all of which are directly supported by the R.S.U.

The finance shows a slight increase on the previous year, the receipts being £20,720 10s. Nor is the backbone of the whole forgotten—the true-hearted army of voluntary workers, who, "in season and out of season," so devotedly give their time and strength for the benefit of the children. London would be all the poorer without such sanctified salt in its dark and corrupt places.

The Marquis of Northampton, who presided, spoke in his wonted practical and warmly sympathetic fashion of the extension and aims of the work, insisting that in these days of sacerdotalism those who love the Gospel must see to it they hold and teach it in all its pureness and simplicity. He deplored that in this wealthy city it should have to be said that any poor child has to be turned away from a shut door for lack of funds. This he regarded as a stain on the citizens of England.

Warm and hearty addresses followed by the Hon. Evelyn Ashley, Revs. J. Reid Howatt, W. R. Mowll, Messrs. W. C. Parkinson, L.C.C., and Mr. James Robertson; while Lady Newnes distributed the "Faithful Service" prizes.

Reformatory and Refuge Union.

A GATHERING to which much interest was attached took place on Thursday afternoon at St. James's Hall, when 500 children, selected from various Industrial Homes connected with the Reformatory and Refuge Union, took part in the forty-second annual meeting. The children, who looked bright and cheery, were massed on the platform of the great hall, and the audience were "played in" by a selection given by the band from the Boys' Home at Regent's Park, who performed very creditably under the direction of Mr. C. J. Brookes. The boys and girls, under the direction of Mr. Filmer Rook, then gave a selection of pieces, the performance of which showed that their musical education had been well cared for.

Lord Monkswell presided over the gathering, and, after Rev. J. W. Moeran had given a short address to the children, moved a resolution declaring that the Union was deserving of continued and more general support, especially in its efforts on behalf of destitute and neglected children, discharged prisoners, reconvicted inebriates, and the outcast and fallen, which was unanimously adopted.

The annual report contained an expression of earnest thanksgiving for the measure of success which had attended the Union during the past year. Much more might have been done with increased energy, watchfulness and means, and all these the council must seek in the coming year. The receipts for the year to the various funds amounted to £11,295, as compared with £9139 in 1897, but an earnest appeal was made for additional support.

Those taking part in the proceedings included Sir H. Bemrose, Sir William Vincent, Mr. W. E. Hubbard, Rev. A. W. Gough, Mr. A. J. S. Maddison (secretary), and others.

British and Foreign Sailors' Society.

THE anniversary of this Society was held under the presidency of the Lord Mayor at the Mansion House on Monday afternoon. The report, read by the secretary (Rev. E. W. Mathews), stated that during the year 1666 services had been held in institutes, on the River Thames, and at various stations on shore, and were attended by over 62,000 seamen. The Society had now eight stations in South America.

The Lord Mayor said he was glad much had been done by Government for sailors. But their moral and spiritual needs could only be attended to by such institutions as that. He had just returned from the Mediterranean, and had crossed the Bay of Biscay some thirty times, so he knew something about sailors, and their moral standard, he said, was much better now than when he first put out to sea. He made an appeal for help, and asked for a liberal response from all present. The Bishop of Calcutta, Dr. Harry Guinness, and Canon J. McCormick also spoke.

National Temperance League.

THE Archbishop of Canterbury presided in Exeter Hall on Monday night over the annual meeting of the National Temperance League. He said that a deeper and deeper impression was being made by their arguments on all professions and occupations. In fact, their opponents now rarely had recourse to argument at all. The medical profession no longer had to be convinced. In the Army and Navy those who once heartily joined them did not abandon the cause. In his own profession a far larger proportion of ministers of religion were on their side than was the case even ten years ago. There was still a good deal of ridicule, but those who employed it were not now so self-confident. Personally, he was quite as determined as ever, and he did not at all fear the ultimate issue. The League reported an advance in all directions except one. A debt of £5000 existed in connection with the publication department. He declined to consider this money as lost, for it had done the work which the society aimed at doing; but he appealed to the members to wipe out the debt.

Sir W. H. White, Director of Naval Construction, said he was only an onlooker, but a sympathetic one, as he had been a total abstainer all his life. He spoke most highly of Miss Weston's work in the Navy, and predicted much good from the fact that 900 of the 1000 boys in the Naval School at Greenwich were pledged to total abstinence. The meeting was also addressed by the Bishop of Derry and Raphoe and Mr. A. Pearce Gould, F.R.C.S. Mr. Robert Rae presented the report, describing the work of the League for the year.

The Widows' Friend Society.

THIS ancient Society held its ninetieth annual meeting on April 26, at the hall of the Innholders' Company, the Master, Mr. J. Douglass Mathews presiding. The report was read by the secretary, Mr. Chas. Woollard. The income for the past year was £1160, and the only expense was £80 for rent, printing, postage, etc. Addresses in support of the Society were delivered by Mr. Alderman Pound, Rev. Preb. L. B. White, D.D., Rev. R. Bashford, and Mrs. Smithers, one of the lady visitors, who told in a very effective manner of cases visited and relieved by the Society.

Oxford Letter.

[By Our Own Correspondent.]

THE Summer Term began on Friday. Arrangements have been made to meet the spiritual needs of the men. Among those who are to visit us during Term we note the name of Mr. J. R. Mott, who is to speak at two missionary meetings, May 10 and 15.

Wycliffe Hall is full. This is very satisfactory when we remember that the accommodation has just been increased. Rev. F. W. M. Woodward has succeeded Mr. Walmsley as Vice-principal. The centre of Evangelical teaching should have a warm place in our hearts.

Mr. Chavasse continues his Greek Testament readings to undergraduates, on the Epistle to the Colossians, iii. 13—iv. 18. He addressed a large gathering of Christian workers on Tuesday, in connection with the Oxford Preachers' Preparation Class. His subject was "The Qualifications of the Preacher," of which he mentions three—spirituality, sympathy, and studiousness.

To draw attention to the slum-life in Oxford, the local Times is printing a series of articles on the work being done in the city.

The Bishop of Oxford has spoken some timely words on Sunday amusements. Referring to the boating and cycling so freely indulged in, he says it is impossible to preach to people who spend the day on their cycles or in boats. One critic gives himself away when he says that those who spend their Sunday in this way would under no circumstances go to church. We fear this is only too true. Love for the Sabbath will only really and permanently be found with love to Christ.

Sermons on behalf of the L.M.S. were preached last Sunday in several of the Congregational churches in Oxford. On Monday night a united meeting was held in George-street Chapel. Rev. J. Joseland spoke of his work in Amoy.

The Oxford and District Christian Endeavour Union held their annual meeting on Thursday in the George-Street Congregational Church, a large number of members from the different branches attending. The testimony given at the meeting was an important one.

Open-air Mission.—I earnestly appeal to your readers for Gospel booklets, cards, and similar attractive publications, which we are needing in great quantities for our spring and summer campaign. Our stocks are exhausted, and we are quite without funds to make fresh purchases. Nearly a million publications go forth from this office every year to all parts of the country, hence our need is very great. Frank Cockrem, Secretary.

Cornwall Hall Mission, W.—The annual meeting was held on Tuesday last week, in Cornwall Hall, Pastor Frank White presiding. The report, presented by the superintendent, Mr. Wm. H. Gaussen, stated that the mission this year attains its majority, and that during the past year God has been blessing the various branches: Sunday-school, children's services, temperance effort, Gospel meetings, open-air work, mothers' meetings, etc. The committee feel that the position of the Cornwall Hall, so far back and invisible from the road, is a serious drawback. The buildings, moreover, are old and constantly needing repairs, while the rent is a heavy one. They are, therefore, waiting on God for guidance as to a new hall. Help towards this will be thankfully received by Mr. Gaussen, 96, Hereford-road, W.

Child-Life in Heathen Lands—4.

LITTLE savages! That is what we may call hundreds of children in New Guinea to-day. Missionaries have been labouring there for many years, and God has blessed very abundantly his servants in their self-sacrificing work; but you must not suppose for a moment that all the boys and girls in that island rejoice in the service of Jesus Christ. No! no! Multitudes can only be described as—little savages!

Many are being taught to read and write, and sing hymns to Jesus. Some of them pray, and call God Father, exactly as the readers of these pages are wont to do. They linger, too, over the parables and miracles recorded in their Gospels, and think them beautiful and wonderful. And they know why it was that God's dear Son became a little child, and suffered, and then died a dreadful death upon a cruel cross. You, also, can say why He did these things, of course?

But it is not of those who love to learn Bible stories that I am about to talk. I want you to have some knowledge of what those are like who STILL REMAIN LITTLE SAVAGES.

We must begin at the beginning, must we not?

New Guinea is a large island about 1500 miles in length and from 200 to 400 miles in breadth. It is situated immediately south of the Equator and north of Australia, between the Asiatic seas and the Pacific Ocean. Now that you have found it on your map, we can take a journey along the coast far away up the Gulf of Papua, and visit the children.

These Gulf boys and girls are brown in colour—the shade varies from light to dark. At ordinary times they do not trouble to wear any clothing. But at dances and feasts and on all special occasions they take great pains with their attire. They are polished with oil and painted with many coloured ochre; wear head-dresses of flowers and feathers, and belts of dried and plaited grass, from which hang many coloured grasses and croton leaves. Armlets, anklets, necklaces, earrings, and nose-jewels are considered to be other necessary adornments. Thus "clad" (!) they look very gorgeous indeed when the brilliant sun lights up their beautiful pearl shells and lovely feathers from birds of paradise and parrots. Their life is wild, free, and unrestrained, and most of the time is spent in the open air. Never are they found wrestling with difficult sentences which require grammatical analysis, or committing to memory tiresome irregular French verbs.

But I am quite sure you would not like to change places with them on that account.

At first sight strangers think these New Guinea children look very funny, for their heads are nearly all shaved, with the exception of one, or perhaps two, small round tufts of hair on the top. Very bright and happy looking they are nevertheless, and merry and mischievous, like most of the young folk with whom I have been delighted to meet. When mere babies these coast children can swim and frolic in the sea, and very early learn to paddle their own small canoes.

The men who are fathers are very proud of their sons, and at an early age begin to train them to hunt and shoot and fish; make canoes and paddles, build houses, and lay out plantations.

Sons are the future warriors and hope of the tribe to which their parents belong, and are taught to make real use of the native weapons of warfare. Every boy has his own bow and arrows, club, and spear. These their fathers at first make for them, and afterwards give regular instruction in the skilful employment of them. Old warriors are specially happy and content when they have sons able to take their places in the fight and maintain their tribe rights.

And what of the girls? I am pleased to tell you that daughters are by no means despised, as in some heathen countries. They are tenderly cared for and loved by their parents, treated kindly both by their father and brothers.

Many more of these girls and boys who are now only little savages will, under the instruction of missionaries, and by the aid of God's good Spirit, become real Christians. Christ will be their ideal of a noble life. Their clubs and spears, bows and arrows, will be abandoned when they willingly join the ranks of the great Captain of our Salvation. Clothed with the whole armour of God, they, with us, will wage warfare against the world, the flesh, and the devil, and come off more than conquerors through Him who loves them and died for them.

Mission Home for Chinese Girls.

IN Ah Lon, Kum Lon, Foong Ying (three girls) and Ah On (a boy), we introduce to our readers the four youngest inmates of the Mission Home for Chinese Girls, 920, Sacramento-street, San Francisco.

In attending one of the meetings of the Occidental Board for Foreign Missions, we had the pleasure of hearing the three little girls recite Bible texts and sing Gospel hymns. Ah Lon never missed a question, nor gave an incorrect answer. It was sweet to watch the two others; how they looked up to her grave, quaint face when they were not quite sure of their answer.

The Home shelters thirty girls of different ages. The history of some of them is very touching. Foong Ying and Ah On had a good Christian mother, formerly an inmate of the same institution. Her dying wish was that her children might be able to go out to China, the one as a minister of the Gospel and the other as a medical missionary.

The first Chinese slave-girl who found a refuge at the Home was brought from China more than twenty years ago, dressed as a boy, with hair shaven and a queue, in order to evade the law against the importation of girls. She had been sold by her father to pay a gambling debt of 15 dols. The woman who bought her, not being able to pay the passage money after her arrival at San Francisco, sold her again to a wicked man for the sum of 240 dols.

Ill treated, the poor child ran away, and was admitted to the Home. She soon became a decided Christian, and in the course of years married a Christian man. As wife and mother she has continued to be instrumental in the conversion of her heathen brethren and sisters. It was she who, in 1893, laid the corner-stone of the new Mission Home, 920, Sacramento-street, with the words, "With a strong faith in the redemption of my countrywomen in this land and in China, I lay this corner-stone in the name of Jesus Christ."

In last year's report we read: "Girls are brought here and illegally landed and sold for 1800 dols. Attorneys can be found who will aid the Chinese in the cruel practice. It costs 800 dols. to land a Chinese girl in San Francisco, and this amount is shared by a ring of five persons."

Since the work has been started more than 500 girls and women have found shelter at the Home. Some have been placed there by the Government, instead of being detained in gaol, as having illegally landed. Others have come for protection preparatory to their return to China. A hundred and fifty have been married, seventy-four baptized and united with the church, six have died triumphant deaths.

The girls receive a sound education, and are taught everything that is essential to good housekeeping. They generally marry Christian men, and turn out good housewives and mothers. Some are living in San Francisco, others have found homes in different towns of California.

Of course, this rescue work is not all success. There are occasional failures here as everywhere. The Home has been sheltering women, many of whom were too old, bound to heathen customs, and addicted to opium and to tobacco. They felt discontented, and returned to their old sinful life. In the case of children the work is very hopeful. They come bruised and beaten, presenting a picture of utter misery and wretchedness. In the course of a few months their countenances change, they look bright and happy and well fed. The flexibility of their undeveloped characters enables them to receive the teaching and influence of a Christian home.

Personal.

Again I have to thank friends for boxes of flowers sent for the sick and suffering. The hon. sec. of the Bible Flower Mission, to whom I forwarded them, writes: "Very many thanks for lovely fresh primroses, most welcome for the poor sick people."

Louise Filhol.—I was so pleased to receive your kind little letter. Sorry your answers were incorrect this last week.

Walter C. Perryman.—It was unfortunate your being ill during the holidays. I am glad you are better.

Marguerite le Roux.—Very glad to welcome you. Your writing is very neat.

Leonard Browne.—I think single-lined paper is better at your age. It is very sad for your brother to suffer so with his eyes, and I hope his sight will still continue to improve.

The Evangelistic Field.

MR. McNEILL IN LONDON.

THE Agricultural Hall meetings are now in their third and last week; the mission there closes on Sunday evening. Since our last report the attendances have been fully sustained, showing that the public interest in such an effort is not easily exhausted. The prayer meetings each week evening before the larger assemblies, have been seasons of close dealing with God on behalf of the many cases represented by the requests sent in. If the inner history of these missions could be unfolded it would be seen how real has been the moving of God's Spirit in many hearts—in some on their own account, and in others for the salvation of relations and friends.

The evangelist has not failed to do his part in the fulness and persuasiveness of his exhortations to saint and sinner alike. On some occasions the impressions produced have been very manifest, and when the preacher has given opportunity for publicly indicating soul concern or a definite acceptance of salvation the responses have been very encouraging. The inquiry rooms have been in frequent requisition. In some cases those who had attended the meetings came back expressly to the inquiry room to have their difficulties solved. On Monday evening Mr. McNeill said that many testimonies as to blessing received have been disclosed through the envelopes distributed.

Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather last Sunday evening the great hall was thoroughly well filled, but no overflow meeting was needed. If some were prevented from attending by the rain, doubtless others were prompted to take refuge in the brightly lighted hall, and thus came within the sound of the Gospel. Mr. McNeill's theme was "The Passover"—a very full meal of doctrine, perhaps the most theological and systematic of all his familiar discourses. On Monday evening to a splendid congregation the old Gospel was powerfully preached from the story of Naaman's healing.

On Sunday next, the closing day, there will be two meetings—afternoon at 3.30, and evening at 7. It is hoped the hall will be filled on each occasion.

GIPSY SMITH IN GUERNSEY.

GIPSY SMITH has finished a ten days' mission at Guernsey. The Free Churches have never had such an experience before. The churches cordially co-operated in preparing for the mission by a house-to-house visitation. The largest available building, the Wesleyan chapel, was secured. It can comfortably seat 1000 persons. On the last Sunday evening it was packed to the utmost capacity, many being unable to get in even for standing room. Night after night it was full. About one hundred and twenty persons entered the inquiry room and professed Christ. But this very inadequately represents the results of the work. The whole Church of Christ in Guernsey has received a great quickening. On Monday night, before Gipsy Smith gave his thrilling lecture "From Gipsy Tent to Pulpit" to a crowded house, he was presented with an address, signed by the Free Church ministers of the island, expressing their warm thanks for the service he had rendered.

TENT WORK AT YARMOUTH FAIR.

TO reach the non-church-goer, and to bring the thoughtless crowds under the sound of the Gospel, the vicar of Yarmouth, Canon Rogers, erected a mission tent in the centre of the great fair of this watering-place. At the request of Rev. John L. Cobham, the curate-in-charge of this special effort, to the secretary of the Open-air Mission for two evangelists, Messrs. George Heath and Gerald Coultas were sent down to push forward the Gospel campaign. Five meetings daily were held, and the interest never flagged, not even at the last meeting on the day's programme, which began at 9.30 p.m.! The tent was often filled, and numbers stood eagerly listening to the Word of Life. A coastguard heard the message, and thought thereon, and in the quiet of his vigil watch accepted Christ as his Saviour. [illegible] pushed her way to one of the evangelists at the close of another meeting to tell him that her heavy burden of sin had gone, and she was going out a free woman. Other cheering tokens of the blessing were given that the effort had not been in vain. It may be hoped that other vicars and ministers may be led by reading this brief account to arrange special missions of this kind, and thus solve the problem so often asked at conferences, "How to Reach the Lapsed Masses?" The secretary of the Open-air Mission will be glad to give any counsel on the subject. His address is, 11, Adam-street, Strand, W.C.

VILLAGE EVANGELISATION.

VILLAGE missions, and specially the Bucks Evangelistic Mission, occupied attention at the Central Noon Prayer Meeting, Aldersgate-street, on Monday. Mr. J. E. Taylor, who has now been engaged in this work for thirty-five years, spoke of a 250 days' mission in towns and villages around Aylesbury. In many respects the past year has been one of great blessing. In August last the special effort was commenced by Mr. George Hunter, of Aberdeen, which has been maintained for 250 days, and is still going on, moving from place to place as the way seems open. Some such plan as this Mr. Taylor considers of the utmost importance. Ordinary evangelists go mainly to towns and large villages, where there are those who can support the cost of a mission; but the small villages are often the darkest, although the people are too poor to meet the expenses. In such cases the Evangelisation Society would send men—if there were Christians to invite its help; but in many such places there are no Christians on whom the burden of souls might rest. This work from village to village has been remarkably blessed. All this is in addition to the regular work of the Bucks Evangelistic Mission, with its numerous village halls, engaging the help of large numbers of earnest Christians. The colporteur alone takes 30 villages every month, selling books, and reading, talking, and praying with the people. Hundreds have passed into eternity who never heard the Gospel save from the lips of the colporteur. At present the way is opened, and the director of the mission is anxious to extend the operations further afield into the dark Gospel-less villages of Oxon, Berks, Herts, Beds, and other counties. He may be addressed Mr. J. E. Taylor, Aylesbury, Bucks.

EVANGELISTS' MOVEMENTS.

At Union Chapel, Burcott, Bucks, a very good mission has been held during the past week by Rev. Hugh C. Wallace, of Burnley. It is hoped that some are coming forward to join the church as a result of this effort.

Pastor J. F. A. le Roi, of Schweidnitz, Silicia, so widely known as the author of "Die Evangelische Christenheit und die Juden," is conducting a three weeks' mission to Jews in the Hall of the Barbican Mission, 33, Finsbury-square, E.C.

Some Dublin Christians having secured suitable ground in Great Brunswick-street, one of the busiest and most central districts in the city, Mr. David Rea hopes during the months of May and June to have a special Gospel mission here in his large tent, seated for over 2000 persons. Much prayer is earnestly desired that God may be graciously pleased to own this effort to reach the unsaved, and that very many may be led to the Saviour.

During the last two weeks special services have been held at Bruce-grove Hall, Tottenham, by Mr. James Wharton, a returned missionary from the freed slaves of America, among whom he has been labouring for over twenty years. The Christian members have been benefited and helped, and a number of converts have also professed to find blessing at the services. Many of the Sunday-school scholars, too, have been led to the Saviour through the addresses by the preacher.

A series of services have been held by Mr. James Eyres during April in the Gloucestershire villages, which have been attended with much blessing. During his stay he has visited the chapels of the Congregational body in Mork, The Common, and St. Briavels. He then went on to Whitebrook and Llandoga, villages of Monmouth, where during a series of services a number decided for Christ. The spiritual life of the churches has been much quickened. His next sphere of labour is Barry Dock, where he is followed by many earnest prayers of those among whom he has lately laboured with so much blessing.

An interesting effort was made last week in Exeter Prison, which receives a large number of convicts from different parts of the country, who serve there their probationary period of nine months before being transferred to a convict settlement. A ten days' mission was arranged by Canon Atherton. The missioner was Rev. W. Bryan-Brown, of the Church Parochial Mission Society. The interest manifested by the prisoners in the mission exceeded expectations; many apparently hardened criminals seemed to be deeply moved. The missioner spent much of the day in visiting in their cells those prisoners who asked to see him.

A series of mission services have been held at Gloucester-street Wesleyan Chapel, Devonport, by Mr. Josiah Nix, including public preaching services, services for young people, Bible readings, an "at home" for shop assistants, and a great temperance meeting. The Lord's people have been revived and richly blessed. Large numbers, from 12 years of age and upwards, went into the inquirers' room as seekers of salvation, and the majority realised salvation through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. During the mission nearly 300 persons signed the temperance pledge. Revs. H. Lewis and C. Feneley, Mr. G. Nash, circuit evangelist, and others warmly supported Mr. Nix.

During the past six months the Lord has been pouring out his blessing on the Orkney Isles. Following his mission in Kirkwall in October, Mr. J. A. Smith, of the Gordon Evangelistic Mission, conducted a united mission in Stromness, and not for thirty years has there been such an ingathering of souls in that town. Latterly Mr. Smith's brother, Mr. John G. Smith, has, with blessed results, conducted missions at Kirkwall, South Ronaldshay, and Evie. Mr. Hamilton, from Glasgow, preceded Mr. Smith in Evie district, and was much used of God. Mr. Smith's mission was held in the Free Church (Rev. J. Roy's), which, after a few evenings, was filled with people who gathered six and eight miles to hear the Word of Life. One week from eighty to a hundred anxious souls were personally pointed to Jesus. Will God's people pray that the blessing may spread to all the adjoining islands? Reports from Shetland say the Lord is working there.

Mr. W. R. Lane, Hull, to May 12.
Mr. J. Neech, Guyhirn, May 8-22.
Mrs. Baeyertz, May, in Aberdeen.
Mr. Josiah Nix, Halifax, May 8-16.
Mr. F. C. Spurr, Malvern, May 14-23.
Mr. E. P. Telford, Bow, E., May 8-19.
The Weaver Bros., Cardiff, May 1-15.
Mr. Charles Inglis, in May, Great Assembly Hall.
Gipsy Smith, West Bromwich, to May 9; Deptford and Greenwich, May 14-23.
Sergeant Pullinger, High Barnet, May 8; Institute, Mitcham, May 10-15; Welbeck-street, W., May 22; Soldiers' Home, Winchester, May 29 and 30.

Requests for Prayer.

For meetings in Conference Hall, Eccleston-street.

For a mission at Brownhills, Walsall, by Rev. Dr. Morris, May 7 to 24.

Praise.

For many tokens of coming blessing in France, in many hundreds of villages. They are glad to hear bout Christ. Also for happy times in Bordeaux, where several pastors are in a state of expectation of blessing.

The Ricketts Family.—Mrs. Hind-Smith writes to state that the children of Mr. and Mrs. Ricketts have reached this country from Jamaica, and she is anxious that they should rejoin their parents in West Africa as soon as possible. For this purpose help will be needed, and Mrs. Hind-Smith appeals to friends of mission work in the Dark Continent to enable her to forward these young people on the last stage of their journey. Her address is Summerfield, Hayward's Heath.

Armenian Widows and Orphans.—Rev. Krikor Behesnilian has received a letter from Marash, dated April 8, written by a deacon of the Protestant Church, who has been labouring among the bereaved. Mrs. Behesnilian confirms its contents. "There are about 1000 destitute widows at Marash, 150 of whom are utterly helpless. While they have been deprived of their bread-winners, their houses have been burned too. About 300 orphans have been cared for by the generosity of friends in Britain, America, and Germany, but there are still about 1,200 children, who have been attending the Protestant day-schools, and are in a most pitiable state. We wrote to friends in Britain, to whom we are greatly indebted, still further to assist us to provide at least a meal a day for these little ones, and give a little help to the 150 widows. Communications to Mr. Behesnilian may be addressed Exeter Hall, Strand, London, W.C.

Rev. T. Connellan in London.

THERE was a big Wednesday night congregation in St. Paul's, Onslow-square, on Wednesday, April 27, to hear an address from Rev. Thomas Connellan, who has been so closely associated with the vicar, Prebendary Webb-Peploe, since 1887. The preacher took for his text Isa. xxxii. 2. In the course of a deeply interesting address he said:—

God's ways are very mysterious. "Thy way is in the sea, and thy path in the great waters, and thy footsteps are not known." While I was worshipping quietly here during the years 1887-90 I little dreamed that God was at the same time, in places very wide apart, preparing others for similar work. God is using converted priests to subvert the "Mystery of Iniquity" in every land under the sun. We know that Italy has Campello and others, shaping a great movement, having for its object to restore Christ to his rightful place, so long usurped by the Pope. Spain, the home of the Inquisition, hears the voices of Cabrera and others. The Old Catholic Church in Germany has recently received two members of the Jesuit order, and shows signs of increasing vitality. Last week, in Glasgow, I met M. Bertrand, and heard from him cheering news of an organisation in France for the conversion of priests, and which can show for fruit up to sixty converted priests. One of them, Abbé Bourrier, now has a church in Paris and edits a magazine which finds its way into my office. If we turn our eyes across the Atlantic, we see O'Connor carrying on a great work in the heart of New York. No one in this audience needs to be told that Canada has her Chiniquy, who on the threshold of his 90th year still wears the helmet of salvation and wields the sword of the Spirit.

I have recently received a deeply interesting letter written by a converted Spanish priest, Manuel Ferrando, who is now labouring for Christ in Caracas, Venezuela. He writes to ask for my assistance in forming an International Union of Converted Priests. Why, here is a new Reformation, not appealing to the carnal sword as the sixteenth century Reformation was too often obliged to do, but using the sword of the Spirit. Some of the older Reformation Churches have crystallised into definite shape, in some cases, unhappily, moulding themselves after the Roman model. But here are new forces endowed with all the ardour and fresh vigour of youth, caring more for the spirit than the letter, winning every day recruits to the army of Jesus.

Mr. Connellan concluded by giving a number of facts and figures about mission work in Ireland.

Health Lectures to Women.

A SERIES of lectures will be delivered at the Lyric Theatre, Shaftesbury-avenue, by the well-known American lady doctor Mrs. Longshore-Potts. Mrs. Potts has for years advocated temperance in her lectures, not from any particular personal predilection in its favour, but purely from the position of a physician who can judge of the deleterious effects of alcohol upon the system.

The lectures, which contain much moral excellence besides their advocacy of temperance, have to be given in a theatre owing to the exigencies of the limelight apparatus. Mrs. Potts will give five afternoon lectures to women only, commencing on Monday, May 9. To the first four lectures admission is free, with collection, a charge only being made for the concluding address on the subject of "Maternity." Each lecture is to be elaborately illustrated by limelight views and diagrams of the subjects discussed, varied with numerous pictures of art and scenery, many of them in colours.

Royal Albert Orphan Asylum.—A public dinner in aid of the funds of this institution, which is situated at Collingwood Court, Bagshot, Surrey, was held at the Savoy Hotel. The Lord Mayor presided. The institution was established some thirty-four years ago for the maintenance and education of necessitous orphans from all parts of the kingdom. It is in a very unfortunate position at the present time, there being a deficit of some £3000. There are 103 boys and eighty-seven girls in the asylum, who are being educated and trained so as to make them capable of earning their own livelihood. Workshops of various kinds are provided in which practical training is given. Subscriptions and donations were announced amounting to upwards of £1000.

Letters to the Editor.

"PRINCIPLES, NOT KENSIT."

DEAR SIR,—It is time for definite action on the part of those who have at heart the true welfare of the Church of England. Such action will be welcomed by all right-minded men, and will strengthen the hands of the bishops and those in authority, as is evident from the straightforward utterance of the Bishop of Hereford. The desire of the bishops to have "peace within their walls" has led them into an over tolerance which has effectually, though gradually, bound them with links of their own forging. Dr. Watson, a member of the E.C.U., writes in the Church Times of last week deploring that there is "no prophet left." But I venture to think that there are some prophets yet with us, if they will only commence and prophesy on the same lines as Dr. Percival.

There are some, however, who by a too large-hearted policy have in the past let go the reins, and the horse has consequently bolted. Whose fault is it? It is unquestionably their own, and they must pay the penalty by looking foolish and tightening the reins. Others again have involved us in doctrines which are opposed to the whole spirit of the Reformation. These, surely, must face their responsibility to a Reformed Church.

It is useless to throw the blame altogether upon the junior clergy. If those in authority cease to uphold the true charter of Church liberty, as declared at the Reformation, who can wonder that many follow in their footsteps?

The "crux" of the whole matter, which in the heat of a discussion such as Mr. Kensit has given rise to is apt to be lost sight of, is that we are contending for principles. What we demand is a declaration on the part of our Church's leaders that we are the inheritors of a Reformed faith. It is not the Church Association, or the National Protestant Church Union, or the English Church Union—it is not a question of the English Churchman or Church Times. No, these are but the exponents of what they believe to be the particular doctrines of our Church. Consequently if we are to have consistency it is by these doctrines being settled the one way or the other. It is useless to try and harness the Bishops of London and Liverpool to the same chariot. It is equally impossible that there can be any consistency when we have such leaders as the Archdeacon of London and "Father" Dolling fraternising in the same communion. Truly the breadth of our Reformed Church is remarkable! Dr. Watson speaks in the bitterness of his soul; so do I. There are many of the junior clergy who, like myself, are wondering what to do in order to attain to consistency. Prebendary Webb-Peploe, writing to me some months back, says:—"I would to God that we could persuade you and other younger clergy to declare yourselves bravely upon the side of the Articles, and to take your stand firmly on the side of those who would uphold the Church of England in the pure simplicity of her formularies and declarations." I would answer him here and now: We are willing to do so, but there is no one to lead us. Are Evangelicals asleep, that they are letting the ground be cut from under them like this? We want the bishops who are in sympathy with Reformation doctrines to come forward and head a campaign against the Ritualists who, according to common-sense and Dr. Watson, have broken the yoke and burst the bonds.

We want the deans and the archdeacons and the canons to come forward to the light. If there is any life in the Reformation left, surely now is the time for it to declare itself. Not by the units flying at one another's throats because they happen to wear a black gown or a white—but by all who love the Protestant Church massing together for the defence of the Church and her Articles. We want united action, and I would suggest that Prebendary Webb-Peploe and other leaders of the Evangelical party in London should utilise the presence of so many clergy at the various May meetings to form small committees who shall act in concert in the different dioceses. Something can be done, and something must be done. A leading Church dignitary writes me at the conclusion of a long letter, "We live in trying times, and must possess our souls in patience." I say no, we must possess our souls in action. "If the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself to the battle?"—Yours very truly,

NORMAN BENNET,
Missioner, Church Parochial Mission, and late Curate, St. Margaret's, Westminster.

"WATCHFULNESS."—Matt. xxiv. 42-51.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Watch therefore: for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come."—Matt. xxiv. 42.

CHRIST on the brow of Olivet; has painted a picture of the destruction of Jerusalem. This was the "coming of Christ" to the city, judging it for its sins. In that day's advent there will be tribulation, temptation, sin so triumphant that the elect will grow fearful or careless. But the day will come. Therefore watch.

WATCHING (42).

A state of wide-awakeness to every danger and duty. Awake morally and spiritually. Living such a life that you will not be ashamed if Jesus should reveal Himself as standing beside you, doing and speaking such deeds and words that you will not be ashamed to own as yours even in the presence of the holy one of Israel.

Eyes open to see:—
Every temptation.
Every danger of sin.
Every chance of doing good.
Every opportunity of becoming like Christ.

Illustration.—Paul's Christian Soldier (Eph. vi.).

REASONS FOR WATCHING (43, 44).

(1) Importance of the things we guard. — Our character and spirit are of eternal import. Other things decay, but the character is everlasting if it be good. "Keep thy heart," etc.

Illustration.—Soldier on guard: safety of the whole regiment in camp or barracks depends on his watchfulness.

(2) The strength of the enemy we watch for.—Evil very insidious, coldness of heart creeps over us; little sins creep in unseen, but they undermine the spiritual constitution. Behind the little sins is a great army of evil waiting to destroy all the good that is in us.

(3) We do not know when Christ will come in judgment.—No one knew when Jerusalem would fall. We do not know when the choice of service, the special temptation or danger, may come upon us.

Illustration.—Parable of Christ. The householder and the thief. As we do not know the watch or time of the night, we must be "ever ready."

(4) He comes when we should least expect Him. "In such an hour as ye think not."

THE FAITHFUL SERVANT (45).

The one who does his duty from day to day as his Lord appointed.

Christ assigns each one his task. Great and small are used by Him. Each one must do his work.

Honour and shame from no condition rise;
Act well your part—there all the honour lies.

If you have not found your work, pray with Saul, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?"

THE REWARD (46, 47).

The reward for faithful service is always more work and more responsibility. Those who do their work find it a stepping-stone to higher and better things. To know God and his doctrine you must do his will.

Illustration.—Men shoot into prominence in a day but when you come to examine them you find they have been doing small duties faithfully for many years. Those duties are like the rungs of a ladder. The last rung brought them above the housetops, where all could see them.

THE UNFAITHFUL SERVANT (48, 49).

People who neglect to watch do not as a rule go to sleep; they become self-indulgent and wicked. This is the temptation of power.

Illustration.—When you are high up on the ladder, tendency to get giddy. One careless step and you fall. The higher you are up, the more dangerous the fall.

THE PUNISHMENT (50, 51).

There is punishment for the faithless in this world and in the next. They are "hypocrites" because they profess to be and do what they are not and do not do. Their chief punishment will be the consciousness that they have brought it on themselves. Teacher should emphasise the fact that both wrong doing and neglect of right doing are punished, and that no one can break God's law or rebel against his will with impunity.

A proclamation of neutrality issued by Her Majesty's Government sets forth regulations for ships of war of the belligerent Powers lying in harbours of the United Kingdom.

Concerning Mr. Gladstone's health, Miss Helen Gladstone writes: "I do not think there is anything to say about Mr. Gladstone's health, beyond what is now generally known—namely, that he is seriously ill, and that we cannot hope for his recovery."

The enlarged premises of the Shoreditch Settlement in connection with Cheltenham Ladies' College have been formally opened, and a dedication service held. Many social and spiritual blessings attend the good work of these settlements.

For the first time in its history the Society for the Extension of University Teaching is to hold its summer meetings in London. The lecture hall and other rooms at the University Buildings, Burlington-gardens, have been placed at the disposal of the Council.

There are in England 2165 School Boards, and in Wales 337, with a population of nearly 20,000,000 under that system. This is an immense influence for good if rightly directed.—The London School Board has decided that one of the two medical practitioners to be provisionally appointed for one year to examine defective children shall be a woman.

Charitable Contributions.—The following sums have been contributed in various ways during the week—£2100 at sixty-third anniversary of St. Mark's Hospital; £1000 from Mr. R. Gibbs' estate to St. Thomas's for a "memorial" bed, and £300 to the London School of Medicine for Women.—£1000 to Hampstead Hospital.—Over £2000 to the City Orthopædic.—Upwards of £1000 for the Royal Albert Orphan Asylum.—£2100 for the Royal Asylum of St. Anne's.—The late Mr. R. A. Booker has bequeathed £50 each to several missionary and other societies connected with the Church of England.

The Coal Troubles.—A determined attitude is still maintained by both sides in the South Wales coal strike. We were hoping that an amicable settlement of the disputed questions was at hand.—In reply to the Northumberland miners' claim for an advance of wages, the coalowners at once admitted the fairness of the principle that the workmen should share in any rise of price. If this principle were always accepted in cases of dispute details could be satisfactorily adjusted.—The Miners' Federation of Great Britain has voted £1000 to the Miners of South Wales and £500 per week for the next four weeks. They intend making a demand for an increase of 10 per cent. in the wages of English miners.—The Fife and Clackmannan coalowners have refused a conference with representatives of the workmen, who were to claim an increase in wages of 12½ per cent. A fortnight's "warning" is to be announced.—At a meeting of the Miners' Federation it has been decided to accept the Compensation Act in its entirety and to give it a fair trial.—The miners' provisional committee issued an appeal for "moral and pecuniary help to successfully contend against the iniquitous action of the South Wales and Monmouthshire coalowners. Some apprehension is felt regarding the threatened strike of the enginemen, stokers, etc., as a cessation of pumping would result in the flooding of the mines.

SCOTLAND.

Mr. Wilkes, late rector of Whitton, conducted meetings in Edinburgh, chiefly for Christians, from April 23 to 29. Christians of all denominations turned out in large numbers. From the first night it was evident that the Lord was with his servant. Mr. Wilkes dealt with many aspects of the believer's position, life, and prospects.

In view of the resumption of the Summer Open-Air Campaign in Edinburgh, a conference of workers was held in the Carrubbers Close Mission on Thursday last. There was a large and interesting gathering, very many taking part. Some of the speakers bore testimony to their having been awakened and led to Christ through open-air meetings.

The annual meeting of the Glasgow Home Mission Union took place on April 25. At present 190 congregations are associated with it. The members labour chiefly among non-churchgoers. The efforts of the Union have added over 10,000 persons to the membership of the churches, and have induced over 32,000 persons to interest themselves in church and mission services.

The annual conference of the Women's Guild of the Church of Scotland was held at Perth on April 25 and 26. Over 600 delegates were present. The Guild provides a sphere in which the power and influence of women are of utmost value in promoting, through the various institutions of the churches, the Saviour's cause in the world. It comprises 454 branches, with a membership of over 32,000. Since last report fifty-five new branches have been formed. There are eighty temperance sections, as compared with sixty-six last year. Mothers' unions, Dorcas societies, Sabbath-school and mission work, at home and abroad, is carried on by the members. The Deaconess House received twelve ladies for training; two left for the foreign field, three are working in the home field, and nine are resident meantime.

THE Y.M.C.A.

A camp near Colwyn Bay is being arranged by members of the Birkenhead Association.

During Mr. W. R. Lane's mission in Preston, two special meetings of men were held in furtherance of the work of the newly-formed local Y.M.C.A.

Two friends of the Blackburn Association have promised £500 each to start a building fund. Two large meetings of men only were addressed by the Lancashire travelling secretary last Sunday.

Rev. J. Smyth Wood, of St. George's, Sunderland, has concluded a very successful series of meetings on Wednesday evenings, and on Sunday afternoons (for men) at the Sunderland Y.M.C.A. Hall. The last meeting on Sunday evening crowded out the hall, and the other meetings were well attended. Other ministers conducted Bible readings each day.

The spring conference of the South Wales District Union was held at Swansea on April 26. The president of the Hereford Association took the chair at the conference in the morning. Mr. F. S. Bishop, president of the Swansea Association, was chairman in the afternoon, when the subject of "Our New Associations in South Wales, and how they are to be strengthened and maintained," was opened by Mr. Walter Price.

The annual conference of the Western District Union was held at Cheltenham on Wednesday, 27th ult. Major-General Lewis occupied the chair at the morning session; and Mr. A. J. Hook, of Kingswood, Bristol, presided over the mid-day devotional meeting, at which an address was given by Rev. A. Beynon-Phillips. The new premises of the Cheltenham Y.M.C.A. were opened in the afternoon by Sir George Williams, and the conference followed in the Assembly Rooms, under the presidency of Mr. H. Daniels, J.P. Addresses were given by Sir George Williams, Mr. H. Whitwell, and Mr. Hind Smith. A public meeting was held in the evening.

Li Hung Chang has promised that at least one, and probably more, Chinese ladies shall attend the International Congress of Women next year, and voice the wishes of the women of China.

The hut tax disturbance in Sierra Leone is extending over a wider area. The C.M.S. missionaries are reported safe.—Mr. Chamberlain's explanation of the French expedition into British West Africa has caused "much irritation in French official quarters."

A serious warning comes from Hungary that unless the terms for the renewal of the Ausgleich agreed upon by the Baden Ministry be accepted by Austria, the Hungarians must establish a permanent customs and commercial system on the basis of complete economic independence.

The Tsar has forwarded a contribution of 300 roubles towards the establishment of a crêche in connection with the English Congregational Church, St. Petersburg.—The Russian strategic railway from Merv to Kusilk outpost is practically completed, but will not be formally opened till the autumn.

The obstacles which prevented the reopening of the markets near Candia (Crete) have been removed, business to the extent of £2000 being transacted. Sacks of flour from the Tsar are again being distributed by the Russian Admiral, and sulphur for the vines to Christians and Mussulmans by Sir Herbert Chermside.

The Jewish Colonisation Society is making progress in Argentina, the United States, Canada, Russia, Palestine, and elsewhere. The Argentine Colonies alone include 7000 persons, representing 1300 families.

The Austrian Government propose to remit the language question between Germans and Czechs to a committee of representatives of all the various parties, who will be urged to find a legal formula for the solution of this thorny question. Little hope is entertained that the effort to promote an understanding will be successful.

Considerable riots have occurred at Bari and Faenza (Rome) in consequence of the continued rise in the price of corn and flour. At Bari the municipal building was sacked, and the barracks of the guard burnt.—Further bread riots are reported from Foggia; the municipal buildings were invaded, the octroi offices burnt, and archives damaged.—The bread riots in Italy are assuming alarming proportions. Bakeries are sacked, windows and street lamps destroyed, and attempts made to liberate prisoners. In Naples the rioters are led by women. The troops are encamped in the squares and streets.

The Plague.—From Bombay comes the intelligence of a plague riot at Bhangal, in the district of Jalandhar.—A revolt of the famished population of Yemen (Arabia) is reported by the consuls at Hodeida.—Martial law has been proclaimed at Porto Rico, where the situation is regarded as critical.—Another plague riot has occurred at a village named Garshanker (India). The police guard fired upon the rioters, wounding several.—A nurse at the Hong Kong hospital has succumbed to the plague.

The Evacuation of Thessaly.—A very important resolution was carried at a recent meeting of the Greek and Cretan relief committee, suggesting that, in addition to setting apart a portion of the new Greek loan for relief of Thessaly, the International Commission should have power to remit taxation to the inhabitants of the province who suffered from the war. The ambassadors of the Powers have met at Constantinople to notify to the Porte that the evacuation of Thessaly was to begin on May 3.

The Far East.—The Tsung-li-Yamen has come to an understanding with the Pekin Syndicate to concede the mining rights in Honan to the Anglo-Italian Syndicate. This is considered to be of immense importance to England.—Admiral Le Bedollier has occupied the Bay of Kwang Chau Wan (opposite Hainan), the place leased to France by China.—The China Association has addressed a memorial to the Prime Minister on the significance of Russian and French endeavours to obtain exclusive rights in certain parts of the Chinese Empire—The southern portion of Ta-lien-wan, like Port Arthur, is to be an exclusive naval base unopened to foreign merchant vessels.—The Japanese Government has obtained from China an assurance that she will not alienate Fo-kien, opposite Formosa.—The cultivation of opium in West China continues increasing and unchecked. The amount which passed through the foreign customs of Chung-Kiung last year was valued at nearly £400,000.—The last instalment of the war indemnity is to be paid at the end of the current week. This terminates the Japanese occupation of Wei-hai-wei.

America and Spain.—From the moment of the announcement last week that President McKinley had signed the Bill adopted by the House of Representatives and the Senate that a state of war with Spain had existed since April 21, various conflicting rumours have appeared in the daily Press. Details of measures in course of maturing in America, Spain, and Cuba for the equipment of troops and the disposition of war squadrons were in abundance, many of which proved to be only imaginary. Spain's war credit of 90,000,000 pesetas is to be secured by bonds of the Almaden quicksilver mines. In America the President has laid his scheme before Congress for raising the sum of £120,000,000 (!) for war expenses. Meanwhile, Matanzas has been bombarded and the forts destroyed. The latest reliable telegrams report a severe engagement between the American and Spanish fleets off Manila. Serious damage has been inflicted upon ships of both the belligerents; some reports going so far as to say the Spanish fleet is "practically destroyed." Spanish vessels have been in flames—others have been sunk, or were stranded to avoid capture. In Madrid every precaution is being taken to prevent riot or rebellion. The American President is still using his influence on behalf of peace.

Protestant Reformation Society. — The secretary writes:—"Through the kindness of some friends Miss Cusack is able to make us a gift of some of her books. These are especially acceptable, and will be widely scattered by our missionaries. They comprise, 'What the Ritualist Teaches,' 'His Yarn,' 'Straws,' 'An Open Letter,' and 'The Black Pope.'"

Obituary.

MR. JOSEPH GURNEY BARCLAY.

Last week we recorded the death of this well-known banker. He was a benevolent member of the Society of Friends and a munificent supporter of moral, religious, and benevolent objects generally. He was a direct descendant of David Barclay, the famous Laird of Ury. The funeral of Mr. Barclay took place at the Friends' burial ground at Wanstead on Friday. A great company was present.

REV. E. H. HUBBARD.

The Church Missionary Society has sustained another heavy loss in East Africa. News reached London on Monday that Rev. E. H. Hubbard, of Nasha, who was accidentally shot about three months ago, had succumbed to his injuries. He joined the mission in 1893, and was a leader amongst the men in his district. This is the third death amongst important missionary workers in that part within a few months.

MRS. DARLING, ILFORD.

Rev. Oliver W. Darling, chaplain to Dr. Barnardo's Girls' Village Home, Ilford, has lost his wife under very sad circumstances. Mrs. Darling, being slightly indisposed, was intending to take a seidlitz powder, but by mistake took instead the contents of a packet of strychnine which had been obtained for rat-poisoning. Her sudden removal has caused the deepest sorrow to the workers at the village, by whom she was already much beloved and esteemed, though she had only recently come amongst them.

MR. WILLIAM CLARK, EPSOM.

This earnest servant of Christ, originally a coal-whipper in the East of London, was converted, and entered the London City Mission in 1857. He was much used among the gipsies, many of whom were led to trust in the God whom he, for forty years, so faithfully served. So well did he speak their language that, to re-echo the words of one of them, "We believe you are one of us." On the racecourse this devoted brother has been much used of God, and many were the expressions of grief and sympathy last week at Epsom when one and the other of those who frequent the racecourse heard that he had been taken home. He passed peacefully away on April 14, after some months of intense suffering, aged seventy-one. His last words were, "Let God be glorified through my death."

REV. JOHN H. ROSE, CLERKENWELL.

The well-known vicar of Clerkenwell died somewhat suddenly last week. He was seized with a fit at the Clerkenwell Vestry, and died shortly after being taken home. His ministerial life has been largely spent in the metropolis. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, ordained in 1864, and the same year was appointed to the curacy of Ballybay, county Monoghan. He was rector of Timogue, Leighlin, 1865-66; curate of Roxton, Beds, 1866-68; St. James's, Clerkenwell, 1868-76; chaplain to the Clerkenwell workhouse, 1869-79; and rural dean of St. Sepulchre's from 1897. He had been vicar of Clerkenwell since 1876. Mr. Rose was an excellent type of the hard-working clergyman, and was very popular in his crowded parish. His son, Rev. Hamilton Rose, is one of the curates of St. James'.

DEAN VAHL.

By the departure, at the age of seventy, of Dean Vahl, of Copenhagen, the Church of Christ is deprived of one of its most useful labourers in the field of missionary literature. The author of various works on the evangelisation of the heathen and atlases and elaborate statistical compilations, the Dean occupied a position of unchallenged eminence, and his works will long be greatly valued. He edited periodicals on his favourite theme, and in his enthusiasm gathered a library of unique completeness and worth, which three years ago included no fewer than 10,208 volumes. It is to be hoped that this collection will not be dispersed. The Dean visited England as a representative of the Danish Evangelical Missionary Society on the occasion of the Missionary Conference in 1888, and spoke at several meetings, making friends on all hands and among worker of various nationalities.

DR. THOMAS MORRISON.

Widespread regret will be occasioned in educational and kindred circles by the news of the death of Dr. Thomas Morrison, rector of the Free Church Normal College, Glasgow. He had been in failing health for some time, but it was only recently that heart disease manifested itself in an acute form. Dr. Morrison, who was in his seventy-second year, was a native of Morayshire. In 1851 he was chosen as rector of the Free Normal College, a position which he has occupied for forty-seven years. A man of bright, genial, and attractive disposition, and an educationist of high attainments, he was greatly esteemed by the thousands of students who passed through the College. Apart from his more specific duties, Dr. Morrison took a very hearty interest in Sunday-schools and church work, and for twenty years he was session clerk of the Free College Church.

Personalia.

Evangelical Alliance.—Rev. H. R. T. Jackson has been appointed to act as general secretary of the Evangelical Alliance, and Rev. J. Woodhouse will have charge of its literary department.

Mr. W. B. Stevenson, assistant professor of Semitic languages in Edinburgh University, has been appointed to the chair of Hebrew in Bala College. Mr. Stevenson has had a brilliant career as a student in arts and divinity at Edinburgh.

Rev. Joseph C. Hartzell, missionary bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Africa, has returned to this country after an absence of fourteen months, during which he travelled 46,000 miles. He travelled for 7000 miles on the continent of Africa. The one overshadowing problem, he says, not only in Rhodesia but in all Africa, is the native problem. The time has come when, under the providence of God, the world needs Africa, and the native African is to have his chance under the government of Europeans.

Rev. Simon Peter Shalali, of Tembuland, South Africa, who reached England last week, is the first Kaffir appointed by a Colonial Congregational Union as its representative at the annual Assembly of the Congregational Union of England and Wales. He is a man of fine presence, speaking excellent English, and taking the keenest interest in current questions, notably in those affecting the native races in South Africa. His visit, which will extend over six months, should be utilised by the Free Churches to deepen the interest in missionary work. He was educated under Dr. Stewart, at Lovedale, then laboured as assistant to the Rev. Durant Philip, at Graaff-Reinet, before he entered upon work in Tembuland.

Federation for the Abolition of the State Regulation of Vice.—The triennial congress of the International Federation will be held on July 12 to 15, at the Friends' Meeting House, Bishopsgate Without.

Great Assembly Hall.—On the four consecutive Thursdays in April Mr. G. H. Lord lectured here on the Holy Land, Egypt, and Syria, when he related his varied experiences in these lands. The lectures were much appreciated, and attended by good audiences.

Distress in South Wales.—The coal strike which has been going on for some weeks in South Wales is causing deep distress and poverty, not only among the colliers and their families, but the dock labourers, who depend entirely on the coal trade for their livelihood. The funds of the Gospel Tent Mission, which have centres at Barry Docks and Brynmawr, are already overdrawn, and unless help is sent in at once the consequences will be most disastrous. We trust friends will remember their poor brethren in this sore affliction. We will not lengthen this report by giving details of distress, though many harrowing cases could be given, as the daily Press confirms. GERALD R. COULTAS.
Mission House, Barry Dock.

Thomas Binney Centenary Commemoration.—The annual meeting of the Darby-street Mission was held last week at the King's Weigh-house Congregational Church, Duke-street, Grosvenor-square, when the centenary of Thomas Binney was commemorated. Mr. T. McKinnon Wood, chairman of the London County Council, who presided, observed that when the Weigh-house Chapel was situated in the City the Darby-street Mission was started in the East End by Dr. Binney, the work being confined to a great extent to the neighbourhood of Ratcliff-highway. Much good work was done in the regions of slums, ignorance, and poverty; and they were pleased to commemorate on that occasion Dr. Binney's centenary. Dr. Joseph Parker delivered an address descriptive of Thomas Binney's career, stating that he was a born thinker, and one of the greatest preachers, if not the greatest, the Congregational ministry had ever had during the present century.
